Frank Sinatra bought the movie rights for this book, let the movie out briefly and then squelched the second release of the film. Frank Sinatra has been a slave handler. He has handled Bob Hope’s slaves, when Bob Hope has lent them to the Rat Pack (which consisted of Dean Martin, Frank, Sammy Davis, Jr. Peter Lawford & Joey Bishop). Frank Sinatra spends time with the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds. Both he and Dean Martin have handled slaves. Dean Martin was described by The Hollywood Reporter as a "hypnotically attractive, homegrown American monster."

In Fritz’s previous writings he has exposed how Peter Lawford & Sammy Davis, Jr. were satanists. Dean had the audacity to want to bring out a slave on his T.V. show on a lease in a tiger outfit. As mentioned previously, the sexual alters see themselves as kittens or cats and are given obedience training with the type of collar Dean wanted to bring them out on stage with on television. The television network stopped it.

As Frank Sinatra grew up, his parents always had money. His mother was a cigar-smoking cruel foul-mouth woman, who performed illegal abortions. She got caught once and had to face the penalty on Feb. 27, ‘39 in a Hudson Special Sessions Court. Frank's hero was Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegel, boss of Murder, Inc. About 30% of the dirty work for the Illuminati is carried out by the Mafia. The Illuminati have their own death squads which are superior to the Mafia, but individuals must approach one of the Illuminati councils for approval to assassinate. Often it is easier for someone in the Illuminati just to put out an unauthorized contract than to go through proper channels.

Bugsy associated with all the Mafia heads including Charlie "Lucky" Luciano who controlled mind-controlled slave Marilyn Monroe. Both Frank Sinatra and CIA mind-control programmer William Joseph Bryan, Jr. (aka William Joseph Bryon, and William Jenning Bryan III, etc.) were members of the Tommy Dorsey Band. Bryan programmed people while he was with the Air Force as Chief of Medical Survival Training which was the Air Force's covert mind-control section. Later he opened up his own hypnotherapy Institute on Sunset Strip in Hollywood where he programmed some people in the Illuminati who are actors. He also was the person who programmed Sirhan Sirhan to be involved in the Robert Kennedy assassination. He also hypnotised Alvert Di Salvo.

After Bryan died in spring, 1977, the CIA cleaned out all of his files including his home files. Bryan was fat, 6' 1 1/2", and a Satanic priest in the Old Roman Catholic church. This is same satanic church that William Schnoebelen was a Satanic priest in, before giving his life to Christ. (Bill Schnoebelen tells his own story in Lucifer Dethroned. Chino, CA: Chick Publications, 1993.) Schnoebelen was offered a slave but turned down the opportunity to be a handler.

In William J. Bryan, Jr.'s book entitled The Chosen One The Art of Jury Selection, Bryan teaches how to use hypnosis on jury members to win one's case. On the back of the book he states about himself, "In addition Dr. Bryan served as an Electronics Engineer in the Navy in World War II, was Director of all Medical Survival Training for the United States Air Force, and a leading expert on brainwashing." William J. Bryan was the technical director for Frank Sinatra's movie The Manchurian Candidate. It was hoped that the movie would scare Americans into thinking that the enemy (the communists) was carrying out mind-control.

The Simpson Cartoons

There are episodes of the Simpsons which blatantly promote the Freemasons, the Illuminati and even show items of the Monarch mind-control such as "following the Yellow Brick Road." The episodes are quite revealing.

Aspects of Illuminati programming can also be seen in the movie "Spirits of the Dead", where spirit copies of one's abusers are placed into the slave, and the movie "Cat Girl", where a beautiful girl is turned into a killer beast. Several movies have come out showing the concept of creating robotic people such as the 1920's movie Golem, the 1966 movie Cyborg 2087, and the movie Frankenstein.

According to Illuminati history, the Collins Illuminati bloodline did pre-20th century experiments to create a Frankenstein, and Mary Shelley's novel is actually secretly based on their research. The Rothschilds have carried out successful production of synthetic people this century. This is all in accord with the black magic goal of controlling bodies, whether live or dead.

The 90 mm. "Night of the Living Dead" expresses the satanic black magic goal to control bodies. And if the Illuminati can't control their slaves, the final solution, if nothing else works, is to- as the CIA say- "terminate with extreme prejudice" (a.k.a "Executive Action"), like they did to Mary Pinchot Meyer on Oct. 13, 1964, Princess Grace Kelly & countless others.

E. Twinning And Bonding

Two Sisters-of-Light (the level before Mothers-of-Darkness) will be placed before a many-faced mirror with intense lights and programmed to see each other as inseparable. They become twins, and are programmed to die if the other one dies. They are taught to be one in body, mind, and soul. They are bonded in many ways, including torturing each other, and sexual bonding.

The trauma bonding that they undergo will consist of a. being put in life or death situations together

b. given programming scripts which intertwine & fill in to complete each other to make a whole

c. are placed in jobs that require total compliance with the programming in order to survive

d. are bonded together to other people.

The scripture "A house divided against itself cannot stand" (MT 12:25, MK 3:25) is used to program people to stay in line with what the team is doing.

High level four-person female teams and a four-person males team are programmed to work together after the Anti-Christ takes over. These types of teams form the male-female component of a larger 3-part team. With the advent of advanced medical technology the Illuminati are now able to make quintriplets, implant the eggs in surrogates, and then switch the identical children during their lifetimes. This type of high level subterfuge is going on, and it makes the identities of some slaves complicated to say the least.

Readers may want to get some of the articles Fritz has written about the clones, synthetic people, organic robotoids, and double look-alikes that the Rothschilds and the rest of the Illuminati families are engaged in creating. The twinning programming is very complex and detailed.

Within the Rothschild bloodlines--the 5 family lines that began with Mayer Amschel’s 5 sons going to 5 capitals- network/bond their female slaves together with Gennifer-Sally-Elsie-Sarah-Penelope programming. (The 6th son to finish the red schield hexagram is/was a bastard.) This is all part of a complex satanic world mind that is being created. This is the Adam Kadmon. Twins (& teams) claim to be telepathic with each other, and observations of slaves, has tended to support that claim.

Many therapists have failed to take the twinning part of the programming into account. Twins must be deprogrammed together for best results, if one is left out they may try to impede therapy.

F. Peer Pressure

At the beginning of the programming, the Programmers are dealing with a small infant who is unable to verbalize to others about their abuse. They are further frightened in every way, and tortured, and given behavior modification to teach them to remain silent. Even without all these strong threats which always exist, the child would not be capable of fighting back. The child will naturally think this is the way the world is, and of course, the programmers are reinforcing the idea that this is the heritage or path that the child is supposed to be following.

The dissociative parts of the child do not fully comprehend that being sexually assaulted daily by their father is wrong. They are being misled by their abuser that it is correct, that that is their purpose in life. The child is never given a chance to realize that it has a right to refuse. It is conditioned to obedience. The abuse seems to be just another part of things that belong to the world of adults. For children, adults do many things beyond comprehension, at times ridiculous. And they seem to need no reason to do these things, except for the fact that they are adults. Other adults that come and go are also participants in the abuse, so the child doesn’t grasp that he can be defended by other adults.

The programmers are always doing unexpected things to the child, so the child quits trying to figure life out, and fatalistically complies with what it is expected to do. Children all over the world grow up in an adult world, and are at the mercy of adults.

As the alters begin to experience life, they are generally in situations where the attitudes of the people around them, reinforce their programming. Boys are told by society in general to take their lumps in life "like a man". They are taught to fight their own battles, and not to whine. Few boys risk the shame that comes from talking about their abuse. Society is not kind to "whiners".

Females are permitted to show emotions, without the social sanctions levied on males. If the child victim of mind-control comes from a family where only one of the parents is a participant in the abuse, then what often happens is that the clean parent, will never even discuss abuse issues with their child. Few adults ever really discuss abuse issues with children. The child is generally isolated from their peers as much as possible by the child's handler's and programmers. They place other children that belong to the cult in the child's life to report on what the child is doing. When the child victim begins to "stretch their wings" so to speak and meet other people, there are very few people that will threaten the control of the programmers. When the slave does find a good therapist to make friends with, this friendship will trigger all kinds of programming, unresolved issues around adults, trust, etc.

The slave feels double-binded. If they move toward health and freedom, it creates many more problems than staying in slavery. They need to see the bigger picture. They need to be given something positive to live for outside of the slavery. Psychiatrists are not permitted by their boards to get personally involved in their clients lives. Traditional therapy doesn't address some of the issues that will stop the slave from wanting to gain freedom. Internal peer pressure from multitudes of programmed loyal deeper alters, and external peer pressure from cult children the victim is bonded to, begins to exert an overpowering force for the child to stay on the beaten path. Few people ever buck the system, and go against peer pressure. Someone as hurt and docile as a slave is going to want acceptance, and is not likely going to want to step out of line with society and their peers. Until society admits that there is a problem with mind-control, it will be a dangerous thing socially for a child slave to admit to what the victim is actually experiencing every day.

Are there any HAGABARDS or MOSES? Now the reader has the FORMULA for the mind control. Now what? These programmed multiples continue to eat away at the moral fiber every one of America's Institutions like an army of termites. On the outside the structures still look strong, but they are being readied to collapse, for the reign of the Illuminati's AntiChrist. There is a series of books called the Illuminati books which are a fictional account of how the Illuminati run the world. In the novels, the Illuminati run essentially everything--which is actually what is happening. The hero, Hagabard fights against this ancient conspiracy. Who isn't familiar with the Biblical example of the elite ruler, who leaves his place of royalty to lead a nation in slavery to freedom? This hero's name is Moses. He also frees the people spiritually from the spiritual bonds of their hermetic magical culture. If there are any Hagabards or Moses' or Aarons out there, it is time to buck this World System. "LET OUR PEOPLE GO. LET OUR CHILDREN GO." Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve Me. (EX 8:1b)

Appendix One The Programmers

Some of THE Illuminati's Companies
A. Introductory remarks Vril Society
B. Understanding the programmers Dr. Mengele Dr. Cameron Jerry Lee Lewis and Michael Aquino
C. Monarch Mind Control Programmers Country Music Industry The Temple of Set.
D. Dr. Green
E. Dr. White
F. The AntiChrist as a Master Programmer
Footnotes

May each & every person listed get right with YHWH God before they die. Short List of some addresses of abusers who are part of the Network, a.k.a. New World Order Addresses may not be current but are my last address for them. This information may have mistakes, this is only to display to readers that the veil of secrecy is no longer holding up for the Mind Control Programmers.

AC/DC satanic Rock Band, 11 Leonminster Rd., Morden, Surrey SM4, England

Ade, Henry. CIA & drug dealer & Monarch slave abuser, 1663 County Rd. 13, Waterloo, IN 46793

Aga Khan IV, H.H.

Prince Karim. Satanist & leader of Ismaili Muslims, Aiglemont, 60270 Gouvieux. France

Alabama Country Music group, satanists and Monarch slave handlers, Box 529, Ft. Payne, AL 35967

Baily, John, slave abuser, 1525 Pine St., Office 10. Redding, CA 96001

Barnes, Don, slaveabuser & in co. sherriff office, 7309 Grove Rd., Frederick, MD 21701 301-694-2152; 1513 Cedarcrest Ln, Frederick, MD 21702301-663-8316

Benson, Ezra Taft, satanist/leader of LDS church. Church of Jesus Christ , Administration Bldg., 47 E. S. Temple. Salt Lake City , UT 84415

Bowers, Wilbur D., Ipsimus in Illum. & Monarch programmer & CIA drug dealer. 1735 NE 11th, Bend , OR 97701 ph. 503-EV2-5162 (EV for 'evergreen')

Brown, Edmund G. (Jerry). Jr., Illum. satanist & CA politician & slave abuser. 700 S. Flower St., #600 , Los Angeles , CA 90017 (phns 415-928-6346, 415-928-5073)

Brown, Charlie. Air Force Intell. & murderer & Monarch slave abuser, Box 8 . Greenbrier, TN Bundy, McGeorge, IlIum., 133 East 18th St. , NY , NY 10021 Bus. 212-371-3200

Byrd, Robert C.. Satanist and mind-control programmer & Sen. from W.VA, 311 Senate Hart Office Bldg., Washington. D.C. 20501

Clinton, Hillary. Illuminati witch & mind-control slave handler, (address besides White House) Rose Law Firm, 120 E. 4tn St. , Little Rock . Ark. 72201

Cochran, Hank CIA drug kingpin. Hendersonville . TN, 615-824-7011

Cox, Wayne, Satanic High Priest & Monarch handler & dangerous serial killer, Rt. l. Box 84, Chatham, LA 71226

Dante, Michael (Michael Vitti). Monarch slave abuser and porn maker, 3485 Canon Drive . Beverly Hills , CA 90212 218-858-9425; Orange , CA 92665 , 714637-0590

Day, Brad, slave abuser & coke pusher. 5300 Las Pablanos NW. Albuquerque, NM 87107 Drake, Jim (and son), slave abuser & porn/drug dist., 11173 N. Kendall Dr. #F105 , Miami , FL 33176

Fonda, Peter. RR #38, Livingston , MT 59047

Fonda, Jane, c/o Fonda Films, P.O. Box 1198 , Santa Monica , CA 90406

Gavoruhk, John, Police chief working for Illum. protects Monarch programmers/handlers. 121 Partridge Circle . Wintersprings , FL 32708 305-699-0618

Grace, J. Peter, business leader & illuminati. CCAGW, 1301 Connecticut Ave. , NW. #400, Washington , DC 20036

Grateful Dead satanic cult rock band and Illuminati cocaine distributors. P.O. Box 1566, Main Office St., Montclair, N.J. 07043

Greene, Jack, CIA & white slavery & Monarch slave abuser & country entertainer, Box 485A Goodlettsviiie, TN 615-859-3284

Haggard, Merle, slave abuser & country singer. P.O. Box 536 , Palo Cedro , CA 96073 Hestbeck, Vaughn. Monarch abuser & Danish cocaine distr., 515 Rhapsody Paquet Cruises. 1007 N. American Way, Miami, FL 33176

Hope, Bob, slave owner and slave handler w/ intelligence agencies, 3808 Riverside Dr., Burbank, CA 91505

Houston, Alex, satanist & Monarch programmer & CIA, 1155 Ridge Hill Rd., Goodlettsville, TN 37072 615-859-3543

Hummell, Ed, Monarch programmer, Cattleman's Steak & Seafood Co., 10260 S.W. Nimbus Ave. Suite M-3, Tigard, OR 97223 503-620-7824 (also Las Vegas?)

Humperdink, Englebert, Castro Valley . CA 94546 510-733-6085

King Juan Carlos I, King of Spain and Illuminati, Palacio de la Zarzuela , Madrid . Spain

KISS satanic rock band, 6363 Sunset Blvd., #417, Los Angeles , CA 90028

Kissinger, Henry, Illuminat & P2 Freemason, 1800 K. St. , NW. #400. Washington . D.C. 20006

Kreskin, occultist, P.O. Box 1383, West Caldwell, NJ 07006

Lang, Velton, white slavery & drug running, 264 Bluegrass Dr., Hendersonville, TN 37075 615-824-6076 (also at Twitty City 615-822-3210)

Lewis, Jerry Lee, Monarch slave programmer & musician, P.O. Box 3864. Memphis , TN 37173 ; 3324 Lynchburg St. Memphis , TN 38134 901-388-1135

MacLaine, Shirley, actress/author/New Age occultist, 8899 Beverly Blvd. , Los Angeles . CA 90048 Madonna, satanist & monarch slave, 75 Rockefeler Plaza, New York, NY 10019

Manson, Charles, satanist & monarch slave and monarch slave handler, Corcoran Prison, 1002 Diary Ave., Corcoran, CA 93212

Martin, Diane, CIA drug dealer & Monarch slave abuser, 45-641 F. Apapane St., Keneoke, HA 96744 McKee, Lloyd, drug dealer & Monarch slave abuser, 6501 Meoqui, Albuquerque, NM, 87107; 3000 Colonnade Ct. NW. Albuquerqe, NM 87107 505-345-4194

McOuinn, Mike, slave handler & money launderer, Miami, FL 305-386-1512 & 305-251-5320 Meadows, Hal, dir. of the CIA near death mind-control programming center. Swiss Villa Ampetheater, Box 27, Lampe, MO 65681

Merritt, Jeff, CIA drug runner & slave abuser, St. Thomas, US Virgin Islands, 809-744-4000

Mitterrand, Francois

Maurice Marie, Illuminati & close friend to Rothschilds & Pres. of France, Palais de l'Elysée. 55-57 rue du Faubourg Saint-Honoré. 75008 Paris, France

Nelson, Willie, singer & monarch slave handler. P.O. Box 33280 , Austin . TX 78784 Nunn, Sam. IlIuminati, 303 Senate Dirksen Office Bldg., Washington. D.C. 20510

O'Brien, Earl. CIA Monarch abuser, 12614 Lakeshore, Grand Haven, Ml 49417 Overstreet, Tommy, CIA & white slavery. P.C. Box 41103 , Nashville , TN 37204

Parton, Dolly, satanist. Crockett Road , Rt. #1. Brentwood , TN 37027

Pope John Paul II (aka Karol Wojtyla), Illuminati & Freemason. Apostolic Palace, Vatican City

Pride, Charley, slave abuser & white slavery & country singer & CIA. c/o Chardon Inc., 3198 Royal Ln., #204, Dallas, TX 75229

Prophet, Ronnie, Satanist & Monarch slave runner, 1030 17th Ave. N., Nashville, TN 37208 615-321-0539

Queen Beatrix (Wilhelmina Armgard). Illuminati & Queen, of the Netherlands , Binnen Huf 19. The Hague

2513 AA. The Netherlands

Reynolds, Dr. Herbert H., Illuminati & Univ. CEO, Baylor Univ., Waco TX 76798; 336 Guittard Ave. Waco, TX 76706 817-753-4011

Riley, Ken, CIA & Neo-nazi & Loretta Lynn's handler/road manager, Rt. 3, Rosebrook Ct., Gallatin, TN 37066

Rockefeller, Winthrop Illumnati kingpin & porn dealer. Winrock Farms, MorriIton, AR 72110 501-727-5481

Rorick, David (a.k.a. Dave Roe), satanist & white slavery, 1211 Mallard, Franklin, TN, 37064

Rose, Ivan, CIA & White slavery & Monarch abuser, RR 2, Mt. Pleasant Rd., Spartansburg, PA 16434 814-694-2496

Ryan, Dr. Michael N., one of Illum.'s coverup doctor who patches up slaves, 353 New Shackle Is. Rd., Hendersonville . TN 37075, 615-824-8475, 615-824-8496

Smith, Dan, car & drug dealer & slave abuser, P.O. Box 262 . New Martinsville, W. VA 26155

Stevens, Jim, Monarch slave abuser & drug runner, 1726 N. Magnolia, Ocala, FL 32670 904-622-1966 904-622-2139

Tanis, Bob, CIA & Air Force Intell., Monarch abuser & Mafia & pornographer, 7278 N. Lakeshore, West Olive. MI 49460

Train, Russell, Club of Rome, 1803 Kalorma Sq., Washington, D.C., 20008-4021 202-332-5800

Trump, Donald. Illuminati, 725 Fifth Ave. New York, NY 10022

Vanderpool, Darcy, Monarch programmer, 2620 Regatta Dr. # - 116, Las Vegas, NV 891 702-242-4222

Walker, Jimmy, Monarch save abuser/pornographer, 904 Carswell Waycroos, GA 31501 912-285-5594

Warlock, Billy, actor, 9200 Sunset Blvd., #625, Los Angeles, CA 90069 Westberry, Kent, songwriter, satanist & white slavery. 359 Lee Road , CottonTown , TN 37048

Some of THE Illuminati's Companies:

Air America , CIA front, works out of Tulsa ; Nederland , TX ; Berea , OH . & Jackson , MS . The Tulsa addresss is 1419 S. 135th East Ave. , Tulsa , OK 74108-4131 918-234-3041

Cargill, Inc., large grain cartell run by Illum. P.O. Box 9300, 15407 McGinty Rd, Minnetonka, MN 55440

Dungeon Master, Desmodus Inc., hard gay porn, s & m publisher, Box 11314. San Francisco, CA 94101

Eli Lilly & Co., Illuminati drug co., Lilly Corporate Center, Indianapolis, IN 46285

Machinery International, Inc., CIA front, 302 Fall Cr Dr.. Richardson , TX 75080 214-234-2969

Rothschild Pediatric Group, 4770 S. I 10 Service Rd., Metairie, L.A 70001 504-887-1133

Rothschild Pedatric Group, 1970 Ormond Blvd., Destrehan, LA 70047 504-784-6036 Southern Air Transport, CIA front, 6400 N.W. 36th, Miami, FL 33166 Summit Aviation, CIA front, Summit Airport, Middletown, Delaware 19709 302-834-5400

Appendix One (continued)

a. Introductory remarks Vril Society
b. Understanding the programmers Dr. Mengele Dr. Cameron Jerry Lee Lewis and Michael Aquino

c. A list of known programmers Country Music Industry
d. Dr. Green
e. Dr. White
f. The AntiChrist as a Master Programmer

A. Introductory Remarks

For any recipe you need a cook. So who has been cooking up the RECIPE for making Monarch Slaves? The authors felt that after reading the recipe, that some readers would be interested in learning about the master chefs who make human robots using trauma-based mind-control. According to an ex-Programmer, the Programmers for decades have been treated like royalty whenever they step foot onto a military base, or enter a hospital that carries out mind control. They are always expected. Generally, the commanding general on a base would meet them and escort the programmer in a limo. If the base commander couldn't make it, an important physician might take his place.

The programmers have keys, and codes to get into special areas. After many thousands of Americans died in WW II fighting Nazism, our government's intelligence agencies (incl. the military intelligence groups) in cooperation with the Illuminati and its people in the Vatican, smuggled 10,000 of the worst Nazi-fascist war criminals into this country. This is on public record now. Part of this was under Operation Paperclip. The DoD (Dept. of Defense) also worked at smuggling Nazi mind control programmers under Project 63. Every W.W. II veteran who fought ought to be angry that after putting his life on the line for "democracy" and freedom, and supposedly defeating the Nazis, our government brought in men like the S.S.'s infamous butcher Dr. Joseph Mengele to program American children with trauma-based mind-control like he had in the concentration camps. In fact, Fritz has worked with an Illuminati victim of Joseph Mengele, who was programmed in Germany in a concentration camp, and then smuggled to the U.S. via Canada by Jesuits working with the Illuminati.

Once in the U.S., this person continued to be programmed by Mengele, who went by many names including Dr. Green. He is described in detail in part d. of this Appendix. We must begin to get beyond the fronts and covers that the programmers have for the world. Jewish professor Ernst Bergmann, of the infamous Leipzig University , is also surprisingly a strong advocate of Nazism. His main book is A National Socialist Philosophy of Culture. He writes, "A new type of mankind is being developed." He is mentioned here so that people stop looking at labels, and start looking at what is really going on. One of the principle goals of Nazism was to remake mankind. The Ahnerbe of the Nazis was set up to do genetic research and experiments. And one element of that was to be able to create the prefect obedient mind-controlled slave.

A first glance at the lies told us by our press will give one the impression Nazism was anti-communist, nationalistic, & Christian. However, a close look at Hitler and today's Nazi leadership, will reveal that Nazism is Socialism (or Marxism, exactly what communism is about) and that Nazism is not nationalistic, but international in its view. Further, it is Satanic and based on the Nordic mystery beliefs (Odin, Thor, etc.). It is not based on Christianity.

The Vril Society was the mother of the Nazi party. "Vril" means the Light Force. What Light force? Lucifer the light bearer's light force. The true nature of Nazism is being concealed. When Hitler came to plan, he was placed into power in accordance with the Illuminati plan which was spelled out in writing. This plan said, "Nowadays if any state raise a protest against us it is only pro forma (provided in advance) at our discretion and by our direction, for their anti-semitism is indispensable to us for the management of our lesser brethren."

Illuminati international bankers brought Hitler to power, and Illuminati kingpins like Rockefeller, Onassis and the King of Sweden traded with the Nazis. Spain stayed neutral during the war to serve as a conduit of supplies to keep Hitler's war going. Hitler was a participant in rituals where human sacrifices were carried out. He himself killed a number of men by pulling their hearts out of their bodies while they were alive. One Monarch slave remembers his father, who was powerful in the Illuminati, describing how Hitler killed a man in front of him by pulling his heart out. Some of Hitler's key advisors and key men were in the Illuminati.

There are also lots of tie ins with the OTO, the Vril Society, the Thule Society, the Society of Green Men. The head of the Tibetan Monks that Hitler imported to help him lead Germany was known as The Man with the Green Glove. The monks were posted in Berlin, Munich, and Nuremberg.

By the way, the NWO is still using Tibetan Monks. Have you ever watched how much travel the Dalai Lama gets in? And did you notice that Tibetan Monks were imported in the Bakaa Valley Colorado by a U.N. leader? The Mishpuka (Jewish Mafia) leader Pritzker who lives in seclusion on Haulon Rd., Libertyville, IL 60048 on a 1300 acre piece of expensive real estate, had the Dalai Lama consecrate a shrine for him. Haulon Rd. has two access points, a northern and a southern. (The road was bought by Pritzker and is guarded. Pritzker has been active in Chicago for the Mishpuka. He is reported to have spent millions renovating his house, where for some reason, dead bodies keep showing up on its estate grounds.)

Our political leaders have been aware that Nazi Mind-control experts were imported after the war. For instance, some of the Nazi war criminals smuggled in became some of Richard Nixon's personal friends. Even the Mossad were fully aware that thousands upon thousands of the worst monsters that the world has known were smuggled into the U.S. for the Illuminati by the Vatican, the Intelligence Agencies, and other groups.

The Rothschilds and Nelson Rockefeller forced the Jewish Zionist leadership in Israel to keep silent about the Nazis who were smuggled into the U.S. after W.W. II. In return for Israel's silence and the Mossad's silence about the thousands of high level satanic Nazis who were brought into the U.S., the nation of Israel was allowed. They made a deal, according to high level insiders.

Nelson Rockefeller had enormous power in South America. In June 1945, when the U.N. was being set up at San Francisco, Nelson Rockefeller attended. While Nelson Rockefeller was there, he busied himself with directing the South American delegates. Rockefeller's bloc of 19 Latin American countries had more U.N. votes than Europe's nine members. Rockefeller was a key person, if the Zionist's wanted the U.N. to vote so that the nation of Israel could be established. The Zionist leadership used what they thought was blackmail, if you don't let Israel be established we will expose how you are smuggling Nazi war criminals into the U.S.

Of course, the Illuminati wanted Israel to be created--so those in the Zionist leadership who knew the bigger plans of the Illuminati, knew that the Illuminati-run CIA wasn't giving up anything. If anyone asks why the Mossad didn't expose MI-6 and the CIA's extensive hiring of Nazi war criminals, they say today that they were using it for blackmail to get Israel what it needed. Those in the know, realize that is just an excuse. The Mossad has hired its own share of Nazi criminals, and at some point learned mind-control programming from the CIA, perhaps even from Mengele (Dr. Green). The Nazis used Croats and White Russians to carry out some of their genocide policies. Not all of the monsters of W.W. II were German, many were White Russian collaborators.

Essentially every White Russian War Criminal from W.W. II that survived the war was placed on one NATO payroll or another. The U.S. intelligence even hired German SS administrators. Why? Because U.S. intelligence is controlled by the Illuminati. The White Russian Nazis were settled in the NY-NJ area, especially in South River, NJ. One of the worst monsters was Stankievich who ended up living in Richmond Hills and working for the CIA. He got a job working for Radio Liberty in NY! Isn't that ironic that "Radio Liberty" has hired such monsters. Does our government put out propaganda or is it really the champion of freedom that it portrays itself to be?

The Nazi mayor of Minsk was brought over by the CIA and given a job at the N.Y. Library of running the Slavic desk. One of the chief White Russian war criminals, the Vor Kommando Moskau chief recruiter was made head over a NY county medical society.

John Foster Dulles, brother of the director of the CIA, was trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation. The Rockefeller Foundation was a participant in Nazi mind control research done by Mengele and others for the Kaiser Wilhelm Medical Institute in Berlin. After the war, John Foster Dulles helped smuggle Nazis into this country, including those who were Illuminati Mind-control experts.

Bill Casey, later director of the CIA, was also busy helping bring in Nazi war criminals after the war. He served on the International Rescue Committee in NY which he used to bring Nazis into New York. Prior to the war Jewish German scientists were smuggled into New York through the Arnold & Constable Store, which housed the ADL on the top floor.

The South American countries, especially Argentina, ruled by the Perons, was connected to both the Illuminati in Germany and the Illuminati in the states. Many Germans went to Argentina, and they simply continued doing what they had done in the past. Satanism working under the veil of Nazism was very strong in Argentina where many of the German Illuminati leaders moved after the war.

Another place that the Germans loved to move to was Oregon, especially Portland, OR. The head of Hitler's intelligence was the brilliant Reinhard Gehlen who worked for the CIA after the war. He is Illuminati. His brother was Doe Winters who lived in Pullach after the war.

Mengele, (the Dr. Black of Monarch Programming, who was an Illuminati Grand Master himself) would occasionally visit Doe Winter's Pullach residence. To renovate the image of Nazi criminals, they became Anti-communist crusaders. A group of fascists from Asia and Europe were taken by U.S. Intelligence and moulded into the WACL (World Anti-Communist League). And we of the sheppel (sheep) were given more Hegalian dialectics. Those of us who still care about humanity's freedom, and that human spirit not to be broken by the elite's total mind control, have got to get beyond labels, and the media's propaganda, and the false fronts.

B. Understanding The Programmers

Many men have contributed to the research of trauma-based mind control. The men who learned how to torture during the ancient Babylonian days, during the Roman days and during the Medieval days passed their secrets to the rulers of the secret Mystery Religions. Some of the 13 Illuminati bloodlines trace their history back to the ancient times of Babylon. Because the programmers are driven by the spirit-world, they are very jealous and competitive towards each other. It is a dog-eat-dog world amongst them. The demonic forces within in them are in competition too. Yes, the programmers have had their friction, their jealousies & power struggles with each other. Some of these inner battles have been fought with and over their mind-controlled slaves. When two programmers work on a single slave, they might both put in their own secret back doors to insure that the slave remains loyal to himself rather than other programmer.

There has also been ongoing tension between the half-blooded & full blooded Illuminati programmers. Because each of the various programming centers specializes in perhaps a dozen types of programming, programmers go to different programming centers. The props for the scripts are often kept at the programming centers. The programmers will dress according to the script they are giving the victims, which might mean they may be dressed as the Wizard of Oz, a Nazi, a doctor in a white coat, a white rabbit costume, a corrigan sweater as Mr. Rogers, or in the nude.

One of the most cruelest evil geniuses in recent times was Dr. Mengele. Dr. Mengele used 3,000 twins during the time of 1943-1944 for research. Most of these twins died. The twins were chosen out of the vast numbers of people who were brought in to the German concentration camps. By the time W.W. II ended, Mengele knew a great deal about how to torture children in order to get them to bond totally with him. Even today some of the survivors of his horrible experiments believe that Mengele loved children. They love him as their father. Mengele also developed the ability to create artificial twinning between two people. Mengele carried his violin with him when he came onto military bases. His violin hid his color bands and probes for color programming.

Other men worked with Dr. Mengele and soon became programmers in their own right. Dr. Cameron of Canada became a Monarch mind-controlled slave programmer known as Dr. White.

Another programmer who was not a full blooded generational Satanist was Gog known as Dr. Blue. Heinrich Mueller is known as Dr. Blue. Dr. Blue lived in the northwest area and has two sons--their programming and cult nicknames are Teddy Bear (Theodore) and Robin Hood (Michael).

Two programmers known successively as Dr. Black are L.W. and W.B. A protege of L. W. is Ed Hummel who works in states such as Texas and Oregon. Ed was originally from Texas, and W. and B. were originally from Oklahoma before they began working in the Northwest.

Two of the most ruthless programmers on the West coast are Jerry Lee Lewis and Michael Aquino. These two men are as cold blooded as they come, ranking right beside Mengele in their ability to torture. Michael Aquino (DOB 10/16/46, 2430 Leavenworth St., San Francisco, plus other addresses), because he was in military intelligence, was in a position to pass on his diabolical programming abilities to dozens of military officers. His wife works with him, and her name is Lilith Sinclair (DOB 4/21/42). Michael Aquino has travelled all over the U.S. doing programming. Michael Aquino used Cathy O'Brien as the star victim in his training video which teaches military officers how to create Monarch mind-controlled slaves.

One of the old time programmers (early 1950s-80's) who worked as a psychiatrist in southern California went by the programming name of Sid. The principle Illuminati programmers were known as Dr. Black, Dr. White, Dr. Green, and Dr. Blue. They oversaw the training of thousands of part-time programmers. The better programmers are able to get into the mind of the victim much like Colombo (Peter Falk), who is, by the way, in his personal life is part of this all.

The reader needs to understand that a victim who is given the Monarch mind-control may have a number of programmers, but the slave will be trained to only respond to the voices of a limited number of users. If someone tries to use a slave and has the wrong voice, it could trigger suicide programming. A human robot may have alters which can rescue the body from a suicide alter, but the message will be clear to the mind-controlled slave that it should stay away from non-approved users or face possible suicide. We have now entered an era where second and third generation robotic mind controlled slaves are programming. The programmed are now doing much if not most of the programming. This means many of the programmers are men with MPD.

Some programmers are hard-core military men who see any type of "discipline" or "training" as good if the end product produces better obeying soldiers. These hard-core military men have lost any proper boundaries on what is O.K. for training. This explains why the whole apparatus to create mind-controlled slaves is turning out new slaves at an alarming rate. The small number of victims who are painstakingly saved by de-programming and therapy is slight compared to the number of new slaves being created. Over two million Americans have been programmed by trauma-based mind control since 1947, & the CIA admitted its Mind Control publicly in 1970, and yet the existence of the mind-control is still secret to the general public.

Doctors such as Dr. Gaefsky, at the Bethesada Naval Hospital and Dr. Beecher at Harvard, under the auspices of the CIA worked to perfect the use of drugs to mind-control people.

Dr. Jensen, was the CIA programmer who programmed Candy Jones (birth name Jessica Wilcox, and CIA alias Arlene Grant), the famous sex object of males during W.W. II. Candy Jones was a Monarch carrier pigeon (courier) for the CIA. Candy Jones received some of her programming at The Farm which is the CIA's Camp Peary.

Dr. William Jennings Bryan also helped the CIA in programming. Naval Psychologist Lt. Comdr. Thomas Narut contributed his ideas on how to develop mind-controlled assassins. Some of the assembly-line Delta assassination teams are using programming techniques based on Narut's programming research.

A Dr. James Monroe also worked for the CIA in Mind Control programming.

READERS ARE ASKED TO REMEMBER THAT SOMETIMES SEVERAL PEOPLE MAY HAVE THE SAME NAME. Disclaimer: The readers are asked to check these people/names out for themselves before drawing any final conclusions, maybe the leopard has changed his spots.

C. Monarch Mind Control Programmers

Morse Allen

Lt. Col. John Alexander
Richard Dabney Anderson
Michael Aquino (program cover name Malcolm, also known to some children as Mickey, Betty Ford is his mother, Illum, bloodline, married to Lilith Sinclair)
Astor
Armstrong
Bill Bennett
Wilbur Bowers (program cover name Billy Boy, a Rothschild)
Dr. William Jennings
Bryan Burcham Burnell-Hightower

Sen. Robert C. Byrd
Dr D Ewen Cameron (program cover name Dr White)
Sue Carper
Joe Circo
Mark Circo
Wayne Cox
Dr. Bernard Diamond
Michael Delaney (prog. covr name Robin Hood)
Russell G. Frazier
Gaston Beth George (a Rothschild)
Clair George
Dr Sydney Gottlieb
Col. Wilson Green
John Gunter (program cover name Little John)
Haggin Harrick in Denver, Co.
Col. Height (sp.?)
Lawrence Hinkle
Alex Houston
Ed Hummel
Dr. Harris Isbell
Dr. Jensen Johnson
Steve Kilgore
Kris Kristopherson
Helga LaRouche
Hank Levine
Jerry Lee Lewis
Dr. John Lilly
Col. Manassah
Irby Mandrell
Hal Meadows
Dr. Meiers (program cover name The Jolly Green Giant)
Seward Prosser Mellon (program cover name Governor)
Dr. Josef Mengele (program cover name Dr. Green)
Dr. Joseph A. Meyer
Ted V. Mikels
Dr. James Monroe
Heinrich Mueller (program cover name Dr. Blue)
Theodore son of Heinrich Mueller (program cover name Teddy Bear)
Nathan Lt. Comdr.
Thomas Narut
Dr. Martin T. Orange
Owens
Col. Tom Parker
Patterson
Pete Peterson
Ken Riley
Rockefeller
David Long Rothschild
Guy de Rothschild
Savor
Alden Sears
Dr. Star Maj.
Strange
Strong Suttenfuss
Col. Taylor

http://whale.to/b/sp/for1.html

Leo Taylor
Darcy Vanderpool
Weir Kent
Westberry
Leo Wheeler (program cover name Dr. Black, a Collins)
Robert Whitlow
Harold Wolff

SOURCES: Fritz Springmeier's Newsletters Oct. 15, 1993; Dec. 1, '93; Feb, '94; Jan., 1995; March-April, 1995; "Perpetrators" (Monograph), 1993 by Cathy O'Brien, Fritz Springmeier's own list of people from Survivors, In Search For the Manchurian Candidate

Country Music Industry

Perpetrators Involved and knowledgeable of Monarch Mind Control (Most are involved with the CIA's drug running network.)

Henry Ade
Alabama band
Atlanta Bandana
Lynn Anderson
Jerry Barlow
Boxcar Willie
Ray Burdette
Glen Campbell
Ace Canon
Dee Clark
Roy Clark
David Allen Coe
Pat Corn
Helen Cornelious
Wayne Cox
Dave DeBolt
Penny Dehaven
Charlie Dick T he Drifters
Roy Drusky
Narvel Felts
The Four Guys
Randy and Rudy Gatlin
Jim Glaser
Vern Gosdin
Jack Greene
Merle Haggard
Alex Houston (and Elmer)
Englebert Humperdink
Waylon Jennings
George Jones
The Judds
Merle Kilgore
Buddy Killen
Velton Lang
Hank Levine
Jerry Lee Lewis
Ernest Ray Lynn
Ronnie Lutric

Jack MacFadden
Reggie Maclaughlin
Brent Magor
Marty Martell
George Moffet
Lorrie Morgan
Bonnie Nelson
Willie Nelson
Oakridge Boys
Merril Osmund
Tommy Overstreet
Jerry and Arlene Petty
Ray Pillow
Charlie Pride
Ronnie Prophet
Jeannie Pruett
Giles Reeves
Dave Roe (Rorick)
Dave Roland (and Sugar)
TG Sheppard
Hank Snow
Ronnie Stoneman
Jimmy Sturr
Jimmy Swaggart
Mel Tillis
Buck Trent
Leroy VanDyke
Jim Vest
Mack Vickory
Billy Walker
Charlie Walker
Jim Webb
Dottie West
Shelly West
Kent Westberry
Bobby Whitton

Michael McArthur, a recent convert from Satanism who helped abduct children provided first hand testimony that the following are involved in abductions of children:

"Chucky" (aka „Mike," aka "Peters"') --FBI hit man in Div. 5 of FBI, involved also with Inslaw Case

Nichol Harrah -FBI agent who abducts children for sacrifice

Linda Krieg-Satanist working for FBI

Ken Lanning-FBI agent who abducts children for sacrifice while claiming SRA doesn't exist

Nick O'Hara--FBI hit man, satanist, who has covered FBI child kidnapping by murdering witnesses

Kepe Richardson--CIA agent who abducts children for sacrifice

In addition to all this, the following are a few of the CIA people who are both Slave Handlers and drug dealers, who haven't gotten their names mentioned yet:

Pat Bowlin
George Bush & son

Sue Carper (not known if she deals drugs). She does dir. CIA operations and the Norwegian Caribbean Lines.
Hank Cochran, a drug overlord
Alan Dulles
Diane Martin of Hawaii
Irby Mandrell who controls other family members who are slaves such as Barbara, Louise, & Iriene.
Jim Maynard, CIA covert ops Belize Jeff Meritt, St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Is.
Carl Misel
Jim Mitchell
Earl O'Brien
Linda Scale
Bob Tannis w/ Air Force Intell. in Ml

The Temple of Set.

The Temple of Set (The Temple of Power) is built upon mind control. Since most of the members are either victims of mind control or perpetrators or both, it would be productive to give the membership of this organization.

Dr. Flowers, the Grand Master of the Order of the Trapezoid, may well be a programmer. In the least he is a slave handler. Some Total Mind-controlled slaves will have Order of the Trapezoid things internally. If they do, the therapist should recognize that this is Temple of Set (Power) programming. The membership of the Church of Set has been a closely guarded secret. Here it is.

A few words of explanation are in order. Most of the names in the list are the actual names of people, but some people joined the Temple of Set under aliases. For instance Eddie W. Hands is an alias for Edward Wayne Cox of Chatham, Louisiana. E. Wayne Cox may have chosen this alias because he runs an international business of selling left hands taken from victims of human sacrifice. The left hand is called by these Satanists "the hand of glory."

Although Senator Robert C. Byrd's name doesn't appear on the Temple of Set's formal membership, he properly should be included in any membership list, because it was his legal expertise that helped Aquino set up the Temple of Set so that it would be legally protected by the Constitution. Behind this legal Satanic organization is a large amount of illegal Satanic activity, including sacrifice, slavery, mind control, porn and drugs. Senator Byrd is an example of how evil men can pervert the use of the Constitution for evil.

Another name which is not on the formal membership roster is Jerry Lee Lewis, but Jerry Lee Lewis works so closely with the Monarch slaves of the Temple of Set that he is an integral part of the Temple of Set system. This secret membership list follows this pattern NAME OF PERSON-POSITION IN THE TEMPLE OF SET (i.e. rank), PLACE OF RESIDENCE, OTHER OCCULT OR SECULAR FACTS ABOUT THE PERSON. Roman numerals are used to identify Setian ranks, I have taken the liberty to abbreviate these roman numerals into our everyday numbers, such as VI° = 6°.

Here is the PAST AND RECENT SECRET MEMBERSHIP IN THE TEMPLE OF SET (a spin-off of the Church of Satan, and recently reconstructed as the Temple of Power.):

Alex, Frank R.--Setian 1°, Illinois Alleé,
John D.-Adept 2°, Mass., editor of satanic newsletter Brimstone.
Frank Sinatra fan.
Anderson, Yolanda--Adept 2°, Calif. Adept at Black Magic. Satanic priestess.
Aquino, Lilith Sinclair--Magistra Templi 40 Treasurer, she founded the Lilith Groto which was the largest and longest-functioning Grotto of the LaVey's Church of Satan. On the T of S's Council of nine, Of the Sinclair bloodline.

Aquino, Michael-The vain Ipsissimus 6° of the Temple of Set, Missouri, Lt. Col. U.S. Army with high level security clearance, in Military Intelligence and army's Psychic warfare battalion, Green Beret, member ACLU, Defense Intelligence College, and prominent teacher of how to create Monarch slaves.

http://whale.to/b/sp/for1.html

Austen, David--Priest of Set 3°, London, England, Black Magician who studies Crowley

Barrett, Ronald L., Jr.--Priest of Set 3°, Colorado, ex-Airborne Ranger, interested in alchemistry
Bennett, Clifton B.--Setian 1°, Colorado, studies Crowley, medieval Satanism and Kenneth Anger
Berkey, C. Joseph, 3rd--Adept 2°, Virginia, does occult art and practices Enochian Magic Blood, Linda--Wrote a book about her time with Michael Aquino and the Temple of Set Blount, Larry D.--Setian 1°, Texas, studies Friedrich Nietzche and black magic Bozeman, Clayton C.--Adept 2°, Oregon,
Bradley, Curtis A.-Setian 1°, Colorado, Freemason, reads everything on vampires
Browning, Willie--USAR officer in Ml
Buckman, Samuel-Setian 1°, Accra, Ghana, West Africa, wants to spread black magic in West Africa
Butch, William T.--Priest of Set 3°, Penn., Lt Commander of Navy SEALs, studies ancient Egyptian Satanism
Campbell, Adam N-Adept 2°, Melbourne, Victoria, Aust., satanist interested in politics
Chandler, Kendal T.--Setian 1°, Penn.. a musician into heavy metal music
Clark. Julian R.-Priest of Set 3°. England, practicing hypnotherapist in London, has snakes for pets
Cruse, Roger D. 2nd-Setian 1° , Georgia, interested has studied Clinical Psychology
DeCecco. R. Amn-Magistrer Templi 4°, Maine, on T of S's Council of Nine DiCicco. Carman J., Jr.-Setian 1°. New Jersey. studies Bruce Lee, Machiavelli, and Anton LaVey, likes Black Sabbath/Ozzy

DuNard-Phillips, Carolyne--Adept 2°, Missouri, Egyptian &Enochian Magic, heads an Egyptian magic Lodge
Egen, Shane M.-Setian 1°, Wellington, New Zealand, interested in Heavy Metal music, martial arts and mind control Engels, Georges-Setian 1°, Belgium, practices Black Magic Evans, Larry--Priest of Set 3°, Oklahoma, Sentinel of the Gates of Hell Pylon
Farnsler, William E.-Adept 2°, Texas,
Felczak, John J.--Adept 2°, Calif., has stuied a wide variety of occult systems
Ferguson, Rick A.--Setian 1°, Ohio, Flowers.
Nancy K.-Magistra Templi 4°, Texas, Editor of the Scroll of Set, part of the Bull of Ombos Pylon in Austin, TX.
Flowers, Dr. Stephen E.-Magister Templi 4°, Texas, Grand Master of Order of the Trapezoid, expert of Runes and Germanic occultism

Fox, D. Pete-Setian 1°, Illinois, interested in Nazism's occultism
Friedel. Peter--Priest of Set 3°, West Ger. member of the Ordo Satuni (holds a high degree), 30° in the Scottish Rite, member of the Quatuor Coronati Lodge of London, generational satanist of the Illuminati, promotes Satanism's growth in Europe.

Gallo. Walter J.-Setian 1°, New York, former painter. interested in Crowley and Nazism
Gibbs, Cynthia K.--Setian 1°, Calif.,
Goff, Joseph A-Adept 2°, Mich,
Grady. James S-Virginia Gregoire, Raymond A-Priest of Set 3°. Wash, state
Grisé, Kevin M.-Setian 1°, hypnotherapist & rehab counselor
Guliaeff, Nickolai N., Jr-Adept 2°, Calif.
Gyori. John G., Jr.--Adept 2°, Texas Hand,
Eddie W.--Setian 1°. Louisiana (See previous art, in Oct. 15 newsletter on Wayne Cox within the list of witch covens,) Hardee, Bryan C.-Setian 1°, Wyoming, was part of a guild of magicians called the G.T.P,
Hardy, Patty A--Priestess of Set 3°, Maine, likes to read Robert Anton Wilson
Haywood, Michael T.--Setian 1°, Illinois, (now perhaps in Pittsburg PA)
Hearty, Marie L.--Setian 1°, Ontario, Can.,
Hinson, Eulit M.-Adept 2°, Black Magician who studies Crowley, Aquino, the Golden Dawn, Nietzsche, vampirism, etc.
Jantschik, Walter-Adept 2°, West Germany. Black Magician who studies vampirism, demonology, fraternal orders Johnson, James R., Jr.--Adept 2°, Nevada.
Johnson, Lynn (later married W.T. Butch)--high Setian who left to form the Temple of Nepthys
Joyner, James C-Sec, of the Order of Leviathan, Baxley. GA
Kalivoda, Kurt-Setian 1°, Illinois, studied OTO black magic Keil, Jeffrey J.-Setian 1°, mmbr Rune-Gild, King, Stephen P.--Setian 1°, So. Carolina, Knowles, James L., Jr.--Setian 1°, Minn., has studied Enochian Magic. (The Knowles family is somewhat prominent.)

Laakso, Petri-Setian 1°, Finland. joined T of S as a young man going into the Finish armed forces
Lance, Rebecca C-Priestess of Set 3°, Calif., member of The Children which is a Satanic band
Lee, John--Setian 1°, Queensland, Aust., interested in Nazism and SS rituals
Lewis, .James--ipsissimus 6°, Council of Nine, Baxley, Georgia, was formerly with the Church of Satan
Lilly, James H., Jr --Setian 1°,
Lima, Peter J.--Setian 1°
Lynch, Scott C.-Setian 1°, Halifax, Nova Scotia, interested in Neo-Nazism and the KKK
Mahoney, Michael--Setian 1°, Mass.
Mann, Dennis K-Priest of Set 3°, Order of the Trapezoid, and Order of the Vampire, New York, USAR in Ml. propaganda expert and an attorney

Matthews, Lee J.-Adept 2°, Conn., studies the Yezidee Satanists McGranahan, Timothy L.--Adept 2°, Illinois
Mensohel, Robert--Magister Templi 4°, Calif., Member of Mensa, computer whiz kid, editor Ruby Tablet
Moffatt, Robert H.--Magister Templi 4°, Calif., co-fdr of T of S Council of 9, editor SCROLL, operated Set-Amentet Pylon in LA. Moore,

Patrick R.--Setian 1°, FL
Neilly. Robert W.-Magister Templi 4°, Ontario, Canada, co-fdr T of 5, Chrmn Council of Nine, ESP research
Nielsen, Ruth A.--Adept 2°, WI, ex-Catholic nun, into magic, incl. hermetic magic and computers
Nourse, Andrew--Setian 1°, MA, amateur radio, computer programmer, into massage magic,
Osbourne, Amanda--Adept 2°, CA, likes Stephen King Novels and Star Trek, and love horror films
Page. Richard E.-Setian 1°, Ml, into runic and Enochian magic Parkin, Antony--Adept 2°, Lancashire, Eng.. likes Nazi SS things
Pridgen, William D.--Adept 20, So. Cara., likes the works of Crowley, Lovecraft, Grant, R.A. Wilson, John wheeler and others.

Radtke, Walter--Adept 2°, CA. experimental artist, interested in Da Vinci, Tesla, Velikovsky
Reichensperger, Peter--Setian 1°, mathematician. Esoteric Order of Dagon. works with computers
Reynolds, Linda--Magistra Templi 4°, Tenn, co-leader of Seshen Pylon, San Francisco
Rietze, Perry A.-Setian 1°, FL, Satanist interested in Satanic Bible, ritual magic, Egyptology, and demonology
Rigby. Michael S.-Adept 2°, TX Rivera, Peter N--Adept 2°, Calif., interested in the magical effects of drums and music Robinson, Robert W.-Priest of Set 3°, UT. interested in snakes, studying the Illuminati, built ritual sites in Death Valley, explores Aztec ruins.

Rowlett, Curtis A--Adept 2°, GA, interested in Aleister Crowley/Thelema
Rush, Jennifer--Adept 2°, N.S.W. Australia, uses Tarot cards as a hobby
Russell, Diane--Setian 1°, FL, practices Black Magic Sandling.
Frances S.--Adept 2°, Dorset, Eng.. interested in John Dee (Enochian Magic). Crowley & LaVey. Does Black Magic rituals.

Sass, James D.--Setian 1°, P.O. Box 666, Daytona Beach, FL 32115, Hard core black magician.
Saunders, Richard--Adept 2°, England. interested in Black Magic and Chaos Magic Schumacher, Jeurgen-Setian 1°, Germany, works Hatha Yoga, likes Odinism, studies hypno-therapy
Scott, Eardley W.--Setian 1°, NJ, a drummer with a rock/jazz fusion, like Enochian magic & its conversion to Setian symbolism

Shull, Robert W.-Adept 2°, VA, Snow, Heather L.--Adept 2°, NM, artist
Sobolewski, R. Douglas--Setian 1°, PA, Rosicrucian (AMORO) 8°, amateur astronomer
Spriet. Patrick--Adept 2°, Belgium, interested in Nazism and Egypt, multilingual in 5 languages
Stout, Julie-Adept 2°, TX, Taylor, Lucifer E.--Setian 1°, MA, Exec, Sec. of Brimstone, a journal of the Anc. Brotherhd of Satan, 231 Kennedy Dr #130, Maiden, MA 02148
Thompson, Elana-Setian 1°, OR, interested in the occult, science fiction and anthropology esp. the Middle East
Van Patten, William P.-Setian 1°, NY, likes Heavy Metal music like Ozzy/Black Sabbath, reads Stephen King.

studies Nazism

Watson, Amoid R.-Setian 1°, TX, interested in Egyptology, the Yezidi Satanists, Enochian Magic, and other things.
Webb, Don-Adept 2°, TX, Weirich, Richard J.-Setian 1°,
Wendall, Margaret A.-Magistra Templi 4°, CA, was a prominent mmbr of Ch. of Satan, founded the Scroll of Set & has been its editor

Whitaker, Colleen G.-Honorary Setian, OH, artist, interested in the Tarot, Councillor & Ex, Dir, for Ch of Satan
Whitaker, Roger L.-Honorary Setian, OH, a film maker, likes horror films
Winkhart, Roland-Priest of Set 3°, Germany, helps Peter Friedel operate the Black Diamond Pylon in Germany for the T of S

Zajkowski, Marie M,--Priestess of Set 3°, CA. Zimmer, Brian E.-Adept 2°, OH.

D. Dr. Green (Dr. Joseph Mengele)

The most significant programmer, perhaps one could give him the title of the father of Monarch Programming was Joseph Mengele, an ex-Nazi Concentration Camp doctor. Thousands of Monarch mind-controlled slaves in the U.S. had "Dr. Green" as their chief programmer. Physically the doctor was 5’8", dark-brown hair, greenish brown eyes, and gracefully handsome. He was a Dr. Jekyll-Mr. Hyde character who disarmed people by his kindness. He was gentle and quiet and intelligent, while still having a very sadistic brutal side to him. Joseph Mengele was born into a wealthy Satanic bloodline, and became one of the most powerful Satanists in the world. He was an expert on demonology and the Cabala. He was at least a Grand Master in the Illuminati, but how high he went up the hierarchy ladder is unknown to this author.

Because he was part of the Illuminati and their bodies are not to have visible scars, Joseph Mengele did not take the SS tatoo on his body when he joined the Nazi SS. Mengele became the camp doctor at the famous Auschwitz Concentration Camp. Joseph Mengele was in a very key position as the camp doctor at Auschwitz. He was able to use countless thousands of people as guinea pigs for experiments. One of the chief items that had to be charted in detail was how much torture various humans could take. The charts were worked up so that the Illuminati would know exactly how much torture and how much nurturing to carry out in creating trauma-based mind-controlled slaves.

After Joseph grew up in Gunzberg with a family noted for their secrecy, and an abusive mother, he studied at Frankfurt-am-Main which is a satanic stronghold in Germany. He interned at Leipzig, a town known for being the site of modern learning theories. Later he joined the SA and then later the SS. At the end of W.W. II the United States army took custody of Mengele, and the secret satanists of the satanic brotherhood, got Mengele quietly smuggled into the U.S.

Mengele was given a higher profile in South America to lead people to think that he spent his time in South America. Actually Mengele spent a great deal of time travelling worldwide especially to places like Tavistock and China Lake’s Naval Intelligence base where Monarch slaves were created from innocent children. Although Mengele did indeed live in Brazil, Argentina and Paraguay a great deal of misinformation and disinformation has been dumped on the world by the CIA and other groups working for the Illuminati.

Mengele continued to love music and dancing throughout his life. He became a human puppet master who used music to program with. He liked both the violin and the piano. He did lots of musical key-tones programming. Some of his protégés also used music to program with. This bent toward using music then contributed to the fact that the American country western industry is an outgrowth of the Monarch program. The country western industry is a cover for the drug running done via Monarch slaves.

Another bent of Mengele’s also contributed to a direction that the Monarch program took. Mengele was fascinated by twins and twinning. Mengele experimented on thousands of twins, most of who died from the torture of the experiments. Science experiments need two groups, one of which is a control group. Twins make research easy. Mengele used them extensively. He was developing, along with some German and Italian researchers, the capability to trauma bond people to their abuser to such an extent that the victim would be totally loyal to their abuser. During episodes in the camps when Mengele saved people from execution by the S.S., some of those people remained loyal to him to this day in spite of an awareness of how many people he cruelly tortured to death.

Monarch slaves are programmed to think they have a twin somewhere. Many of them have been twinned into 2 person and 4 person teams also. Mengele was known by people in the camps by his victims as the Angel of Death, Vater (father), Vaterchen (daddy) and Schoner Joseph (beautiful Joseph). Monarch mind-controlled slave victims who were programmed by him know him by names such as Doctor Green, Papa, David and Fairchild. Monarch slaves remember the cadence of his shiny black boots as he marched back and forth while programming them.

Whether programming in a lab, or experimenting on humans Dr. Mengele enjoyed reducing people to the level of animals. However, many times his victims were restrained from crying tears. Mengele is well-known by his Monarch victims for his daisy game programming. He would pull off a daisy and say I love you." Then he would pull of one and say, I love you not." When the last daisy petal came out I love you not," he would then kill a small child in front of the child he was programming.

Mengele was in Dallas during the killing of JFK, which was achieved by trained Monarch slaves. (In fact, the Beaumont, TX Enterprise on Mon. April 10, '94 in the Metro Sect. B, on page B cont. to 4b reports that a sworn affidavit exists where a man connects Joseph Mengele with Kennedy's death and to have seen Mengele at the Texas Book Depository.) Luis Angel Castillo was just one of the Monarch mind-controlled slaves sent to kill JFK on Nov. 22, '63. A woman from Germany named Mrs. Krebs, along with a host of other programmers, worked with Mengele on the Kennedy assassination.

In 1956, as part of the ongoing deception (and also showing the audacity of the Illuminati) Joseph Mengele applied and got an Argentinean foreign resident permit under his own name. He even travelled to Europe to various countries in 1956 using his own name.

E. Dr. White (Dr. D. Ewen Cameron)

Dr. White was the cover name for D. Ewen Cameron (b. Dec. 24, 1901 - Sept. 8, 1967). He was born in Scotland, was tall, imposing, & blue eyed, liked whiskey, and wore custom-made suits. He called women "Lassie." His favourite book growing up was Frankenstein, it is said that Frankenstein inspired him to go into psychiatry.

Cameron was president of the powerful American Psychiatric Association, and later the president of the Canadian Psychiatric Association, and then later the first president of the World Association of Psychiatrists. He was chairman of the Canadian Scientific Planning Committee.

Dr. D. Ewen Cameron, of Montreal, Canada was Dr. White when carrying out Monarch programming. Cameron tried to continue some of Mengele's eye color research in Canada. Mengele was trying to discover for the Nazi's how to make brown eyes blue. Cameron received funding from the Illuminati. Cameron also got funding from the CIA. The Rockefeller Foundation gave him $40,000 in 1943 to create the Allen Memorial Institute for psychiatry, an Illuminati front. He began doing programming early in the 1950s. Cameron had served on the gruesome western front in W.W.I.

As an Illuminati kingpin and programmer, Cameron (Dr. White) was very sadistic and cold blooded. He visited other programmers on the West Coast periodically. One leading Canadian doctor said that Cameron "was not possessed of the necessary sense of humanity to be regarded as a good doctor." The man was able to instill fear into people by looking at them. He met frequently with Allen Dulles, the head of the CIA. He travelled frequently including making stops in Washington. Many of the Monarch slaves on the east coast were victims of Cameron. He worked long hours at his mind-control work like a driven man.

In 1961, just one of Cameron's institutions administered under his supervision 60,000 electrical shocks to patients. This is just what was recorded at one institution for one year. Who knows how many victims got electrical shocks and programming by this man? He worked with the Jesuit part of the NWO in Canada.

Leonard Rubenstein was one of his trusted assistants. Cameron encouraged dissension among his staff in divide and Conquer tactics to maintain his power. Cameron had a big ego that allowed him to steal other people's work and give himself credit for it, in his publications.

F. The Anti-Christ Chief handler/programmer

(1) The AntiChrist will have both public and private lives. The two will not be the same. Deep in the heart of the AntiChrist he will want to rob, kill, and destroy.

(2) He will be a man of war, but his public image will be that he is a man of peace.

(3) He will be a winner. The public always likes a winner. This will be a man with a hardened heart, but a man of charisma.

(4) Charisma has been noted to develop when a person is a foreigner (novel) and has some feature that causes people to feel sorry for the person --some wound or physical defect (like Gorbachev's red splotch on his head). The AntiChrist will have the public appearance of being a genius, not only a wizard of words, but a commercial genius, a military genius, a diplomat of the highest order, a leader, and an intelligent good looking man.

(5) However, this is the public image. Some of this will be created by Madison avenue techniques. He will be fearless,

(6) a skilled negotiator, a poker face who is capable of crafty deception. In fact deception characterizes the man. He is Satan in human flesh,

(7) who will use religion for evil. He will use good for evil.

(8) His lineage is from several directions. He may have Hittite blood,

(9) blood from the Tribe of Dan,

(10) and blood from Assyria .

(11) He may also claim to have Egyptian royal blood.

(12) He will be proclaimed the returning messiah for the Buddhists, the Islamic religion, the New Agers, the Christians, etc. Inman Mahdi, the Messiah. etc.

(13) However, the group of people who he will be most connected to, will be the Jews.

(14) His sphere of influence will not just be jews, but he will reinstitute blood sacrifices in the Temple in Jerusalem .

(15) This may well be the abomination of desolation that the Word of God warns about.

(16) The AntiChrist will arise on the scene like a thief in the night (17) and will surprise people by his rise to fame. He will come from obscurity --

(18) but he will have all the correct credentials

(19), and bloodlines.

(20) All the correct occult signs will occur around this individual.

(21) Because of historical precedence, we know that chaos and confusion will set the stage for the grand entrance of this man onto the stage of public attention.

(22)Problems will be created, so that this great man can pull mankind out of the worst disasters. The world will be trauma-bonded with him.

(23) He will be a savior saving mankind from extinction and death.

(24) However, while he promises and provides a new life for humankind, he is actually a merchant of spiritual death.

(24) The eternal fate of individuals is determined by how they respond to him.

(25) A remnant of true believers will endure to the end

(26), but many will succumb to the deception.

(27) The AntiChrist will not have to face a hostile church--the church will be in apostasy and will accept him.

(28) The AntiChrist will have to face a few John the Baptist types, who he will use his guillotines on.

(29) In other words, the AntiChrist will not be antagonistic toward the church--but he will subtly destroy it and cause it to serve only him. He will disregard the true law of God

(30)--the spirit of the law, but he will be a legalist, who wants law and order

(31). He will have both a False Prophet and another close friend the Beast.

(32) The daily blood sacrifices will become the global correct view, and Christians who oppose these sacrifices will be in trouble.

(33) All the trappings of Rabbinic and Talmudic and Cabalistic Judaism will be revived and flourish.

(34) He will pretend to be like Christ--he will be compared to Christ in the media--but he will also be opposed in reality to everything Christ stands for. As so many Satanic cult leaders do, and as is standard within Illuminati rituals--the AntiChrist will be killed and brought back to life.

(35) This simulated death will be done in front of the public, and this will give him the appearance of superhuman strength and divine favor--for being able to receive a deadly wound and then to heal and revive so quickly. Jerusalem will be the religious capital of the New World Order (36)--but there is reason to believe that there will also be both a political and an economic capital, and a computer and a police center. (37) There will probably be 3 public capitals and many other centers

(38) Just as during the Roman Empire there were many religious centers, such as Ephesus was the spiritual center for Diana worship being one of the 7 wonders of the Ancient world. Mt. Olympus in Greece was a sacred mountain in ancient times, with sites for consultations with the Oracles. In modern AntiChrist times, Glastonbury, UK and Mt. Shasta, CA may serve as spiritual centers. The New Age pilgrimages to Mt. Shasta which are covers for the mind control done there may well continue to serve that same function in the AntiChrist's reign.

(39) Rome or London could become political capitals. An economic capital could be established almost anywhere. The computers are already being centered in Europe. Once he has taken power, he can enter into Jerusalem like a hero, triumphantly.

(40) He will command universal worship via the technological advances that have been made in communication. All the spirits of evil will collect themselves in this one person of evil. He will be shrewd, and will be able to understand dark evil things. He will do things according to his own will. At least some outside of the inner circle will know that he is homosexual, (and bi-sexual).

(41) He will have the full force of the world's system behind him, trying to make him look better. He may be born in the Middle East --perhaps in Pakistan like Lord Maitreya (Rahmat Ahmad).

(42) Historically, Satan's AntiChrist spirit has captured a number of men.

(43) For instance, Antiochus IV Epiphanes, Caligula, Nero, Ghulam Alimad and Hitler.

However, these have been only partial manifestations. Satan working through secret Satanists such as Karl Marx set up Communism. In Russia, Marx, Engels and Lenin were made into a Father, Son and Holy Spirit triad. The picture of the 3 was prominently displayed all over Russia. Lenin was created into a Christ like figure. (The extent of how much communism substituted these men for the trinity hasn't been covered by the controlled Western media.)

The men of this false godhood were given the attributes in Russia of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit by state propaganda. I mention all these things, because again this was a partial manifestation of the AntiChrist spirit along with the Beast and the False Prophet. Those who would understand how the AntiChrist will act in public, need to study Machiavelli, Hitler, Antiochus IV Epiphanes, Lenin, and the many other partial manifestations of the AntiChrist spirit, such as the Popes.

Most Reformation reformers and early American puritan leaders regarded the Pope as the AntiChrist. He certainly has often been a good example. The private life of the AntiChrist will be very identical to other Illuminati kingpins. He will participate in Illuminati rituals. He has already been presented to Illuminati councils for approval. All the Mothers of Darkness will serve him as brides, as well as an inner body guard. Like Faust, and everyone else in the Illuminati, the AntiChrist has made many covenants, oaths, and vows to Satan himself. He has been taught that he is a god man. In public, he will proclaim himself divine. In private, he will consider Satan to be his own god.

He will strive to do the best job for Satan possible, because he has been taught that he will rule with Satan in hell, and his position in hell will be determined by how good he does his job now. He will be totally turned over to Satan, the Father of all lies. He will feast on the blood of sacrificed individuals, and may well be addicted to drinking blood, like Vice-Pres. Al Gore is.

(44) Those who do not have a love for the truth, will come under the spell of the AntiChrist's deception which will be flooded over the television screens, and through the controlled media.

(45) He will push all the correct buttons verbally when he speaks, and he will even flatter people. (46) He will be the world's tyrannical but much loved dictator, a father figure.

(47) The AntiChrist will be working on creating supermen , the genetic wonder man that Hitler was working to create. Instead of using God's approach to perfection, the AntiChrist will have the most superior genetic approach so far. In other words, to the public with their warped thinking, he will look like he is improving the human race genetically, and in every other way too.

The Illuminati are planning to install him as Lord over the earth around the year 2000. Occultists (incl. known Satanic leaders) have been prophesying his coming. Hollywood under the direction and financing of the Illuminati have given us the Damien series and other films on the AntiChrist. David Bauer, a psychic adviser and Baptist minister, has prophesied that the AntiChrist will come in the year 2000. Jean Dixon, who has connections to the Illuminati has prophesied this too. So has the English astrologer Edwin Lyndoe. They declare that this leader will be a savior of mankind. Jeanne Dixon went so far as to say that the AntiChrist was born on Feb. 5, 1962. (See Dixon, J. My Life and Prophecies. Fred. Miller, 1971.) The witch Sybil Leek even pointed to a son of a Jerusalem dentist. David Morris as being the man. (Leek. S. Reincarnation: the Second Chance. NY: Stein & Day, 1974).

All kinds of people are pointing at the year 2000. Occult prophecies about the year 2000 come from Irene Hughes, Alan Vaughn, Edgar Cayce, Kenneth Odhar and many others. De Sabrato an occult prophet believes Christ will return in 2003 in the form of an ET Christ. However, if plans fall apart there are indications that the AntiChrist could arrive later in the 21st century. Henry Kissinger said, "We are going to have a New World Order, if not in this generation, then in the next."

One of the men who worked high up in the New World Order. and who had inside information felt that the AntiChrist wouldn't rule until 2047 and that he would be born in New York City and have blond hair and blue eyes. From what the Lord has shown this author, and taking into account the vulnerabilities of the Illuminati's plans, this author would state that the AntiChrist may not arrive until quite a few years from now. On the other hand, there are already candidates who have been presented before the Illuminati councils who are candidates to become the AntiChrist.

The primary candidate for the position of AntiChrist is being kept in a heavily guarded small town near London. Only those who are summoned by him enter into the room where he is located. Individuals who come into his presence immediately want to worship him. He is a Rothschild.

The mother of either the NWO's John position or the Christ position was S. E. D. [name may be available on request from Fritz Springmeier] and his name is Alexander Rothschild, Jr. The name Alexander is very important to the Illuminati. Baron Rothschild passed on his spiritual power when he was ritually murdered in 1976. This Rothschild AntiChrist is known as the Son of Apollo.

(48) From a reliable source close to Lord Maitreya. he is Jewish. The Illuminati have a Mary position, also known as the Madonna position, which are women that are closely connected to the AntiChrist. Within the last few years, all the Madonna-position systems united in ritual in London, Frankfurt, Austria, and Switzerland. The name Queen of Heaven (Seriramis) is also applied to high level women close to the AntiChrist.

Programmed multiples, who rise above the Grande Dame level, enter levels designated by a. b, c & d. Guinevere, the name of King Arthur's wife & Lancelot's mistress, designates one of the positions of the 4-female Illuminati teams around the AntiChrist. It is written Gennifer for English speaking systems.

(49) Prior to the AntiChrist 2 witnesses are to come to which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt. REV 11:8. In the past, God has sent his 2 witnesses (Moses/Aaron), (the two to Sodom, see GEN 18:16+) on Nisan 1 (Passover). The orthodox Jews expect the return witness of Elijah on Passover. The real 2 witnesses/& or the Satanic 2 false witnesses may appear around the Passover time. (cf. REV 11:1-3, 7:1-17, 14:1-5, JOEL 2:30-32, & ACTS 2:19-21.) These witnesses and the Illuminati's John the Baptist? position are some of the prominent people who are slated to die in the end time drama being prepared by the Illuminati who are trying to copy scripture, and by God Almighty who is directing things on a higher level. Readers must bear in mind that Satan knows the Scriptures too, and is a great imitator.

Footnotes

1. This is a universal trait of men with the AntiChrist spirit. While Christ is truth, Satan is deception. Having a facade, being two-faced (like the god Janus) is standard for these men. Judas Iscariot with his kisses for Christ is just one example of thousands of examples. James 3:17 shows that the Holy Spirit is without hypocrisy, but the Evil Spirit is devoid of the Holy Spirit s fruit and is full of hypocrisy.

2. The Spirit of Satan desires to rob, kill, and destroy. Satan s desires will consume the thinking of the AntiChrist. The Word of God indicates that whatever the AntiChrist wills to do, he will do according to Dan. 11:36. In this sense, he will be the master magician, the Adept of Adepts. 3. Scripture indicate that he will bring a false peace to the earth, and that he will be a man with fierce countenance.

4. Scripture indicate he will be worshipped, and the power of the media to make heros Out of any actor has been well established.

5. Scriptures indicate he will be considered very intelligent. They also indicate what spheres of influence he will lead, and what roles he will play. Taking these into account, and taking into account what the Illuminati have planned, and taking into account that Satan s world likes to develop certain public images for its heroes, then it is a given that Satan s AntiChrist will appear gifted or well developed intellectually in many areas. While intellectual stature is not important to God, it has always been in Satan s world.

6. Dan. 8:23

7. Scripture, and common knowledge among Satanists is that the AntiChrist will be produced from the seed of Satan and aminated by Satan himself. Lk 22:3 shows that Satan himself entered Judas, how much more so then will the AntiChrist be the embodiment of Satan.

8. The Scripture show that Satan likes to use good things like the Word of God for evil purposes.

9. Illuminati belief is that they are descended in part from the Hittites. 10. Early Christian leader Irenaeus felt that Scriptures and early teachings indicated that the Tribe of Dan would raise the AntiChrist. The Midrash on Gen. 49:14-17 supports his view, and it states that darkness will come over the world from the Tribe of Dan. Other conspiracy researchers like myself have discovered that the Tribe of Dan s lineage is playing a big role in the Illuminati.

11. Isa. 10:5, 12

12. Jeanne Dixon prophecies that he will be descended from Pharaoh. The Illuminati are making coronation plans at the Great Pyramid in 1999. It is quite possible that the AntiChrist may have blood from a Pharaoh, or at least the pseudo-documentation to make people believe it.

13. The Illuminati are already doing this with Lord Maitreya

14. The Word of God shows that he is accepted by the Jews as being the Old Testament messiah.. In order to do that he must have some credentials that look good.

15. Rev.

16. Mt. 24:15

17. The Illuminati have been working hard to keep the AntiChrist s identity a big secret. Cf. Acts 1:7 and Mt. 24:36. God has kept some things secret too. Satan will come like a thief in the night. 2 Ptr 3:10. 18. The Son of Perdition will be revealed --2 Thes 2:3-4 with powers and signs and lying wonders 2 Thes 2:9.

19. He steals (cuts off) the worship deserved by Christ for himself. Rev. 13:16, 17, and cf. 2 thes. 2:9. It is clear that the AntiChrist must have credentials that allow himself to be palmed off as a Christ. He will be a genuine imitation Christ.

20. We know he will have an elite generation satanic bloodline because he belongs to the Illuminati, which in itself is the elite bloodlines. He will be the elite of the elite. There are spiritual reasons why Satan needs people from generational satanic families for his leadership. His legal claims over the AntiChrist and his occult powers are increased by the circumstances of being from multi-generational satanic families.

21. This is simply part of being within Satan s kingdom.

22. This is according to the Illuminati s plans, which have been discussed at length with this author by people trying to escape the Illuminati.

23. A common tactic by satanic leaders, there is little doubt that this tactic will also be used by the supreme dictator, the AntiChrist.

24. Satan gives spiritual death, Christ gives life--that is one of the themes of the Bible.

25. Rev. 19:20. Those who take the AntiChrist s mark are thrown into the Lake of Fire.

26. The gates of Hell will not prevail against the church. There will be faith, although it will be as in the days of Noah--it will be a rarity. Various scriptures indicate that Satan will never wipe out the entire church on the earth.

27. Mt. 24:24. He will break the Holy People. Dan 12:6-7

28. A number of scriptures indicate that there will be a falling away- Christ asks, Will there even be faith? This apostate church is Babylon the Great, which is described in Rev. 17- 18. The entire world will worship him.

Note how many Christians are united with the ecumenical activities of mainstream Christendom. The majority of churches are now participating in ecumenical activities, even the supposedly conservative evangelicals.

29. Rev. 12:11, Rev. 6:10

30. Scripture call him the Lawless One because he hates God s spiritual laws and will try to destroy the sacrifice of Christ by reinstituting blood sacrifices.

31. This is according to Illuminati plans, and also matches what the previous partial manifestations of the AntiChrist have been like. Hitler was always preaching law and order. This is a common theme by the NWO. Satan is always a great legalist.

32. He will deny the Father and the Son (1 John 2:22) and present to the world the False Trinity described in the book of Revelation. (Rev. 13:1) 33. Cf. Jn. 16:2

34. This has already happened. The Temple rituals have been reinstituted, and even the blood sacrifices are secretly being done underground.

35. This is hinted at in a couple of places in Scripture. It is such a standard satanic trick, that it would be amazing if it were not done. Part of anticipating one s enemies actions is to know their thinking. This would be in line with satanic tactics.

36. Cf. Lk. 21:24. When the Times of the Gentiles ends, Jerusalem is to be restored to being a spiritual center. cf. Dan. 11:45-12:1.

37. This is a conclusion by the author after studying plans of the elite, including UN plans, and other activities and statements by those in the NWO.

38. This is a conclusion by the author after studying plans of the elite. 39. This is speculation on author s part. which takes into consideration what is already going on in secret.

40. Illuminati plans. The Jews have long waited for the Messiah (the New David) to enter Jerusalem through the Golden Gate. This expectation was mentioned to the author when he was in Jerusalem.

41. Dan. 11:37. The Illuminati have been promoting homosexuality because they want people to accept the homosexuality of the AntiChrist. In Dan. 11:37 it indicates that Neither regard.. .the desire of women.

42. See the Be Wise As Serpents book. Chapt. 1.4

43. John 2:18 and I John 4:3

44. Two different ex-Satanists have independently provided information on Al Gore s addiction to blood. Illuminati kingpins are often addicted to the Adrenalchrome that pools in the body just prior to a person being sacrificed. Various newsletters give more information on this and related issues.

45. Mt. 24:4,5,11; 2 Thes. 2:10-12 Because they received not the love of the truth...

46. Dan. 11:32

47. Rev. 13:3,4, 7, 8,17

48. This entire paragraph comes from various Illuminati Mind-controlled slaves who were in important positions around the AntiChrist, who have been deprogrammed.

49. This information comes from half a dozen top important Illuminati mind-controlled slaves who are in the process of being deprogrammed.

Appendix Two: The Programming Sites

Some MAJOR MIND-CONTROL PROGRAMMING SITES with explanations of their programming.

(Fritz Springmeier originally exposed many of these sites in 1993, so it is possible they have made some changes since they were originally exposed. Most of these operated for years, and may still be operating. We are aware of that some of their programming bases have been moved after exposure.)

Besides these major programming sites, there are countless minor ones. For instance, some of the programming sites for water-beach tortures have been visited by the co-authors, but are not listed. The massive Boeing Plant in the Seatle, WA area with its large amount underground tunnels has been used for programming, as well as the ARCO Beaver Valley Plant in Pennslyvannia. So has the chapel at the Coast Guard Academy at New London , Conn. which was built by A.W. Mellon of the Mellon Illuminati family via their Mellon Foundation.

This list is not put forth as comprehensive. Without question, this list is only the tip of the iceberg.

29 Palms, CA Area 51 (Dreamland, Groom Lake), NV--Area 51 is also known as Dreamland. There are a number of extensive underground facilities in the area. This was one of the first genetic research facilities in the U.S. and perhaps the first major genetic research facility. The people/workers & victims are brought in by airplane and tube shuttle. The worst cases of UFO/alien type of Monarch programming is coming out of Area 51. The eggs from slaves are being harvested and weird genetic creatures are being developed from human eggs which have been genetically mixed with other things.

Bethseda , MD --The Bethesada Naval Hospital Bingham , UT --A red brick house, which was a closed House of Prostitution. The building was used for KKK programming. Child porn was produced in the basement, and upstairs programmed child slaves serviced KKK members. The KKK activity in the area connects in with the Illuminati controlled Kennecott Copper Co. (aka Utah Copper Co.) Russell G. Frazer, head of Bingham's Klavern & doctor for Kennecott Copper Co. did the electro-shock to split personalities.

Black Forest, Germany--Because the U.S-U.K. and Germany do so much programming, and some of the people in the U.S. were programmed in the U.K., Germany or Russia, it is worthwhile to mention some of the German programming sites. A number of witnesses report about castles in the Black Forest which are used for programming & ritual.

Basal, Sw. on the border with Germany is a important Illuminati center.

Frankfurt , Berlin and Zurich are all important programming/ritual sites. The Jesuits and the Catholic churches are very active in programming in Germany .

Boulder , CO --The headquarters for EMC, a type of electra-magnetic mind control that is being broadcast to modify the thinking of Americans, and to control slaves.

Butner , N.C. -- Center of Correctional Research , all types of mind control are carried out and experimented with on the inmates.

Camp Peary , VA --The CIA's The Farm is located on a narrow strip of land between the York & James Rivers near Williamsburg , VA , used for programming CIA slaves. It has red brick buildings, and looks similar to a small college. The official crytonym was ISOLATION. People who are brought in who don't know where they are for training are called Black Trainees.

China Lake Naval Research Base (Inyokern), CA--This facility had a country store, and hangers, and a hospital (address for the hospital is the code- 232 Naval Air Weapons Station) which all provided sites for programming. This site has been operational since the early 1950s. Large numbers of children (batches of 1000 or 2,000 or 3,000 children were run through this facility at a time. This facility did much of the original traumas and mind-splitting tortures that created the MPD. Other facilities then specialized in further programming that was then layered in on top of the original China Lake programming. A great deal of dehumanization in cages was done to large numbers of tiny children at China Lake Naval Facility.

Nimitz Hospital did drug testing of the children prior to their programming.

Colorado Springs , CO --The ALEX system programming and end-times Military programming is coming out of Colorado Springs and is connected to NORAD. One of the Colorado sites is doing alien programming with mock UFOs.

Dillsboro Nike Base--Monarch programming of many kinds

Disneyland , CA -- Disneyland has been an off hour site for Illuminati and satanic rituals for years. Programming has gone on using Disneyland as one big prop for programming. Many of the Disney movies are used for programming, and some Disney scripts are especially tailored for Monarch slave programming. The Peter Pan programming can use the ship. The space programming can use the space props. The satanic programming can use the castles. Lots of mirror programming is done at Disneyland , and Disneyworld . There is also Magic Mountain programming, and programming using the Around the World Dolls, and its theme song. Some of Wizard of Oz and the Cinderella programming was also done at Disneyland using costumes. Preverbal children are taken to Disneyland to get them ready for the scripts.

Disneyworld , FL -- Disneyworld was created as the eastern counterpart to the Disneyland programming site. One of the rides in Disneyworld plays "It's a small, small world" which is Disneyland developed programming theme.

Ft. Campbell , KT--Base programs are placed in here.

Ft. Detrick , MD --involved with medical/biological experimentation

Ft. Holabird , MD --This site is no longer in existence, but was the Army Intelligence School . CIC used the school. The place was known as "the Bird."

Ft. Hood , TX --programming involving military uses of Delta Monarch slaves was done here.

Ft. Huahuachua , AZ --HQ for Army Intelligence.

Ft. Knox , KT --The 1st Earth Batt. was developed here.

Ft. Lewis , WA --involved with the Psychic warfare part of the Monarch Programming.

Ft. McClellen -- Ft. Meade , MD --The National Security Agency was created on 4 Nov 1952 . Its headquarters were Fort Meade , VA. The National Security Agency (NSA) employs tens of thousands of employees and has a budget larger than the CIA. It has also been kept far more secret, while the CIA has been used as the fall guy to protect the National Security Agency's reputation.

In the late 1960's, under Operation Minaret and Program Shamrock, the NSA and its British counterpart GCHQ began monitoring much of the communication within the USA and UK . The NSA monitors all American calls via computers using trip words, specific names, specific addresses, specific telephone numbers, etc. NSA has several computer to record all the millions of conversations which the computers have examined and deemed worthy of recording. How the NSA can get any use out of millions of recorded telephone conversations is beyond me? What intelligence agency could adequately process so much information? These organizations now monitor all communications within both countries. At least one congressman got upset that his phone was bugged by the NSA. (see David Corn's article, "The case of the bugged senator" in Nation, Feb. 6, '89 , p. 152.)

NSA has developed a fiberoptics network called Internet computer network. An orange book is used to specify some of the NSA's security levels. An informant in the National Security Agency states that establishment newspapers like the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times are used to communicate secret messages which are placed within want ads, buzz words in editorials, and via other methods. Because of some of what this person told me, I have given some possible examples in this newsletter of how people might be using the papers for secret messages. For instance using Michael Jackson with his hands making some type of sign might be a signal.

Manfried Adler and the US Senate Committee investigating the CIA found that 90% of the CIA's secret messages are transmitted via the media, with the aid of coded texts and pictures. A raised forefinger or two raised forefingers while a speaker is talking means that the message is a Masonic message coming from a Masonic speaker.

The Illuminati uses code words within the large establishment papers to warn their people what they are going to do with the economy. In this way, people in the Illuminati can take appropriate responses.

Goddard Space Flight Center--NASA mirror-theme programming

Grissom AFB, IND-- Hollywood, CA--One of the programmers/handlers in the Hollywood area is surprisingly Anton LaVey. This is one reason Anton LaVey has followers who will carry out his very wishes. LaVey's children of course were programmed too. His own girls have been participating in the nude in satanic rituals since little children.

Homestead AFB, FL-- Kirkland AFB, NM--Lampe, MO--This has been the site of a CIA near-death trauma center where slaves are programmed. It is an R&R center for the CIA where they can have any sexual perversion or drug they want. This has been a large cocaine supply depot also. Hal Meadows was director of this center which is deep in the woods surrounded by cabin chalets overlooking a small deep lake. A gravel road leads to the site which is fenced and well-guarded. Hal Meadows address was Box 27, Lampe, MO 65681.

Langley, VA-- Slaves for the wants of intelligence.

Las Vegas (sites in and around Las Vegas), NV--MGM's Grand Hotel and Theme park were built for programming, but there are also some sites outside of the city used. In the general area of Las Vegas in remote sites, the elite gather for slave auctions once a year where Monarch slaves are sold and traded. One of the favorite slave auction sites was 20 miles out of Las Vegas and 10 miles off the main road into the site. The Mob is involved with Monarch slaves in Las Vegas. A blue-eyed 11 year old girl will go for $50,000.

Toronto, Canada is another regular site for Monarch slave auctions.

McClellan AFB, CA - Very bad Child and adult porn using Monarch victims is distributed through this base as well as the other bases listed in this list. A T.W. Sanderson worked with Monarchs at this base.

MacDill AFB, FL --Near Tampa, FL

Maxwell AFB, AL --

Montreal, Que., Canada -McGill Univ., McGill Psychiatric Training Network, Allan Memorial Inst., St. Mary's Hosp.- The Zombie Room (Sleep Room) in the basement, the Isolation chamber and the Grid Room at St. Mary's Hospital were used for programming.

Mt. Shasta, CA--Underground facilities around this huge mountain in the Lake Shasta area are putting out Monarch programming that makes the people think they are in communication with aliens. This facility is for torturing & reprogramming captured runaway Monarch slaves. People are brought into the area via helicopter, plane, or flying saucer. This site is probably the largest mind-control programming center. It is in a remote wooded area. It is heavily guarded, has fences, and a large contingent of black helicopters. Mt. Shasta is equipped with state of the art high tech programming equipment. Mind-controlled slaves who are soldiers are programmed and trained at the Mt. Shasta facility.

Nashville, TN--These sites work with the Country Western Music Industry which is actually a CIA front for moving drugs to finance their dirty black activities. Fiddler's Inn, Nashville fits in with the Monarch Programming.

Papillion, NE--

Patrick AFB,--Portland (Old OMSI, New OMSI, Bldg. Near Monarch Hotel at 8800 SE Sunnyside Rd., Mormon Temple, etc.), OR. The Old OMSI building had a back door on the west side in which slaves were taken in to the bottom floor and reprogrammed. Although security guards aren't visible, they are there with electronic surveillance. The people running OMSI are tied in the Illuminati. The DC-3 airplane outside of the building was used in the programming as a hypnotic trigger. The submarine docked outside of the new OMSI building is also used as a programming hypnotic tool. The new Mormon Temple has an extremely high tech underground tunnel facility for programming built underneath it. Witnesses have collaborated their testimony on this high tech programming site under the Portland Mormon Temple. Although building plans are to be public information, the city of Lake Oswego makes it very difficult to view the temple's building plans. The plans show that the foundation walls are far thicker than any conceivable earthquake would ever call for. The reason is that the foundation helps house an underground arena for the Illuminati & and their guests to watch perverse shows.

Presideo, CA (incl. Alcatraz, San Francisco)-- The Illuminati and various Satanic cults used the Presideo for their programming. Split-brain & other programming was done at Letterman hospital. Fort Point was used for Illuminati ritual & programming, as well as a number of churches, underground gun emplacements and the large circular Greek column art building at the Presideo. Alcatraz, abandoned as a prison, was used for water tortures and other programming. Tunnels connected buildings, and the Mule/Horse buildings and the cemetery also were used. This is one of the older programming sites. Psychic warfare activity also was experimented on in this area. Letterman Hospital has been used for the initial drug testing of the infants before programming. Lots of isolation programming in damp cold places was done at the Presideo. Lots of porn and military programming have also been done here.

Redstone Arsenal, AL--

San Antonio, TX--

Salt Lake City (Mormon Temple)--This underground facility works in conjunction with the Mormon hierarchy who are allowed to create slaves. The Illuminati put in base programming that still gives them ultimate control beyond the control that the Mormon programming has.

Scotty's Castle, Death Valley, CA-Mengele (Dr.Green) programmed in some of his "internal boxes" as well as other Illuminati programming was done at this site. Mengele had a large circular red bed in the castle which he stocked with his little girl slaves, who already had kitten sexual alters. Scotty's Castle is a castle located in Death Valley CA. It has a very interesting history. To reach the castle one is required to drive through many miles of desert. If one drives to lnyo County, CA, the same county that has China Lake Naval Testing Grounds, and Inyokern, and then you drive on Hwy. 190 into Death Valley National Monument (it is not a park or forest, dead valleys are called monuments), next you go north on a road after Stove Pipe for 35 miles.

The man who built Scotty's Castle was Walter Perry Scott (1872-1954). Walter P. Scott was the son of an alcohol distiller and horse breeder in Kentucky. Walter did not get any formal education. He left home and went west where he worked as a mule driver, and a water boy. From there he became a horse wrangler. Because of his talent with horses Buffalo Bill made him the feature rider along with Annie Oakley in Buffalo Bill's family show. The show travelled and Scotty was with it eleven years. During this time, Scotty made many important friendships with men of power and wealth. In 1900, Walter married and left the show. He got a loan from Julian Gerard, a NY banker, to go prospecting for gold which he failed to pay back. Julian Gerard was repeatedly sending people to hassle Scotty to get his money back. In 1905, Walter Scott ("Scotty") scattered gold nuggets and $100 bills from N.Y. to L.A. Where he got all this gold and $100 bills is a mystery, but it wasn't from prospecting. The idea of finding a secret mine was very obviously a cover for however Scotty managed to get his money. Scotty is well-known for his penchant to throw away $20 gold pieces as if they were candy wherever he went. Nobody believed he had a mine, strangely the IRS never got interested in Scotty. Why?

The IRS went after Charles Caughlin who was exposing the elite, the bankers, the Freemasons, etc. in the early 1930's on his radio show. There was no reason to suspect Caughlin of any cheating on his Income Tax, and the audits found the IRS actually owed Caughlin money. However the national papers printed front page stories of the IRS investigation, and practically ignored that the man was exonerated. Yet, the IRS left Scotty alone. Hmmm.

Although Scotty was married, he became intimate friends with Albert Mussey Johnson (1872-1948), a Chicago millionaire, who was v.p. from 1906 to 1926 of the National Life Insurance Co. Albert M. Johnson was born in Ohio, and lived in Arkansas and Missouri before moving to Chicago. Johnson came out and stayed in Death Valley. The stay helped his health, and he and Scotty remained close friends. In 1924, construction secretly began on a castle in Death Valley. The best of materials were used and the materials had to be hauled clear out in the desert by truck to Grapevine Canyon where the castle sits. Hundreds of workers were hired. The castle got its kitchen tiles from Spain. Special rugs were made on the European island of Majorca for the castle. Tiles for the incompleted pool came from the Mediterranean. Many of the furnishing of the castle came from cathedrals and palaces in Spain and Morocco. Draperies made for the castle were hand-tooled in selected sheepskin leather. Sixty hand-carved panels, each of a different design, were installed in the music-room ceiling. A Welte Mignon organ reported to have cost $160,000 --the finest of its kind in Western United States was placed in the music room, even though Scotty could not play the organ. Twelve bathrooms were installed. Several kitchens were installed. Tunnels and secret rooms were built under the buildings. Around $2 million (dollars of that time period) were spent on building the castle, supposedly from Scotty’s "gold mine." The castle became known as Scotty’s Castle. It is ideal as a Satanic ritual site. It can accommodate numerous people. It is remote. It has hidden rooms and areas and tunnels.

Tavistock, England--This has been the primary programming center for England. The Rothschild programmers work out of Tavistock. A large number of slaves in America have been programmed there. Tavistock has been doing mind-control since before W.W.ll. Under the supervision of London’s W Board & 20 Committee MI6 and MIS’s Section BIA ran double agents and mind-controlled spies/couriers during W.W. II. MI6 has had an office at Century House, No. 100, Westminster Bridge Road. MI5 offices have been in part on Curzon St. MI5 has operated behind a number of fronts, incl. their fake travel agency Casuro Holidays. MI-5’s address for mail is Room 055, The War Office, London. Special Intelligence Service (SIS) dealt with all types of mind control. Tavistock was under SIS. The British government has had their own telephone exchange with a 222 prefix, which was later linked to another secret exchange YTAN. Outsiders could dial 222 8080 to get into the secret govt. exchange.

Men like mind-control expert/hypnotist Eric Trist worked for Tavistock. A six-man team which wore black berets also helped w/ mind control at Tavistock. Two people who became terrorists after their visits to Tavistock are Angela Davis and Stockley Carmichael who went to a conference at Tavistock entitled Dialectics of Liberation in 1967. Its main building is a bland 6-story building.

The address is The Training Office, The Tavistock Clinic, 120 Belsize Lane, London, UK NWs SBA. Tel. no. 071-435 7111. The chief exec. is Anton Obholzer. The Chair of Prof. Comm. is Nicholas Temple. Both are skilled in psychology. The Tavistock Clinic was founded in 1920, and in 1946 the Tavistock Institute was created as an independent body to assist the Tavistock Clinic. The Institute does more of the research.

The Royal Free Hospital at the University of London works with Tavistock Clinic, as well as the Science Policy Research Unit (SPRU) of Sussex University. A large number of Britian’s psychologist, social workers and police get their training at Tavistock. Tavistock has set themselves up as the authority on ritual abuse and MPD (DID). In other words, the primary programming site, is pretending to be the leading institution trying to solve the problem! That’s a good cover.

Tinker, AFB, OK--Tinkerbell programming is carried out here. This programming makes alters think they are like Tinkerbell in that they will never grow up or age.

Titusville, FL--At the Kennedy Space Center. Mind control testing is done, and base programming such as the Wizard of Oz programming is done here. Also NASA high tech programming is done here.

Tulsa, OK—Believed to have an Alice In Wonderland theme to their programming. Oral Roberts University is used for programming. The programming to infiltrate and capture the Christian church via the healing/charismatic movement has centered around Tulsa and Oral Roberts University.

Utah State Prison--The prison has carried out mind control for over 30 years on their inmates for the intelligence agencies with the help of the U.S. government’s power to cover it up.

Versailles, IL—Brain implants are put into Monarchs here.

Washington, D.C. area--The basement of the Pentagon and other facilities around Washington D.C. such as the Jesuit Georgetown Univ. Hosp. are involved with Mind-Control. Presidential Models are moving in and out of Washington, D.C. carrying messages and performing their sexual acts for the lusts of politicians. There is also a NASA Mind-control Programming Center in Washington D.C. Secret tunnels connect the White House to other buildings. These tunnels are used to bring in slaves. Some secret rooms in the lower White House are set aside for rituals.

Wright-Patterson AFB--Near Dayton, OH, Virtual reality programming is carried out here.

Youngstown, OH--The Youngstown Charm School has been run by Illuminatus Prosser Seward Mellon along with a U.S. Congressman named Jim Trafficant. The old stone building originally belonged to one of the railroad elite. This school is for Beta models and gives them advance sexual charm training. This school produces about 6 new Monarch slaves every three days. Mafia deals are carried out on the second floor of the charm school. A slave who is being trained/programmed at the Charm school will take a course that last a few days. The first day may be spent hanging in a dungeon which was once a basement wine cellar. The torture dungeon has all the traditional torture devices, a stretching rack, whips, hanging chains, etc. In the dungeon rooms were a black Nubian goat "Satan", a small donkey "Nester', and a small white pony "Trigger", as well as dogs and snakes. The slave is taught silence in the dungeon as they are subjected to bestiality.

Building near the Presideo used for Mother-of-Darkness rituals.

The 6th Army HQ at the Presideo

Oak Tree At The Presideo

Building Near The Presideo

Fort Point, Presideo

Mule Barns

Cemetary at The Presideo

A Church At The Presideo

Across The Bay From The Presideo

Mother Of Darkness Castle, Belgium

Building In Washington

Mother of Darkness Castle We have just touched the surface of the vest network of programming sites. Two examples of an entire series of programming sites--(1) the Coast to Coast campground resorts and (2), the Jesuit-run institutions, which are often programming sites incl. Jesuit College, WV. An example of the former is the Park City Diamond Caverns.

KT Coast to Coast resort, which has had a sensory deprivation tank, headphones for state of the art harmonic programming. etc. These membership camp sites are used to program children. Nor have we touched upon the large numbers of programmed Russians & Eastern Europeans that are coming Into this nation. When this book was written more people immigrated to the U.S. from Russia than anywhere else. Europe is teeming with programming sites, including the Vatican .

Sebulun Zuflucht in Marienheide , Germany is about the only European attempt at deprogramming.

THE HUNT FOR ZERO POINT

INSIDE THE CLASSIFIED WORLD OF ANTIGRAVITY TECHNOLOGY

NICK COOK

The Hunt for Zero Point

Inside the Classified World of Antigravity Technology

Nick Cook

BROADWAY BOOKS
New York

THE HUNT FOR ZERO POINT. Copyright © 2001 by High Frontier Productions, Ltd. All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without written permission from the publisher.
For information, address Broadway Books, a division of Random House, Inc.,
1540 Broadway, New York, NY 10036.

A British edition of this book was published in 2001 by Century, The Random House Group Limited, 20 Vauxhall Bridge Road, London, SW1V 2SA, United Kingdom.

Broadway Books titles may be purchased for business or promotional use or for special sales. For information, please write to: Special Markets Department, Random House, Inc.,
1540 Broadway, New York, NY 10036.

PRINTED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BROADWAY BOOKS and its logo, a letter B bisected on the diagonal, are trademarks of Broadway Books, a division of Random House, Inc.

Visit our website at www.broadwaybooks.com

First Broadway Books edition published 2002

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data
Cook, Nick.
The hunt for zero point: inside the classified world of antigravity technology /
Nick Cook.— 1st ed.
p. cm.
Includes bibliographical references and index.
1. Research aircraft—History. 2. Antigravity—Research—History. 3. Aeronautics, Military—Research—History. 4. Military weapons—Research—History. 5. Defense information, Classified—History. I. Title.
TL567.R47 .C 2002
629.13'07'2073—dc21 2001052668

FIRST EDITION

ISBN 0-7679-0627-6

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

In memory of Julian Cook, inventor, and Harry Hawker, fighter pilot

Per ardua ad astra

And for my children, Lucy and William, that one day they or their children may see the stars more closely

Author's Note and Acknowledgments

Not everyone who has assisted me in The Hunt For Zero Point has wished to be identified.

There are four people—"Amelia Lopez," "Lawrence Cross," "Daniella Abelman" and "Dr. Dan Marckus"—whose identities I have deliberately blurred. They, of course, know who they are and I gratefully acknowledge their help.

It goes without saying that I could not have interpreted the mass of raw science data in this book without the exceptional skills of Dan Marckus. His knowledge, wisdom, humor and friendship have been an inspiration to me.

Everyone else is exactly as identified in the text.

The people and institutions I can thank freely are listed below:

My colleagues at Jane's Defence Weekly and Interavia, Tom Valone of the Integrity Research Institute, Paul LaViolette Ph.D., Dr. Kathleen Bunten, Isabel Best, Joel Carpenter, the Imperial War Museum, Philip Henshall, Graham Ennis, Rowland White, Guy Norris, Jeremy Bartlett, Michael Collins, Guy Rigby, Kevin Bexley, Stephen Parker, Bill Zuk, Yvonne Kinkaid, the Office of (U.S.) Air Force History, David Windle, Chris Gibson, Tony Frost, the late Prof. Brian Young, Dr. Ron Evans, BAE Systems, Garry Lyles, George Schmidt, Marc Millis, the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Lockheed Martin and the Lockheed Martin Skunk Works, Dr. Evgeny Podkletnov, Dr. Hal Puthoff, the late Ben Rich, Bill Sweetman, Glenn Campbell, Mark Farmer and the Groom Lake Interceptors, Mike Grigsby, James Cook, David Monaghan, George Muellner, Marian Swedija, Irving Baum, Ken Jones, Charles T. Schaeffer, the 16th Armored Division veterans' association, Dr. Amy Schmidt, the U.S. National Archives Records Administration, Ned Bedessem, U.S. Army Center of Military History, the Bundesarchiv at Freibourg, the U.K. Public Records Office, Maurizio Verga, James Holland, Callum Coats, Don Kelly, Bob Widmer, Boyd Bushman, George Hathaway, John Hutchison and John B. Alexander.

My particular thanks go to:

Mark Booth, Hannah Black, Anna Cherrett and the whole team at Century, Charlie Conrad, Claire Johnson, Chava Boylan, Becky Cole, and the whole Broadway Books team in New York, Bill Rose for his outstanding picture research, Igor Witkowski for taking me to the Wenceslas Mine and for sharing his tremendous insight into German secret weapons, Tom Agoston for his groundbreaking book Blunder!, the Schauberger family—Frau Ingeborg, Joerg and Ingrid—for their kindness and hospitality at Bad Ischl, Brue Richardson for her constancy, serenity and guidance, Barry and Fiona Shaw for putting up with me (and the rest) during a myriad of writing weekends, Dr. Patrick G. Bailey and Charlee Trantino for their sterling work on the index, and Mark Lucas for being a damn fine friend and agent.

Last, but not least, I would like to thank Ali, my family and hers. This book would have been quite impossible without them.

Prologue

The dust devils swirled around my Chevrolet Blazer, catching the early evening light. I watched Sheriff's Deputy Amelia Lopez clamber out of her Chrysler Le Baron and stare for a moment in the direction the plane had gone down ten years ago.

I grabbed my rucksack. By the time I looked up again she was already striding toward the peak.

Over a rusted barbed-wire fence and we were into the scrub—with new traces of green at its tips from the spring rains. Beyond lay the edge of the Sequoia National Forest, a huge expanse of protected park and woodland.

We left the broken fence posts behind and our cars were lost against the sunset. I looked for other traces of a human presence, but found none, even though we were only twelve miles from Bakersfield, California, a city of four hundred thousand people on the edge of the Sierra Nevadas.

Amelia Lopez' peaked cap and the firearm on her gunbelt were clearly silhouetted as she moved along the jagged edge of the ridgeline.

As I sucked down the warm thin air and wiped the sweat out of my eyes, I tried to picture her as she must have been on that sweltering July night ten years earlier; the night she'd been out partying with her college friends at a campsite near the Kern River.

It was in the breaking hours of July 11, 1986. Just as she was settling into her sleeping bag the jet went supersonic somewhere in the black sky overhead.

The pressure wave of the sonic boom hit the campsite like a clap of thunder, sending a shower of embers from the campfire into the night sky.

Amelia was too startled to say a thing; then, the entire horizon was flash-lit by an enormous explosion, the flames shooting skyward as the plane plowed into Saturday Peak ten miles away.

She told me it had sparked a dozen brushfires on the edge of the forest; that it took more than a hundred Forest Service and local firefighters to put it out. Her only thought was that this wasn't an aircraft at all, but a hydrogen bomb.

Within hours, every newspaper in the state, and a whole lot more besides, had a reporter heading for these foothills with a brief to find out what had hit the ground. Amelia Lopez, a law student at the state university in Sacramento, had been one of several witnesses quoted in the papers that had covered the story, which was how I'd traced her.

She and her friends hadn't gone more than five miles toward the impact point when one of them noticed a figure on the trail up ahead. The scrub either side of her erupted with movement and the next thing she knew her face was in the dirt and she had a boot in her back and a gun at her head.

Out of the corner of her eye she saw that they were soldiers—not California National Guard, as might have been expected in an environmental emergency, but SWAT-types brandishing assault rifles, night-vision systems and a shit-load of threats about government property and national security.

Two of her friends started on about their rights under the Constitution, that this was public land and there wasn't a person on earth who could tell them to get off it. But to Lopez their protests registered as white noise on the edge of a persistent and piercing alarm. These soldiers were unlike any she'd ever seen.

She screamed for her friends to shut up, but once the screaming began, she couldn't stop it. She screamed and she yelled and she flailed against the pressure in her back, until the next thing she felt was the slap from her roommate that brought her around. When she finally understood what she was being told, it was that the soldiers were gone.

None of them said a word as they doubled back to the campsite. When they reached it, still numb with shock, they found a bunch of reporters on-site getting statements from other witnesses. Somebody shoved a tape recorder in her face and started asking questions and before she knew it she'd given her name and stammered something about an atomic blast.

As for the rest, she and her friends said nothing.

Amelia Lopez kept a lid on her feelings for the next two and half years, until November 1988, in fact, when the outgoing Reagan administration revealed the existence of the F-117A Stealth Fighter, an aircraft that had been flying in secret squadron service out of a classified air base in Nevada for over five years. In that time, she learned, it had crashed twice: and on one of those occasions—on the night of July 10 -11, 1986, to be precise—she'd had the grave misfortune to be there.

The troops had been part of a Pentagon "red team" flown in by helicopter to secure the crash site at all costs.

When she got my message, she'd been reluctant to meet up at first, but when I finally persuaded her to talk, she found it difficult to stop.

We reached the crash site soon after the sun dipped below the edge of the mountain. The summit was only 2,000 feet above us, but here the ground was even and covered in a crusty layer of dirt. The plants and trees were younger than the vegetation we'd passed on the way up. But that was the only real clue something had happened here.

Amelia Lopez sat on a rock and slowly removed her mirror shades before pouring bottled springwater over her face. I felt her eyes follow me as I moved between clumps of vegetation, kicking over rocks and sifting the sand, even though there was nothing to see.

Lopez bent down and ran her fingers through the soil. "I read they sieved the dirt for a thousand yards out from the impact point," she said. "Those guys were damned thorough. A few weeks after they left it was like nothing ever happened here." She paused a moment before adding: "You being an expert, I imagine you knew that."

It was framed as a question and I grappled for something to say, conscious that she'd brought me here for any insight I could provide into the events ofthat night.

I said nothing, so she turned to me and said: "Are you gonna tell me what is really going on here?"

Overhead, an eagle cried. As I watched it wheel on the updrafts I hoped that she wouldn't press me for an answer, because I didn't know what to tell her.

Standing here in this place, I was filled with the old feeling. It was almost impossible to articulate, but it left you with a taste in the mouth, some innate sense, that however far you dug, however many people you interviewed or questioned, you were simply scratching the surface of the sprawling U.S. defense-industrial base. What had happened here, the events that had imprinted themselves onto the landscape in a moment or two of madness a decade or so earlier, were almost tangible, even though there was no physical evidence—no fragments amidst the thin soil and the rocks—to suggest anything out of the ordinary had occurred.

These people were thorough; Lopez herself had said it. But they left something behind, something you couldn't see or touch—and it was that trace, that echo of past deeds, that had brought me here.

The Stealth Fighter was real enough. As a reporter, I'd covered it from the inside out. Yet as a piece of technology it was more than two decades old, almost every detail of it in the open now. But strip away the facts and the feeling persisted.

I got it when I went to U.S. government defense laboratories and on empty windblown hangar floors in parched, little-known corners of the country. I got it at press conferences in power-soaked corridors of the Pentagon. But most of all I got it when I stared into the eyes of the people who worked on those programs.

What I got back was a look. Individually, it said nothing, but collectively it told me there was a secret out there and that it was so big no one person held all the pieces. I knew, too, that whatever it was, the secret had a dark heart, because I could sense the fear that held it in place.

It was impossible to tell Lopez any of this, of course, because it was simply a feeling. But as I headed back for the car, I knew the trip hadn't been a waste.

At long last, the secret had an outline.

Through half-closed eyes, I could almost reach out and touch it.

Chapter 1

From the heavy-handed style of the prose and the faint handwritten "1956" scrawled in pencil along the top of the first page, the photocopied pages had obviously come from some long-forgotten schlock popular science journal.

I had stepped away from my desk only for a few moments and somehow in the interim the article had appeared. The headline ran: "The G-Engines Are Coming!"

I glanced around the office, wondering who had put it there and if this was someone's idea of a joke. The copier had cut off the top of the first page and the title of the publication with it, but it was the drawing above the headline that was the giveaway. It depicted an aircraft, if you could call it that, hovering a few feet above a dry lakebed, a ladder extending from the fuselage and a crewmember making his way down the steps dressed in a U.S.-style flight suit and flying helmet—standard garb for that era. The aircraft had no wings and no visible means of propulsion.

I gave the office another quick scan. The magazine's operations were set on the first floor. The whole building was open-plan. To my left, the business editor was head-down over a proof-page checking copy. To her right was the naval editor, a guy who was good for a windup, but who was currently deep into a phone conversation and looked like he had been for hours.

I was reminded of a technology piece I'd penned a couple of years earlier about the search for scientific breakthroughs in U.S. aerospace and defense research. In a journal not noted for its exploration of the fringes of paranormality, nor for its humor, I'd inserted a tongue-in-cheek reference to gravity—or rather to antigravity, a subject beloved of science-fiction writers.

"For some U.S. aerospace engineers," I'd said, "an antigravity propulsion system remains the ultimate quantum leap in aircraft design." The implication was that antigravity was the aerospace equivalent of the holy grail: something longed for, dreamed about, but beyond reach—and likely always to remain so.

Somehow the reference had escaped the sub-editors and, as a result, amongst my peers, other aerospace and defense writers on the circuit, I'd taken some flak for it. For Jane's, the publishing empire founded on one man's obsession with the detailed specifications of ships and aircraft almost a century earlier, technology wasn't something you joked about.

The magazine I wrote—and still write—for, Jane 's Defence Weekly, documented the day-to-day dealings of the multibillion-dollar defense business. JDW, as we called it, is but one of a portfolio of products detailing the ins and outs of the global aerospace and defense industry. If you want to know about the thrust-to-weight ratio of a Chinese combat aircraft engine or the pulse repetition frequency of a particular radar system, somewhere in the Jane's portfolio of products there is a publication that has the answers. In short, Jane's was, and always has been, about facts. Its motto is: Authoritative, Accurate, Impartial.

It was a huge commercial intelligence-gathering operation; and provided they had the money, anyone could buy into its vast knowledge base.

I cast a glance at the bank of sub-editors' work-stations over in the far corner of the office, but nobody appeared remotely interested in what was happening at my desk. If the subs had nothing to do with it, and usually they were the first to know about a piece of piss-taking that was going down in the office, I figured whoever had put it there was from one of the dozens of other departments in the building and on a different floor. Perhaps my anonymous benefactor had felt embarrassed about passing it on to me?

I studied the piece again.

The strapline below the headline proclaimed: "By far the most potent source of energy is gravity. Using it as power, future aircraft will attain the speed of light." It was written by one Michael Gladych and began: "Nuclear-powered aircraft are yet to be built, but there are research projects already under way that will make the super-planes obsolete before they are test-flown. For in the United States and Canada, research centers, scientists, designers and engineers are perfecting a way to control gravity—a force infinitely more powerful than the mighty atom. The result of their labors will be antigravity engines working without fuel-weightless airliners and space ships able to travel at 170,000 miles per second."

On any other day, that would have been the moment I'd have consigned it for recycling. But something in the following paragraph caught my eye.

The gravity research, it said, had been supported by the Glenn L.

EX-G1
CAL SMITH

The G-Engines Are Coming!

By far the most potent source of energy is gravity. Using it as power future aircraft will attain the speed of light.

By MICHAEL GLADYCH

■ Nuclear-powered aircraft are yet to be built, but there are research projects already under way that will make the super-planes obsolete before they are test-flown. For in the United States and Canada research centers, scientists, designers and engineers are perfecting a which there has been no escape. "What goes up must come down," they said. The bigger the body the stronger the gravity attraction it has for other objects . . . the larger the distance between the objects, the lesser the gravity pull. Defining those rigid rules was as way to earth.

This discovery gave modern scientists a new hope. We already knew how to make magnets by coiling a wire around an iron core. Electric current running through the coiled wire created a magnetic field and it could be switched on

Martin Aircraft Company, Bell Aircraft, Lear "and several other American aircraft manufacturers who would not spend millions of dollars on science fiction." It quoted Lawrence D. Bell, the founder of the planemaker that was first to beat the sound barrier. "We're already working on nuclear fuels and equipment to cancel out gravity." George S. Trimble, head of Advanced Programs and "Vice President in charge of the G-Project at Martin Aircraft," added that the conquest of gravity "could be done in about the time it took to build the first atom bomb."

A little further on, it quoted "William P. Lear, the chairman of Lear Inc., makers of autopilots and other electronic controls." It would be another decade before Bill Lear went on to design and build the first of the sleek business jets that still carry his name. But in 1956, according to Gladych, Lear had his mind on other things.

"All matter within the ship would be influenced by the ship's gravitation only," Lear apparently said of the wondrous G-craft. "This way, no matter how fast you accelerated or changed course, your body would not feel it any more than it now feels the tremendous speed and acceleration of the earth." The G-ship, Gladych explained, could take off like a cannon shell, come to a stop with equal abruptness and the passengers wouldn't even need seat belts. This ability to accelerate rapidly, the author continued, would make it ideal as a space vehicle capable of acceleration to a speed approaching that of light.

There were some oblique references to Einstein, some highly dubious "facts" about the nature of subatomic physics and some speculation about how various kinds of "antigravity engines" might work.

But the one thing I kept returning to were those quotes. Had Gladych made them up or had Lawrence Bell, George S. Trimble and William "Bill" Lear really said what he had quoted them as saying?

Outside, the rain beat against the double-glazed windows, drowning the sound of the traffic that crawled along the London to Brighton road and the unrelenting hum of the air conditioning that regulated the temperature inside.

The office was located in the last suburb of the Greater London metropolis; next stop the congested joys of the M25 ring road and the M23 to Gatwick Airport. The building was a vast redbrick two-story bunker amid between-the-wars gray brickwork and pebbledash. The rain acted like a muslin filter, washing out what little ambient color Coulsdon possessed. In the rain, it was easy to imagine that nothing much had changed here for decades.

As aviation editor otJDW, my beat was global and it was pretty much unstructured. If I needed to cover the latest air-to-surface weapons developments in the U.S.A., I could do it, with relatively few questions asked. My editor, an old pro, with a history as long as your arm in publishing, gave each of us, the so-called "specialists" (the aviation, naval and land systems editors), plenty of rope. His only proviso was that we filed our expenses within two of weeks of travel and that we gave him good, exclusive stories. If I wanted to cover an aerospace and defense exhibition in Moscow, Singapore or Dubai, the funds to do so were almost always there.

As for the job itself, it was a mixture of hard-edged reporting and basic provision of information. We reported on the defense industry, but we were part of it, too—the vast majority of the company's revenue coming from the same people we wrote about. Kowtowing was a no-no, but so was kicking down doors. If you knew the rules and played by them you could access almost any part of the global defense-industrial complex.

In the course of a decade, I'd visited secret Russian defense facilities and ultrasensitive U.S. government labs. If you liked technology, a bit of skulduggery and people, it was a career made in heaven. At least 60 percent of the time I was on the road. The bit I liked least was office downtime.

Again, I looked around for signs that I was being set up. Then, satisfied that I wasn't, but feeling self-conscious nonetheless, I tucked the Gladych article into a drawer and got on with the business of the day. Another aerospace and defense company had fallen prey to post—Cold War economics. It was 24 hours before the paper closed for press and the news editor was yelling for copy.

Two days later, in a much quieter moment, I visited the Jane's library. It was empty but for the librarian, a nice man way past retirement age who used to listen to the BBC's radio lunchtime news while gazing out over the building's bleak rear lot.

In the days before the Internet revolution, the library was an invaluable resource. Fred T. Jane published his first yearbook, Jane's Fighting Ships, in 1898; and in 1909 the second, Jane's All The World's Aircraft, quickly built on the reputation of the former as a reference work par excellence for any and all information on aeronautical developments. Nigh on a century later, the library held just about every book and magazine ever put out by the company and a pile of other reference works besides.

I scanned the shelves till I found what I was looking for.

The Jane's All The World's Aircraft yearbook for 1956 carried no mention of antigravity experiments, nor did successive volumes, but that came as no great surprise. The yearbooks are the aerospace equivalent of Burke's Peerage or the Guinness Book of Records: every word pored over, analyzed and double-checked for accuracy. They'd have given antigravity a very wide berth.

For a story like this, what I was looking for was a news publication.

I looked along the shelves again. Jane's had gotten into the magazine publishing business relatively recently and the company's copies of Flight International and Aviation Week ran back only a few years. But it did have bound volumes of Interavia Aerospace Review from before the Second World War. And it was on page 373 in the May 1956 edition of this well-respected publication, in amongst advertisements for Constellation airliners, chunky-looking bits of radar equipment and (curiously for an aviation journal) huge "portable" Olivetti typewriters, that I found a feature bylined "Intel, Washington, D.C." with the headline:

"Without Stress or Strain . . . or Weight." Beneath it ran the strapline: "The following article is by an American journalist who has long taken a keen interest in questions of theoretical physics and has been recommended to the Editors as having close connections with scientific circles in the United States. The subject is one of immediate interest, and Interavia would welcome further comment from knowledgeable sources."

The article referred to something called "electro-gravitics" research, whose aim was to "seek the source of gravity and its control." This research, "Intel" stated, had "reached a stage where profound implications for the entire human race are beginning to emerge."

I read on, amused by the tone and wondering how on earth the article had come to be accepted in a mainstream aerospace journal.

"In the still short life of the turbojet airplane [by then, 1956, little more than a decade], man has had to increase power in the form of brute thrust some twenty times in order to achieve just twice the speed. The cost in money in reaching this point has been prodigious. The cost in highly specialized man-hours is even greater. By his present methods man actually fights in direct combat the forces that resist his efforts. In conquering gravity he would be putting one of his most competent adversaries to work for him. Antigravities is the method of the picklock rather than the sledgehammer."

Not only that, the article stated, but antigravity could be put to work in other fields beyond aerospace. "In road cars, trains and boats the headaches of transmission of power from the engine to wheels or propellers would simply cease to exist. Construction of bridges and big buildings would be greatly simplified by temporary induced weightlessness etc. Other facets of work now under way indicate the possibility of close controls over the growth of plant life; new therapeutic techniques, permanent fuelless heating units for homes and industrial establishments; new sources of industrial power; new manufacturing techniques; a whole field of new chemistry. The list is endless . . . and growing."

It was also sheer fantasy.

Yet, for the second time in a week I had found an article—this time certainly in a publication with a solid reputation—that stated that U.S. aerospace companies were engaged in the study of this "science." It cited the same firms mentioned by Gladych and some new ones as well: Sperry-Rand and General Electric among them. Within these institutions, we were supposed to believe, people were working on theories that could not only make materials weightless, but could actually give them "negative weight"—a repulsive force that would allow them to loft away "contra-gravitationally." The article went further. It claimed that in experimentation conducted by a certain "Townsend T. Brown" weights of some materials had already been cut by as much as 30 percent by "energizing" them and that model "disc airfoils" utilizing this technology had been run in a wind tunnel under a charge of a hundred and fifty kilovolts "with results so impressive as to be highly classified."

I gazed out over the slate rooftops. For Interavia to have written about antigravity, there had to have been something in it. The trouble was, it was history. My bread-and-butter beat was the aerospace industry of the 1990s, not this distant cozy world of the fifties with its heady whiff of jet-engine spirit and the developing Cold War.

I replaced the volume and returned to my desk. It should have been easy to let go, but it wasn't. If people of the caliber quoted by Gladych and Interavia had started talking about antigravity anytime in the past ten years I would have reported it—however skeptical I might be on a personal level. Why had these people said the things they had with such conviction? One of them, George S. Trimble, had gone so far as to predict that a breakthrough would occur in around the same time it took to develop the atomic bomb—roughly five years. Yet, it had never happened. And even if the results of "Townsend T. Brown's" experiments had been "so impressive as to be highly classified," they had clearly come to naught; otherwise, by the '60s or '70s the industry would have been overtaken by fuelless propulsion technology.

I rang a public relations contact at Lockheed Martin, the U.S. aerospace and defense giant, to see if I could get anything on the individuals Gladych had quoted. I knew that Lawrence Bell and Bill Lear were both dead. But what about George S. Trimble? If Trimble was alive—and it was a long shot, since he would have to be in his 80s—he would undoubtedly confirm what I felt I knew to be true; that he had been heavily misquoted or that antigravity had been the industry's silly-season story of 1956.

A simple phone call would do the trick.

Daniella "Dani" Abelman was an old media contact within Lockheed Martin's public affairs organization. Solid, reliable and likable, she'd grown up in the industry alongside me, only on the other side of the divide. Our relationship with the information managers of the aerospace and defense world was as double-edged as the PR/reporter interface in any other industry. Our job was to get the lowdown on the inside track and, more often than not, it was bad news that sold. But unlike our national newspaper counterparts, trade press hacks have to work within the industry, not outside it. This always added an extra twist to our quest for information. The industry comprised hundreds of thousands of people, but despite its size, it was surprisingly intimate and incestuous enough for everyone to know everyone else. If you pissed off a PR manager in one company, even if it was on the other side of the globe, you wouldn't last long, because word would quickly get around and the flow of information would dry up.

But with Abelman, it was easy. I liked her. We got on. I told her I needed some background on an individual in one of Lockheed Martin's "heritage" companies, a euphemism for a firm it had long since swallowed whole.

The Glenn L. Martin Company became the Martin Company in 1957. In 1961, it merged with the American-Marietta Company, becoming Martin-Marietta, a huge force in the Cold War U.S. defense electronics industry. In 1994, Martin-Marietta merged again, this time with Lockheed to form Lockheed Martin. The first of the global mega-merged defense behemoths, it built everything from stealth fighters and their guided weapons to space launchers and satellites.

Abelman was naturally suspicious when I told her I needed to trace an ex-company employee, but relaxed when I said that the person I was interested in had been doing his thing more than 40 years ago and was quite likely dead by now.

I was circumspect about the reasons for the approach, knowing full well if I told her the real story, she'd think I'd taken leave of my senses.

But I had a bona fide reason for calling her—and one that legitimately, if at a stretch, involved Trimble: I was preparing a piece on the emergence of the U.S. aerospace industry's "special projects" facilities in the aftermath of the Cold War.

Most large aerospace and defense companies had a special projects unit; a clandestine adjunct to their main business lines where classified activities could take place. The shining example was the Lockheed Martin "Skunk Works," a near-legendary aircraft-manufacturing facility on the edge of the California high desert.

For 50 years, the Skunk Works had sifted Lockheed for its most highly skilled engineers, putting them to work on top secret aircraft projects.

Using this approach it had delivered some of the biggest military breakthroughs of the 20th century, among them the world's first Mach 3 spyplane and stealth, the art of making aircraft "invisible" to radar and other enemy sensor systems.

But now the Skunk Works was coming out of the shadows and, in the process, giving something back to its parent organization. Special projects units were renowned for bringing in complex, high-risk defense programs on time and to cost, a skill that had become highly sought after by the main body of the company in the austere budget environment of the 1990s.

Trimble, I suggested, might be able to provide me with historical context and "color" in an otherwise dry business story. "Advanced Programs," the outfit he was supposed to have worked for, sounded a lot like Martin's version of the Skunk Works.

Abelman said she'd see what she could do, but I wasn't to expect any short-order miracles. She wasn't the company historian, she said dryly, but she'd make a few inquiries and get back to me.

I was surprised when she phoned me a few hours later. Company records, to her surprise—and mine—said that Trimble was alive and enjoying retirement in Arizona. "Sounds hard as nails, but an amazing guy by all accounts," she breezed. "He's kinda mystified why you want to talk to him after all this time, but seems okay with it. Like you said, it's historical, right?"

"Right," I said.

I asked Abelman, while she was at it, for all the background she had on the man. History or not, I said, trying to keep it light, I liked to be thorough. She was professional enough to sound less than convinced by my newfound interest in the past, but promised she'd do her best. I thanked her, then hung up, feeling happy that I'd done something about it. A few weeks, a month at the outside, the mystery would be resolved and I could go back to my regular beat, case closed.

Outside, another bank of gray storm clouds was rolling in above rooftops that were still slick from the last passing shower.

I picked up my coat and headed for the train station, knowing that somewhere between the office and my flat in central London I was going to get soaked right through.

The initial information came a week later from a search through some old files that I'd buried in a collection of boxes in my basement: a company history of Martin Marietta I'd barely remembered I'd acquired. It told me that in 1955 Trimble had become involved in something called the Research Institute for Advanced Studies, RIAS, a Martin spin-off organization whose brief was to "observe the phenomena of nature . . . to discover fundamental laws . . . and to evolve new technical concepts for the improvement and welfare of mankind."

Aside from the philanthropic tone, a couple of things struck me as fishy about the RIAS. First off, its name was as bland as the carefully chosen "Advanced Development Projects"—the official title of the Skunk Works. Second, was the nature and caliber of its recruits. These, according to the company history, were "world-class contributors in mathematics, physics, biology and materials science."

Soon afterward, I received a package of requested information from Lockheed Martin in the mail. RIAS no longer existed, having been subsumed by other parts of the Lockheed Martin empire. But through an old RIAS history, a brochure published in 1980 to celebrate the organization's "first 25 years," I was able to glean a little more about Trimble and the outfit he'd inspired. It described him as "one of the most creative and imaginative people that ever worked for the Company."

I read on.

From a nucleus of people that in 1955 met in a conference room at the Martin Company's Middle River plant in Maryland, RIAS soon developed a need for its own space. In 1957, with a staff of about 25 people, it moved to Baltimore City. The initial research program, the brochure said, was focused on NASA and the agency's stated goal of putting a man on the moon. But that wasn't until 1961.

One obvious question was, what had RIAS been doing in the interim? Mainly math, by the look of it. Its principal academic was described as an expert in "topology and nonlinear differential equations."

I hadn't the least idea what that meant.

In 1957, the outfit moved again, this time to a large mansion on the edge of Baltimore, a place chosen for its "campus-like" atmosphere. Offices were quickly carved from bedrooms and workshops from garages.

It reminded me of accounts I'd read of the shirtsleeves atmosphere of the early days of the Manhattan Project when Oppenheimer and his team of atom scientists had crunched through the physics of the bomb.

And that was the very same analogy Trimble had used. The conquest of gravity, he'd said, would come in the time it took to build the bomb.

I called a few contacts on the science and engineering side of Lockheed Martin, asking them, in a roundabout kind of way, whether there was, or ever had been, any part of the corporation involved in gravity or "counter-gravitational" research. After some initial questions on their part as to why I should be interested, which I just about managed to palm off, the answer that came back was a uniform "no." Well, almost. There was a guy, one contact told me, a scientist who worked in the combat aircraft division in Fort Worth who would talk eloquently about the mysteries of Nature and the universe to anyone who would listen. He'd also levitate paper clips on his desk. Great character, but a bit of a maverick.

"Paper clips?" I'd asked. "A maverick scientist levitating paper clips on his desk? At Lockheed Martin? Come 0«."

My source laughed. If he hadn't known better, he'd have said I was working up a story on antigravity.

I made my excuses and signed off. It was crazy, possibly dangerous stuff, but it continued to have me intrigued.

I called an old friend who'd gained a degree in applied mathematics. Tentatively, I asked whether topology and nondifferential linear equations had any application to the study of gravity.

Of course, he replied. Topology—the study of shape in physics—and nonlinear equations were the standard methods for calculating gravitational attraction.

I sat back and pieced together what I had. It didn't amount to much, but did it amount to something?

In 1957, George S. Trimble, one of the leading aerospace engineers in the U.S. at that time, a man, it could safely be said, with a background in highly advanced concepts and classified activity, had put together what looked like a special projects team; one with a curious task.

This, just a year after he started talking about the Golden Age of Antigravity that would sweep through the industry starting in the 1960s.

So, what went wrong?

In its current literature, the stuff pumped out in press releases all the time, the U.S. Air Force constantly talked up the "vision": where it was going to be in 25 years, how it was going to wage and win future wars and how technology was key.

In 1956, it would have been as curious as I was about the notion of a fuelless propulsion source, one that could deliver phenomenal performance gains over a jet; perhaps including the ability to accelerate rapidly, to pull hairpin turns without crushing the pilot and to achieve speeds that defied the imagination. In short, it would have given them something that resembled a UFO.

I rubbed my eyes. The dim pool of light that had illuminated the Lockheed-supplied material on Trimble and RIAS had brought on a nagging pain in the back of my head. The evidence was suggesting that in the mid-'50s there had been some kind of breakthrough in the antigravity field and for a small window in time people had talked about it freely and openly, believing they were witnessing the dawn of a new era, one that would benefit the whole of mankind.

Then, in 1957, everyone had stopped talking about it. Had the military woken up to what was happening, bringing the clamps down?

Those in the know, outfits like Trimble's that had been at the forefront of the breakthrough, would probably have continued their research, assembling their development teams behind closed doors, ready for the day they could build real hardware.

But of course, it never happened.

It never happened because soon after Trimble, Bell and Lear made their statements, sanity prevailed. By 1960, it was like the whole episode never took place. Aerospace development continued along its structured, ordered pathway and antigravity became one of those taboo subjects that people like me never, ever talked about.

Satisified that everything was back in its place and as it should be, I went to bed.

Somewhere in my head I was still tracking the shrill, faraway sounds of the city when the phone rang. I could tell instantly it was Abelman. Separated by an ocean and five time zones, I heard the catch in her breathing.

"It's Trimble," she said. "The guy just got off the phone to me. Remember how he was fine to do the interview? Well, something's happened. I don't know who this old man is or what he once was, but he told me in no uncertain terms to get off his case. He doesn't want to speak to me and he doesn't want to speak to you, not now, not ever. I don't mind telling you that he sounded scared and I don't like to hear old men scared. It makes me scared. I don't know what you were really working on when you came to me with this, Nick, but let me give you some advice. Stick to what you know about; stick to the damned present. It's better that way for all of us."

Chapter 2

In 1667, Newton mathematically deduced the nature of gravity, demonstrating that the same force that pulls an apple down to earth also keeps the moon in its orbit and accounts for the revolutions of the planets. But today, we are still thwarted in attempts to measure it with any great precision. In lab experiments carried out since the 1930s, G has consistently defied efforts to be measured to more than a few decimal places.

This was what the reference books told me as I plowed through a stack of standard science works in the musty, gothic surroundings of the local library.

It was intensive work. Science was something I'd come to associate with the grind of exams. It didn't feel like the beginnings of a journalistic investigation.

I continued to scratch notes. But Newton openly stated that he had no idea what gravity actually was. All he knew was that it had to be caused by something.

The idea that a body may act on another through the vacuum of space over huge distances "without the mediation of anything else . . . is to me so great an absurdity that I believe no man can ever fall into it. Gravity must be caused . . . but whether this agent be material or immaterial I have left to the consideration of my reader."

I glanced up. The librarian, who'd been waiting to catch my eye, nodded toward the clock on the wall behind her. I looked around and realized I was the only person in the room. I'd lost track; it was a Saturday and the library closed early.

Outside, the rain had given way to the starlit sky of a passing cold front. I pulled up my collar and started down the street, dodging puddles that shimmered under the streetlights. The anomaly over gravity's measurement and the uncertainties over its causes only served to tell me how incomplete my knowledge of physics was.

I reached the edge of the common. The lights of my home street were faintly visible through the trees. I thought about my late-night call from Abelman. In the week since her approach to Trimble and his initial favorable response to the idea of an interview, it very much appeared that somebody had gotten to him. And then I thought about what I had just learned. If we had no real understanding of gravity, how could people say with such certainty that antigravity could not exist?

In 1990, the U.S. Air Force had been looking at developing a weapon capable of firing a "plasma bullet"—a doughnut-shaped ring of ionized gas—at 10,000 kilometers per second.

Shiva Star was capable of generating and holding up to 10 megajoules of electrical energy and a potential 10 trillion watts—three times as much as the entire U.S. electricity grid carried in a year. At the time that I visited Shiva, which was located within the USAF's directed energy research laboratory at Kirtland Air Force Base in New Mexico, program engineers had been readying to fire a plasma bullet sometime in 1995. The purpose of the bullet was to destroy incoming Russian nuclear warheads and, despite some fierce technological challenges, the program engineers were confident they could do it. But several years later, when I returned to Kirtland, it was like the plasma bullet project never existed. Engineers had difficulty even recalling it.

Officially, it had been terminated on cost grounds. But this made little sense. The program had been budgeted at $3.6 million per year for five years. Eighteen million bucks to produce a true quantum leap weapon system. Few people I spoke to bought the official version. Somewhere along the way, they said, Shiva must have delivered. Somewhere along the line, the program had gone black.

I coupled this knowledge with what the antigravity proponents had been saying in 1956. If you could find a way of shielding objects from the effects of gravity, the military, let alone the economic ramifications would be enormous.

Aircraft propulsion seems to have progressed little in appreciable terms since the advent of the jet engine in the 1940s. Incremental improvements for decades have been of the order of a few percentage points. The fastest aircraft in the world—officially, at least—is still the Lockheed Blackbird, designed in the late 1950s, first flown in 1962 and retired in 1990.

Amongst my peers, there had been speculation since the late 1980s about the existence of a secret replacement for the Blackbird, a mythical plane called Aurora that supposedly flew twice as fast and on the edges of space.

I had no direct evidence of Aurora, but then I'd never gone looking for it either. On balance, though, I felt something had been developed.

In 1992, circumstantial evidence of Aurora's existence was strengthened when Jane's Defence Weekly carried a detailed sighting of a massive triangular-shaped aircraft spotted in formation with USAF F-111 bombers and an air-refueling tanker above an oil rig in the North Sea. The sighting was credible because it was witnessed by a highly trained aircraft recognition expert in the Royal Observer Corps who happened to be on the rig at the time.

Shiva had been my first brush with the "black" world, the Pentagon's hidden reservoir of defense programs—projects so secret that officially they did not exist. Since then, I'd felt the presence of other deep black projects, but only indirectly.

Looking for the black world was like looking for evidence of black holes. You couldn't see a black hole, no matter how powerful your telescope, because its pull sucked in everything around it, including the light of neighboring stars. But astronomers knew that black holes existed because of the intense friction they generated on their edges. It was this that gave them away.

Forty years ago, the people in charge of the Air Force's hidden budget would have been quick to see the extraordinary implication of Trimble's message; that there would be no limit—no limit at all—to the potential of an antigravity aerospace vehicle.

The black world would have thrilled to the notion of a science that did not exist.

As I crossed from the park back into the glare of the streetlights, I knew I was quite possibly staring at a secret that had been buried more than 40 years deep.

I called Lawrence Cross, an aerospace journalist from the circuit, an ex-Jane's man, now a bureau chief for a rival publication in Australia.

Cross and I had spent long hours ruminating on the existence of U.S. Air Force black programs and the kind of technologies the Air Force might be pursuing in ultrasecrecy.

I liked Cross, because he had his feet squarely on the ground, was a hell of a good reporter, but wasn't your average dyed-in-the-wool-type hack. It had been a while since we had spoken.

The phone rang for ages. It was ten at night my time, eight in the morning his; and it was the weekend. I could hear the sleep in his voice when he finally picked up the handset. In the background, a baby was crying. Cross had three kids under six years old. Ninety percent of the time he looked completely exhausted.

He remained quiet as I sketched out the events of the past weeks. I told him about the article, Trimble's initial willingness to be interviewed, then the phone call from Abelman and her insistence, on Trimble's say-so, that I drop the whole business.

"This is interesting," he said, stifling a yawn, "but why the long-distance call?"

"I wanted to tap you on one of your case studies."

"Uh-huh." He sounded wary, more alert suddenly. "Which one?"

"Belgium," I said. "Wasn't there some kind of flap there a year or two back?"

"You could say that. Hundreds of people reported seeing triangular-shaped craft all over the country in two 24-hour waves—one in 1989, the other in 1990. The Belgian Air Force even scrambled F-16s to intercept them. Why the sudden interest?"

"You once told me that those craft might have been the result of some kind of secret U.S. development effort."

Cross laughed. "Maybe I did. But I've had time to study the officiai reports since—the ones put out by the Belgian government. Those craft were totally silent. They hovered, often very close to witnesses, and they never made a sound. You may find my take on this hard to swallow, but there is no technology—no technology on earth—that could produce that kind of performance."

"Didn't the Belgian press try to tag the sightings to Aurora?"

"Yes, but you and I know that that's crazy. Even if Aurora is real, don't tell me it can remain stationary one moment and fly Mach 7 the next. And without making a sound. Belgian radar tracked these things. The tapes show that they pulled turns of around 20 to 40 g—enough to kill a human pilot." He paused. "You're not seriously suggesting what I think you're suggesting, are you?"

"A 40-year U.S. development effort, in the black, to make antigravity technology a reality? Why not? They were talking about it openly in 1956, Lawrence, then it dropped off the scope. Completely and utterly, like somebody orchestrated the disappearance. It makes me want to consider the possibility, at least, that someone achieved a breakthrough and the whole thing went super-classified."

"And now you've got the bit between your teeth?"

"Something like that, yes."

For a long moment, Cross fell silent. Then I heard him light a cigarette. In the background, I heard his wife calling him. Then he cupped the receiver, because I caught his voice, muffled, telling her he'd be there in a minute. The baby was still bawling its lungs out.

"If you break cover on this," he said, "you'll blow everything. For yourself, I mean."

"Come on," I said, "it's a story. It may be an old story, but I'll apply the rules that I would on any other. If there's any truth in it, the answers will pop out. They usually do."

"That's so bloody naive. If there is any truth in it, which I doubt, they'll already know you're interested and that's not going to help you one little bit. They'll stand in your way, like they may have done already with this old man . . . Trimble? If there isn't any truth ink, then you're just going to look like a fucking idiot."

"They, Lawrence? Who's they?"

"The security people. The keepers of the secrets. The men-in-black. You know who I mean."

I didn't. To my ears, it sounded more than a little insane.

"I'm going to bide my time," I said, returning to the reason for the call, "do this at my own pace. For the moment, there's no need for me to break cover. Right now, all I have to do is conduct some low-level research and keep my eyes and ears open when I'm out there in the field. No one has to know about any of this, Lawrence. All I'm asking for in the meantime is a little help. Some of your knowledge. A few facts."

"Listen," he said, "there are no facts in this field; the whole business, if you want to know, is riven with disinformation, much of it, in my opinion, deliberately orchestrated. Sooner or later, you're going to have to surface and when you do, some of that crazy UFO spin is going to rub off on you. That happens and you'll never eat lunch in this great industry of ours again. Do you understand what I'm saying?"

And then his tone softened. "I've got to go now, but if you really are hell-bent on taking this forward, you might want to try an outfit in Washington, D.C., called the Integrity Research Institute. They have a handle on some of this material. Just promise me you'll keep my name out of it, okay?" And with that, he hung up.

During a trawl of the Library of Congress in the summer of 1985, Dr. Paul LaViolette, a researcher badly bitten by the gravity bug, tripped over a reference in the card indexing system to a report called Electrogravitics Systems—An Examination of Electrostatic Motion, Dynamic Counterbary and Barycentric Control. The words immediately alerted LaViolette, because he knew they were synonyms for something that science said was impossible: antigravity.

LaViolette had become interested in antigravity during his study for a Ph.D. in systems science from Portland State University. His curiosity was aroused further when he realized that the electrogravitics report was missing from its rightful place in the library's stacks—"like it had been lifted," he told me later.

When LaViolette asked the librarian if she could try to locate a copy elsewhere, what began as a simple checking procedure soon developed into a full-blown search of the interlibrary loan network, all to no avail.

Convinced he would never see a copy, LaViolette gave up, but weeks later the librarian called to tell him that she had managed to track one down. It had been buried in the technical library of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio.

There were no other copies known to exist across the whole of America.

"Whatever's in it," she told LaViolette dryly, "it must be pretty exotic."

When LaViolette finally got the Air Force to release the report, exotic seemed about right. Electrogravitics Systems, drafted in February 1956, the same year Trimble and his colleagues began pronouncing publicly on antigravity, contained details of what appeared to be a Mach 3 antigravity aerospace vehicle designed as a fighter-interceptor for the U.S. Air Force.

The fact that the report had been located at the Air Force's premier research and development facility instantly made Electrogravitics Systems an intriguing piece of work. That the USAF also appeared to have sat on it for almost 40 years only served to underscore its importance, LaViolette and his associates felt.

I had managed to track LaViolette through the Integrity Research Institute. The institute sat on the edges of a sub-culture of researchers who relentlessly picked over the antigravity issue. Type "antigravity" into a Net search engine and an outpouring of conspiracy-based nonsense on the government suppression of antigravity technology usually popped up onscreen. In the sober world of defense journalism, I'd never remotely envisaged a day when I'd have to involve myself in such matters.

Now, recalling Cross' warnings about professional suicide, I was reluctant to take the plunge, but realized that I had no choice.

I spoke to a colleague of LaViolette's called Tom Valone who mercifully never pressed me on the reasons why I was so interested in the antigravity business. A few days later, a copy of Electrogravitics Systems duly arrived through the mail.

Electrogravitics Systems had not been prepared by the Air Force, it turned out, but by an outfit called the Gravity Research Group, Special Weapons Study Unit, a subdivision of Aviation Studies (International) Limited, a British organization.

I did some checking. Aviation Studies had been a think tank run by Richard "Dicky" Worcester and John Longhurst, two talented young aerospace analysts who in the mid-1950s produced a cyclo-styled newsletter that had a reputation for close-to-the-knuckle, behind-the-scenes reporting on the aerospace and defense industry.

From the start, the Electrogravitics Systems report adopted a lofty tone: "Aircraft design is still fundamentally as the Wrights adumbrated it, with wings, body, tails, moving or flapping controls, landing gear and so forth. The Wright biplane was a powered glider, and all subsequent aircraft, including supersonic jets of the 1950s are also powered gliders."

The writers went on to say that insufficient attention had been paid to gravity research and that the "rewards of success are too far-reaching to be overlooked."

But while it quickly became clear that the report was not authored by the USAF, or apparently even commissioned by it, it did appear to be remarkably well informed about the progress of gravity—and antigravity—research in the United States and elsewhere; something that LaViolette and Valone felt might have accounted for its burial for so long in the Wright-Patterson technical library.

The word "antigravity" was not used in the report, presumably because this pop-scientific term was felt to be too lurid for the report's paying subscribers. To those less fussed, however, the term "electro-gravitics" seemed pretty much synonymous with antigravity, even by Aviation Studies' own definition:

"Electrogravitics might be described as a synthesis of electrostatic energy used for propulsion—either vertical propulsion or horizontal or both—and gravitics, or dynamic counterbary, in which energy is also used to set up a local gravitational force independent ofthat of the earth."

Counterbary is subsequently defined as "the action of lévitation where gravity's force is more than overcome by electrostatic or other propulsion."

Antigravity, then.

The report echoed what had already been made clear in the Gladych and Interavia articles: that antigravity was of real interest to just about every U.S. aerospace company of the day.

"Douglas has now stated that it has counterbary on its work agenda, but does not expect results yet awhile. Hiller has referred to new forms of flying platform. Glenn Martin says gravity control could be achieved in six years, but they add it would entail a Manhattan Project type of effort to bring it about. Sikorsky, one of the pioneers, more or less agrees with the Douglas verdict . . . Clarke Electronics state they have a rig, and add that in their view the source of gravity's force will be understood sooner than some people think. General Electric is working on electronic rigs designed to make adjustments to gravity—this line of attack has the advantage of using rigs already in existence for other defense work. Bell also has an experimental rig intended, as the company puts it, to cancel out gravity, and Lawrence Bell has said that he is convinced practical hardware will emerge from current programs. Grover Leoning is certain that what he referred to as an electromagnetic contra-gravity mechanism will be developed for practical use. Convair is extensively committed to the work with several rigs. Lear Inc., autopilot and electronic engineers, have a division of the company working on gravity research and so also has the Sperry division of Sperry-Rand. This list embraces most of the U.S. aircraft industry. The remainder, Curtiss-Wright, Lockheed, Boeing and North American have not yet declared themselves, but all these four are known to be in various stages of study with and without rigs."

Everybody, in other words, had had a finger in the pie.

But where, I asked, was the evidence 40 years on? It wasn't simply that the results of all this activity had failed to yield hardware; no corporate history of any these companies that I'd ever read in all my years as a journalist in the industry even hinted that gravity, antigravity, electrogravitics, counterbary—call it what you will—had ever been of interest to any of them.

And then, on page three of the Electrogravitics Systems report I saw the mention of Thomas Townsend Brown—the "Townsend T. Brown" of the Interavia piece in the Jane's library.

The report referred to Brown's "Project Winterhaven." Apparently, Brown had invented a whole new approach to the mechanics of flight.

This notion of electrogravitic lift supposedly worked on the principle that a plate-like object charged positively on one side and negatively on the other would always exhibit thrust toward the positive pole, i.e. from negative to positive. If the plate is mounted horizontally and the positive pole is uppermost, the object will in effect lose weight, because it will want to rise skyward.

I was in no rush to judge the validity of the physics. But I'd worked in the business long enough to know that the military would be quick to dismiss anything that wasn't practical. So the key question for me was how the military had viewed Brown's work.

I called the Integrity Research Institute and asked Tom Valone to send me as much information as his organization possessed on Brown.

Then, over the next few weeks, my life assumed a pattern. In the dead hours, long after the phone stopped ringing, I'd head down into the basement, fire up the computer and hit the Net, staying on-line deep into the night.

My great regret was that I couldn't contact George S. Trimble directly. Had I done so, I knew that Abelman would have gone ballistic. She'd told me to stay away from him and she had the power to ensure that I became an outcast if I didn't. Lockheed Martin was a large company and its word would spread quickly.

In that respect, Cross was right. Pretty soon, no one would want to talk to a technology hack who was running around asking madcap questions about antigravity.

Better, then, to do what I was doing; keep a lid on it. Here, in the silence of the night, I could roam the Internet and remain anonymous. Besides, it really did seem to be a case of reviewing the evidence and following up the clues—clues that had apparently never registered with the experts who had been reporting on all this for years.

That in itself was seductive. Little by little, I could feel myself being pulled in.

Chapter 3

Thomas Townsend Brown was born into a prominent family from Zanesville, Ohio, in 1905, two years after the Wright Brothers, residents of nearby Dayton, propelled their "Flyer," the first aircraft capable of sustained powered flight, into the sky at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. From an early age, Brown exhibited traits that would later come to mark his work as a scientist. As a child, he built a workshop in his backyard and at the age of ten was already receiving signals from across the Atlantic on a homemade radio-receiver. At 16, he was broadcasting from his own radio station.

For all his prowess as an inventor, Brown appears to have been a somewhat recalcitrant student. In 1922, he was enrolled at the California Institute of Technology (Cal Tech), but soon fell into a disagreement with his teachers over the time allowed by the Institution for laboratory work, something he lived for. After failing his first year exams in chemistry and physics, he persuaded his father to sponsor the construction of a laboratory of his own. With no expense spared, a lab was installed on the second floor of their new house in Pasadena.

The quid pro quo, apparently, was that "T.T." had to receive home tuition to boost his grades. Brown subsequently reported that he made considerable progress in chemistry, while still finding time to devise an X-ray spectrometer for astronomical measurements. It was at this point that he began to develop his first theories about electrogravitation. In essence, Brown believed that gravitation might be a form of radiation, much like light, with a "push" as opposed to a "pull" effect.

"Word of this got out among my classmates," he related in a document called "A Short Autobiography," which I found on the Net, "and although shunned and made fun of by the professors, I was nevertheless called to the attention of Dr. Robert Andrew Millikan, Director of Cal Tech and, incidentally, my first physics teacher, who explained to me in great detail, why such an explanation of gravitation was utterly impossible and not to be considered."

In 1923, Brown transferred to Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, and the following year switched to Ohio's Denison University where he came under the tutelage of physicist and astronomer Dr. Paul Alfred Biefeld, a former classmate of Einstein's in Switzerland. In earlier experimentation, Brown had made the startling discovery that a Coolidge X-ray tube exhibited thrust when charged to high voltage. It took Brown a while to realize that the motion was not caused by the X rays themselves, but by the electricity coursing through the tube. Brown went on to develop a device he called the "Gravitor," an electrical condenser sealed in a Bakelite case, that would exhibit a one percent weight gain or a one percent weight loss when connected to a 100-kilovolt power supply.

In 1929, Brown wrote up his discoveries in a paper entitled How I Control Gravitation and speculated as to how his invention might one day be used:

"The Gravitor, in all reality, is a very efficient motor. Unlike other forms of motor, it does not in any way involve the principles of electromagnetism, but instead it utilizes the principles of electro-gravitation.

"A simple gravitor has no moving parts, but is apparently capable of moving itself from within itself. It is highly efficient for the reason that it uses no gears, shafts, propellers or wheels in creating its motive power. It has no internal mechanical resistance and no observable rise in temperature. Contrary to the common belief that gravitational motors must necessarily be vertical-acting, the gravitor, it is found, acts equally well in every conceivable direction."

This ability to manipulate the force in all axes opened up the Gravitor's potential to aviation. Brown's research led him to the development of a shape that was the most efficient in the production of electrogravitational lift: that of a perfect disc or saucer.

The way he proposed to control the craft was by dividing the disc into segments, each of which could be selectively charged. By moving the charge around the rim of the saucer, it would, Brown said, be possible to make it move in any direction.

I had to remind myself that this was the 1920s.

The aviation industry was still absorbing the technical lessons of the First World War, the biplane was king and fighters, typified by the Boeing Model ISA, a leading U.S. design of the mid-1920s, were struggling to attain top speeds of 160 mph.

But although Brown's principles seemed to have been confirmed by observation—something, after all, was causing his condenser plates to move, however much the naysayers denigrated the possibility that it was due to an electrogravitic reaction—he had no way of generating and maintaining an electrical charge that would keep a small model craft in the air, let alone to maneuver it. This force was calculated to be in the region of 50 kilovolts, 200 times more than the charge that came from my wall socket.

Yet these were early days. What was astounding was that Brown had developed a concept for an air vehicle, shaped in the form of a disc, years before anyone had coined the term "flying saucer."

This, I thought, had to be more than happenstance, especially as the military were showing signs that they considered Brown to be not just a visionary, but a practical man of invention; someone they could turn to to develop nuts-and-bolts hardware.

In September 1930, Brown joined the U.S. Navy Reserve, but instead of going to sea was given orders to report to the Naval Research Laboratory (NRL) in Washington, D.C. In due course, he transferred to the NRL's "Heat and Light Division" and here he carried on the experiments that he started in Ohio.

Experiments were conducted which seemed to prove the concept of gravitation which he had first postulated at Cal Tech in 1923.

In 1932, Brown served as staff physicist on the Navy's Gravity Expedition to the West Indies. But by 1933, the effects of the Great Depression were forcing cutbacks within the Navy and Brown, suddenly finding himself out of a job at the NRL, was driven to seek work in industry, which he interleaved with his duties as a reserve naval officer.

With war clouds gathering in Europe, Brown was drafted full-time into the Navy and assigned to acoustic and magnetic minesweeping research, a field for which he seemed to have a great natural aptitude. He developed a method for maintaining the buoyancy of minesweeping cables, designed to trigger magnetic mines with a strong electrical force field, while simultaneously shielding them from blast effects. Brown took out a patent on the idea, which was immediately classified.

By 1940, he was appointed head of the Navy Bureau of Ships' minesweeping research and development activity and it was during this period that he experimented with "degaussing"—a method for canceling a ship's magnetic field. This was a critical breakthrough as it was a ship's magnetic field that triggered a new breed of German mines, weapons that the Nazis had developed in quantity.

There was no question that Brown was by now well plugged into the military's research and development community, and that his opinions were given great credit.

It is ironic, then, that it is at this point that his credibility is most open to question, thanks to his supposed association with the so-called "Philadelphia Experiment."

In this, according to legend, the U.S. Navy spirited one of its warships, complete with its crew complement, into another dimension.

The Philadelphia Experiment was made famous in a book of the same name by Charles Berlitz and William Moore, writers who have forged names for themselves with tales of paranormal mysteries. Even they confessed that it was "questionable whether Brown was really ever very heavily involved in the Philadelphia Experiment project"—a comment that assumes this incident took place at all.

But the association is ingrained. Run a check with a search engine and Brown is up there, his name highlighted, nine times out of ten, right alongside it.

I tried to maneuver around this obstacle, this blip in Brown's otherwise blemishless wartime record, but whichever way I turned, it wouldn't go away.

Its effect was powerful and immediate. Up until this moment, I'd trawled cyberspace and decades-old documents in the growing conviction that this unusually gifted engineer was an important, long-overlooked link in the antigravity mystery highlighted by the Gladych and Interavia articles.

But the instant the Philadelphia Experiment started to be mentioned in the same breath as Brown, it made me want to drop him like a stone.

It was just as Cross had said it would be. I could feel the association, with its whiff of paranoia and conspiracy, threatening to act like a contaminant on my thinking.

Better to avoid it altogether.

Everything had been going so well. Brown was university-educated, he'd worked in the aviation industry, he'd been embraced by the military and he'd done classified work. And then, the Philadelphia Experiment had come along.

Shit.

The substance of the story is that while experimenting with techniques in 1943 to make navy ships invisible to radar through the use of intense electromagnetic fields, a destroyer, the USS Eldridge, disappeared from its berth in Philadelphia and reappeared moments later at a Navy yard in Norfolk, Virginia, 250 miles away. During this time-lapsed interval, the crew were supposedly transported into a "parallel dimension," an experience that drove many of them insane.

Brown's credentials at the time, coupled with his refusal in the years since altogether to dismiss the Philadelphia Experiment as hokum, have helped to stoke the myth. And so it has stuck to him like glue.

In the silence of the basement, confronted by this dead end, I began to wonder about that.

If the original authorities on the story, Berlitz and Moore, had had their own doubts about Brown's involvement in the Philadelphia Experiment, how had he come to be linked so inextricably to it?

And then I thought of something else; something Cross had said. That this whole field was riven with disinformation, some of it, in his opinion, deliberately managed. The Soviets had even coined a term for it: disinformatsiya.

During World War Two and the long decades of the Cold War the Russian military had used disinformatsiya to achieve key tactical and strategic objectives.

Far from avoiding the Philadelphia Experiment, which was what my every professional instinct yelled I should be doing, I came to the uncomfortable conclusion that I ought to do precisely the opposite.

Tentatively, I began to surf the Net for obscure websites that told the story.

There are two versions of what the Philadelphia Experiment was trying to achieve. One holds that the Navy was testing a method that would make ships invisible to radar, the other was that it was attempting to develop some kind of optical cloaking device as well; that by generating an intense electromagnetic field around the Eldridge, it would distort both light and radar waves in its vicinity, rendering the ship invisible to both sensor systems and the human eye.

To do this, the legend stated, the Eldridge was equipped with tons of electronic equipment. These, the story had it, included massive electrical generators, several powerful radio frequency transmitters, thousands of power amplifier tubes, cabling to distribute the energy around the ship and special circuitry to tune and modulate the fields.

During the first test, which is supposed to have taken place in July 1943, the Eldridge is said to have become invisible at its berth, the only sign that it was there being a trough of displaced water beneath the hull. Though classified a success, the ship remaining invisible for around 15 minutes, the crew experienced side effects, including nausea, disorientation and memory loss.

If we can for the moment assume that there's some truth in the story this would have been quite unsurprising to those in charge of the science, since the nerve impulses by which the brain operates are signaled electrically. In effect, just as earlier iterations of the equipment had demonstrated on enemy mines, the field generators would have "degaussed" the brains of anyone within the area of influence, causing them temporary and, in some cases, permanent damage.

In such circumstances, I could conceive of reasons why the Navy might want to plant misleading stories about the Eldridge—the more so, since it involved stealth.

It remains highly sensitive technology, but the use of electromagnetic fields in generating radar stealth is a technique well known to military science today.

But during World War Two—if Brown had discovered a means of shielding U.S. Navy ships from enemy radar (or even for marginally reducing their radar signature)—it would have rung right off the classification scale.

The last thing the Navy would have wanted was sailors running around complaining of headaches and revealing how they had come by them.

The next experiment supposedly went even further. In October 1943, after the Navy had replaced the first crew, a second test on the Eldridge was carried out.

This time, soon after the generators were switched on, the ship shimmered for a few seconds, remaining visible in outline only. Then there was a blinding flash and it vanished altogether. The legend states that it was transported briefly to a berth in Norfolk, Virginia, before making its way back to the yard at Philadelphia.

When investigators went on board, they found that some of the crew had been swallowed by the ether that had momentarily consumed the Eldridge. These men were never seen again.

Those that did make it back were either made dangerously ill by their adventure, experiencing intense nausea and headaches for years, or were driven mad by it.

Weirdest of all, five of the crew were found fused into the metallic structure of the ship, which had materially transmuted to accommodate them.

These were the broad "facts" as presented to Berlitz and Moore, who were first alerted to the mystery by a man who claimed to have been on the Eldridge. They were supported by an eccentric source identified variously as Carlos Allende and Carl Allen, who claimed to have witnessed the whole thing from the deck of the SS Andrew Furuseth, a merchant marine ship berthed close to the Eldridge in the Philadelphia navy yard.

This was in the mid-1970s, more than 30 years after the purported events. When the book came to be written, Brown became an inextricable part of the myth.

* * *

The only other thing I knew about disinformation, certainly as it had been practiced by the Soviets, was that it worked best when mixed in with a little truth.

Intuitively, therefore, I felt Brown must have been somewhere in the vicinity of the "experiment" when it was supposed to have happened. Beyond that, I could draw no other conclusions, so I returned to the documented facts of his career.

In 1942, he was appointed head of the Atlantic Fleet Radar Materiel School and Gyrocompass School in Norfolk, Virginia, a position that would have made him privy to some of the most highly classified technical secrets of the day. Whatever work he was engaged on there, it appears to have taken its toll, since the following year he suffered a nervous breakdown and was discharged from the Navy.

There is something neatly synergistic in this unfortunate development, which appears to have been real enough, with the mystery surrounding the USS Eldridge. One suggestion is that whatever work Brown was engaged in at the time, be it in the radar or minesweeping field, it caused him temporary memory loss.

While it stretched credulity to believe in stories of optical invisibility, tele-transportation and parallel dimensions, I did find it possible to envisage a scenario in which the legend of the Eldridge had grown out of the secrecy of Brown's legitimate work in the radar field; in much the same way that the supposed ability of RAF night fighter pilots to see in the dark by eating carrots stemmed from a childishly simple British ruse to protect its radar secrets at around the same time.

Despite Brown's illness—and whatever really happened in the Philadelphia and Norfolk shipyards—it appears to have had no long-term detrimental effect on his standing in the eyes of the Navy. In 1944, he went back to work as a radar consultant in Burbank, California, at Lockheed's Vega Division, which was responsible for development of the Navy's PV-2 Harpoon and P-2V Neptune antisubmarine patrol bombers.

At war's end, Brown moved to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, where he once again resumed the antigravity work that had driven his research efforts as a young man.

It seemed to me from this period—long before the story of the Philadephia Experiment emerged to complicate the picture—as if two portraits of Brown had been painted and were now in circulation: one portraying him as a mildly eccentric inventor with some harebrained ideas about negating the forces of gravity; the other showing him to be a man responsible for some of the most highly classified research of the war.

Seen through this ambivalent prism, the story of the Philadelphia Experiment has helped to perform a very important function.

By 1980, it had managed to tip Brown over the edge; make him a wholly discredited figure in the eyes of science.

That left me with the uncomfortable feeling that the story had been carefully stage-managed. If so, why? And why so long after the supposed events had taken place?

The next occasion Brown is reputed to have demonstrated his Gravitor and tethered flying discs was to Admiral Arthur W. Radford, Commander in chief of the U.S. Pacific Fleet, in Hawaii in 1945. Brown had by now left California and was resident in Hawaii, where he worked temporarily as a consultant at the Pearl Harbor Navy Yard.

His demonstrations supposedly failed to impress the Navy, but there is no known official record of its reaction. One account is that it "refused funding for further research because of the negative opinion of other scientists." Another relates the story of his room being broken into after the Pearl Harbor demonstration and the theft of his notebooks. According to this variant, which was related by a close friend of Brown's, Josh Reynolds, the Navy returned the books days later, adding that it remained uninterested. The reason given was that the "effect" was not due to electrogravitation, but to "ionic wind"—this, despite Brown's view that he had conclusively proven otherwise with experiments under oil back in the 1920s.

From 1945 until 1952, little is known about Brown's activities, but based on what happened next, it is clear that along the way he returned from Hawaii to Los Angeles, where he established the Townsend Brown Foundation.

In 1952, the Foundation received an unannounced visit by Major General Victor E. Bertrandias of the U.S. Air Force. I learned of this thanks to a recovered transcript of a phone conversation between Bertrandias and another USAF general called Craig, whose job description was not immediately clear.

The transcript had been forwarded to me by Tom Valone at the Integrity Research Institute. It made clear that Bertrandias was astounded by what he witnessed.

"It sounds terribly screwy, but Friday I went down with Lehr, a man named Lehr, to a place called the Townsend Brown Foundation, and believe it or not, I saw a model of a flying saucer," Bertrandias reported.

"No," Craig replied, apparently without irony.

"I thought I should report it," Bertrandias told him. "There was a lot of objection to my getting in there by the party that took me and the thing frightened me—frightened me for the fact that it is being held or conducted by a private group. I was in there from about one-thirty until about five in the afternoon and I saw these two models that fly and the thing has such a terrific impact that I thought we ought to find out something about it—who these people are and whether the thing is legitimate. If it ever gets away I say it is in the stage in which the atomic development was in the early days."

"I see," General Craig replied. The man's urbane delivery earmarked him, to me at least, as someone big in Air Force intelligence.

"I was told that I was not to say anything about it," Bertrandias burbled on, "but I'm afraid that all that I heard made me believe in it and these were not schoolboys. It was conducted in rather an elaborate office in Los Angeles. I thought I should report it to you."

"Yes, well I'll look into it and see what I can find out," Craig told him, shortly before hanging up.

It seems that what Bertrandias had stumbled upon, a little before the Townsend Brown Foundation was ready to pitch it formally to the military, was Project Winterhaven—the distillation of all Brown's ideas into a blueprint for a manned antigravity fighter, built in the shape of a disc and capable of Mach 3, twice the speed of the leading jet-powered interceptor of the day.

Years later, LaViolette had found extensive references to Winterhaven in the sole remaining copy of the Electrogravitics Systems report the Congressional librarian had tracked down to the technical library at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

I was rapidly coming full circle.

I needed to see the report on Project Winterhaven, but remembering the difficulty LaViolette had had in tracking down the one remaining copy of Electrogravitics Systems, I couldn't begin to think how or where I would lay my hands on one. I imagined, given the Air Force's evident excitement about Brown's work, that if there were any copies of Winterhaven left, they were buried somewhere deep.

I rang Valone in Washington—my third call in as many weeks—and this time got the question I'd been dreading. Was Jane's running some kind of investigation into antigravity?

I told him it wasn't; that my interest in Brown's work was born of personal curiosity, nothing more, and that I'd appreciate it if he'd keep the matter to himself.

Valone seemed quite unfazed by this request. In the murky world of antigravity research, I realized it was probably par for the course.

The conversation drifted inevitably toward Townsend Brown and Winterhaven. It was then that I mentioned how I'd give my eyeteeth to know what was in it.

A week later, to my absolute astonishment, a copy of Winterhaven (registered copy No. 36) landed on my desk. Attached to the front page was a note from Valone. Thanks to the Freedom of Information Act, there was no need for me and my teeth to part company, he said. I smiled. The man was a one-stop shop.

He assured me, too, that no one else bar him and LaViolette would ever know that I was interested in the subject matter.

Nagged by the ease with which the military had relinquished its grip on Winterhaven, I started reading.

In his pitch to the military, on page six, Brown had written: "The technical development of the electrogravitic reaction would usher in a new age of speed and power and of revolutionary new methods of transportation and communication.

"Theoretical considerations would predict that, because of the sustained acceleration, top limits of speed may be raised far beyond those of jet propulsion or rocket drive, with possibilities of eventually approaching the speed of light in 'free space.' The motor which may be forthcoming will be essentially soundless, vibrationless and heatless."

I made notes. This was language that was similar in tone to that expressed by George S. Trimble and his quoted contemporaries in the 1956 Gladych article. Trimble, who 40 years later had canceled my interview with him, because he appeared—to Abelman's mind, at least—to be too afraid to talk.

The attributes of the technology were also right in line with the characteristics exhibited by the flying triangles observed over Belgium.

The little model discs that had so impressed General Bertrandias "contain no moving parts and do not necessarily rotate while in flight," the Winterhaven report stated. "In atmospheric air they emit a bluish-red electric coronal glow and a faint hissing sound."

Project Winterhaven, then, offered a systematic approach for the establishment of a U.S. antigravity program—echoing the origins of the U.S. atomic bomb project a decade earlier and the path that Trimble had advocated in 1956.

In the report, Brown recommended starting modestly with 2-foot discs charged at 50 kilovolts, then proceeding to 4-foot discs at 150 kV and finally to a 10-foot disc at 500 kV, with careful measurements being made along the way of the thrust generated.

This was a sensible, structured approach. It showed that Winterhaven was ready to transition from the drawing board to the technology demonstration phase.

Full-blown development wouldn't be far behind.

Brown had also formulated a method for generating the required high voltages for a free-flying disc—the problem that had earlier stymied its practical development into a manned aircraft—by means of a "flame-jet generator." This was a jet engine modified to act as an electrostatic generator capable of providing up to 15 million volts to the skin of the craft. The Interavia article, I remembered, had talked of trials involving 3-foot discs run in a 50-foot diameter air course under a charge of 150 kV "with results so impressive as to be highly classified."

Brown's flying saucer now had a power source.

In one way and another things seemed to be gaining momentum.

But it was short-lived.

Days after General Bertrandias' conversation with his spook colleague General Craig, the documents trail showed that the Air Force Office of Special Investigations, AFOSI, was well and truly onto the Brown case. AFOSI was the Air Force equivalent of the FBI—an indication that Craig had taken Bertrandias' interpretation of his visit to the Brown Foundation seriously. Once again, it was Valone who furnished me with the relevant papers.

They showed that AFOSI uncovered a copy of a report prepared by one Willoughby M. Cady of the Office of Naval Research, the ONR, in Pasadena, California, entitled: "An Investigation Relative to the Townsend Brown Foundation."

The report, which was forwarded by AFOSI to Major General Joseph F. Carroll, Deputy Inspector General of the USAF, made disappointing reading all around.

"Mr. Brown claims that a gravitational anomaly exists in the neighborhood of a charged condenser," Cady wrote in his conclusions, adding: "This effect has not been well documented by Mr. Brown."

Cady went on to say that there was no electrogravitational link, merely a disturbance of the air around the model saucers stimulated by the electrical charge and it was this that was causing them to be propelled upward and forward.

Any hope that this technology might be of use in aerospace propulsion was damned by Cady. "If the efficiency of conversion of fuel energy into electrical energy is 21 percent, the overall efficiency of propulsion of the model flying saucers by the electric wind is 0.3 percent. This compares with about 25 percent for a propeller-driven airplane and 15 percent for a jet airplane."

If Cady's conclusions were clear to me, they would have been crystal clear to the Navy and the Air Force. Brown's flying saucer would have had trouble getting off the ground, let alone cruising at Mach 3. The whole "science" of electrogravitics, Cady was telling his superiors, was a waste of time, effort and money.

The Navy and its old foe the Air Force would have concluded that they were both far better off sticking with jets.

Even under the auspices of a deeply classified program, an arrangement by which one branch of the armed forces might be unaware of projects taking place in another, it was hard to see Brown's work surviving such an appraisal.

On September 22, 1952, six months after General Bertrandias' telephone call to General Craig, documents showed that the Air Force downgraded its interest in the work of the Townsend Brown Foundation from "confidential" to "unclassified."

This explained why the Pentagon's archives had contained a declassified copy of Winterhaven.

Despite the view of LaViolette, Valone and many others that this was the moment Project Winterhaven went super-classified, forming the basis of a number of "black programs" in the antigravity field from the mid-1950s onward, I found this hard to believe. Although LaViolette's theory dovetailed neatly with the ringing silence that followed the zealous rhetoric of George Trimble and his colleagues in the U.S. aerospace industry on the subject of antigravity in 1956, there was no evidence at all to support it.

Nor, crucially, did LaViolette's thesis explain Brown's behavior from this period onward. For although it was obvious that he knew how to keep a secret—his wartime work would have instilled in him the need for the rigors of secrecy—if the ONR report was merely a blind, his subsequent actions went way beyond attempts to lead investigators away from a buried program within the U.S. Navy or Air Force or both. The energy with which he now set out to prove his electrogravitational theory seemed, in fact, to stem specifically from the comprehensive rejection of his experiments by the U.S. military. For the rest of his life, Brown, who was universally described as quiet, unassuming, honest and likable, behaved like a man driven to prove his point.

In 1955, he went to work for the French aerospace company

SNCASO—Société Nationale de Constructions Aéronautiques du Sud-Ouest.

During this one-year research period, he ran his discs in a vacuum. If anything, they worked better in a vacuum, something that prompted SNCASO, which was interested in exploiting Brown's work for possible space applications, to offer him an extension of his contract. But in 1956, SNCASO merged with its counterpart Sud-Est and its new bosses saw little future in the space business. They wanted to build aeroplanes; real ones, with wings and jet engines.

His contract terminated, Brown returned to America, where he helped found the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena (NICAP), an unofficial study group set up to analyze the growing body of UFO sightings across the American continent and elsewhere. It was Brown's belief that the study of UFOs, many of which exhibited characteristics similar to his discs, could shed light on their propulsion methodology and this, in turn, could be exploited for science and space travel. The trouble was, of course, that this alienated him even more from the mainstream.

It also further alienated him from me. As I'd immersed myself in Brown's life and work, I'd wondered more and more if his "discovery" of electrogravitics had had something to do with the emergence of the whole UFO phenomenon in the '40s, if these "alien" craft had in fact been top secret aerospace vehicles propelled by a power source that science even today refused to recognize. This, however, did not gel with a man who went on to found a UFO study group.

In 1957, Brown was hired as a consultant to continue his antigravity work for the Bahnson Company of North Carolina and in 1959 he found himself consulting for the aerospace propulsion giant General Electric.

I found little corroborating evidence for Brown's activities during these years.

When he went into semiretirement in the mid-1960s, Valone and LaViolette saw this as a signal that, in effect, he had been been bought off by the military, especially as he hardly touched electrogravitics again. His last great interest involved a series of ultimately successful attempts to draw stored electrical energy—albeit in minute quantities—from common or garden rocks . . .

Unquestionably a highly gifted and unusual man, Brown died in relative obscurity in 1983.

In trying to draw lessons from his story, lessons that might perhaps help explain the sudden outpouring of interest in antigravity by America's leading aerospace designers in the late 1950s, I found myself trying to put the pieces of the puzzle together. The problem was, however I went about it, they wouldn't form into any recognizable picture.

If the Navy had developed Brown's experiments into a fully fledged antigravity program, why had its premier research arm, the ONR, gone out of its way to dismiss them? And if this was an elaborate ruse to throw others off the scent—including its old rival the U.S. Air Force—why did Brown continue in his work, eventually taking it to another country? If electrogravitics was classified, this would have handed it on a plate to another nation, which was madness.

There was, conceivably, a chance that Brown's work had been hijacked by the U.S. military without his knowledge at the end of World War Two, but this too seemed unlikely. Given Brown's wartime clearances, it would have been simpler to have sworn him to secrecy after the Hawaii experiments, had the Navy been that impressed with them.

There was another, remote possibility—that Brown's work had been rejected by the military, not because it was hokey or crazy, but because its principles were already known to them—and, perhaps, therefore already the subject of advanced development activity. Had this been the case, it might well have explained why, a few years later, Bell, Convair, Martin and so many other companies—equally ignorant of this activity—aired their views on antigravity unchecked for a number of months, as recorded in the Interavia article, until someone, somewhere ordered them to silence.

As I kicked this notion around, I found sympathy for it from an unlikely source.

In the appendix section of a compendium of UFO sightings, I found a secret memorandum dated September 23,1947, from Lieutenant General Nathan Twining, head of the U.S. Army Air Forces' Air Materiel Command (AMC), to Brigadier General George Schulgen, a senior USAAF staff officer in Washington.

The memorandum had been declassified and released into the public domain only in the late 1970s. I'd found it during another late-night trawl of my burgeoning archive, a cup of strong coffee in my hand to keep me awake.

In the memo, Twining states in his "considered opinion" that the rash of UFO sightings in America during the summer of 1947—the first real wave, as it turned out—had been "something real and not visionary or fictitious."

He continued: "There are objects . . . approximating the shape of a disc, of such appreciable size as to appear to be as large as a man-made aircraft." These discs exhibited a number of common characteristics, amongst them a metallic or light-reflecting surface, an absence of any jet trail and no propulsion sound.

In addition, they were capable of "extreme rates of climb, maneuverability (particularly in roll), and action which must be considered evasive when sighted."

For an Air Force officer—a senior one, even—to admit to the reality of UFOs was quite an admission, but it was not unique. Other then-classified memos from other USAAF officers of the day show them to have been similarly perplexed by the disc sightings phenomenon across America from mid-1947 onward.

UFO researchers had seized on these documents as evidence that the USAAF (and from 1947 its successor, the USAF) recognized the reality of UFOs while officially pooh-poohing them—a blanket denial that remains policy to this day.

My attention, however, had been drawn to something quite else.

As an aerospace analyst, and in light of the Brown research, I found the key part of Twining's memo in what followed. UFO researchers had concentrated entirely on the main thrust of the memo: Twining's acknowledgment of the reality of UFOs.

The part that interested me, the postscript, added almost as an afterthought, had been totally overlooked. It so absorbed me that I never noticed the pencil on which I set down my cup of lukewarm coffee. It tipped over and the drink spilled, spreading across the open pages like ink on a blotter. I swore, mopped it up as best I could and returned to the text. The stain, as poor luck would have it, had covered the paragraph I was interested in, making the task of rereading it a painfully slow affair. I uttered the words aloud, enunciating them slowly so I knew I had read it right.

"It is possible," Twining wrote, "within the present U.S. knowledge—provided extensive detailed development is undertaken—to construct a piloted aircraft which has the general description of the object above which would be capable of an approximate range of 7,000 miles at subsonic speeds."

As head of Air Materiel Command, the branch of the USAAF that assumed responsibility for all USAAF aircraft development, Twining—who would have written the memo under the best advice from his subordinates—should have known what he was talking about. The problem was that 50 years this side of Twining's memo, at the end of the 20th century, I still knew of no combat aircraft capable of the performance characteristics Twining had elucidated. Even the Lockheed

NND 760168
OKS 5-4-75
~~SECRET~~

SAVE

HEADQUARTERS
AIR MATERIEL COMMAND

IN REPLY ADDRESS BOTH COMMUNICATION AND ENVELOPE TO COMMANDING GENERAL, AIR MATERIEL COMMAND, ATTENTION FOLLOWING OFFICE SYMBOL:

TSDIN

TSDIN/HMM/1g/6-4100
WRIGHT FIELD, DAYTON, OHIO

SEP 23 1947

SUBJECT: AMC Opinion Concerning "Flying Discs"

TO: Commanding General
Army Air Forces
Washington 25, D. C.
ATTENTION: Brig. General George Schulgen
AC/AS-2

1. As requested by AC/AS-2 there is presented below the considered opinion of this Command concerning the so-called "Flying Discs". This opinion is based on interrogation report data furnished by AC/AS-2 and preliminary studies by personnel of T-2 and Aircraft Laboratory, Engineering Division T-3. This opinion was arrived at in a conference between personnel from the Air Institute of Technology, Intelligence T-2, Office, Chief of Engineering Division, and the Aircraft, Power Plant and Propeller Laboratories of Engineering Division T-3.

2. It is the opinion that:

a. The phenomenon reported is something real and not visionary or fictitious.

b. There are objects probably approximating the shape of a disc, of such appreciable size as to appear to be as large as man-made aircraft.

c. There is a possibility that some of the incidents may be caused by natural phenomena, such as meteors.

d. The reported operating characteristics such as extreme rates of climb, maneuverability (particularly in roll), and action which must be considered evasive when sighted or contacted by friendly aircraft and radar, lend belief to the possibility that some of the objects are controlled either manually, automatically or remotely.

e. The apparent common description of the objects is as follows:-

(1) Metallic or light reflecting surface.

SECRET U-39552
~~SECRET~~

Basic Ltr fr CG, AMC, WF to CG, AAF, Wash. D. C. subj "AMC Opinion Concerning "Flying Discs".

(2) Absence of trail, except in a few instances when the object apparently was operating under high performance conditions.

(3) Circular or elliptical in shape, flat on bottom and domed on top.

(4) Several reports of well kept formation flights varying from three to nine objects.

(5) Normally no associated sound, except in three instances a substantial rumbling roar was noted.

(6) Level flight speeds normally above 300 knots are estimated.

f. It is possible within the present U. S. knowledge — provided extensive detailed development is undertaken — to construct a piloted aircraft which has the general description of the object in subparagraph (e) above which would be capable of an approximate range of 7000 miles at subsonic speeds.

g. Any developments in this country along the lines indicated would be extremely expensive, time consuming and at the considerable expense of current projects and therefore, if directed, should be set up independently of existing projects.

h. Due consideration must be given the following:-

(1) The possibility that these objects are of domestic origin - the product of some high security project not known to AC/AS-2 or this Command.

(2) The lack of physical evidence in the shape of crash recovered exhibits which would undeniably prove the existence of these objects.

U-2 spyplane (which first flew in 1955, but is still in service), a single-engined aircraft intended for ultra-long endurance missions (and hardly, therefore, a maneuvering type like the discs reported to Twining), had a maximum unrefueled range in excess of 3,000 miles—3,500, perhaps, on a good day.

And, needless to say, no one had ever owned up to building a flying saucer.

To construct the "aircraft" that Twining had in mind, he told General Schulgen: "Any developments in this country along the lines indicated would be extremely expensive, time-consuming and at the considerable expense of other projects and therefore, if directed, should be set up independently of existing projects."

Placing such a project outside the mainstream of aerospace science brought to mind the effort that had resulted in the development of the first atomic bomb. In 1956, George Trimble had also cited the Manhattan Project as the inspiration for his proposed antigravity program. Brown, too, had offered a highly unusual development model for Winterhaven, his Mach 3 antigravity program, one that only peripherally involved the U.S. aerospace industry.

I tried to keep my mind on the facts. The essential point of Twining's memo was that the development of an aircraft exhibiting the characteristics of the saucers that people were seeing in 1947 was "within the present U.S. knowledge," but that the craft themselves were nothing to do with the USAAF. Then whose were they?

Twining himself offered two possibilities. First, that they were of "domestic origin—the product of some high security project not known to AC/AS-2 (air force technical intelligence) or this Command." And second, "that some foreign nation has a form of propulsion, possibly nuclear, which is outside of our domestic knowledge."

The first part I actually found a little scary. Twining was entertaining the possibility that these craft had been developed and fielded by another branch of the U.S. armed forces—the Navy, perhaps—without the knowledge of the USAAF.

The second explanation was, at least, a little more conventional. The discs, Twining offered, were the result of another country's secret development effort.

I had been sucked into a story that seemed to have had its origins in 1956. Reluctantly, I now had to concede that if I was to do this thing any justice at all, I needed to cast the net back even further.

Chapter 4

History doesn't relate the mood of the crewmembers of the Northrop P-61 Black Widow patrolling the sky above the Rhineland that night, but the available clues suggest that they were none too happy. A night-fighter crew was about as close-knit a unit as you could find among the frontline squadrons ranged against Germany in late 1944. Success—their very survival when it came down to it—depended on a high level of trust, intense training, the reliability of a piece of hardware then still in its infancy—radar—and undiluted concentration.

The last thing U.S. Army Air Forces Lieutenant Ed Schlueter would have needed that night was a passenger. Worse, Ringwald wasn't even aircrew, but an intelligence officer.

Lieutenant Fred Ringwald was sitting behind and above Schlueter, the P-61's pilot, in the position normally occupied by the gunner. Schlueter's unit, the 415th Night Fighter Squadron of the U.S. 9th Army Air Force, had recently upgraded from their British-made Bristol Beaufighters to the Black Widow. They had also just transferred from the Italian theater of operations to England and from there across the Channel, deploying eastward in short hops across northwest France as the Allies pushed the Nazis toward the Rhine and back into Germany itself.

Schlueter flew his aircraft south along the Rhine, looking for "trade." The Black Widow was a heavy fighter; bigger than the Beaufighter and considerably more menacing in appearance. While its primary targets were the German night fighters sent up to intercept British bomber streams heading to and from Germany, there was always the chance, provided Schlueter was sharp-eyed enough, of hitting a Nazi train or a vehicle convoy, especially as the Germans were moving men and materiel under cover of darkness due to the Allies' overwhelming daytime air superiority. This had been pretty much indisputable since the D-Day landings five months earlier.

But night strafing operations brought their own hazards. Over the uncertain territory of the Rhineland, sandwiched between the bluffs of the wide and winding river and the rugged uplands of the Black Forest, there was a better than even chance you could follow your own cannon-fire into the ground.

There was no official record as to why the intelligence officer Ringwald was along for the ride, but knowing something of the way in which spooks had a habit of ring-fencing intelligence from the people who needed it most, I had a feeling that Schlueter and his radar operator would have been left just as much in the dark.

In the black skies above the Rhineland, after a long period of routine activity, it was Ringwald who broke the silence.

"What the hell are those lights over there?" he asked over the RT.

"Probably stars," Schlueter said, concentrating on his instruments.

"I don't think so," Ringwald replied. "They're coming straight for us."

Now, Schlueter looked up and out of the cockpit. In the pitch-black of his surroundings, the formation of aircraft off his starboard wing stood out like a constellation of tiny brilliant suns. Instinctively, he twisted the control column, bringing the Black Widow's four cannon and four .50 cal machine guns into line with them. At the same time, he called ground radar.

The ground station was supposed to be Schlueter's eyes and ears at all times, but if each pulsating point of light represented the exhaust plumes of a German night fighter, there were anything up to ten aircraft closing on him and he hadn't heard a whisper out of them. Somebody had screwed up. Later, he would be angry. Now, he was simply frightened and confused. He urgently requested information.

"Negative," the reply came back. "There are no bogies in your sector. You're on your own."

Schlueter's radar operator, Lieutenant Don Meiers, who was crouched over the scope of the SCR540 airborne intercept (AI) radar in a well behind Ringwald, told him the same thing. The sky ahead of them was empty of any air activity.

But the lights were still there and they kept coming. Instead of running, Schlueter boosted the throttles and pointed the nose of the Black Widow at the lead aircraft of the formation.

As the twin air-cooled radiais powered up either side of him, the glow from his opponents' exhausts dimmed; and then they winked out. Puzzled and alarmed at having lost the contacts, and with no help from Meiers on the Black Widow's own radar, Schlueter held the aircraft steady and the crew braced themselves for the engagement.

Schlueter eased the night fighter into the blacked-out bowl of sky where he had last seen the contacts. He craned his neck for a glimpse of something—anything—that signaled the presence of another aircraft, jinking the plane left and right to check his blind spots.

Still nothing.

It was only when he started to execute a turn back to base that Ringwald told him the lights were back again.

Schlueter followed the line indicated by Ringwald and saw them a long way off. Impossibly far, in fact, but still within radar range. He called out to Meiers, but the radar operator was now having technical problems with his AI set.

Schlueter again prepared to engage the enemy, but the lights had already begun to glide away to the northeast, eventually retreating deep into the German lines and disappearing altogether.

Nobody said anything until shortly before the Black Widow landed. Although Schlueter and Meiers were agreed that the Germans must have been experimenting with some new kind of secret weapon, neither wanted to hazard a guess as to what this weapon might have been. There was nothing they knew of in their own inventory that approached the weird, darting performance characteristics of the aircraft they'd just seen.

Fearful they would become the target of unwelcome squadron humor—along predictable lines they were "losing it"—they decided not to report the incident. And Ringwald, the spook, went along with it.

Reports of this incident exist in a number of UFO books—books I'd not encountered before because to someone steeped in the dry reportage of nuts-and-bolts technical journalism, they'd never entered my orbit.

The incident showed that almost three years before Twining wrote his memo to General Schulgen unconventional aerial objects had appeared in German skies prior to their manifestation across the U.S.A. in 1947.

On odd days off work and at weekends, I'd begun trawling public archives for corroborating evidence of this sighting. What I found were details on the 415th Night Fighter Squadron and the aircraft Schlueter had flown at the time of the encounter; details that allowed me to fill in the gaps of the published account and to visualize the sense of bewilderment and fear that Schlueter and his crew would have experienced that night. But along the way, I discovered that Schlueter's sighting was far from unique. All that winter of 1944-45, Allied aircrew reported small, ball-shaped aircraft glowing orange, red and white over the territory of the Third Reich. While some attributed the lights to natural phenomena such as ball lightning or St. Elmo's fire, others could not dismiss the sightings so easily. The devices appeared to be able to home in on Allied aircraft as if guided to them remotely or by some built-in control system.

Bit by bit, the reports entered the realm of officialdom. In archives and on the Internet, I found dozens of them.

"At 0600, at 10,000 feet, two very bright lights climbed toward us from the ground," another pilot from the 415th told intelligence officers after an encounter on December 22, near Haguenau, close to where Schlueter, Meiers and Ringwald had been. "They leveled off and stayed on the tail of our plane. They were huge bright orange lights. They stayed there for two minutes. On my tail all the time. They were under perfect control. Then they turned away from us, and the fire seemed to go out."

Although their appearance was sporadic, aircrews increasingly reported the devices via the appropriate channels. They nicknamed them "foo-fighters," a bastardization of the French word "feu" for "fire" that had worked its way into a cartoon strip called Smokey Stover, the Foolish Foo Fighter which had first appeared in a Chicago newspaper several years earlier. Meiers, who was a resident of Chicago, appears to have been the first person to have coined the term.

The consensus was that foo-fighters were Nazi secret weapons of some kind, but mighty strange ones, since they did not open fire on Allied aircraft, nor did they explode on proximity to them. They simply appeared, tagged along for a while and then vanished.

Seemingly, the spooks couldn't provide any plausible explanation for what they were either, as the following account, by Major William Leet, a B-17 pilot attached to the U.S. 15th Air Force, indicated after a nighttime encounter with a foo-fighter—"a small amber disc"—that followed his bomber all the way from Klagenfurt, Austria, to the Adriatic Sea in December 1944. "The intelligence officer that debriefed us stated it was a new German fighter but could not explain why it did not fire at us or, if it was reporting our heading, altitude and airspeed, why we did not receive antiaircraft fire," he reported.

Most encounters were at night, but there were daylight sightings, too.

A B-17 pilot, Charles Odom, flying on a daylight raid into Germany, described them as being "clear, about the size of basketballs." They would approach to within 300 feet, "then would seem to become magnetized to our formation and fly alongside. After a while, they would peel off like a plane and leave."

A P-47 fighter pilot also reported seeing a "gold-colored ball with a metallic finish" west of Neustadt in broad daylight, while another saw a "three to five feet diameter phosphorescent golden sphere" in the same area.

In 1992, researchers digging into the foo-fighter mystery uncovered a wealth of buried reports within the U.S. National Archives at College Park, Maryland. What was intriguing was that almost all of them had been filed by pilots and crewmembers of the 415th Night Fighter Squadron. Unlike the incident involving lieutenants Schlueter, Meiers and Ringwald (whose experience was relayed after the war by a former war correspondent), the 15 "mission reports" of mysterious intercepts, many of which occurred in a triangular sector of the Rhineland bordered by an imaginary line linking Frankfurt-am-Main to the north, Metz to the west and Strasbourg to the south, could be examined in their original format; logged in the dispassionate shorthand of the intelligence officers who originally noted them down.

"December 22-23, 1944—Mission 1, 1705-1850. Put on bogie by Blunder at 1750 hours, had AI contact 4 miles range at 0^7372. Overshot and could not pick up contact again. AI went out and weather started closing in so returned to base. Observed two lights, one of which seemed to be going on and off at 0^2422."

And another:

"February 13-14, 1945—Mission 2,1800-2000. About 1910, between Rastatt and Bishwilier, encountered lights at 3,000 feet, two sets of them, turned into them, one set went out and the other went straight up 2-3,000 feet, then went out. Turned back to base and looked back and saw lights in their original position again."

The reports made it clear that the sightings covered a period between September 1944 and April 1945.

September. Two, maybe three months before Schlueter's and Meiers' own encounter.

Maybe, I thought, that tied up one little loose end.

When the spook, Ringwald, had been riding with them that night he must have been looking for something he already knew to be there.

So what did we have here?

Ostensibly, these objects—they could hardly be described as "aircraft"—exhibited characteristics similar to T.T. Brown's flying discs. Their historical interest lay in the fact that their "existence," if you could call it that, had been logged by observers with impeccable credentials more than three years before the first rash of flying saucer sightings in the United States. True, it was wartime and things got misidentified. But with the foo-fighters there was none of the hysteria that accompanied the U.S.-based sightings of 1947, which tended to make the testimony, if anything, more objective and believable. These people, many of them hardened by years of combat experience, felt they were encountering something new and dangerous in German skies. And the year 1944 seemed to be key.

Their experiences echoed what USAAF General Twining had told General Schulgen in his secret memo of September 1947. That "aircraft" making no apparent sound, with metallic or light-reflecting surfaces, exhibiting extreme rates of climb and maneuverability, "were within the present U.S. knowledge."

What did that mean exactly?

I didn't know, but somehow I felt the wording was key.

Over the next few months, life at JDW went on pretty much as it had done since I'd joined the magazine in the mid-'80s; a routine made up of press conferences, air shows, defense exhibitions and weekly deadlines. But as I maintained a close watch on developments that were shaping the defense and security climate of the post-Cold War world, I found my mind on other things. Things I kept to myself.

Had the Germans developed a totally new form of propulsion, blended it with a radically different kind of air vehicle, and deployed it in the form of some new and secret weapon system in the latter stages of the war? I had to juggle this possibility with the fact that T.T. Brown had postulated the basis of an antigravity propulsion system as far back as the 1920s.

I decided to discover whether any of this wartime sightings data was reflected in work the Germans had been doing in their research facilities and factories.

In the late 1950s, a book written by a German who had served as the commanding officer of a German Army technical unit in the Second World War, Major Rudolf Lusar, went on to become an unlikely best-seller in Britain and the United States.

The book was called German Secret Weapons of World War II.

Seeking clues to the foo-fighter mystery, I discovered a copy in the reading room of the Imperial War Museum. In it, Lusar described in meticulous detail, in language that often made the depths of his bitterness clear, the technical achievements of "a small, industrious and honest nation which lost the war."

Secret Weapons made somber reading. Although German technical achievements were visible in developments such as the V-l flying bomb, a direct forerunner of the modern-day cruise missile, and the V-2 ballistic missile, it was the vast extent of Germany's underpinning technology base, as revealed by Lusar, which showed just how far ahead of the Allies the Nazis had been in certain key areas.

Jet engines, rocket engines, infrared and thermal-imaging systems, proximity fuses, missile guidance seekers . . . technologies that are integral to most modern aircraft and airborne weapon systems were all listed and described. In the late 1950s, when Lusar's book first appeared, these technologies were still in their infancy in Britain and America.

Yet the Germans had been working on them a decade and a half earlier.

But there was another side to the book, one which was so sensational that immediately on its appearance it had set alarm bells ringing in Washington.

This side of the book related to so-called German "wonder weapons" beyond the V-l and V-2.

One of these was the Fleissiges Lieschen, or "Busy Lizzie," a 150 m-long tube assembly of non-alloyed cast steel with chambers leading off it that lent it the appearance of a giant millipede. It was designed to fire 150 mm projectiles over distances of 170 km, more than enough to hit most British cities from sites deep within France. It never went into service, but 45 years after the war the components of an almost identical weapon, the "supergun," were intercepted by British customs officials on their way to Iraq.

Other esoteric developments detailed by Lusar showed that the Germans had been working on technologies for bringing down Allied aircraft with sound waves, air vortices, intensely focused beams of light and jets of compressed air.

In 1958, the U.S. Air Force commissioned a "special studies group" within Air Force Intelligence headed by an Austrian-born technical consultant called Dr. Stefan Possony to carry out a detailed appraisal of Lusar's book. The research effort was branded "secret" and has only recently come to light. I found it during a long, hard night's trawl in the basement when it popped out of cyberspace after an unusual combination of word commands fed through a high-power search engine.

A section in Lusar's book was devoted to "flying saucers" which he asserted, in no uncertain terms, were the product of German wartime inventors. "Experts and collaborators in this work confirm that the first projects, called 'flying discs,' were undertaken in 1941," Lusar wrote. He even went on to name the key individuals involved. These were "the German experts Schriever, Habermohl and Miethe, and the Italian Bellonzo."

Lusar described the craft in some detail. There were two principal centers of disc development: one, headed by Miethe in the vicinity of the Lower Silesian city of Breslau in modern-day Poland; the other centered on Prague in Czechoslovakia, then also an integral part of the Reich. The Miethe disc was described as a discus-shaped "plate" of 42 m diameter, fitted with "adjustable" jet engines. Shortly before the plant where the craft was being built was overrun by the Russians, the retreating Germans blew it up, destroying the disc inside. However, many of the "experts" who had worked on the project were captured and taken back to Siberia, where work on them "is being successfully continued," Lusar reported.

In the paranoid U.S. security climate of the late 1950s, it was this aspect of the account that had led to the commissioning of Possony's special intelligence report.

According to Lusar, the other disc, developed by Schriever and Habermohl, did achieve flightworthy status before the end of the war—on February 14, at a facility just outside Prague. "Within three minutes they climbed to an altitude of 12,400 m and reached a speed of 2000 km/h in horizontal flight," the author related.

At a time when the most advanced interceptors of the day (the late 1950s) struggled to achieve such velocities, this was an outrageous claim, but then it didn't have to be taken wholly at face value to contain an element of truth.

Having covered the Stealth Fighter story in the mid-1980s, when the aircraft was still deeply secret and witnesses were reporting things they couldn't square with any known aircraft development of the day, I trusted the old maxim about smoke and fire.

And in this assumption, I had an ally in Dr. Possony. Why else had he been tasked by the U.S. Air Force with writing a classified critique of Lusar's claims? Why else, according to one source I spoke to about him, a researcher by the name of Joel Carpenter who had devoted considerable time to studying Lusar and Possony, had the good doctor shredded his conclusions on the subject?

So, alongside wartime pilots' reports of flying objects that defied their understanding of aircraft performance were accounts of Germans having worked on projects that had no engineering counterpart, even within present-day aerospace knowledge. In Lusar's book were names, dates and places—crude data, admittedly, but usable nonetheless as jumping-off points for a more rigorous search. And though Lusar's claims didn't point directly to evidence of antigravity propulsion technology, in his discussion of another taboo technology area in scientific circles, the flying saucer, he had outlined a pathway to an altogether different kind of aerospace platform.

Just as T.T. Brown had done in the 1920s—and Trimble had in 1956.

The task seemed so simple. Make the link between Germany and the flying saucer and here was an opportunity to solve not only the antigravity propulsion riddle, but, in the process, perhaps, one of the most baffling mysteries of the 20th century: the origins of the UFO. If machines like those in General Twining's memo were "within the present U.S. knowledge," no wonder Trimble and his colleagues had so quickly fallen silent on the subject of a new and exotic propulsion source.

The flying disc must have exhibited performance so in advance of its time that it had been super-classified, then hidden in plain sight—behind the UFO myth—for the best part of 60 years.

Perhaps, too, it explained why Trimble had sounded like he'd had the fear of God put in him when he had been approached by Lockheed's PR machine on my behalf. The spooks would have made it abundantly clear there would be no statute of limitations on this particular secret. That you never talked about it. Ever.

Across multiple satellite relays, I heard the anguished shrieks of his three-month-old, the background clatter of his older children as they ran wild in the tiny apartment and finally relief in Lawrence Cross' voice as he realized it was me; a moment's respite in a whirl of copy deadlines, late-night feeds and trips to theme parks.

The baby's crying faded into the static as Cross took the handset into another room.

I thanked him for the tip about LaViolette and Valone, as a result of which I had pieced together the essential elements of T.T. Brown's life and work. Without elaborating on how I'd arrived there, I asked him what he knew about the Germans' purported development of flying saucers in World War Two.

"Oh Jesus," Cross said, and I formed a mental picture of him rubbing his eyes and reaching for a cigarette, "where do I begin?"

I prompted him. One minute the Nazis were tinkering with this technology, the next people were reporting sightings of these objects, first in Gemany, then in America . . . ?

"It's not as simple as that," Cross said.

"Come on, Lawrence. A book called German Secret Weapons of World War II, by Rudolf Lusar details names, dates and places. Has anyone ever dug into this stuff? Have you? The story must be fit to bust wide open."

"It's been around for decades," he said, "long enough to have been given a name."

"What do you mean?"

"In the trade, we call it 'the Legend.' It looks so straightforward, doesn't it? A story with a solid trail. But it's not like that at all. When you get into this stuff the trail goes everywhere and nowhere. The people who really did exist are long dead and others probably never existed at all. I know. I've been there and I've looked for them. So have dozens of other investigators. The detail is fantastic, but it's all uncorroborated. By that I mean there isn't a shred of evidence in any archive—no official word, no plans, nothing—that any of these projects ever existed."

"Have you got anything on it?"

He laughed and it caught in his throat. Cross smoked for the entire journalistic profession. He hacked the cough into the room, away from the receiver.

"Sure. How much time have you got? I'll email it to you. There's another book you should get ahold of. It's by an Italian. Guy by the name of Vesco—Renato Vesco. The book's called Intercept—But Don't Shoot. There's an English translation. I think it was first published in the late 1960s. Vesco's well up there, right in the heart of the Legend. Maybe you should try and track him down—that is, if he really existed."

I said nothing. Cross continued.

"Take nothing at face value and you're off to a better start than me. Lusty was real enough, but that's all I know. Everything else is up for grabs."

I thought I must have heard him wrong. "Lusty? Did you say, Lusty?"

"It stands for Luftwaffe Secret Technology. The U.S. Army Air Forces' official file on the state of the German Air Force's secret weapons work at the end of the war. The Air Force Historical Research Agency has a copy in its archives at Maxwell Air Force Base. It's raw data. That is to say, it's never been processed by anyone, so it's uncorrupted and verifiable, but I have no idea what's in it. In all these years, doing what we do, I've never had an excuse to go there. Maybe you do."

"Where is Maxwell Air Force Base?"

"It's in Alabama. Where the skies are so blue. A distant memory for you, I guess."

I thanked him, hung up and knew that I wouldn't be tapping Cross for any more advice. He'd made it abundantly clear, more in tone than anything else, that for him this was the end of the road.

I thought about the months ahead. I had no legitimate business in the States except for a trip to Washington to cover an Air Force symposium—and that wasn't until later in the year. Stretching the trip to include a visit down to Alabama was simply out of the question.

I called the Air Force Historical Research Agency at Maxwell Air Force Base to see if I could get a copy of Lusty sent to me. In theory I could, but the files were held on a number of microfilm reels and, I was told, it could take months, perhaps years, for the release forms to plow through the system and for the report to reach me. Not only that, but the Lusty files were old and corrupted, making repros difficult. The best, probably only way to view them, the administrator there told me, was in situ.

I put the phone down, kneaded my eyes and thought about smoking a cigarette again; something I hadn't done in years.

I had just hit another pluperfect dead end.

Chapter 5

Flugkapitän Rudolf Schriever, one of the four saucer engineers cited in Lusar's book, began talking to the West German media in 1950 about a truly fantastic flying machine he had worked on for the Nazis—one that would have changed the course of the war had it gone into full-scale production. It stemmed from work that he had allegedly undertaken for the Heinkel Aircraft Company at Marienehe, near Rostock on the Baltic coast.

Schriever was one of the four "scientists" mentioned in Lusar's book as having worked on the Nazi flying discs. He was also, I found out through the massively detailed file that my former journalistic colleague Cross sent me via email, central to the Legend.

Though he started out as a pilot in the Luftwaffe, Schriever appeared to have developed some highly advanced ideas about aircraft that could take off and land vertically and it was in this capacity, after he had been drafted to Heinkel's design section, that he soon came to the attention of company chairman Professor Ernst Heinkel, who in early 1940 encouraged him to construct a small flying prototype.

So far so good. Though best-known for its lumbering He 111, the Luftwaffe's mainstay bomber during the Blitz against London in 1940 and for much of the rest of the war, Heinkel was one of the most pioneering and innovative aircraft companies within Germany at the time.

Whatever the Legend said, this much was fact.

In 1936, Ernst Heinkel began funding experiments that three years later would lead to Germany's successful construction of the world's first jet-powered aircraft, despite the fact that it was the British designer, Frank Whittle, who had first invented and patented the concept. The tiny, one-off Heinkel He 178 first flew on August 27, 1939, five days before the German Army marched into Poland. Eighteen months later, Heinkel would again eclipse all other aircraft companies by flying the world's first jet-powered fighter, the He 280. If anyone was to develop something as radical as Schriever's idea, therefore, Heinkel was the company to do it.

The Legend then takes over.

In the spring of 1941, Schriever's blueprints were being used to construct a "proof-of-concept" model in a "garage" away from prying eyes. Officially known as the VI (V for "Versuchs" or "experimental version 1"), informally it was referred to as the "Flying Top." It was probably no more than two or three feet in diameter and powered by an electric motor or a small two-stroke engine. It is not known where this garage was, but within the sprawling complex of buildings at Marienehe, set in three square kilometers of the Mecklenburg State Park, there was ample room for Schriever's esoteric little engineering project to be hidden from view. Furthermore, it fitted into the Heinkel way of doing things. During the development of the world's first turbojet, Ernst Heikel had installed Dr. Hans-Joachim Pabst von Ohain, a gifted graduate of the University of Göttingen, in the same kind of environment—a converted garage at the university—before transferring the fruits of von Ohain's labors, the revolutionary HeS 3A turbojet, to a secure facility within the Marienehe site.

By June 1942, Schriever's Flying Top had been test-flown and the results deemed sufficiently interesting to secure top secret funding from the RLM, the Reichsluftfahrtministerium or State Air Ministry.

With RLM funding, the intention was to construct a full-scale piloted version capable of controlled vertical takeoff and landing. Construction of this full-size version, the V2, began at Marienehe in early 1943. The V2, which was known as the "Flugkreisel" or "Flightwheel," had a diameter of approximately 25 feet, its power generated by one or perhaps two Heinkel-Hirth jet engines, depending on which version of the Legend you want to believe. The V2 supposedly flew with Schriever at the controls, but as a piece of technology it was deemed to be heavily overengineered and was quickly scrapped. As a proof-of-concept vehicle, though, it seems to have served its purpose, because shortly afterward, Schriever and his team relocated to Czechoslovakia where they set about constructing a larger and altogether more sophisticated prototype known as the V3.

With the Allied aerial bombing campaign now at its height, their activities were dispersed around the Prague area to minimize the exposure to the relentless air attacks, by now penetrating deep into the Reich. But the bulk of the team's work was centered on a restricted area of a satellite facility outside Prague belonging to the Munich-based Bayerische Motorenwerke engine company, better known today as BMW. Despite the existence of Heinkel's own jet engines, the real cutting edge of German gas-turbine research was centered on BMW and in particular on its Bramo division, located at Spandau in Berlin. Bramo, the Brandenburgische Motorenwerke, had been bought by BMW from Siemens in 1939. By the middle of the war, BMW-Bramo had 5,000 staff working full-time on gas-turbine research alone—a discipline then barely a decade old—and was ultimately responsible for the BMW 003 jet engine, the best turbojet of the day, which powered the Me 262, the world's first operational jet fighter, and the Ar 234, the Luftwaffe's advanced jet-propelled reconnaissance-bomber, another aircraft far ahead of its time.

It was from Spandau, supposedly, that Klaus Habermohl, the second disc engineer mentioned by Lusar, was recruited to the Schriever team. Habermohl's job in Prague was to integrate the disc with a new and radical form of power plant called the radial-flow gas-turbine, or RFGT. Unlike Brown's electrogravitic motor, the RFGT was, at least, recognizable technology by modern standards, if extraordinary. It was essentially a jet engine. However, unlike a regular jet power plant, with its compressors, combustion chambers and turbines mounted one behind the other in what was basically a big tube, the RFGT formed part of the airframe itself, with the whirling turbomachinery rotating around the aircraft's centrally mounted cockpit. As such, "aircraft" did not adequately describe what the machine actually looked like. There was only one configuration to which an RFGT could possibly be adapted: that of a flying disc or saucer.

By the autumn of 1944, the V3 is said to have been completed. With German airfields under constant attack from Allied daylight bombing, the prospect of a fighter or bomber that could take off and land vertically from any dispersed site would have been exactly in line with Luftwaffe requirements. However, due to "an administrative change," the V3 program was abandoned in favor of a further prototype, the V7, propulsion coming from another experimental RFGT from BMW-Bramo. The V7 supposedly had a diameter of 60—70 feet and a crew of two or three.

Applying a crude rule of thumb, based on a rough estimate of the disc's weight, Habermohl's ingenious RFGT would have had to have generated around 10-15,000 pounds of thrust to have made the design of the disc in any way viable. This was the machine that supposedly test-flew on February 14 with Schriever and Habermohl at the controls, achieving 2,000 km/h in level flight.

The fastest aircraft of the day, the little rocket-powered Me 163, struggled to attain half this speed.

Lusar's third and last German saucer scientist, Dr. Richard Miethe, was supposedly working on another disc project at a subterranean facility near Breslau under the auspices of an altogether separate contract. Toward the end of the war, the legend stated that Miethe was drafted from his activities in Breslau to assist with the Schriever/Habermohl disc in Prague, an indication, perhaps, that the Schriever/Habermohl disc was the better bet in a procurement environment that was by now desperately short of money, skilled labor and raw materials. This streamlining coincided with the "administrative change" that had led to the abandonment of Schriever's V3 design for the altogether more viable V7.

The V7, then, seems to have been the result of a three-way endeavor, although there were reports that a Miethe disc—based, perhaps, on the project he abandoned at Breslau—was captured by the Russians, along with a number of engineers and scientists, when they drove the Germans out of Poland.

As for the V7, some say it, too, was acquired by the Russians when they took Prague; others that it was blown up by the Waffen-SS on May 9, 1945, the day hostilities in Europe ended. The Legend had it both ways.

The detail in the Schriever/Habermohl/Miethe legend was rich and impressive. Here were names, dates and places—minutiae even, that seemed to corroborate everything Rudolf Lusar had written down. The trouble was, the data was based heavily on the say-so of Schriever, who was long since dead; the rest had magically appeared out of thin air, just as Cross had said. No one knew where the detail emerged from. Over the years it had been passed down from one researcher to the next, with no apparent attribution. When I approached BMW's archivists, for example, they denied that there had been any BMW factory near Prague "engaged in advanced aircraft projects including design or advanced research during World War II."

I began to see what Cross meant. Cross and I were used to sourcing every piece of information we ever came by. This stuff was unverifiable. What I needed was hard, solid proof; and within the Schriever portion of the Legend there was nothing to hang a hat on, beyond the fact that the man himself had existed.

Unfortunately, the same could not be said of the other characters in the story. All attempts by researchers to trace Miethe and Habermohl had foundered, although there had been occasional "sightings" in the lore that had grown up around them.

Miethe is supposed to have escaped Czechoslovakia in early May and to have headed west, eventually making contact with U.S. technical intelligence teams operating inside Germany. Herded into a "pen" along with Wernher von Braun and his fellow rocket scientists, Miethe was said to have been taken to the United States, ending up at Wright Field, the USAAF's premier research and development center near Dayton, Ohio. If any of this actually happened, there is no trace of it.

Habermohl is said to have been captured by the Russians at the Letov factory, a German-administered aircraft plant outside Prague, and, after a period of detention, sent to work at a top secret Soviet aircraft design bureau east of Moscow.

Again, no one could say for sure whether he had even existed at all.

My research showed the Italian, Bellonzo, was real enough, except Lusar had misspelled his name. In 1950, Professor Giuseppe Belluzzo, a former industry minister in Mussolini's cabinet, started talking about disc-shaped "flying bombs" that he claimed to have worked on during the war and passed on to the Germans, who had subsequently developed them into working prototypes.

Belluzzo was also convinced that these weapons were the basis of the flying-saucer sightings that had gripped much of America for the best part of three years and that they were now under further development inside the Soviet Union. Beyond the fact that Belluzzo, like Schriever, was real, his claims also remain unverifiable. Interestingly, though, he started talking to the media just a few days before Schriever, leading some researchers to reason that Schriever, a man who like so many other Germans in 1950 was struggling to make ends meet, had invented his entire story.

In fact, the Legend lacked a single item of corroborating data. There was nothing in any archive or museum, no photograph, no indisputable piece of testimony, to say that any of it was true.

There were splits and schisms in the Legend, just as there are orthodox and unorthodox branches within major religions. The other strand to the myth that I had to pay attention to was Vesco's. I had managed to obtain a copy of his book, Intercept—But Don't Shoot (published 1971), and scrutinize it. What was beguiling about Vesco's account was the certainty with which he presented his case. Vesco, who was 22 years old when the war ended and said to have been well connected with technical experts within the Italian Air Force at the time he wrote Intercept, claimed that he pieced together his account of the top secret development effort behind the foo-fighter program from sources inside the Italian military and from Allied intelligence reports published after the war.

What also made Vesco's account worth more than a cursory glance was the fact that it "detailed" a completely different development effort from the Schriever/Lusar account. Vesco claimed that there were two kinds of foo-fighters. One was unpiloted and remotely controlled; in effect, a flying bomb designed to knock down enemy aircraft. The other was manned, but flew in anger only once before hostilities ended.

The unpiloted version was called the Feuerball (Fireball) and it blended a number of highly advanced technologies.

"In the autumn of 1944," Vesco wrote, "in Oberammergau in Bavaria, the OBF—an experimental center run by the Luftwaffe—had completed a series of researches into electrical apparatus capable of interfering with the operation of an engine up to a maximum distance of about a hundred feet by producing intense electromagnetic fields."

In parallel, a separate effort was under way by the Germans to produce a "proximity radio interference" device capable of jamming or spoofing Allied radio and radar systems. Put these two technologies into a small, circular, armored airframe "powered by a special turbojet engine, also flat and circular and more or less resembling the shell of a tortoise" and "a highly original flying machine was born."

Radio-controlled at the moment of takeoff, the machine was steered toward Allied bomber streams by a ground operator, whereupon it automatically latched onto their slipstreams, "attracted by their exhaust flames, and approached close enough without collision to wreck their radar gear."

And then came the detail. The Fireball was first constructed at an aircraft plant at Wiener Neustadt, south of Vienna, with the help of the Flugfunk Forschungsanstalt of Oberpfaffenhoffen (FFO), an aircraft electronics firm near Munich. Hermann Goering, Hitler's deputy, inspected progress on the weapon "a number of times," hoping that the principle of the Fireball could also be used to produce "an offensive weapon capable of revolutionizing the whole field of aerial warfare.

"The fiery halo around the perimeter—caused by a very rich fuel mixture—and the chemical additives that interrupted the flow of electricity [in Allied aircraft] by overionizing the atmosphere in the vicinity of the plane, generally around the wing tips or tail surfaces, subjected the H2S radar on the plane to the action of powerful electrostatic fields and electromagnetic impulses (the latter generated by large klystron radio tubes protected with anti-shock and anti-heat armor). Since a metal arc carrying an oscillating current of the proper frequency—equal, that is, to the frequency used by the radar station-can cancel the blips (return signals from the target), the Feuerball was almost undetectable by the most powerful American radar of the time, despite its nighttime visibility."

Once again, I pictured the desperation felt by Schlueter as his radar operator, Meiers, failed to register the orbs of light ahead of the Black Widow on the SCR540.

Was this what they had encountered that night, the Fireball?

To believe that it might have been, I had to accept that what we had here was a weapon system that was decades ahead of its time. Years before the deployment of the surface-to-air guided missile—sufficiently perfected to shoot down the CIA U-2 pilot Gary Powers over Russia only in 1960—and decades before radar-evading stealth technology would become a household word, the Vesco portion of the legend held that the Germans had developed a single weapon system that blended these and other exotic technologies. Not only that, but the Fireball was able to home in on its intended prey, the Americans' B-17 and B-24 bombers, via an automatic guidance system—one that tracked their exhaust plumes—a sensor so advanced that it was unheard of, even with the benefit of modern-day knowledge. Once close to the bombers, it could then either disrupt their electronics or stop their engines in flight with a gas that killed their ignition systems.

At a stroke, Vesco had assembled all the evidence he needed to explain the foo-fighter conundrum. He also threw in some eyewitness testimony. "One person who saw the first short test flights of the device, without its electrical gear," he wrote, "says that 'during the day it looked like a shining disc spinning on its axis and during the night it looked like a burning globe.' '

The trouble was, it sounded like science fiction.

When the Russians advanced into Austria, Vesco maintained, the Fireball production line was moved from Wiener Neustadt into underground facilities run by the Zeppelin Werke in the Schwarzwald—the same area of Rhineland and Black Forest where Schlueter, Ringwald and Meiers, and a host of other aircrew from the 415th Night Fighter Squadron, had first encountered the inexplicable.

Vesco went on to explain that the Feuerball had an "older brother," the Kugelblitz or "Ball Lightning Fighter," that was built and flight-tested—once—in the vicinity of Kahla, site of a huge underground weapons development complex in Thuringia, a region of mountainous uplands in the heart of Germany known as the Harz. If this "fact" also was a hoax, it was a clever one, since the Harz certainly had housed a number of underground Nazi weapons factories, among them the facility at Nordhausen, where Wernher von Braun's V-2 rockets had been produced.

Vesco was notoriously reclusive. Some researchers believed he'd never existed at all; lending credence to the supposition that Intercept really was just an elaborate hoax. But Vesco was real, all right. I managed to trace a group of Italian researchers who had been in contact with him up until his death in November 1999. According to them, Vesco didn't care whether people believed him or not.

"He was very correct," one of them told me over the phone, "so it's very hard to believe that he made it all up."

But where was the proof?

Vesco claimed that the evidence for Feuerball and Kugelblitz was to be found within obscure tracts of the British Intelligence Objectives Subcommittee (BIOS) reporting system and its successor, the U.S.-U.K.-administered Combined Intelligence Objectives Subcommittee (CIOS), published in the immediate aftermath of the war (a number of reports from which, however, are still withheld). BIOS and CIOS were the systems employed by the British and the Americans for assessing German high technology. But researchers had been through all the available CIOS and BIOS files with a fine-tooth comb and had found nothing that pointed to anything that described the Fireball or its "older brother" the Ball Lightning Fighter.

Vesco had stuck to his guns, never wavering from the conclusions he had espoused in his book: that the Germans had developed a truly revolutionary new form of air vehicle; that it was the British who had happened upon the technology at the end of the war and that they, together with Canadian scientists, had refined it in the frozen wastelands of British Columbia and Alberta.

Vehicles resulting from this endeavor, Vesco maintained, were responsible for the rash of U.S. flying-saucer sightings in 1947.

A familiar pattern was emerging and it wasn't helping my case. The more I looked, the more "evidence" I found that the Germans had been tinkering with technology that explained the foo-fighters sightings of that winter of 1944^5.

From Schriever in the 1950s to Vesco's testimony in the 60s—and others before, during and since—maybe a dozen Germans had come forward to say that they had worked on flying-saucer technology under the Nazis. And some, like Viktor Schauberger, were so very nearly believable.

Schauberger, whose story was contained in notes on the Legend sent to me by Lawrence Cross, was an Austrian who had supposedly invented a totally new form of propulsion based upon a principle called "implosion." No one I spoke to seemed entirely sure what implosion meant, but according to the stories that had grown up around this man, the implosion process was at the heart of a radical turbine that Schauberger had installed in a sub-scale flying disc sometime during the war. A test of this small flying vehicle, with its echoes of the Schriever Flying Top, had supposedly taken place and the results were said to have been highly impressive. In one account of the test, the craft had apparently risen toward the ceiling of the test facility "trailing a glow of ionization." This immediately elevated the report above the many others I had come across, for it signaled that, whatever was occurring within the implosion process, it had precious little to do with jet propulsion. If true, it could only have been an antigravity effect.

If true.

Though Schauberger was long dead, his son Walter was still alive when I telephoned him at his home in Austria in 1991. Talking through an interpreter, I asked Walter about his father's experiments and got a disconcerting answer. I had imagined that Viktor had attended some impressive German or Austrian technical institute; that he was a professor of physics at Vienna or Salzburg or, at the very least, an eminent aerospace engineer. But no. Walter Schauberger told me that his father had developed his radical ideas about energy and propulsion by observing what he had seen in Nature, the way rivers flowed and fish swam. His only professional training had been as a forester.

This was the trouble. While all of these stories were laced with detail, which immediately gave them a veneer of credibility, they were almost always let down either by corrupted data or a complete absence of it. In a decade of investigating the aerospace industry, I had never once come across a designer who did not have a set of initials after his name. A forester was simply absurd.

Had there been more to the Schauberger story, I would not have hesitated to make the trip to Austria. But as decisions went, this was an easy one. I was using my training to make value judgments all the time on the data that was gathering in my basement. You didn't need a degree in physics, though, to appreciate that whatever they had or hadn't been, foo-fighters would have had to have come from the minds of engineers—not from a man who'd spent his time among Alpine forests and streams.

It was for this reason that I gently declined Walter Schauberger's offer to visit his "biological-technical institute" in the Salzkammergut Mountains.

For any of the "evidence" about German flying saucers to be irrefutable, it had to emerge from official documentation. But Lawrence Cross and a number of other credible researchers I'd contacted on the subject had already been through the BIOS and CIOS reports and found nothing. And that should have been the end of it. Yet, I knew that if the Germans had developed a revolutionary air weapon, based perhaps on some radical form of propulsion technology, it was inconceivable that the CIOS or BIOS intelligence teams would have documented the discovery for the world to read about.

To go the extra mile, I realized I'd have to access the original intelligence data on which the BIOS and CIOS assessment teams, most of whom were technical types sat at desks in Brussels, Paris, London and Washington, had based their analyses. Here again, I knew there would be no smoking gun. Had intelligence units in the field come across anything meaningful, these reports, too, would have been sanitized. Anything as obvious as a full-blown air vehicle or a new form of propulsion system would not have escaped the censor's attention.

But to identify evidence of a new form of aerospace technology, particularly one as far-reaching as that described in the legend or by Vesco, I wasn't searching for the obvious, because the obvious would have been picked up by the censors.

As with any new piece of technology, developments came together as a series of systems and subsystems. There would have been prime contractors and subcontractors, some of them working in new scientific areas—areas that would have been on the very edge of the technical knowledge of the deskbound BIOS and CIOS assessors.

Between the chaos of the front line and the overstretched resources of the intelligence units tasked with assessing German hardware and documentation—which the victors had shipped out of Germany by the ton-load—there might still, I figured, be some fresh evidence; something useful that had been overlooked.

I started with the British, whose initial stab at organized technology plunder was vested in the hands of a ragtag private army—composed, bizarrely, of sailors and Royal Marine commandos. This outfit was the brainchild of a certain Commander Ian Fleming, who 15 years later would go on to create the Bond persona in the double-oh-seven novels. Bond's character, it appears, drew heavily on the exploits of 30 Assault Unit RN, which rode roughshod over the conventions of the day. Following the battle for Cherbourg, in which 30 AU RN had been tasked with capturing German naval headquarters, the marines liberally enjoyed the spoils of war. Their behavior was described as that of "merry courageous, amoral, loyal, lying toughs, hugely disinclined to take no for an answer from foe orfraulein"

As a result of their "martial exuberance," as one assessor wrote, 30 AU RN was reined in somewhat and renamed 30 Advanced Unit RN. It was also ordered to subordinate its activities to a new and much larger force of British tech-plunder units, known as "T-Forces." These would move forward with General Bernard Montgomery's 21st Army Group, principally in Monty's theater of operations, northwest Germany, but not exclusively so. Under the terms of the CIOS charter, with its Anglo-American task jointly to exploit German spoils of war, British T-Force teams would also be allowed to tag along with forward U.S. Army units in pursuit of their objectives.

These objectives were to locate and secure intact technical "targets" of interest; to preserve German high technology from "destruction, loot, robbery and, if necessary, counterattack," until the completion of their examination by teams of experts or until their removal. They were also to act as armed escorts in enemy territory for the "expert investigators" drawn from CIOS offices far behind the front lines. As a quid pro quo, U.S. technical teams could ride with forward British assault units. The eventual size of British T-Forces would grow to 5,000 personnel.

But from the reports generated by these units, now freely available in the U.K. Public Records Office, it was apparent that the British were desperately ill-prepared to make the most of the opportunity that lay before them.

Over the next two months, I spent every spare moment down at the Public Records Office. And when I wasn't in the Records Office, just down the road in Kew on the outskirts of London, I was gathering as much open-source reading material as I could on the Allies' systematic plunder of German high technology at the end of the war. One book, The Paperclip Conspiracy by Tom Bower, read like a manual on how to dismantle an entire nation's technology base. If America, Britain and their allies had applied the lessons of*Paperclip* to the Iraqi problem at the end of the Gulf War in 1991, the threat posed by Saddam Hussein's war machine would have been eradicated forever.

During the November 1944 to March 1945 planning stage of the T-Force operations, the problem facing British investigators was a fundamental lack of intelligence on what they were supposed to be looking for. A "black list" of technical targets was drawn up, the majority of them weapons-development and research centers put forward by CIOS.

But a general air of ignorance of the situation on the ground persisted, as a T-Force field commander later recorded. "It appeared that the sponsoring ministries knew little or nothing about the specific whereabouts and natures of their targets; and that investigators who would eventually come out would know even less."

If there was any sense at all that the British realized they were in a race against the other allies—the French and the Americans particularly—it came far too late. Roy Fedden, a senior and respected British aviation industrialist who flew into Germany to view the tech-plunder operation for himself, complained that his compatriots were being "lamentably slow" to take advantage of the information on offer. With many of the U.K. technical experts drawn from industry, part of the problem was a considerable reluctance on their part to accept that Germany could possibly have been as far ahead of British technology in certain pioneering areas—the jet engine, for example—as they evidently were.

There were British successes—the capture of the German navy's laboratories at Kiel, for example, where highly advanced German U-boats and torpedoes, propelled by an innovative peroxide-fueled engine, were being developed. There were also significant British finds at Krupp in Meppen, where advanced armor and artillery technology had been produced for the Wehrmacht.

But reading between the lines of the British-controlled tech-plunder operation, its disparate character was clearly a factor in its limited success. Without adequate direction from London, there was confusion as well as a palpable lack of urgency about the operation at the front. And in some cases—the activities of T-Forces of the 21st Army Group's Canadian First Army, for example, who were roaming between Germany and Holland, looking for targets—it was portrayed as being akin to a jaunty adventure.

Among the most prominent targets on First Army's T-list, according to records of its operations at the time, was the radio transmitter of Lord Haw-Haw, the British traitor and Nazi propagandist. "Two further wireless stations had been discovered on the (German) island of Borkum and another platoon was dispatched there as guard. That platoon was in the happy position of having 4,500 German marines to wait on them!"

It all seemed a very far cry from the exotic weaponry that Vesco had described in Intercept—But Don't Shoot.

In scanning the British documents, however, I'd found one big problem with Vesco's thesis that the British had discovered flying disc technology and removed it to Canada. By far the greater part of Germany's advanced aerospace development had taken place in Bavaria in southern Germany, a long way from the main thrust of British operations in the northwest of the country.

And while some British T-Force units had been integrated with American forward army operations in central and southern Germany, they were more often than not outwitted by the Americans, who time and again seemed to have had the resources to take what they wanted, much to the dismay of Roy Fedden.

"The Americans," he wrote, "have fine-combed the country, removing considerable quantities of drawings, technical records and actual equipment direct to the States."

This, I could see, was no mere happenstance. American tech-plunder activities were the result of the most carefully thought out strategy in the history of U.S. military operations, its orchestration planned at the highest levels.

In November 1944, the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff had established a Technical Industrial Intelligence Committee to seek out anything in Germany that might be useful to the postwar American economy. Nor did the Joint Chiefs' target list just comprise military objectives. One subcommittee had a staff of 380 specially trained civilians set up specifically to represent the interests of 17 U.S. companies. Special agents from the U.S. Field Intelligence Agencies (Technical) scoured Germany for vacuum tubes a tenth of the size of the most advanced U.S. devices, and condensers made out of zinc-coated paper, which were 40 percent smaller and 20 percent cheaper than U.S. condensers—and, instead of "blowing" like the U.S. vacuum tubes, were "self-healing"-in other words, they could repair themselves. Such innovation would later prove invaluable to the postwar U.S. electronics industry.

The teams were also on the lookout for German textile and medical advances—and found them by the ton-load. At the German chemical giant LG. Farbenindustrie, notorious for its role in the development of the gas chambers of the Holocaust, investigators found formulas for the production of exotic textiles, chemicals and plastics. One American dye authority was so overwhelmed by the discovery that he declared: "It includes the production know-how and the secret formulas for over 50,000 dyes. Many of them are faster and better than ours. Many are colors we were never able to make. The American dye industry will be advanced at least ten years." German biochemists had also found ways of pasteurizing milk using ultraviolet light and their medical scientists had discovered a way of producing synthetic blood plasma on a commercial scale.

Hundreds of thousands of German patents were simply removed and brought back to America.

No wonder the Brits were struggling. It was clear from these and other accounts that CIOS, the Anglo-U.S. reporting channel and assessment office for German high technology, was little more than a front. The real American tech-plunder operation had been organized long beforehand, under separate cover, in Washington.

A year after the war ended the U.S. Office of Technical Services (a body set up to ensure that German technology, where required, was spun rapidly into American industry) was reportedly sifting through "tens of thousands of tons" of documentation. This "mother lode" of material, according to one contemporary report, "very likely contained practically all the scientific, industrial and military secrets of Nazi Germany." Had exotic propulsion science been buried somewhere within this mountain of raw material, it would have been almost impossible to locate. But after the war, the mother lode was divided between the Library of Congress, the Department of Commerce and the technical archives at Wright Field. Most of the Wright Field material had come via Lusty, the postwar intelligence report on Luftwaffe technology that Lawrence Cross had told me about. This was the report that was stuck, frustratingly, in Alabama—nowhere near the Air Force symposium that I was due to hit in a quickie assignment to Washington later in the month.

I called the Air Force Historical Research Agency at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama again to see if the administrator there could recommend any other sources of information comparable to the Lusty report. Since I was going to be in the vicinity of the U.S. National Archives in Maryland, I wanted to be sure I wasn't missing out on anything.

"If you're gonna be in D.C. anyway," she told me, chewing slowly on the syllables, "you might want to check out the other copy of Lusty that's available at our sister site down by the Old Navy Yard, just across the river from Capitol Hill."

For a moment, I thought she was joking. This was the person who'd told me, in painstaking detail, that if I wanted to obtain a hard copy of Lusty from the archives of Maxwell Air Force Base it would take me months or even years; that due to the poor condition of the microfilm reels, the only viable way of accessing the information was by reading the reels in situ.

When I pointed this out, her answer was nothing if not honest.

"You never mentioned nothin' 'bout no trip to D.C.," she said.

The Office of Air Force History maintained an out-of-the-way archive in Washington, D.C., located at Boiling Air Force Base, next to the Old Navy Yard.

I was supposed to be in and out of Washington inside a couple of days. I stretched the schedule and bought myself another 24 hours.

If there were trace elements of a suppressed technology within the U.S. documents plundered from Nazi Germany, I figured they had to be buried in Lusty.

Chapter 6

It was still dark when I exchanged the warmth of the Holiday Inn for the damp chill of the predawn, heaved my bags into the back of the cab and hunkered down for the 30-minute ride across the river. I had around eight hours to sieve Lusty for evidence of a technology Cross maintained couldn't be substantiated.

The commuter traffic was jamming the bridges, the top of the Washington Monument scraping the overcast sky, as the taxi headed across the Frederick Douglass Memorial Bridge and into a part of the nation's capital that only makes the news when the body counts from the drive-by shootings top three or four.

By the time I reported to the guard at the main gate, the wind had got up, lifting sheets of spray from a choppy confluence of gray wave caps where the Potomac and Anacostia rivers meet off Greenleaf Point. The spray snaked in rivulets this way and that in front of us as the cabdriver navigated the maze of open streets looking for the address I'd been given. It took him 15 precious minutes to find it.

The archive was tucked away in a forgotten corner of Boiling Air Force Base, home of the Defense Intelligence Agency and the USAF's Office of Special Investigations. It wasn't the sort of place you'd want to stroll or take the view.

Boiling was a large cordoned-off military district sandwiched between the black waters of the Potomac and the badland housing projects of Congress Heights and Washington Highlands. It also bordered the grounds of St. Elizabeth's—a hospital for the criminally insane, since renamed—where John Hinckley served time for his assassination attempt on President Reagan.

The reading room in the tiny Office of Air Force History was low-lit and windowless. True to her word, the senior archivist had placed a cup of coffee next to the warmed-up microfilm reader opposite the farthest row of metal book stacks. There was a clock on the wall above the door to her office. It was a little after seven-thirty. The air-conditioning had not yet kicked in and my breath mingled as condensation with the steam rising from the cup.

The documents were contained on several reels of microfilm and, like the reels at the main repository in Alabama, they were in bad condition. My business schedule allowed for one shot at a read-through. My plane left at 6:15 that night.

To help me cut to it, the archivist had offered to open the office early and said I was welcome to turn up any time after seven. Coffee was on the house.

Time was already short when I slapped the first reel into the microfilm reader and got to work.

Lusty opened with a condensed history, the opening paragraph of which began:

"At a medieval inn near Thumersbach near Berchtesgaden [Hitler's mountaintop retreat in Bavaria], early in May 1945, the German General Air Staff patiently awaited the outcome of surrender negotiations taking place in the north. They had arrived by car and plane during the past weeks, when the fall of Berlin was imminent, and had kept in contact with Admiral Doenitz at Flensburg. Through the interception of one of these messages, their location, which had previously been unknown, was discovered. Within 24 hours, Lieutenant Colonel O'Brien and his small party, representing the Exploitation Division of the Directorate of Intelligence, USAFE (United States Air Forces in Europe), had arrived, located the party and conducted the first of a series of discussions with General Koller, who was then in command."

Colonel O'Brien's men were the advance guard of 200 officers chosen from HQ^Army Air Forces to oversee the USAAF tech-plunder operation and it was clear right from the start that they were in a race against time.

In the chaos of the collapsing Reich, many German scientists were dead, others had been captured by the Russians advancing from the east or the Americans, British and French in the west. Many were held in internment camps, but in a country brimming with former Reich slave-workers and displaced citizenry—almost all of whom had to be filtered by the Allies for Nazi party members and war criminals—it was hard to know who was who or where.

But the vast majority were still at their factories and laboratories when the advance units of the USAAF plunder operation screeched up in their jeeps and half-tracks. With no orders to stop working, they had carried on at their workbenches, even though the armed forces of the high commands that had commissioned their work had either capitulated or been wiped off the map.

Many documents and blueprints were missing. German project managers would tell U.S. investigators that they had destroyed them under orders, but the USAAF officers quickly learned to apply some psychology of their own: men and women who had devoted years of commitment to technologies they considered vastly superior to those of their enemies were incapable of such vandalism.

Most of the files existed, but had been hidden.

Germany had already been divided by the Allies into zones of occupation; and many of the most technologically interesting German facilities—the underground V-l and V-2 production sites in the Harz mountains, for example—were in the designated Russian sector.

Before the zones were locked and sealed the missing documents had to be located and brought under American control.

By a process of detective work and, where that failed, by persuasion and coercion of the German scientists and program managers, boxes of blueprints and notes were pinpointed, then recovered from the bottom of lakes, as well as caves, farms, crypts, hospitals and mines.

O'Brien's team hit pay dirt early: their sleuthing led them from Thumersbach to an air raid shelter covered with earth in the side of a mountain close to the Austrian border. There they found files belonging to the l Gruppe/6 Abteilung, the German Air Ministry's intelligence directorate. These detailed all the Luftwaffe's latest air weapons, from the Me 262 jet fighter and the Me 163 rocket fighter to radars, air-to-air missiles and guided bombs. It also showed that the blueprints had recently been smuggled out of Germany in U-boat shipments to Japan.

Reading through the signals transmitted by Lusty field team officers to their superiors, I was hit by the sheer scale of the operation and the pressures endured by those who took part in it.

On April 22, 1945, two and a half weeks before the guns in Europe fell silent, additional recruits were needed to process the data. "It is planned to expand the activities of air technical intelligence tenfold, securing the most highly qualified specialist personnel available to the Army Air Forces," Brigadier General George C. McDonald, head of USAAF Intelligence, wrote that day.

The caliber of the technological spoils was indicated by the arrival in-theater at the end ofthat month of a "special group of scientists" headed by Dr. Theodore von Karman, special consultant to the U.S. Army Air Forces' supreme command.

The hardware that awaited them was detailed on several pages of microfilmed documentation from McDonald's intelligence directorate. Among them were a jet-propelled helicopter "in fly able condition accompanied by a complete set of documents and detailed drawings"; the Lippisch P-16 tailless rocket-propelled research aircraft whose advanced construction indicated "possible operation at high Mach numbers in the vicinity of 1.85"; and the Horten Ho 229 twin-jet flying wing bomber.

Nothing comparable existed in the American inventory; or anywhere else, for that matter.

But by midday, I had still found nothing that indicated the merest presence of the machines elucidated within the Schriever/Vesco legend.

As more men and resources were plowed into Lusty, the search for high technology widened. The files detailed the growing number of shipments back to the U.S. "Hanau: 50 tons of documents ready for shipment. Munich: 30 tons of documents ready for shipment. Teisendorf: Approximately two tons of documents pertaining to flight-path studies of guided rocket missiles are on location ready for shipment..." From all over Germany, documentation was being gathered, marshaled and hauled back to the U.S.

But just when it seemed as if the USAAF mission was breaking the back of the task, new finds and new problems added to the logjam. The biggest and most unexpected of these related to the Nazis' underground facilities, whose scale and number had not been anticipated by the investigators, because Allied reconnaissance had failed to pick up anything but the vaguest hints that the Germans were putting their factories underground.

The underground facilities were of more than passing interest to me since they figured in the Legend as places where the Nazis had developed their antigravity technology.

From the message traffic that built up around the discovery of these facilities in the late summer of 1945, three or four months after the war in Europe ended, it was clear that the discovery of these underground facilities was diverting the Lusty investigators from their primary goal of plundering German technology.

On August 29, General McDonald sent USAAF headquarters in Europe a list of six underground factories that had been discovered and "excavated." All of them had been churning out aircraft components or other specialized equipment for the Luftwaffe until the very last day of the war.

According to McDonald, the facilities varied in size from 5 to 26 kilometers in length, according to measurements of their tunnels and galleries. The dimensions of the tunnels varied from 4 to 20 meters in width and 5 to 15 meters in height; the floor space from 25,000 to 130,000 square meters.

Seven weeks later, in mid-October, in a Preliminary Report on Underground Factories and Facilities in Germany and Austria, senior USAAF officers were told that the final tally showed "a considerably larger number of German underground factories than had hitherto been suspected."

In addition to Germany and Austria, the underground building program had been extended across France, Italy, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

"Although the Germans did not go underground on a large scale until March 1944, they managed to get approximately 143 underground factories into production by the last few months of the war," the report stated. A further 107 facilities had been located that were either being built, excavated or planned by the end of hostilities, but another 600 sites could be added to the total if caves and mines, many of which had been turned into production lines and weapons laboratories, were taken into consideration.

The report's author was evidently taken aback by the breadth of the German underground plan. "It is a matter of conjecture what would have occurred if the Germans had gone underground before the beginning of the war," he concluded.

And then, hot on the heels of the underground investigation, a fresh directive, this time from a senior USAAF field officer to General McDonald, the air force intelligence chief at Wright Field in Ohio.

Set against the steady but predictable buildup of documentation, its tone was so unexpected and the content of the message so different that it took me a moment to come to terms with its implications. It was dated September 28, 1945:

> 1. It is considered that the following have been thoroughly investigated and have proven to have no basis of fact.
>
> a. Remote Interference with Aircraft
>
> Investigations have been completed on this subject and it is considered that there is no means presently known which was in development or use by the German Air Force which could interfere with the engines of aircraft in flight. All information available through interrogations, equipment and documents has been thoroughly investigated and this subject may be closed with negative result.
>
> b. Balls of Fire
>
> As far as can be determined from extensive interrogations, investigation of documents, and field trips, there is no basis of fact in the > reports made by aircrews concerning balls of fire other than that phenomena similar to balls of fire may have been produced by jet aircraft or missiles. This subject may be considered closed with negative results.

>
> A.R. Sullivan Jr.,
> Lt. Colonel, Sig. C.

This was the first hint or mention of anything connected with the foo-fighters. Sullivan was telling McDonald that investigations on the subject had been completed; and yet, there was no sign in any of the raw communications traffic that had hitherto flowed between the front and Wright Field that anyone was the slightest bit interested in the subject of "remote interference with aircraft" or "balls of fire." Furthermore, there wasn't any suggestion of interrogations having taken place or equipment or documents having been investigated pertaining to possible foo-fighter technologies—or of special "field trips" having been undertaken to track them down. But the instruction that the subject "may be considered closed with negative result" was so strident it made me sit up and wonder if I'd missed something.

I felt a knot of excitement in the pit of my stomach. The subject, as Sullivan put it, may be closed with negative result.

Why?

In the apparent informality of its memo format, the implication hadn't been clear on a first read-through. But it was now. This wasn't a casual instruction. It was an order.

I flicked back a few frames and found a field report of an investigation into German guided weapons technology.

It was then that my eyes were drawn to an assessment of a sensor called Windhund ("wind-hound"). Windhund was a "sniffer" device that detected the presence of aircraft by measuring differences in the polarity of the surrounding air. It then automatically directed its parent aircraft to follow the trail until it reached the bomber stream itself.

All you had to do was hard-wire Windhund into an autopilot and you had a mechanism to allow a pilotless aircraft—conveivably, the Fireball—to be controlled automatically.

In the same document, a second sensor from a related facility (same organization, different location) was detailed as an infrared tracking system for locating aircraft exhaust gas. Both technologies were at an early stage, but the fact that they were being investigated at all was significant. A half century later, as far as I knew, neither had been perfected or developed. But here, in 1945, were sensors that a foo-fighter could have used to get close enough to a bomber to disrupt its engine ignition systems.

I felt for the first time like I had a foot in the door.

A few frames later and here was a large document set out in tabular format with headings running across the top of the page: Target~, Organization, City, Activity, Assessed (date), Action Taken and Remarks. From the first page, it was clear that this was a very different kind of file, filled with data as raw as it came, and instantly noteworthy for what it did—and didn't—say. In the remarks section of one target, listed only as a "research station" near the town of Eib See, assessed primarily by the British, curiously, on May 2, 1945, it said: "Over 400 evacuated Peenemunde personnel held. Excavations made in the mountainside close to lake for underground workshops. A very important target." Nothing else.

Mysterious as hell.

Next page.

Target: Luftfahrt forschungs [sic]. City: Brunswick. Activity: Radio-controlled aircraft. Assessed: April 21-24, 1945. Action Taken: Team has been dispatched. Remarks: "Evidence of radio-controlled aircraft."

I scratched some notes. Another potential foo-fighter technology.

Next page.

Target: Research. Location: 87, Weimarerstr. Vienna. Activity: Experiments with antiaircraft rays. Remarks: "Research activity is conducted in a house at the above address. Research personnel were not allowed to leave house (reported hermetically sealed)."

The Germans had been working on directed energy weapons and had sealed those working on it from the outside world.

So many radical technologies and so long ago. I had no idea.

Next page.

Target: Daimler-Benz. City: Unter-Turkheim/Stuttgart. Activity: Secret weapon. Assessed: April 25, 1945. Remarks: "Said to stop ignition system of a petrol engine. The apparatus has succeeded in stopping a motor vehicle w/magneto ignition, but not one w/battery, at a range of 2 or 3 km."

The report went on to say that the technology had been insufficiently developed to have been brought against aircraft, but it made clear that this was the goal.

The Germans, then, had also been working on devices that were designed to "interfere with the engines of aircraft in flight," contrary to the note sent by Colonel Sullivan to General McDonald on September 28.

Why, then, did Sullivan say that all information available through in-

THIS PAGE IS UNCLASSIFIED

THIS PAGE IS UNCLASSIFIED

THIS PAGE I

Target	Location	Source	Activity	Remarks
Henschel Factory	Oderwerke (Nordhausen)	OSS London - SQ 2285, 13 April 1945.	Manufacturing parts for the HS-177 Rocket AA Weapon.
Henschel Factory	Woffleben (Halle-Kassel)	ditto	Manufacturing parts for the HS-177 Rocket AA Weapon.	Mfg. actually takes place underground in an old mine shaft.
Laboratory	Grosser Inselsberg (Northern end of the Thuringen Wald)	A.D.I.(K) Rpt. 358/1945.	Proximity fuses (electrostatic)
Friedrich Listwerke Firm	Plauen - Voigtland	OSS-London, SQ-2285, 13 April 1945.	Mfg. remote control mech. ("Kreiseln") for the projectile of HS-177 Rocket (AA Weapon).
Research	87, Weimarerstr. Vienna	OSS-London No. B-2222 (23) 13 April 1945.	Experiments with anti-aircraft rays.	Research activity is conducted in a house at the above address. Research personnel were not allowed to leave house (reported hermetically sealed)
Research	Hennin ?	P.W. Report by A.D.I. (K) No. 228/1945.	A 'Vermessungsstelle' consisting partly of a Kinetheodolite section for observing the flight of rockets launched from Peenemunde.
School	Lubmin	A.D.I. (K) No. 228/1945.	Instruction on the beam system used in connection with A-4 Rocket.	Students received instruction on the "Leitstrahl" (Beam) system. This beam system used in connection with A-4 rocket. The P.W. in this report confirms the A.D.I.(K) Rpt. No. 612A31944 that one of 3 batteries of an Abteilung was equipped with a leitstrahl transmitter.

terrogations, equipment and documents had been "thoroughly invesigated" and that the subject "may be closed with negative result"?

What negative result?

Over the years, I had conducted extensive interviews on and off the record with intelligence analysts on both sides of the Atlantic about Soviet and Russian weapons developments and knew something of their techniques. They would never have dismissed an invention such as Windhund as cursorily as Sullivan had in the light of clear evidence that the enemy had been developing such a radical strand of technology. At the very least, the reports would have gone into a holding file. If no other reports came in to substantiate this finding, then in time it would have been downgraded. Only then, would field agents have been told to stop looking.

Instead, Sullivan's exhortation for investigators to cease forthwith their search for one of the key component technologies of the foo-fighter sightings, a mystery that had absorbed the USAAF's intelligence community in that winter of 1944—45, was, well, odd.

Unless, that is, they had found a foo-fighter and needed to put the lid back on.

It got better. I came to the field report on the last target to have been assessed, the Institut für Elektrophysik Hermann Goering at Landsberg-am-Lech in Bavaria. Like so many of the others it was quite anodyne until the remarks section, which read:

"Experimental work in conjunction with airfield at Pensing, 9 km north (toward Munich). Activities: research on gas, aircraft, pilotless aircraft, radio communication."

Here, then, was a facility that merged in a single program all the activities that explained Vesco's Fireball drone: a pilotless, remote-controlled aircraft that disrupted the engines and electronic systems of Allied bombers. And the fact that the research activity was taking place at an airfield seemed to suggest that the tests were at an advanced stage when the Lusty assessment team showed up.

I sat staring at the screen for several more minutes, scouring the text for other corroborative details, but there were no further clues and I was out of time.

I photocopied what I could, thanked the archivist and made my way outside. The taxi was already waiting, engine running, wipers working against the rain. I threw my bags on the backseat and sat back for the ride, my head buzzing with thoughts about a strand of weapons technology that appeared to have been buried from view for more than half a century.

But it wasn't until the flight home that sanity prevailed.

What had I actually learned from Lusty'?

That the Germans had been working on technologies that far exceeded published accounts of their aeronautical achievements in the Second World War?

Certainly.

That they had developed a craft that explained the foo-fighter sightings reported by Allied airmen?

Possibly.

That they had developed antigravity technology—and that this technology had fallen into the hands of the Americans at the end of the war in Europe?

Unfortunately, not.

Besides which, I realized that Lusty had been declassified in the mid-1960s, several years before Vesco's book Intercept—But Don't Shoot was published. A skeptic could claim that Vesco had simply concocted his account from the documents.

I had hoped that by applying a few basic investigative principles, I would find some tangible evidence of a radical propulsion technology that had been overlooked by everyone else.

Of course, it was never going to be that simple.

Despite all the stories, there was no concrete proof that the Germans had even designed, let alone built, a flying saucer. As for antigravity propulsion, no one had ever found a single piece of evidence that would reliably hold up in court.

A short postscript to the German story emerged; in Canada of all places. At the time it seemed irrelevant to the main body of my investigation, but it came screaming back at me later in a way I couldn't possibly have guessed at so soon after my return from Washington. I would recall it later as the "Silverbug affair."

In April 1959, during hearings of the Space Committee of the U.S. Congress, the U.S. Department of Defense revealed that it was working with the Avro Canada company to develop a "flying saucer." According to the Pentagon's Research and Engineering Deputy Director, John Macauley, the craft would "skim the earth's surface or fly at altitudes reached by conventional aircraft." This was the first public admission that Avro was building a flying disc, the Avrocar, the brainchild of a gifted British engineer called John Frost, who'd moved to Canada shortly after the war.

Activity surrounding the Avro project was shrouded in mystery. Word of its existence had leaked as early as 1953, when the Toronto Star reported that the company was working on a "flying saucer" that could take off and land vertically and would fly at 1,500 mph. British and American scientists were also reported to be involved. Both the Canadian government and Avro played down the reports.

When the Avrocar finally emerged from the shadows it was easy to see why. One look at the prototype was enough to know that it would never achieve supersonic flight. Flight tests, in fact, confirmed it was a dog.

Underpowered and unstable, the Avrocar made its first untethered flight in December 1959 and soldiered on for two more years as Frost and his team sought to overcome its failings.

By the end of 1961, at the conclusion of the U.S. development contract, the Avrocar had managed to claw no more than a few feet into the air. Funding for the world's only known flying-saucer program was not renewed and the Avrocar drifted into obscurity—although not fast enough for the Canadian aerospace industry, which has sought ever since to distance itself from the project. There and elsewhere, it has become a byword for failure; something of an aviation joke.

Yet, that may have been the intention all along.

Recently declassified papers show that from early 1952 right up until the cancellation of the Avrocar in 1961, a select group of engineers known as the Avro "Special Projects Group," led by John Frost, had been working on a highly classified set of programs that accurately reflected the Toronto Star's original leak of 1953.

The papers revealed that, commencing with Project Y, also known as the "Manta," via Project 1794 to Project PV 704, the SPG tested technology for a whole family of flying saucers whose projected performance was designed to eclipse that of all other jet fighters. Data on Project 1794, a design for a perfectly circular fighter-interceptor, show that it would have been capable of Mach 4 at 100,000 feet. The best fighters then on the drawing board were hard-pressed to achieve Mach 2.

On December 2,1954, Canada's Trade Minister C.D. Howe sought to dampen speculation about the existence of an Avro flying saucer program with a statement that the Canadian government had backed studies into disc-shaped aircraft in 1952-53, but had since dropped the idea.

This, as it turned out, was true—up to a point. In fact, the Avro design, now called Project Y2, had been purchased outright by the U.S. Air Force and re-code-named "Project Silverbug."

Under pressure from the U.S. press to reveal the nature of this program—which, though classified, had again leaked—the USAF issued a bland statement in 1955 that it had a "research and development contract with the Avro Company of Canada to explore a new aircraft design concept." But that was all.

USAF documents on Silverbug declassified as recently as the mid-1990s show just how radical the Silverbug/Y2 concept was. "The Project Y2 design proposal incorporates a number of advanced improvements brought about by the utilization of several radical ideas in fundamental areas." Among these was a "very large radial-flow gas-turbine engine, which, when covered, will form a flying wing with a circular planform, similar in appearance to a very large discus."

The entire air vehicle, in other words, was a giant flattened jet engine, the hot gases that propelled it forward exiting from slots around its rim. By directing the exhaust, Silverbug would have been capable of almost instantaneous high-speed turns in any direction; maneuvers that would have included 180-degree reversals, the craft flipping this way and that like a tumbling coin, and all with minimum discomfort to the pilot, because the g-forces would have been alleviated by the adjustable thrust.

Much like the craft that had vexed the U.S. Air Force intelligence community following the first rash of U.S. flying saucer sightings in 1947.

The only other place prior to this discovery I had ever heard mention of a radial-flow gas turbine, an RFGT, was in Germany during the war.

After the ignominy of the Avrocar program, the Avro SPG disbanded and most of its exceptional brain talent was snapped up by U.S. aerospace companies or government-run research establishments. The most notable exception was John Frost, the maverick genius and inspiration behind the saucer projects, who soon after the Avro company was dissolved in April 1962 emigrated to Auckland, New Zealand. After the exhilaration and excitement of designing highly classified, highly unconventional air vehicles for the Canadian and U.S. air forces, Frost settled for the relative obscurity of an engineering job with Air New Zealand. He rarely, if ever, spoke about his work on the Avrocar and never mentioned the existence of the supersonic saucer projects that had gone on all the while behind it. He died of a heart attack in October 1979 at the age of 63.

Soon after I got back from Washington I rang Frost's son, Tony. I had tracked him down to Auckland, New Zealand, via a small band of researchers, all with strong aerospace credentials, who had done a fantastic job in piecing together the Avro story—the real story; one in which high-performance flying saucers had been shown to be real; far from the stuff of legend, as they had been in Germany.

"Dad was very secretive about his work," Tony Frost told me.

"Everything I ever learned about what he had been doing in Canada I had to pick up from people he'd worked with. The Special Projects Group was, for a time, just about the most secret group of its kind in Canada or the U.S., but why its activities should remain shrouded in secrecy for so long is still a mystery to me."

In the brief silence that followed, my mind worked hard to fill in the gaps. Had the lumbering Avrocar been an intentional blind all along, something to draw the flak from the SPG's real, but hidden goal: the creation of a supersonic, vertical takeoff and landing interceptor?

With Avro shut down, had work on the supersonic saucers continued in the utmost secrecy in the U.S.? Was there something about the very shape and form of the saucer, indeed, that was inherently super-classified?

While the Avro program didn't entirely explain how saucer-shaped craft had been "within the present U.S. knowledge" in 1947, it came very close.

First off, Avro showed that man-made flying saucers were real; they'd existed.

Secondly, if you substituted the radial-flow gas turbine, the RFGT, for something even more exotic—a T.T. Brown—type propulsion system, for example—the specification was a pretty neat match.

In the conventional world of aerospace, testing a new kind of airframe with a known engine was standard operating procedure. Was this what the Avro program had really been about? Were the Americans using the Canadians to perfect the aerodynamics of the saucer before the arrival of an all-new propulsion source—something that Trimble and Co. had hinted at in their statements of 1956?

Or was the truth altogether more prosaic? Had the supersonic Avro disc program merely been hushed up all these years in an attempt to avoid embarrassment by those who had thrown money at it and seen it fail?

These were questions without answers, so I asked Tony Frost instead how he thought his father had come by his radical ideas.

He told me, almost in passing, that a file recently uncovered in Canada's National Archives had shown that his father had made a journey to West Germany in 1953. There, at a Canadian government installation in the company of British and Canadian intelligence officials, Frost met with a German aviation engineer who claimed to have worked on a vehicle similar to the disc-shaped aircraft on the drawing boards at Avro. The German said that the project had been under way at a site near Prague, Czechoslovakia, in 1944—45, and that the saucer had not only been built, but flight-tested. He told Frost that both the plans and the craft itself had been destroyed in the closing weeks of the war.

How the information was used by Frost was never made clear. Like the Avro supersonic disc program, he never spoke about it—to his family or anyone.

I felt the historical data pulling me back. If the Canadians and the British had been colluding on German-derived saucer technology, it was dangerously close to the scenario that Vesco had espoused all along.

But Tony Frost had spent years trying to piece together the secret history of his father's life and he was still no closer to the truth.

I had exhausted the safe, cozy world of archives and Internet trails. It was like Cross had said; they'd succeeded only in taking me everywhere and nowhere. If a decade of training had taught me anything, I knew my only real chance of verifying Trimble's outburst back in 1956 was to search for leads in the real world.

I didn't know it yet, but I was about to get a helping hand from a scientist on the inside loop, a man I came in time to regard as a genius, who for reasons of his own had already embarked on exactly the same journey as I had.

Chapter 7

I had expected the drive to Austin, the state capital, to provide me with a rich set of impressions of the frontier that divided the Eastern Seaboard from the wilderness that started here and extended to the Pacific. But for two hours I sat on the freeway, my views of Texas obscured by bumper-to-bumper traffic, peeling trailer homes and secondhand car lots. And so I thought of the man I was about to visit instead.

Dr. Harold E. Puthoff, "Hal" to those who knew him better than I, was the director of the Institute of Advanced Studies at Austin. Puthoff had lived his whole life on a frontier; one that straddled known science, the world explained and understood, and a place that most people, scientists included, said didn't exist.

I felt drawn to Puthoff, because his academic qualifications, not to mention his connections to the military, put him squarely in a place that I could relate to; yet, he was clearly also involved in strange science.

His résumé, which I had pulled off the Internet, said that he had graduated from Stanford University in 1967 and that his professional background had spanned more than three decades of research at General Electric, Sperry, the Stanford Research Institute (SRI) and the National Security Agency, the NSA, the government's super-clandestine electronic eavesdropping organization.

It also told how he "regularly served various corporations, government agencies, the Executive Branch and Congress as a consultant on leading-edge technologies and future technology trends" and that he had patents issued in the laser, communications and energy fields. Puthoff was no lightweight.

What his résumé didn't describe was one of the strangest episodes in the history of U.S. intelligence gathering: a program, known as remote viewing or RV, that enabled the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency to spy on America's enemies using clairvoyance. For years, depending on whom you believed, this highly organized, well-funded operation had proven remarkably successful, providing reams of usable data on Soviet military activities that were inaccessible to more traditional intelligence gatherers, such as spy satellites and aircraft.

RV remained buried, deeply classified, until 1995, when the CIA finally admitted it had used "psychic spies" against Russia during the Cold War.

Puthoff had been the RV program's founder and first director and had run it for 13 years, finally leaving SRI in 1985 to establish his own institute, the IAS, at Austin.

And now, he was up to his ears in gravity work.

If the U.S. government had instituted a top secret antigravity program, decades before possibly, then chances were Puthoff was either directly involved, knew about it, or, at the very least, had some inkling of it. On the other hand, doing what he'd done, acting as a consultant to some of the government bodies he still advised, I knew that Puthoff breathed the same air as people for whom disinformation was a just another part of the tool kit.

Ordinarily, I would have been wasting my time and Puthoff's. My limited, workaday knowledge of physics put me at an enormous disadvantage when it came to sorting out good information from bad in the antigravity field.

But on that day, as the miles to Austin sped by, I had some help.

Deep in the heart of Britain's own aerospace and defense establishment, I had found someone to decode the intricate mysteries of gravity for me.

I wound back the clock to the time when I'd attended a trade conference many years earlier. It had been entitled "Antigravity! The End of Aerodynamics." I'd only gone along because of the caliber of the speaker: Brian Young, Professor of Physics at Salford University. Young was also Director of Strategic Projects for British Aerospace (BAe) Defence, Britain's biggest military contractor.

The lecture had been given at the London headquarters of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, IMechE, just off Parliament Square. Handouts beforehand (which I'd clipped to my copy of the transcript) had set the theme: "Gravity is the most mysterious of all the natural forces. It appears completely indifferent to anything we try to do to control it. Nonetheless, its very presence is the driver for the whole science and business of aeronautics. Scientists from the very distinguished to the very ridiculous have tried for over 300 years to either explain it or destroy it. Technology is making tremendous strides in all directions and perhaps we are getting close. If so, is this the end of aerodynamics?"

I chewed over the words of Young's speech, according it a respect I hadn't given it on the night it was given. Now I wished I had.

I recalled the elegant marbled hallway and the low hubbub of conversation as I'd drifted among the attendees—a hodgepodge of MoD men and aerospace industry executives, some of whom were familiar to me—waiting for the doors to open into the auditorium.

Young had kicked off his talk by reiterating our general state of ignorance about gravity. "It is an incredibly weak force," he'd said, "although it probably didn't seem so to the Wright Brothers and I suspect most mountain climbers would disagree violently.

"But really gigantic quantities of matter, about 6x10 (to the power of 21) tonnes in the case of the Earth, are required to produce the gravity field in which we live. If you think of a simple horseshoe magnet lifting a piece of iron, then, as far as that piece of iron is concerned, the magnet weighing a few ounces is outpulling the whole Earth."

He flashed up a set of artist's impressions showing how three different kinds of antigravity vehicles might look assuming engines could be built for them.

One, a "heavy-lifter," looking much like an airship, was depicted effortlessly transporting a giant section of roadbridge through the air. Young made the assumption that the antigravity engine of the heavy-lifter not only canceled the weight of the craft, but its underslung load as well.

Another, saucer-shaped, craft, described as being like a bus for "city hopper" applications, used a "toroidal" or doughnut-shaped engine to allow it to skip between "stops" in a futuristic-looking metropolis.

The third showed a combat aircraft with a green-glowing antigravity lift engine on its underside for vertical takeoff and landing (VTOL) and conventional jet engines for forward propulsion.

But all these things were fiction, he stressed, so the designs were simply conjecture. "The more I have read and thought about antigravity and its terrestrial applications, the more I have become convinced that as it stands today it is going nowhere. Whatever name the press may give experiments, either in someone's garage or in Geneva, most of the real work is trying to uncover basic knowledge and few people really believe it will lead to gravity control.

"To the contrary, a view I have seen expressed is that if gravity control is ever discovered it will be as an unexpected by-product of work in some completely different field."

To which he'd added a rider. Were he to have gotten it all wrong, were an antigravity effect ever to be discovered, the growth of the industry surrounding it would be exponential—look what had happened after Faraday's discovery of electromagnetic induction in 1831. Within five years, the electric motor industry was born. Within seventy, the generation of electricity was huge business. Today, it is hard to conceive of a time when man-made electricity did not exist.

I vaguely remembered going up to Young after the lecture and chatting to him about some of the points he'd raised. But now I kicked myself. If only I'd paid more bloody attention.

Soon after I'd returned from the low-key archive in Washington that housed the Lusty documents, I'd picked up the phone and dialed British Aerospace. Through to the public relations department and I logged the request. Could they get me Professor Young's phone number?

Forty minutes later, the media manager called back to say that Professor Young had died, of a heart attack he thought, some years earlier.

I put the phone down, a little shocked at the news, and pinched the bridge of my nose, looking for that extra bit of concentration. What had Young and I talked about? Down into the basement and another protracted rifle through a box taped up and marked "notebooks: 1989—94." There in among my old reporter's pads, after an hour on my hands and knees, I found the one that I'd taken with me that night to IMechE. I started reading and flicking pages.

The notes I'd jotted down were piss poor, highlighting terms like "gravito magnetic permeability" and "toroidal engine" and putting big question marks against them.

I kept turning. There, right at the end, I'd written myself a memo to put in a call to a media affairs officer at BAe who would arrange for me to receive photos of the artist's impressions Young had flashed up during his speech.

This, I remembered now, was one of the things Young and I had discussed.

Below the memo were two names: Dr. Ron Evans of "BAe Defense Military Aircraft's Exploratory Studies group" and Dr. Dan Marckus, an eminent scientist attached to the physics department of one of Britain's best-known universities. The department was more than familiar to me. Its work was well known in defense circles for the advice that it gave to the government.

Beside Evans' and Marckus' names were their contact phone numbers.

I called Dr. Evans first.

He turned out to be a nice, soft-spoken mathematician based at BAe's Warton plant, a facility that cranked out jet fighters close to where the bleak mudflats of Lancashire's Ribble Estuary met the Irish Sea.

When I asked if he could brief me, as per the suggestion of Professor Young, Evans said he needed to consult with the company's media managers. He'd never dealt with the press before. I got the impression it was sensitive stuff.

It was, but not for any of the reasons I had guessed or hoped. Britain's biggest aircraft manufacturer, BAe, had an antigravity department. That in itself was key.

But its activities weren't classified. Far from it. The impression I got, more than anything else, was that the management had tucked Evans' tiny department into the farthest-flung corner of the company because it didn't know what else to do with it. That and the fact no one in BAe at that level wanted to wake up to headlines that it was involved in kooky, Buck Rogers science. It would destabilize the share price.

In the end, Evans wasn't allowed formally to brief me on his work, but he was given permission to fill me in on some of the background that had led to the formation of his Exploratory Studies group. That suited me fine. BAe didn't want to break cover—nor did I. For once, we were on the same side of the secrecy divide.

In March 1990, Evans chaired a two-day University-Industry Conference of Gravitational Research, sitting around a table with a gathering of distinguished academics to identify any emerging "quantum leaps" that might impact on BAe's military aircraft work. Gravity control figured extensively on the agenda.

Imagine it. A technology, popping out of nowhere, that rendered all of its current multibillion-pound work on airliners and jet fighters redundant at a stroke. Now that, I thought, really would do things to the share price.

The company also undertook some practical laboratory work in a bid to investigate the properties of a so-called "inertial-thrust machine" developed by a Scottish inventor called Sandy Kidd.

In 1984, after three years' work building his device—essentially, a pair of gyroscopes at each end of a flexible crossarm—Kidd apparently turned it on and watched, startled, as it proceeded to levitate, then settle three inches above the surface of his workbench.

An ex-RAF radar technician, the Scotsman had become obsessed with the idea of inventing an antigravity machine after he'd removed a still-spinning gyroscope from a Vulcan nuclear bomber. Carrying it backward down the aircraft's ladder, he reached the ground and was promptly flattened by a sledgehammer blow to his back. The force, he realized, had been transmitted from the gyroscope, which had reacted in some inexplicable way as his feet had touched the ground.

In May 1990, BAe began a series of trials to test whether there was anything in Kidd's claims, knowing full well that he wasn't alone in making them.

In the mid-1970s, Eric Laithwaite, Emeritus Professor of Heavy Electrical Engineering at Imperial College London, demonstrated the apparent weight loss of a pair of heavy gyroscopes by lifting the whole whirling contraption with one hand and wheeling it freely around his head. When the twin rotors were not in motion, attempting this feat was impossible. The gyroscopes were the size and weight of dumbbells. But when the rotors turned, they became as light as a feather.

Somewhere along the line, the machine had lost weight.

The accepted laws of physics said that this was not possible, out of the question—heresy, in fact. But Laithwaite's claims were supported by a top-level study into gyroscopes published by NATO's Advisory Group for Aerospace Research and Development (AGARD) in March 1990.

The authors of the AGARD report concluded that a "force-generating device" such as Laithwaite's, if integrated into a vehicle of some kind, could, in theory, counteract gravity. "Clearly if such a counteracting force was of sufficient magnitude it would propel the vehicle continuously in a straight line in opposition to said field of force and would constitute an antigravity device."

The report went on to say that there was at least one "gyroscopic propulsive device" that was known to work and that the inventor, E.J.C. Rickman, had taken out a British patent on it. The trouble was, the report concluded, the impulses generated by these machines were so slight they would be useless for all practical applications—except, perhaps, to inch a satellite into a new orbit once it had already been placed in space by a rocket.

It was hardly a quantum technological leap. But that wasn't the point, Dr. Evans told me. What was being talked about here was an apparent contravention of the laws of physics; the negation, at a stroke, of Newton's Third Law, of action-reaction. Which was why the BAe-sponsored tests on the Kidd machine had a relevance that went way beyond their immediate and apparent value.

If there were ways of generating internal, unidirectional, reactionless forces in a spacecraft, and in time they could be refined, honed and developed, the propulsion possibilities would be limitless.

In May 1990, a trial went ahead under the watchful eyes of two wind tunnel engineers from BAe's Warton aircraft plant. The first series of tests showed no antigravity effects, but to everyone's surprise, during a second series of trials, one result did appear to indicate that the machine had changed weight.

Unfortunately, the engineers failed to repeat the result; and in science and engineering, repeatability is the benchmark of success.

Had it been repeatable, the two percent weight change Kidd claimed for his device would have been scientifically verified, and BAe would have employed the world's first known antigravity device as an orbital maneuvering motor for satellites.

Shortly after the trial, Cold War defense budgets collapsed and BAe's share price went into free fall. As it fought for its survival, there were cutbacks across the company and Dr. Evans' department, with little hope of any short-term returns, was disbanded as quietly as it had come together.

That, essentially, was how things were when he and I met.

I rang Dr. Marckus a few times, but only ever got an answering machine and so I capped my involvement in the BAe antigravity story with a few low-key articles in Jane 's about the BAe investigation. It was more an excuse than anything else to broadcast a question: Was anyone else out there engaged in similar work?

The U.S. Air Force had recently proclaimed its interest in the field with a document, published in August 1990, called the Electric Propulsion Study. Its objective was to "outline physical methods to test theories of inductive coupling between electromagnetic and gravitational forces to determine the feasibility of such methods as they apply to space propulsion." Stripped of the gobbledygook, it was really asking whether there was any theory out there that might permit the engineering of an antigravity device.

The existence of the Electric Propulsion Study gave me an excuse to slip tailored messages into a couple more stories about futuristic propulsion. It felt a little like pointing a transmitter into deep space and waiting for a response.

I waited, but nothing came back. No emails, no anonymous faxes, no spooky phone calls. Nothing.

Thereafter, I kept a weather eye on the antigravity scene, but the receiver I had rigged for the slightest trace of life out there remained silent. In the end, I switched it off.

During the mid-1990s, BAe kept its toes in the gravity field by placing a few small-scale contracts with a number of British universities, principally to see if there might be a provable relationship between gravity and heat; a link first postulated by Michael Faraday in 1849.

Like me, the company was clearly reaching, but getting nowhere.

Then, in 1996, NASA—the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration—began questioning some of the perceived limits to the advancement of air and space travel in two notable areas. One related to the unbreachability of the light-speed barrier—a throwback to Einstein, whose Theory of Relativity said that the velocity of light was a fixed constant never to be exceeded.

The other questioned the heretical notion that, somewhere in the universe, there might be an antigravity force; one that could be exploited for air and space travel.

The resultant NASA program, wrapped within something called ASTP—the Advanced Space Transportation Program—prompted BAe to resurrect its antigravity work. It has since been rebranded "Project Greenglow," a "speculative research program . . . the beginning of an adventure which other enthusiastic scientists might like to join, particularly those who believe that the gravitational field is not restricted to passivity."

Decoded, Greenglow involved little more than reseeding small amounts of company R&D money to more British universities, funding a few more experiments of the Kidd kind, and acting as a European feed-in to the NASA effort.

It was, to say the least, depressing news. I thought back to George S.Trimble, the man who had been too afraid to talk to me after Dani Abelman of Lockheed Martin had approached him on my behalf. If Trimble had cracked the gravity code back in 1956, why were BAe and NASA, with their immense know-how and resources, still struggling with the gravity conundrum today? It didn't make any sense.

And that should have been where the matter ended.

But long months after I had consigned the antigravity story to the graveyard, I got a phone call. The man at the other end of the line was bluff and unapologetic, verging on the rude. Dr. Marckus had finally gotten in touch.

Chapter 8

The sunlight reflected brightly off the thin carpet of snow that had fallen along the east coast overnight. I kept the estuary on my right and the sea defenses on my left, edging the car along the narrow road, navigating by the instructions I had been given over the phone. There was something almost primeval about the combination of the pine forest, the limbs of the trees twisted into impossible shapes by the wind, the open sky and the stillness.

The trees parted briefly and I saw the radar mast that I'd been told to look for. Around another bend and the tiny haven swung into view.

I pulled up in the parking lot beside a wooden jetty that jutted into the green, fast-flowing current toward a small settlement on the far bank. The buildings seemed run-down and dirty compared to the crisp scenery through which I'd just driven.

There were two other cars parked beside mine and both were empty. I got out, stretched my legs and shivered as the still-freezing temperature blew away the fug of the hour-and-a-half-long journey from London. Suffolk. The East Anglian coast and the cold waters of the North Sea. I was in a part of the country I didn't know.

A light breeze tugged at the rigging of a row of yachts dragged onto a thin stretch of stony beach nearby. Seabirds picked along the jetsam and detritus of the shoreline. Above the gentle pinging of the mast ropes, I heard children's voices.

There were four people on the jetty.

A woman sat on the far side, wrapped warmly against the cold, reading a book as her two small children line-fished for crabs.

The father, standing farther off, his back to me, was tracking an open motorboat chugging hard against the fast-flowing water, its helmsman preparing to tie up alongside the jetty's end.

As the boat bumped against the tire buffers, the man stepped on board and settled onto one of the bench seats.

I waited for the woman and the two children to get up and join him, but they never so much as glanced his way.

It was then that I realized the man in the boat was Marckus.

He looked up and waved me aboard. I hesitated. Taking a ride on a boat had not figured in our brief phone conversation.

Until then, I'd not considered the possibility that Marckus was anything other than the person he claimed to be.

But what did I know about him? That he was plugged firmly into Britain's aerospace and defense community, that he didn't make a habit of talking to journalists, and that he was taking a risk by talking to me.

The ferry was preparing to leave.

I ran along the jetty and dropped down into the boat. Marckus paid for both of us and the ferryman cast off.

I found myself apologizing for the mix-up; how I'd thought Marckus was with the woman and her children on the jetty. Silly, nervous jabbering.

Dr. Marckus cut me short. "Does the significance of this site mean anything to you?" he asked, his arm almost hitting my face as he waved in the direction of the road.

I shrugged and he gave a mild snort of derision. "I thought you said you were a Jane's man."

"I'm sorry," I said, "it looks like a small yacht club and a fishing village." I neglected to tell him, because I couldn't see the point, that history wasn't my bag. My work was high technology of the 21st-century kind.

Once, Dan Marckus must have been lean and ascetic-looking; the thinning hair and high forehead still gave a hint of it. With age, however, he had put on some padding, making him look a lot less severe than he sounded. A dark, scratchy beard, flecked with gray, distracted the eye on first meeting from a thick pair of lenses in tortoiseshell frames.

Behind them, Marckus' brown, beady eyes watched me intently and with a hint of irritation.

He was dressed sharply in a thick blue polo-neck, a trendier version of the kind fishermen wear, and a brown leather jacket. His voice said he was around 65, but he looked younger.

"What you saw when you drove through those trees was one of the orginal antenna masts of Bawdsey Manor. Before the Second World War broke out, the Germans sent an airship, the Graf Zeppelin, up and down this coastline trying to figure out what we were up to—what those tall steel lattice towers meant."

"And what did they learn?" I asked.

"They'd packed the Graf Zeppelin with electronics—listening gear. But the old man was so much smarter than them, thank God."

Marckus registered my bewilderment. "Robert Watson-Watt. The man who gave the British the secret of radar. It all happened here. I thought you'd know that."

Once on the other side, we jumped down onto the beach and strolled along the shoreline, past a lonely cafe, in the direction of the point.

"So how did Watson-Watt outwit the Germans?" I asked, to fill the silence more than anything else.

"They saw the Graf Zeppelin on their scopes when it was way out over the North Sea, realized what it was up to and switched off the radars. The Germans went away believing that they were radio masts, that Germany was the only nation that had successfully developed radar detection. A month later, they invaded Poland."

"That's interesting. Did you work for him?" The term he'd used, "old man," denoted more than a passing familiarity. "Watson-Watt, I mean."

Marckus never answered. He walked on in silence, watching the gulls soaring on the cold currents above our heads. Then, without looking at me, he said: "It's been a while since you've written about my favorite subject. I was beginning to worry that you'd lost interest in it."

"It's like Professor Young said in his speech. I have come to the conclusion—a little late in the day, perhaps—that antigravity is for the birds."

"I see," he said. "Are you hungry?"

I looked at my watch. It was close to midday and I hadn't had any breakfast.

Marckus, registering my hesitation, doubled back toward the cafe.

I pulled a copy of the U.S. Air Force's Electric Propulsion Study from my coat pocket and set it down on the table next to a tatty yellowing manila folder that had been clamped under his arm throughout.

Marckus and I were the only two people this side of the deep fryer. After serving us our plates of cod and chips, the cafe's proprietor left us on our own.

Marckus seemed to start to relax.

"Apart from the fact that the math and the physics are beyond me, the evidence says that this whole science, if you can call it that, is still in its infancy," I said. "One look at this report says they're still playing around with algebra. When I wrote what I wrote, I thought the story was bigger than that. I have to concede I was wrong."

"What were you hoping for, if I may ask?" Marckus asked.

I shrugged. "I thought maybe they'd have at least built some hardware by now. God knows they've had time. The U.S. aerospace industry first started talking about this stuff in the mid-1950s. You'd think by now there might just be something to show for it. But the Air Force is just staring at its navel and doing a few sums."

I tapped the Electric Propulsion report. "Modifications to Maxwell's equations and all that."

"As I recall," began Marckus, "in the 1970s, the Americans tripped over some research published by a Russian mathematician, Ufimtsev, who in turn had gained his inspiration from work done by Maxwell a hundred years earlier. The end result was stealth, the biggest breakthrough in military aircraft design since the jet engine. Not bad, for a mathematician."

"The difference is, they developed stealth," I told him.

"How do you know they haven't developed antigravity?"

I studied his face. How much did Marckus really know?

He must have read my expression. "My information isn't any better than yours," he said, raising a hand in the air to signal his innocence. "The U.S. and the U.K. share a lot of sensitive data, as you know. But there's nothing come across my desk that says we're cooperating with the Americans on antigravity—or even that the Americans are doing it on their own. My point is, we don't know." He brought his hand down on the manila folder to reinforce the point.

I looked at the U.S. Air Force study again. It was hardly reassuring. If antigravity existed and people had known about it years ago, how come the Air Force—along with BAe and NASA—was only just starting to look for it in the mid-1990s?

Marckus stared into his cup. "Did they build the first atomic bomb with a few 'poxy' million bucks? Christ, no. It cost them billions of dollars, even in 1940s values. Secret dollars nobody outside the secret was supposed to even guess at."

"So, has antigravity been developed in the black or not?"

Marckus glanced up. His voice hardened. "I already told you. I don't know. None of us this side of the bloody Atlantic knows." Then he coughed, semi-apologetically. "But there are signs."

"What signs?" Despite myself, I leaned forward.

"Up until 1939, atomic energy was still a matter of conjecture, even among physicists in the field. But by the following year, some of the brighter sparks in the community realized that it was doable, that if you split a neutron into equal parts, you'd quite likely get an enormous release of energy. Things that appear impossible usually aren't, even when the physics say they are."

I knew enough to know that in the 1930s next to nothing was understood about nuclear physics, that by the outbreak of the Second World War all experiments resulting in nuclear reactions had required more energy than had been released.

As more and more physicists escaped the Nazis, however, and debate in America was stimulated further, the conjecture spilled into the U.S. press and writers began to speculate about what they had heard. A number of sensational articles appeared about the weapons implications of a nuclear reaction that could be compressed into the blink of an eye. The word was, it would result in a massive bomb.

By 1940, when it was understood that uranium bombarded with neutrons fissioned and produced more neutrons and that a multiplying chain reaction really might occur with huge explosive force, something remarkable happened. The nuclear physics community voluntarily stopped the publication of further articles on fission and related subjects and this, in turn, dampened the media's interest.

By the time America entered the war in December 1941, you couldn't find a mention of fission. It was as if no one had ever been discussing it.

The parallel with what I had read in the U.S. media in the mid-1950s, culminating in all those statements in 1956 that antigravity was doable with a Manhattan-style effort behind it, and then the crushing silence, was extraordinary.

By 1960, you talked about antigravity and people looked at you like you were mad.

I stared out the window, trying to find Watson-Watt's once-secret radar mast, but it was lost behind the trees. I knew Marckus lived somewhere nearby. I wondered where, exactly; what his house was like, whether he was married, if he had kids.

"What's in this for you?" I asked him.

"You have freedom of movement, I don't," he said. "You can go visit these people and ask questions, I can't."

I still couldn't quite see where all this was headed.

Marckus took a moment before adding: "I think it's 1939 all over again. I think we're poised on the brink of something. The physics is mind-boggling—Christ, I don't pretend to understand half of it myself—but what we're talking is huge."

"Spell it out for me."

"Bye-bye nuclear power. Bye-bye rocket motors. Bye-bye jet engines. If we can manipulate gravity, nothing will ever be the same. But expecting British Aerospace to develop this stuff is like asking someone who'd spent the first half of the 17th century building horse-drawn carts to come up with the outline for Stephenson's bloody Rocket. People don't really have a taste for it here, not at a senior level. They don't have the vision that the Americans do. Antigravity is too much mumbo-jumbo, not enough ROI." He rubbed his thumb and forefinger under his nose and pulled a face. "Return on investment—bean-counter talk."

"So, if you can prove that the Americans really are up to something," I said, "you raise the stakes and get something going here? You get a real program in this country with real money behind it?"

"Right—to a point," he said. "The difference is you're going to prove it."

I stared at him, thinking I hadn't heard him right.

"It's not such a bad arrangement," he said, reaching into the manila folder and pulling a bunch of papers from it. "You get a short course in physics, a few tips on who to talk to, and maybe a story out of it." He paused. "The story of the biggest breakthrough in transportation technology since the invention of the wheel."

"You said there were signs . . ."I said cautiously.

Marckus pushed the papers across the table. The cover sheet was a photocopy from some kind of index. The writing was small, but my eyes were drawn to a section of text that had been highlighted with a yellow marker pen.

I peered closer and words like "magnetic monopoles," "gravitational charge" and "linear equations" swam into my vision.

"This is taken from something called the 'Source Index,' " he said. "It's a list of doctorate papers published by universities around the world. The highlighted part shows you what is happening in one U.S. university, that's all. There are dozens, maybe hundreds, of other facilities like these across America engaged in related research. All of them probing the sorts of areas you'd want to probe if you were pulling a field-dependent propulsion program together. Some of the entries go back decades."

Field-Dependent Propulsion; yet another term for antigravity.

"This thing is a multifaceted, multilayered puzzle and you won't solve it by picking away at the edges," Marckus said. "Begin with what you can see, then search for what you can't. What NASA's doing is in the open, so get over there and start looking and listening. Then go deeper. Some people say that the B-2 Stealth Bomber uses an antigravity drive system. It's like the bomb. The physics has been around for a long time. All it requires is some imagination, a shitload of money and some technical know-how and someone who wants to put the pieces together."

On the way back home, as the shadows lengthened and the traffic bunched on the choke points into London, I thought long and hard about the road ahead and where it was taking me. I knew absolutely nothing more about Marckus than I had gleaned from him before the meeting. The meeting had confirmed that he was a highly gifted academic with strong ties to the British government and its defense industry and that he was unquestionably up to his eyes in secret work. But that was all.

It didn't make me feel particularly comfortable. But then again, I'd already painted myself into a corner and this, at least, was a way forward. Doing nothing was not an option if I wanted to progress things.

Marckus had given me the names of two people I needed to see in the States. One was Garry Lyles at NASA; the other was Hal Puthoff.

In American defense procurement, there was a white world and a black world—one that was open to public scrutiny and one that was so firmly closed, from an outsider's perspective it was like it didn't exist.

The white world had know-how, a good sprinkling of imagination and not a little money at its disposal.

The black world, on the other hand, had all of the above in spades.

Lyles clearly worked in the white world. But with Puthoff, it was absolutely anyone's guess.

Chapter 9

A larger-than-life depiction of Wernher von Braun, whose self-assured good looks conjured up images of postwar Hollywood matinee idols, stared down at me from a mural in the gallery above the arrivals hall at Huntsville International Airport.

Von Braun is still revered in that remote corner of Alabama as the founding father of the nearby George C. Marshall Space Flight Center, the NASA "center of excellence" for space propulsion. Von Braun had died more than 20 years earlier, but American rocketry remained as a testament to the work of Operation Paperclip, the U.S.A.'s clandestine effort after World War Two to recruit Nazi V-2 specialists.

A complex of drab, rectangular buildings, "the Marshall Center Wernher von Braun administrative complex," erected at that time, stands as testimony to the decade in which the high ambient humidity routinely reverberated to test runs of engines for the Mercury-Redstone and Saturn V launch vehicles. The former took the first U.S. astronaut, Alan B. Shepard, briefly into space three weeks after Yuri Gagarin in May 1961; the latter formed the basis of the giant Apollo moon rocket.

Today, NASA Marshall scientists still work on the same basic technology that von Braun developed under the auspices of the Third Reich, even though chemical rockets, his great invention, are today regarded as too slow, too unreliable, too expensive and too inefficient.

It was mid-summer, four months after my meeting with Marckus, before I was able to wangle a trip to Marshall and do as he'd suggested.

Set in a vast area of grasslands, bordered by well-tended, lush forestation, Marshall was melting under the high heat when I eased my rental car up the long approach road that peeled off the interstate to the hub of the Center itself. As I got out of the car, a military Huey thudded low overhead, disappearing behind the trees in the direction of the Redstone Arsenal, the Army's neighboring missile test facility. As the low-frequency throb of the blades faded from earshot, it was replaced by the gentle swish of grass sprinklers and the chatter of cicadas.

I was met at the entrance of the main building of the complex by a woman from public affairs. As we moved through the lobby, she sketched in some of the background to the program I'd come to talk about with its manager, Garry Lyles.

Under the Advanced Space Transportation Program, ASTP, officials at NASA Marshall have been working since the mid-1990s on methods to reduce the cost of space access. Using today's generation of launch vehicles—the Space Shuttle Orbiter, the Delta and Atlas rockets—it costs around $10,000 per pound to put a satellite into low Earth orbit. One short-term payoff of ASTP will be the development of a family of reusable rocket planes that should cut these costs by a factor of ten by the end of the present decade. A mid-term goal, due to yield results in around 2015, is to develop a hybrid "combined cycle" engine— half-rocket, half-jet engine—that will reduce launch costs by a factor of a hundred. Even though the hybrid engine, if it can be mastered technologically, will give NASA space access for as little as $100 per pound, it will never lead to anything other than a delivery system to low Earth orbit.

For missions beyond Earth, scientists will either have to rely on improvements to the chemical rocket or on something radically different.

For a mission to the planets of the inner solar system a nuclear rocket could be developed in a relatively compressed timescale to cut round-trip journey times from Earth to Mars from many months to possibly just weeks. The feasibility of nuclear rockets had been proven in two NASA-developed solid core fission reactor test programs, NERVA and ROVER, between 1959 and 1972. These never came to fruition, my PR guide told me, due to concerns over safety and also because emerging and more advanced nuclear fusion technology was seen as yielding three times the efficiencies. Like the fission rockets, however, fusion systems never happened either—not in the white world, anyhow. In the early 1990s, the Pentagon was reported to be working on a classified nuclear thermal rocket under the code name "Timberwind," but soon afterward it was canceled. Since the black world is publicly unaccountable, it is impossible to know whether this really was the case.

Lightweight nuclear fusion propulsion is one methodology being studied for a manned NASA mission to Mars, my guide continued as we drifted toward the elevators, alongside "light-sails," "magnetic sails," "antimatter fusion drives," lasers and other exotic-sounding technologies.

While the physics behind these ideas is generally well understood, she added, the challenge in turning them into hardware is enormous.

But ASTP did not end there. In addition to examining ways to provide cheaper access to low Earth orbit and coming up with propulsion systems that by the second half of the century will lead to "the commercialization of the inner solar system," its original task went a lot further.

Into an elevator, half a dozen floors up, and we emerged into a world of bright walls, carpeted floors, posters of exotic spacecraft and artists' impressions of planetary systems, constellations and nebulae.

Up ahead, through an open door, sitting behind a large desk, Garry Lyles—bespectacled, bearded and thoughtful-looking—was waiting.

"Within a hundred years," he told me over coffee, his soft southern drawl catching with emotion, "we'll be going to the next star system."

He spoke about the journey with such absolute conviction that it was difficult, in spite of the sheer fantasy at the heart of the idea, not to believe him. Lyles was a dreamer, but his dreams were rooted in work that was going on within the Wernher von Braun administrative complex as we spoke. ASTP scientists at Huntsville—people working right on the edge of what was known and understood in the harsh world of propulsion physics—were collaborating with other NASA facilities on science that would enable astronauts to make a "fast trip" to the Alpha Centauri star system, Earth's nearest stellar neighbor, 4.3 light-years away. As head of this portion of ASTP, Lyles was bound up in the immensity of the challenge.

I asked what he meant by a "fast trip."

"We have set a goal to go to Alpha Centauri in 50 years—a 50-year trip." He stared at me intently as he rocked back in his chair. "You have to really use your imagination to come up with a propulsion system that will do that."

"When will you be able to make that trip?" I asked.

He gestured to another part of the complex visible beyond the blinds of his window. "We have a group of thinkers out there that's beyond anti-matter. They're looking at space warp, ways to get to other stars in a Star Trek-like fashion. If we're not thinking about that kind of thing today, we won't be going to the stars in a hundred years' time. But I have to tell you that if you talk to these people, these engineers who are working on interstellar missions, they think they can do it. And I have no doubt that they're right."

The trip, he reiterated, would be possible before the end of the 21st century.

The phone rang and Lyles took it, allowing me a moment to consolidate my thoughts. His team, he said, had opted for a 50-year trip because it represented a time span most engineers could get their heads around. Fifty years, however, made no sense from the point of view of a practical mission, because even if it could be accomplished technologically, old age (or boredom) would have killed most of the crew long before they ever got there, let alone back again.

But that wasn't the point. The "extra-Solar System" portion of ASTP was about getting scientists to think about realizing impossible journeys. In 1960, there were those who said that landing a man on the moon by the end of the decade would be impossible. That we weren't colonizing Mars by the end of the 20th century, they maintained, was directly attributable to the drop-off in research activity that followed the Apollo program. If we wanted to get to the stars by the end of the 21st, Lyles said, we needed to be thinking about it now.

Which, though he didn't know it, was why I was here.

In 1956, a group of engineers had talked openly about an impossible idea. Lyles' "fast trip" to Alpha Centauri was so impossible, his team was having to really reach—to think way out of the box—to come up even with half-answers to the challenge. To make the fast trip happen, NASA had no choice but to tap heavily into some taboo areas of science. That was my lead.

Supposing for a moment that NASA could come up with a vehicle capable of light-speed, a one-way trip to Alpha Centauri would take 4.3 light-years. Since the speed of light was a constant 186,000 miles per second, by extrapolation, the spaceship would be moving at almost 670 million miles per hour.

The 50-year journey time reduced the requirements to a more manageable 16,000 miles per second or 57.6 million miles per hour.

I had only once come across real hardware (aside from a laser, the ultimate "speed of light" weapon) about which comparable speeds had been mentioned.

Shiva Star, the 250-ton capacitor I'd seen at Kirtland Air Force Base in New Mexico in 1992, had had a task to fire a plasma bullet at 10,000 km per second.

And then, just a few years later, when I returned to Kirtland, it was like the program never existed.

In the carefully regulated temperature of Lyles' office, I shivered.

Shiva's plasma bullet, designed to be dumped into the soft electronics of an incoming nuclear warhead at one-thirtieth the speed of light, was but one of a handful of deep black programs I'd encountered in the course of my career.

How many more secrets existed below the waterline of accountability? What other secrets were out there? What was the ultimate weapon? The questions churned, as they always did in a place like this, almost too fast for me to get a hold on them.

What Lyles and his counterparts in the black world shared was their absolute belief that they could engineer things other people said were impossible. It was a part of the feeling I got when I visited facilities like this and it thrilled and scared me with equal measure.

Why had Marckus sent me here? What did Lyles know?

When he got off the phone, I asked Lyles if he ever felt NASA was developing technology that had previously been developed by the Air Force in the black. He took a moment before answering, choosing his words carefully. I thought that by tweaking his professional pride I might be able to ruffle some of that soft, southern savoir-faire. But Lyles had seen me coming. "Yeah, sometimes we do. But you have to understand that going into space is a very hard thing to accomplish. It takes a lot more than money. I would guess—certainly when it comes to single-stage-to-orbit technology—that NASA is at the cutting edge."

This was the essence of the multilayered conundrum that Marckus had touched upon during our meeting on the estuary. While NASA was struggling to develop technology that would reduce the cost of space access, there were those that said that the Air Force had already solved the problem. Believers in Aurora, the large triangular aircraft supposedly sighted over the oil rig in the North Sea, maintained that at least one variant was capable of conducting single-stage missions to low Earth orbit. If, as George S. Trimble and his contemporaries had stated back in 1956, the U.S. was on the threshold of developing antigravity technology, why spend billions on something as conventional (by comparison) as Aurora 20 years later? Or any other advanced kind of weapon system for that matter?

But when Lyles said that he doubted the Air Force had cracked single-stage-to-orbit, I actually had no way of knowing what he really knew. There was every chance that NASA was simply repeating work the Air Force had already carried out—and this applied to all aspects of its work "on the cutting edge."

I knew of several Congressmen who were deeply pissed off about it. On their watch, they'd committed money to a number of NASA programs knowing damn well, but unable to prove it, the Air Force had duplicate technology up its sleeve.

A number of NASA scientists I had spoken to in other fields of endeavor had acknowledged a feeling—though it was often no more than this—that their work was a mirror image of some hidden effort, something they couldn't see, that was going on in the black. If NASA scientists, therefore, were thinking "way out of the box" to come up with science that would enable them to reach another star system by the end of the century, maybe someone, somewhere had experienced that same feeling.

If anyone at Marshall had sensed such a presence, it would have been George Schmidt. Lyles recommended I go talk to Schmidt, because Schmidt, being a project engineer, was right on the cutting edge. A big, genial man with a football player's physique and a marine-style haircut, Schmidt, as head of propulsion, research and technology on the ASTP effort, waded routinely through the theory that could one day transform Lyles' interstellar vision into real hardware. Still under escort, I found him down a maze of corridors in a different part of the von Braun administrative complex.

Schmidt punctuated his remarks with references to "superluminal velocities"—faster-than-light speeds—and "space-time distortion," phenomena that weren't even accepted by mainstream physics ("although General Relativity and Quantum Mechanics don't discount the possibility"). By the same token, he said, there were some holes in current thinking—"some windows of opportunity we may be able to take advantage of—that might transition the theory sooner rather than later. One of these related to so-called "wormholes," shortcuts through the universe that could be created with large amounts of "negative-energy density matter": material that existed only on the very fringes of theory.

Since it was known from the established physics of General Relativity that gravity, electromagnetism and space-time were interrelated phenomena, he said, it followed that any distortion of space-time might well yield an antigravity effect.

Questioned on the principles of a wormhole, Schmidt quickly warmed to his theme. "It's based on the idea that you can actually curve space," he told me. "Einstein discovered that large masses curve space. Well, it's the same thing with a wormhole. You're curving and distorting space so that you don't have to follow the usual dimensions—you can go up and out, so to speak, into another dimension, if you will. And that allows you to travel much faster than the speed of light."

I asked him if he ever got the feeling that anyone was working on this stuff elsewhere; that there may even have been breakthroughs—ten, twenty, maybe forty years earlier. His reply was more candid than I had anticipated.

"That's always a possibility. I'm not one for conspiracy theories, but we've learned about things that governments and organizations have been involved in in the past."

He paused and rubbed the bristle hairs at the back of his head. I waited.

"It would be extremely frustrating to think that we're duplicating what was done maybe decades before. We like to think we're on the cutting edge, at the forefront of knowledge. It would be very discouraging to think that everything had been determined before and we were just sort of . . . here for show. I hope that's not the case. But you never know. Maybe in some aspects it is."

It was then that my PR escort interjected.

"You know," she said, "I really don't think this is anything that we can comment on in any depth."

I knew that the topic of conversation had taken an unwelcome turn. Now, I had intruded far enough.

"I'm simply trying to get a feel for the kind of capabilities that are out there—on both sides of the fence," I replied.

"Then maybe you should go talk to the Air Force," she said crisply. In any case, I was talking to the wrong people at NASA, she added. Huntsville was where the big picture behind the interstellar vision came together. But, she said, the "breakthrough physics" that would one day lead to the engineering of a "device" was being managed by the NASA Glenn Research Center at Lewis Field in Cleveland. It was from there, not here, that NASA was actively in the process of handing out contracts that aimed to prove or disprove whether there was any substance to the theory.

If I wanted to know whether the physics was doable, get up there, she told me. Talk to a guy called Millis. Marc Millis.

Before I left, I had one last question for Schmidt. I asked him if he genuinely believed that a wormhole might one day give man the ability to cross the universe.

"Yeah," he said, smiling but serious at the same time. "If you can build a wormhole, certainly. Who knows? But you've gotta be careful to make sure you've got the right end point. Who knows where you'll end up if you just generate it? You could end up anywhere in the universe. So that's something to be very careful about."

Six hundred miles to the northeast in Cleveland, Ohio, but a world away culturally, Marc Millis had indeed just received a half-million-dollar contract to test whether there was any theory out there, anything at all, that might one day enable a propulsion device to be built with the energy to take man out of the Solar System and into interstellar space.

Millis ran the NASA Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program, referred to in the trade as BPP.

"This is it," he told me, gesturing to the modest office he shared with another NASA official whose head was just visible on the other side of the screen that set the boundaries of Millis' work space. It had taken some hard negotiating after Huntsville, but I had managed to secure a visit to the Glenn Research Center, NASA's "center of excellence for aero-propulsion research and technology," on my way to Washington, where I was due to conduct some interviews for the magazine before heading on down to Puthoff's place in Austin, Texas.

With his half a million dollars, Millis had awarded five contracts, any one of which might lead to the breakthrough that gave BPP its name.

The first contract, placed with the University of Washington, Seattle, was designed to test theory which maintained that a change in inertia was possible with a sudden energy-density change, induced, say, by a massive jolt of electricity. Manipulate inertia—an object's innate resistance to acceleration—and apply it to a spacecraft and you had the ability to reduce, if not negate altogether, its need for propellant. If the sums were right, it would continue to accelerate until it reached light-speed.

The second experiment was tasked with examining the reality of the so-called zero-point energy field and whether it existed at anything like the magnitudes that had been postulated by some scientists. If these people were even half right, Millis said, zero-point energy held enormous significance for space travel and offered entirely new sources of non-polluting energy on Earth.

What, I asked, was zero-point energy?

For some years, Millis replied, there had been a developing understanding that space was not the empty vacuum of traditional theory, but a seething mass of energy, with particles flashing in and out of existence about their "zero-point" baselines. Tests indicated that even in the depths of a vacuum chilled to absolute zero (minus 273.15°C)—the zero point of existence—this energy would not go away. The trouble was, no one knew quite where it was coming from. It was just there, a background radiation source that no one could adequately explain. With millions, perhaps billions, of fluctuations occurring in any given second, it was theoretically possible to draw some—perhaps a lot—of that energy from our everyday surroundings and get it to do useful work. If it could be "mined"—both on Earth and in space—it offered an infinite and potentially limitless energy source.

The third experiment, he continued, would set out to examine the unproven link between electromagnetism and gravity and its possible impact on space-time. Perturbations of space-time not only promised a propulsive antigravitational effect, but opened up other more esoteric possibilities, such as time travel.

I asked Millis if this stuff was for real and for a moment he looked unsure. The mere mention of time travel and we were suddenly into science-fiction territory. It was enough to put any serious scientist on the defensive.

"The immediate utility is not obvious," he said stiffly, "but it's like a foot in the door."

The fourth experiment looked at "superluminal quantum tunneling"-faster-than-light speed. Recent laboratory tests had shown light pulses accelerating beyond the speed of light, thereby shattering Einstein's Theory of Relativity, which said that the light-speed barrier was unbreachable. If a light pulse could arrive at its destination before it left its point of departure, the theory said a spacecraft might be able to as well.

"How it translates into space travel," Millis said, anticipating my next question, "is way down the pike."

Again I was presented with a failure of fit. If NASA was still struggling with the theory now—40 years and a world of knowledge after the pronouncements of George S. Trimble and his colleagues in 1956—what on earth had led them to believe they could crack gravity then?

Something I'd written down tugged me back to the present. I flicked back over the list of experiments and did a quick inventory count.

"You said there were five contracts. I've only got four. What's the fifth?"

He looked momentarily taken aback.

"It's conducted under the auspices of the Marshall Space Flight Center itself," he said. "Since you'd just come from there I rather presumed they'd briefed you on it."

I shook my head. "Briefed me on what?"

Millis reached into a drawer and pulled out a file full of newspaper clippings and magazine articles. He rifled through them until he found what he was looking for, a clipping from Britain's Sunday Telegraph dated September 1,1996. The headline read: "Breakthrough As Scientists Beat Gravity."

"I'm surprised you didn't know about this," he said, pointing to its source.

I said nothing. I had a photocopy of the same story in my files at home. I'd not taken much notice of it because it had seemed totally outlandish.

The story detailed the experiments of a Russian materials scientist called Dr. Evgeny Podkletnov, who claimed to have discovered an

Breakthrough as scientists beat gravity

by ROBERT MATTHEWS and IAN SAMPLE

SCIENTISTS in Finland are about to reveal details of the world's first anti-gravity device. Measuring about 12in across, the device is said to reduce significantly the weight of anything suspended over it.

The claim — which has been rigorously examined by scientists, and is due to appear in a physics journal next month — could spark a technological revolution. By combatting gravity, the most ubiquitous force in the universe, everything from transport to power generation could be transformed.

The Sunday Telegraph has learned that Nasa, the American space agency, is taking the claims seriously, and is funding research into how the anti-gravity effect could be turned into a means of flight.

The researchers at the Tampere University of Technology in Finland, who discovered the effect, say it tures. The team was carrying out tests on a rapidly spinning disc of superconducting ceramic suspended in the magnetic field of three electric coils, all enclosed in a low-temperature vessel called a cryostat.

"One of my friends came in the Journal of Physics-D: Applied Physics, published by Britain's Institute of Physics.

Even so, most scientists will not feel comfortable with the idea of anti-gravity until other teams repeat the experiments.

HOW THE ANTI-GRAVITY DEVICE WORKS
A 1-stone object would lose 4.5oz of its weight through 'shielding' effect of the device
Ring of super conducting ceramic (Yttrium-barium-copper oxide), spinning at 5,000 rpm
Whole assembly cooled with liquid nitrogen
Solenoids used to put magnetic field around ring
Three solenoids, which allow ring to levitate magnetically
Unit approx. 12in diameter

antigravity effect while working with a team of researchers at Tampere University of Technology in Finland. What made the claim different from "so-called 'antigravity' devices put forward by both amateur and professional scientists," wrote the paper's science correspondent, was that it had survived "intense scrutiny by skeptical, independent experts." It had been put forward for publication in Journal of Physics D: Applied Physics, published by Britain's Institute of Physics.

When the Telegraph hit the streets, Podkletnov's world turned upside down. He was abandoned by his friends, ostracized by the university, which claimed that the project did not have its official sanction (and later threw him out), and the journal pulled his paper. Leaving his wife and family in Tampere, Podkletnov returned to Moscow to lick his wounds until the furor had died down.

And all because the Sunday Telegraph had used a single, taboo word in its opening sentence: antigravity. The term may have been vital for 1950s pulp sci-fi, but it had no place in the world of mainstream physics.

What was unfair, was that Podkletnov had been so careful to avoid the term himself. All along, he had referred to the test as a gravity-shielding experiment.

It was still heresy; and he had burned for it.

But here was Millis saying that NASA had taken Podkletnov's claims seriously. Not only that, but NASA had been apprised of the "gravity-shielding" properties of superconductors even before the Sunday Telegraph story broke.

I wondered why no one had told me about all this while I was in Huntsville.

In 1993, the Advanced Concepts office at the Marshall Space Flight Center was handed a copy of a paper written by two physicists, Douglas Torr and Ning Li, at the University of Alabama at Huntsville. It was called "Gravitoelectric-electric coupling via superconductivity" and predicted how superconductors—materials that lose their electrical resistance at low temperatures—had the potential to alter gravity. Even if the amounts were fractional, NASA officials quickly saw the benefits. Applied to something like a rocket, even fractional methods for cutting launch weights would, over time, lead to a considerable reduction in the space agency's fuel bills.

In their paper, Torr and Li went out of their way to avoid the term "antigravity." One whiff of it, they knew, and no one would take their work seriously.

It worked. NASA promised money for an experiment.

But when the Podkletnov story broke, Millis told me, NASA decided to take a multi-path approach instead. First it tried to contact Podkletnov to see if he would share his findings with them. When the Russian refused, it elected to do the experiments itself, setting up the "DeltaG group" at Marshall specifically to look for interactions between superconductors and gravity.

At first, Ning Li, the brilliant Chinese woman scientist who had predicted a one percent weight change in her original calculations, joined forces with the DeltaG effort. Then, apparently frustrated by the pace of work at Marshall, she set up to pursue the experiments on her own. If she was getting anywhere with them, she wasn't saying, all her most recent tests having been conducted behind closed doors.

Since that time, according to Millis, the DeltaG group had found cause to believe that something unusual was happening when gravity fields were influenced by superconductors, although the precise nature of the effect was a matter of conjecture. Podkletnov had claimed that two percent weight reductions were being consistently observed during his experiments—a result, if you could call it that, that was so close to the Torr/Li prediction it was scary.

Like the whirling gyroscopes investigated by BAe, the low percentages were, in a sense, immaterial. What was being talked about here—and apparently engineered by Podkletnov—was a phenomenon that science said was impossible.

The DeltaG experiments at Marshall continued, but, without Podkletnov's input, Millis admitted that things had not gone as fast as NASA would have liked. Part of the problem had been its inability to reproduce superconductors of the size and fidelity Podkletnov said was required to achieve gravity shielding—a term with which even Millis, who was broader-minded than most, was uncomfortable.

"It's more accurate to call it an anomalous gravitational effect, but even that is jumping the gun." It could, he said, simply be an experimental error.

But what if it wasn't? If Podkletnov was right, if he had found a way of altering an object's weight, aerospace was about to change—civilization, too, maybe—and forever. Conscious, no doubt, that it might be staring at the greatest scientific discovery since the bomb, I could see why NASA was hedging its bets.

It had solicited a company in Columbus, Ohio, to try to develop superconducting ceramic discs like those built by Podkletnov. Without the Russian's secret recipe, however, it hadn't been getting on as well as it might. At the time of my visit to Ohio, the Columbus-based company had managed to build small discs, but it still hadn't acquired the knack for turning out the larger variety—the type that Podkletnov said was crucial to the success of the experiment. And this was the bittersweet irony. Being a materials scientist, Podkletnov had an insight into the way the discs were constructed that left NASA, with its $13 billion annual budget, floundering in his wake. Tempting as it was to view Huntsville's silence over Podkletnov as a deliberately misleading omission, I suspected that NASA's impotence in the face of this irony was the real reason no one had mentioned him.

* * *

On the flight down to Texas, I picked through a pile of clippings I'd managed to track down during my brief stopover in Washington. From the little that was known of Podkletnov's Tampere experiments, it was apparent that the superconductors needed to be spun at around 5,000 rpm inside a large steel container filled with liquefied gas for cooling. Electromagnets were used to make the superconductors levitate and get them up to speed. In the absence of any firm data on Podkletnov's discs, though, attempts by NASA to duplicate his work were inconclusive as far as gravity shielding was concerned. A couple of times, the readings had blipped—a little like Dr. Evans' experience with the Kidd inertial thrust machine at BAe—but they were never consistent enough to be taken seriously.

If Podkletnov knew all this, I thought—and somehow or other, I guessed he probably did—then he was more than likely pissing himself laughing.

Either he had perpetrated a fantastic confidence trick, or he really had pulled off one of the greatest scientific discoveries of the 20th century.

So, where the hell was Podkletnov?

The best and only clues to his whereabouts had been provided by an American journalist named Charles Platt who had documented his attempts to track down Podkletnov in a lengthy article for Wired magazine. After the Sunday Telegraph story, Platt managed to get a phone number for Podkletnov and they spoke a couple of times, but only on the basis that Platt wouldn't publish anything without the Russian's consent.

"He told me how he made his discovery," Platt wrote more than a year later, quoting the Russian: " 'Someone in the laboratory was smoking a pipe and the pipe smoke rose in a column above the superconducting disc. So we placed a ball-shaped magnet above the disc, attached to a balance. The balance behaved strangely. We substituted a non-magnetic material, silicon, and still the balance was very strange. We found that any object above the disc lost some of its weight, and we found that if we rotated the disc, the effect was increased.' '

When Platt suggested that huge amounts of energy would be required for this to be remotely so, Podkletnov reportedly became irritated.

"We do not need a lot of energy," he'd snapped back. "We don't absorb the energy of the gravitational field. We may be controlling it as a transistor controls the flow of electricity. No law of physics is broken. I am not one crazy guy in a lab; we had a team of six or seven, all good scientists."

And that, for the next year or so, was that. It was only when an intermediary told Platt that Podkletnov had returned to Finland, where he was now set up as a materials scientist in a local company, that the American jumped in a plane and finally managed to confront the man who'd dared to claim he had shielded gravity.

What Podkletnov had been doing during his yearlong self-imposed exile in Moscow was never made clear, although the Russian soon hinted that he had not been idle. He was quick to explain to Platt that his original findings at Tampere had been meticulously charted using a mercury barometer. Immediately above the superconducting disc, it had registered a 4 mm drop in air pressure, because, the Russian said, emphasizing the point, the air itself had been reduced in weight.

When he'd taken the barometer upstairs, Podkletnov had found the same drop in pressure over the point where the experiment was taking place on the floor below. He went up to the top floor of the building and it was the same thing.

This showed that gravity reduction would not diminish with distance, that the effect had no limit. Podkletnov's gravity shield went on, extending upward in a 30 cm diameter column—forever.

And then, if that wasn't good enough, pay dirt. The two percent weight reduction in all the air above the disc meant that a vehicle equipped with gravity shielding would be able to levitate, buoyed up by the heavier air below.

"I'm practically sure," Podkletnov had told Platt, giving him an intense look, "that within ten years this will be done. If not by NASA, then by Russia."

During his year in Russia, he went on to reveal, he had conducted research at an unnamed "chemical scientific research center" where he had built a device that reflected gravity. By using superconductors, resonating fields and special coatings—and "under the right conditions"—gravitational waves had been repelled instead of blocked. Applied to an air vehicle, Podkletnov said, this "second generation of flying machines will reflect gravity waves and be small, light and fast, like UFOs. I have achieved impulse reflection; now the task is to make it work continuously."

Their meeting over, Podkletnov slipped back into the shadows and Platt returned home. While there had been sightings of Podkletnov in the years since—reports of his whereabouts had surfaced in Japan, Russia and Finland—he had, to all intents and purposes, disappeared again.

Back in the States, Platt canvassed the physics mainstream for its reaction to the Podkletnov claims. Most scientists laughed outright. Gravity shielding, they said, was simply inconceivable.

I made a note on the flight home to ask Marckus to keep his ear to the ground for signs of the Russian's whereabouts. It was tempting to believe that Podkletnov was by now working in the bowels of a crumbling military research institute somewhere deep behind the Urals, refining his experiments to the accompaniment of a howling Siberian gale. And maybe this wasn't a million miles from the truth.

But scientists had a habit of talking to one another, whatever obstacles seemed to separate them. And since Podkletnov had shown himself to be loquacious enough when it suited him, I thought he'd probably surface again before too long.

When he did, I needed to be there.

I was intrigued by the Russian's work. It echoed something that Professor Young had said in his lecture on antigravity—something that had sounded right at the time. If gravity control is ever to be discovered, Young had said, it would most likely be as an unexpected by-product of work in some completely different field. An accident.

Podkletnov hadn't been looking for an antigravity effect. He'd been playing around with superconductors. If he'd been working in a Western laboratory, his discovery might have forever gone unnoticed. But in Russia—and Finland, too, apparently—it was OK to light up a pipe in a room full of test equipment. And, bingo, the smoke had hit the column of shielded air and snaked straight up to the ceiling.

It struck me as not impossible that Podkletnov had discovered—in a million-to-one fluke—what Trimble et al had predicted theoretically in 1956.

Had Podkletnov tripped over the answer and got in by the back door?

If anyone knew, it was Dr. Hal Puthoff, the second of the two contacts passed to me by Marckus during our meeting by the estuary.

Even in the cocooning environment of the aircraft, nursing a stiff drink, I felt anxious at the prospect of meeting him.

Up until now, I'd managed to palm off my interest in NASA's advanced propulsion activities as a quirky sideline to my regular journalistic pursuits. I knew, though, that when I pitched up at Puthoff's door, a discreet address remote from any other legitimate aerospace business, there'd be no hiding what I was really up to.

Chapter 10

I reached Puthoff's offices after a drive through the industrial suburbs of the Texas state capital, parked and double-checked that I had the right address. I had expected the Institute of Advanced Studies to be housed in another windowless science block, a modern version of the concrete edifices at NASA, replete with clean rooms and scientists swishing around in white coats. But the IAS was a small glass-fronted office in a leafy business park. Several of the other lots were vacant and at least one was boarded up.

Puthoff's reputation as a scientist of vast repute went a long way before him. His papers on gravity and inertia were viewed as seminal works by the science community. He also sat on something called the Advanced Deep Space Transport group, ADST, a low-profile organization composed of people that someone had described as being "on the frontier of the frontier." Staffed by select NASA, Air Force and industry representatives, it was the real cutting edge, but you had to know where to look for it.

Puthoff's link to NASA was bound up in theoretical work that he had been conducting since the early 1970s into the zero-point energy field.

Before getting out of the car, I was beset with a rush of all the old doubts. Did I really want to declare my interest in antigravity to a man who had clear connections to the intelligence community?

I checked my watch. It was a little after five-thirty in the morning back in England, but I needed reassurance. I called Marckus on my cell phone.

He picked up on the second ring, sounding bright and alert. I wondered for a moment whether Marckus ever slept, then dispensed with the small talk and told him of my concerns.

Marckus, showing a tendency that would become familiar over the course of our acquaintance—a tendency to impart knowledge well after the time I needed it most—informed me that NASA, being a government institution, was, in effect, the outer marker of an elaborate but invisible security system.

"How's that?" I asked.

"You show up asking the kind of questions you asked at Huntsville and Cleveland and, believe me, someone, somewhere will have registered the fact. I have little doubt that you began pulsing away on radar scopes at government agencies too numerous to mention the moment you even logged your requests to visit NASA. You've already crossed the threshold. It's too late to go back now."

I felt the muscles in my stomach tighten, but I said nothing. This propensity to unsettle was also a part of Marckus' act. I asked him instead, as casually as I could, for a data dump on everything that was known about zero-point energy (ZPE).

I'd already grasped the principles: that space—the air that we breathed, the atoms in our bodies, the far reaches of the cosmos, everything—was filled with a churning "foam" of energy. Its presence was signified by the background static hiss of the universe—something you could hear on a transistor radio—but as far as visual detection went, was invisible. Which was what made it so controversial.

In 1948, Marckus told me, a Dutch physicist, Hendrik Casimir, came up with a theoretical model for proving that the "quantum vacuum" existed. If two aluminum plates were placed very close together, so close that their separation was less than the wavelengths of the fleeting particles in the quantum foam, it followed, Casimir reasoned, that there would be nothing between the plates.

Because the theory said that everything outside the plates would still be seething with zero-point fluctations, the external force pushing in on the plates ought to be enough to close them together, thereby proving the existence of the ZPE field.

The difficulty, however, related to the experiment. To exclude the wavelengths of the fluctuating particles, Casimir's plates had to be exactly parallel and separated by less than one micron—one hundredth the width of a human hair. It wasn't until 1997 that science was able to come up with equipment that could satisfy the tolerances required for the Casimir experiment. When it did, it found that the Casimir Effect existed exactly as predicted.

And with it flowed the corollary that the quantum vacuum, zero-point energy—call it what you will—existed as well.

In principle, there was no reason why mechanisms couldn't be built to tap into this energy.

And since the fleeting particles were popping in and out of existence billions of times every second, on every conceivable frequency, in every possible direction, there was, theoretically speaking, no limit to the amount of energy resulting from the fluctuations.

In principle. Theoretically speaking.

"The argument now is not about whether the ZPE field exists," Marckus concluded, "but about how much energy it contains. It comes down to a difference in people's calculations and interpretations. Some say that there's enough energy in a shoe box to blow the world apart; others say that all the ZPE in the volume of the Earth couldn't boil you an egg with it." He paused. "I think you'll find with Puthoff that it's closer to the shoe-box scenario." And then he signed off.

I locked the car, walked over to the IAS office, pushed the glass and watched as it swung open. There was no one in the front office, so I called out a couple of times and, not getting any answer, moved toward the back of the building. I followed a corridor till I heard a man's voice. Poking my head around a door, I saw Puthoff sitting on the edge of his desk, a phone jammed to his ear. He was shorter than he'd appeared in photographs, but his puckish features and thick head of hair belied his 60-odd years. He waved me in, pointed with a mock grimace to the voice on the other end of the receiver, and gestured for me to grab a seat. A couple of minutes later, he hung up, muttered something about a canceled meeting in Washington, and asked if I'd like a coffee.

While we were standing by the coffee machine, I asked him which of Marckus' analogies he inclined toward.

"If we're right," he said, as I stirred creamer into my coffee, "and you have all possible directions of propagation in the universe, and all possible frequencies and wavelengths, and every one of them has this little contribution of zero-point energy, when you add it all up, the numbers are ridiculous."

"How ridiculous?" I asked.

He paused and added matter-of-factly: "There's enough energy in the volume of your coffee cup to evaporate all the world's oceans many times over."

He showed me a large workshop at the back of the building filled with workbenches, electrodes and measuring equipment. This, Puthoff said, was where he and his small team worked on the ZPE devices that people routinely sent him for analysis; tiny little reactors that supposedly drew energy out of the vacuum of space: the space that we occupied and the space, in its quantum sense, that occupied us.

The machines came in all shapes and sizes. Some were solid-state devices with no moving parts that used the pinching motion of the Casimir effect to create clusters of electrical charge with energy outputs many times greater than the kick they required to get going.

Others used the millions of imperceptible yet infinite movements of the quantum foam to stimulate a vibrating motion in magnetic fields.

These vibrating fields, their proponents claimed, served as "gates" via which unending supplies of vacuum energy could be fed through electronic circuits and put to use.

If they could be proven to work repeatedly and reliably, Puthoff said, imagine it: no more pulling power off the national grid. You'd have a reactor in a box in your backyard; a little thing the size of a microwave oven that sucked energy from the space that it occupied and belted out clean, unending power wherever it was needed. Initial machines would feed power to your house, but later, as they developed in sophistication, just as computers had developed exponentially at the end of the 20th century, these devices would shrink in size and double in output; and they'd keep on shrinking and doubling, over and over, until they'd be small and powerful enough to put in cars or aircraft or submarines. Applications would be limited only by the imagination of the user.

"If," I said. "You said, 'if.' "

"Ah, well, that's the point," he replied. "Of the 30-odd devices that have come through this door, none has passed the magic test yet: a demonstrable measurement of more energy flowing out than is flowing in."

But it would happen. Maybe tomorrow, maybe in 30 years. But for sure, one day someone was going to announce that they'd invented a machine that could extract energy from the immeasurable pulse of the universe. It'd rate a paragraph in the news-briefs columns, but clip it or keep the paper, mark it well, Puthoff said, because on that day the world would change. Nothing would ever be the same again.

As he talked, Puthoff filled in the gaps in the résumé that I'd pulled off the Net. Soon after gaining his master's degree at the University of Florida, he went on active duty as a Naval Intelligence officer seconded to the National Security Agency. When he left the Navy, he converted to civilian status at the NSA, then went on sabbatical at Stanford University in California to get his Ph.D. He gained his Ph.D. in 1967, resigned from the NSA and soon afterward joined the Stanford Research Institute, a spin-off from the university, set up, among other things, to pursue heavily classified research for the U.S. defense and intelligence communities. Puthoff's thing was lasers, but it was at SRI that he developed the notion of the remote-viewing program for the CIA and the DIA. The RV work formed the hub of the "heavily classified research" that he undertook at SRI for the next 13 years.

I asked how he'd made the jump from lasers to remote viewing.

"It sounds weird, but it was a very straightforward thing," he said. In the early 1970s, physicists were searching everywhere for evidence of tachyons—particles that theoretically had the ability to travel faster than light. Finding them was problematic, because, if the theory was right, they couldn't travel below light-speed, making identification somewhat challenging.

Someone had given Puthoff a book called Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain, which mentioned how Soviet scientists were looking for evidence of ESP in plant life. The Russians had connected up a pair of plants to polygraphs, separated them over huge distances and shielded them from all electromagnetic frequencies. They found that when one plant was burned with a cigarette, or even if someone was thinking about it, the other plant responded on the polygraph.

Since one of the postulated characteristics of tachyons was that they could penetrate all kinds of shielding, it occurred to Puthoff that one of the few places that scientists hadn't looked for tachyons was in "organic living systems." He wrote up a proposal that aimed to verify if plants were "tachyonically connected" by linking separated algae cultures with lasers. He sent the proposal to an acquaintance involved in similar work who happened to show it to Ingo Swann, a noted psychic and medium, who in turn approached Puthoff, assuming that he was interested in ESP. Even though he wasn't, Puthoff was sufficiently intrigued to invite Swann to SRI, where he proposed to immerse him in a "shielded quark magnetometer," a "tank" in a vault that was totally cut off from all known emissions and frequencies.

As Swann approached the vault, which he hadn't been forewarned about, he appeared to perturb the operation of the magnetometer. The dials and instruments inside it all flickered into life. He then added insult to injury by remote viewing the interior of the apparatus, "rendering by drawing a reasonable facsimile of its rather complex construction," according to Puthoff, even though details of it had never been published anywhere.

Puthoff wrote up his findings, circulated the report among his colleagues and got on with other work.

A couple of weeks later, the CIA showed up at his door and invited him to set up a classified research program to see if it was technically feasible to use clairvoyance to spy on the Soviet Union. It turned out that the CIA had been tracking Soviet efforts to do the same thing for several years, but didn't believe what it was seeing. It was only when Puthoff wrote up his paper that it put two and two together and thought it'd better set up something of its own. And so the U.S.-controlled remote-viewing program was born, with Puthoff as its director.

For the next decade and a half, U.S. "psychic spies" roamed the Soviet Union, using nothing more than the power of their minds to reconnoiter some of the Russians' most secret R&D establishments. If you believed what you read in published accounts of these people's activities, they were able to roam not merely in three dimensions—up, down, left and right—but in the fourth dimension as well: time. They could go back in time to review targets and they could look at them in the future as well.

Puthoff showed me a picture that one of his team of remote viewers had drawn of an "unidentified research center at Semipalatinsk," which had been deeply involved in Soviet nuclear weapons work. He then showed me some declassified artwork of the same installation, presumably drawn from a U.S. spy satellite photograph. The two were damn near identical.

It all seemed a long way from zero-point energy, gravity and inertia, in which Puthoff had been busying himself even before he left the remote-viewing field.

Or was it?

In a recent paper written by Puthoff, which I had already seen, he'd mentioned that the Russian physicist and Nobel prizewinner Andrei Sakharov had published a paper in 1967 suggesting that gravity and inertia might be linked to what was then still a highly theoretical proposition: vacuum fluctuations of the zero-point energy field. Now that the zero-point energy field had been proven to exist, "there is experimental evidence that vacuum fluctuations can be altered by technological means," Puthoff had written in the paper. "This leads to the corollary that, in principle, gravitational and inertial masses can also be altered."

Puthoff was too smart to use the term—for all the reasons that Podkletnov, Ning Li and the others hadn't—but he was saying that antigravity was indeed possible.

And, so were the Russians. All you had to do—somehow—was perturb the zero-point energy field around an object and, hey presto, it would take off.

I asked him why NASA and the Air Force should be so interested in ZPE when it was obvious that there weren't going to be any practical applications of it for years—maybe centuries.

Puthoff looked at me in a meaningful way. "Unless we find a shortcut."

"Is that a possibility?"

"Podkletnov could have come across a shortcut."

The maverick Russian materials scientist and the idea of pipe smoke hitting a gravity shield had entered the conversation so abruptly that it caught me off guard. Puthoff was saying that anything was possible. And this from a man who had spent most of his professional life plugged into the heart of the classified defense environment.

I probed further, but gently. Were there already forms of aerospace travel out there—in the black world, maybe—whose principles contravened, if not the laws of physics, then at least our understanding of aerodynamics?

He sucked the top of his pen, giving the question a lot of thought before responding. "I've certainly talked to people who claim that something is going on," he said, pausing to add: "I would say the evidence is pretty solid."

I felt myself rock back on my chair.

I eased back on to the more comfortable subject of the NASA BPP study. "Which of the five methods outlined in Breakthrough Propulsion Physics would you say is the one most likely to have a payoff?" I asked him.

Because of Puthoff's promotion of ZPE, I thought it inevitable that this explanation would have figured in his answer. But it didn't. Without even thinking about it, he said his money was on the third experiment—the one about perturbing space-time; antigravity from time travel.

Given Puthoff's strong connections to the military-intelligence community, it was tempting to dismiss all such talk as a deliberate blind, something to lead me away from a more probable area of breakthrough. But it didn't seem that way at all.

I liked Puthoff. He seemed on the level. Besides, one thing I had learned after years of formal briefings and interviews was how difficult scientists found it to lie when confronted with a direct question on their chosen subject. Spooks could lie at the drop of a hat. It was what they were trained to do. But scientists found it inherently unnatural, since it contravened all their instincts to match a question quid pro quo with data.

Puthoff's answer to the question had been swift and visceral. And there had been something else, too; a look on his face, a willingness to confront my gaze, that in itself conveyed information.

We'd been talking about breakthroughs—events that, at a stroke, had the power to short-circuit the evolutionary development of technology.

The important thing about breakthroughs was that they didn't happen over an extended period of time. They changed things overnight. And they could occur at any moment.

It was only later, when I was back on the freeway, crawling south in the bumper-to-bumper traffic, that I had the feeling he'd been trying to tell me that some kind of payoff from the third experiment had already produced tangible results.

Chapter 11

If antigravity had been discovered in the white world, then someone, somewhere had to be perfecting it—maybe even building real hardware—in the black. The trouble was, I had no idea where to begin looking for it. Contrary to the implicit promise of revelation contained in Dr. Dan Marckus' hints by the estuary, neither Lyles nor Puthoff had taken me any further in so far as hard-and-fast leads were concerned.

On my return, I tried to raise Marckus. I left several messages on his answering machine. In the first of them I foolishly spelled out the fact that I didn't know a whole lot more—beyond strict theory, at least—than I had before my trip to the States.

During subsequent calls, as the answering machine clicked in, I just knew that Marckus was there—listening in, but refusing to pick up. I was beginning to get the measure of this relationship. Marckus gave a little and I had to give something back. He now knew that I had returned from the States with nothing, so he was punishing me for it. Well, I didn't need to play psych games with some spook academic with a warped taste for drama. I had enough on my plate already—a major feature article on stealth technology to deliver. Antigravity, for the time being, was going to have to go on the back burner and Marckus could stew with it.

As background, I reread an account of what is probably the most definitive history of stealth to date: Skunk Works, the story of Lockheed Martin's super-secretive special projects facility, as told by the guy who had run it for 16 years, Ben Rich.

In the summer of 1976, America's leading radar expert, Professor Lindsay Anderson of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, arrived at what was then the Lockheed Skunk Works in Burbank, California, with a bag of ball bearings in his briefcase. The ball bearings ranged in size from a golf ball to an eighth of an inch in diameter. Rich, a grizzled veteran of Lockheed's secret projects department for more than 25 years, led Anderson to a mocked-up design of a funny-looking diamond-shaped aircraft, poised on a plinth in the middle of a blacked-out hangar.

Over the course of the day, Anderson repeatedly attached the ball bearings to the nose of the aircraft, starting with the largest and ending with the smallest, while Lockheed engineers fired radar signals at it. What they were looking to measure was the radar cross section, or RCS, of the prototype aircraft, code-named Have Blue. The moment the radar picked up the ball bearing instead of the aircraft behind it was the moment its RCS could be accurately plotted.

When the test was over, Anderson zipped the bearings back into his case, left the site as quietly as he'd arrived and returned to MIT to process the data.

A few days later, Rich received a telegram from the air force chief of staff. Have Blue had been classified "Top secret—Special Access Required," a security grading reserved only for "quantum leaps"-programs that jumped right over the state of the art. The first of these super-secret "black" programs had been the atomic bomb. The telegram had just pitched "stealth" into the same category of secrecy.

Have Blue's RCS had bettered every single one of the ball bearings Anderson had attached to it—even the one that was sized down to an eighth of an inch. This gave the aircraft and its operational successor, the F-117A Stealth Fighter, a radar signature equal to that of a bee-sized insect. Stealth, which up to that point had been viewed by skeptics as nothing more than puff and magic, suddenly went "deep black"—so secret that no one outside the program would ever know it was there. Lockheed had discovered a way of making aircraft invisible to radar, but the stakes were far, far higher even than that.

Soon after the late 1977 first flight of Have Blue from the U.S. Air Force's remote testing base on the dry desert lake bed at Groom Lake, Nevada, also known as Area 51, Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser, flew into the facility in an unmarked jet and grilled Rich about the true significance of his firm's breakthrough. Rich put it on the line for him.

"It changes the way that air wars will be fought from now on. And it cancels out all the tremendous investment the Russians have made in their defensive ground-to-air system. We can overfly them any time at will."

"There is nothing in the Soviet system that can spot it in time to prevent a hit?" Brzezinski asked, jotting notes as he talked and listened.

"That is correct," Rich replied simply.

After more than three decades of standoff between the two superpowers, the realization made Carter's national security chief catch his breath. If the Russians wanted to match stealth with counterstealth, theoretically they could do it, but it would bankrupt them in the process.

Stealth had the power to end the Cold War, but it also had the power in the meantime—should the Russians realize what the Americans were up to—to trigger World War Three.

Have Blue was a strange-looking aircraft. It didn't look mean and hungry. It didn't look like the kind of plane that could start and end wars. It had the appearance of a bunch of bolted-on geometric shapes that had somehow been hammered into the vague outline of a jet. It turned out there was more than a good reason for that.

Have Blue hadn't been the creative inspiration of an aerodynamicist, but of a mathematician.

Begin with what you can see, then search for what you can't.

As I wrestled with the stealth feature, Marckus' words from our meeting battered around my head, forming as a dark thought with a black body and soft wings.

I had trawled the white world and found five possible pathways to antigravity: manipulating an object's mass and/or inertia; exploitation of the zero-point energy field; perturbations of the space-time continuum; faster-than-light travel; and gravity shielding. None of them was visible in the developmental activities of the U.S. aerospace industry, but just because you couldn't see them, it didn't mean they weren't there.

Just as it had, or hadn't been with stealth a decade and a half earlier.

Ben Rich and I had sparred on a number of occasions on the stealth question—most recently at an air show where he'd turned up, desperately ill with cancer, to promote his book. I'd respected him utterly and liked him hugely, sensing in his presence the grit and wisdom of a generation of postwar aviation pioneers that wouldn't be around us for much longer.

It was Rich who'd once told me of a place—a virtual warehouse—where ideas that were too dangerous to transpose into hardware were locked away forever, like the Ark of the Covenant in the final scene of Raiders of the Lost Ark. It had almost happened to stealth.

By starting with stealth, something that I knew about, something I could see, maybe I could pick up traces of that energy, the friction that astronomers looked for when hunting down black holes.

In the year ahead, the calendar of aerospace and defense events showed that I had multiple excuses for visiting the States—to look for the self-generated heat of a buried antigravity effort's interaction with the real world.

As I sat behind my desk, calling contacts and sources in an effort to plug holes in the incomplete, still highly secret history of stealth, I could hear the faint echo of a signal. It was almost impossible to decipher, but the cold side of my training, the part I kept separate from the muffled wing beats of the creature let loose upon my thinking by Marckus, said antigravity had something to do with the shared origins of the two most powerful weapons of the 20th century—stealth and the atomic bomb.

Have Blue would never have happened, but for the work of a retired Lockheed math guru named Bill Schroeder and a Skunk Works software engineer named Denys Overholser. Schroeder revisited a set of mathematical formulae originally derived by Maxwell and refined by a turn-of-the-century German electromagnetics expert called Arnold Johannes Sommerfeld. Between them, these two physicists predicted the manner in which a given geometric shape would scatter or reflect electromagnetic radiation. A Russian, Pyotr Ufimtsev, honed their work into a more simplified set of equations in the early 1960s, but Ufimtsev could only apply the equations to the most basic geometric shapes. Schroeder's and Overholser's breakthrough had been to take Ufimtsev's concept and apply it to the inherently complex form of an aircraft, rejecting the regular smooth, curved lines of aerodynamic aesthetics in favor of a set of ugly flat, angled panels. If an aircraft could be broken down into hundreds, maybe thousands of these two-dimensional shapes, if each flat surface or "facet" could be angled in a way that would reflect an incoming radar beam away from its source, and if the combined shape could still create lift, then a true "stealth" aircraft was possible.

The irony, of course, was that stealth was in part a Soviet invention. The Soviets had allowed Ufimtsev's paper to be published, because no one east of the Iron Curtain had entertained the idea that such a complex set of equations could ever be applied to an aircraft. It had taken Overholser to pick it out from hundreds of other ponderous Soviet science texts and draw the necessary conclusions.

Stealth, like the bomb, then, had owed its genesis to algebraic formulae. In a sense, it was pure accident that it had been discovered within the nuts-and-bolts world of the aerospace industry.

Podkletnov's apparent discovery of gravity shielding in Tampere, Finland, had been an accidental by-product of the Russian's work with superconductors.

What they all shared was their origins in pure math and physics.

That thought gnawed at me as, working through a decade's worth of my files, I began to reimmerse myself in the world of the F-l 17A Stealth Fighter, Have Blue's operational successor.

Lockheed was used to black programs. It had built the U-2 spyplane that the CIA had used to overfly the Soviet Union on reconnaissance missions in the late 1950s and it had developed the Mach 3.2 A-12 for the CIA as the U-2's successor. Both projects had come together under rules of draconian secrecy, but stealth, from a security standpoint, would need to be protected even more stringently. The problem facing Rich and his customer in the Pentagon, the Air Force Special Projects Office, was how to go about shielding an entire industry. The U-2 and the A-12 had been built in "onesies and twosies," but the F-117A was required in multiple squadron strength. Clearly, there would come a time when the program would need to be revealed, but the longer it could be shielded from public view, the less time the Russians would have to react when it finally emerged into the light.

Rich was one of five Lockheed employees cleared for top secret work and above. Everyone else connected with the program—including several thousand factory floor workers—had to be rigorously security-checked. And nothing about their lives was off-limits. "Security's dragnet poked and prodded into every nook and cranny of our operation," Rich wrote years later. It almost drove him insane.

As the F-117A began to take shape at Burbank, arrangements were made to accommodate it operationally. A secret base was constructed in the desert at Tonopah, Nevada, and pilots were asked to volunteer without being told anything about the assignment. In New Mexico, at a radar range miles from the nearest public land, the final configuration of the F-l 17A was subjected to more RCS checks to validate its insect-like radar properties. When the aircraft made its first flight, in June 1981, it did so at Area 51, shielded from the remotest scrutiny by the jagged mountains of southern Nevada and a crack air force special forces unit authorized to use "lethal force" to protect Groom Lake from intruders.

As production ramped up under the administration of the hawkish presidential incumbent, Ronald Reagan, who took office in 1980, it rapidly became clear that the Skunk Works was outgrowing its Burbank facilities and so plans were drawn up to relocate the plant eastward, to Palmdale, on the edge of California's Mojave Desert. Palmdale was also home to a giant new production facility operated by Northrop, designer of the B-2, the USAF's four-engine strategic Stealth Bomber. The B-2 was black, but not as black as the F-l 17A. This meant it was acknowledged to exist, even though the rudiments of its design were classified.

It was in this triangle of land, bordered by New Mexico to the south, California to the west and Nevada to the northeast, that people—ordinary people—started seeing things on moonlit desert nights that they could not correlate with the known facts. Speculation grew that a "stealth fighter" program of some description existed—and almost certainly at Lockheed, where security in recent years had tightened considerably—but the detail was invariably way off the mark. And since the money for the F-117A program—to the tune of several billion dollars—had been appropriated from the Pentagon's "black budget," ring-fenced as it was from public scrutiny, that was how things remained until late 1988, when the outgoing Reagan administration revealed just what it had hushed up for so many years.

The F-117A, the bland press release stated, had gone operational in 1983. For five years, its pilots had operated at squadron strength "in the black," roaming the desert night skies of the U.S. Southwest, practicing for the nighttime attack mission they would be required to perform in a war. The disclosure had only been made at all because the air force wanted to expand the training envelope and start flying the F-117A by day. Otherwise it would have remained buried even longer.

During the F-l 17A's five years of secret ops, thousands of workers had been involved in the assembly process at Burbank; hundreds more in supporting the aircraft at Tonopah. And yet, not one had breathed a word about it.

The big story in November 1988, then, related to the existence and capabilities of the Stealth Fighter, a program that rivaled the scale and daring of the Manhattan Project almost 50 years earlier. Like the bomb program, the F-117A had been meticulously covered up, but unlike the bomb program, the secrecy had held. With hindsight, this was understandable. The moment the U.S. government had decided not just to develop the bomb, but to use it on the enemy, its security was compromised. Atom spies sympathetic to the Soviet Union—the liberal, heady atmosphere of Los Alamos cultivated them like seeds in a hothouse—were always going to ensure that details of the weapon would be passed to Moscow; and the traffic merely accelerated when it was dropped on the Japanese.

The logic these people had applied in betraying their country was simple. They didn't want America to have a monopoly on such a devastatingly powerful strand of weapons technology. By passing bomb secrets to the Russians, the atom spies believed they were restoring the balance of power and making the world a safer place. It was a lesson that U.S. security managers would not forget.

Stealth was a passive technology. It did not need to be "dropped" on an unsuspecting enemy, but it had the power to begin and end wars just the same. Because it didn't need to be revealed, it had been easy to cover up, until the moment it suited the U.S. government to make the revelation—to bring it out of the black. Neglected in the process of disclosure, however, was any analysis of the system that had allowed this superhuman feat of engineering and parallel security to materialize; and the black world was a system—a huge, sprawling machine.

Between the bomb and the Stealth Fighter, a massive security structure had swung into place to protect America's ever-proliferating black programs. And in the vastness of the desert, it wasn't hard for individuals—the little cogs of the machine—to develop a sense of their frailty. The desert had been a good place to build the bomb and the perfect place to field stealth. It had swallowed both programs—the weapons and the people who'd constructed them—whole.

If antigravity was real—and by now I believed the white world contained evidence that something was going on—the desert was where it would have come together.

According to Marckus, the black world had known I was coming from the moment I set foot in NASA and had had plenty of time to prepare for my visits.

In London, I struggled to make the right connections.

I returned to something Marckus had said during our meeting by the estuary; something about the Northrop B-2 Stealth Bomber. There was a strand of thought, even among some quite high-profile academics, that the B-2 used some kind of antigravity drive system. I wasn't inclined to believe the story at face value. But with scant entry points to the black world, it seemed, for the moment, as good a place as any to start. If there were lessons still to be learned from the media's coverage of the F-l 17A in the early 1980s—before the program had been revealed, but when people were reporting things they couldn't explain in the night skies of California, Nevada and New Mexico—the most appropriate was the old one about smoke and fire.

The detour through NASA had pointed up five possible pathways to antigravity's application in the black world: manipulating an object's mass and/or inertia; exploitation of the zero-point energy field; perturbations of the space-time continuum; faster-than-light travel; and gravity shielding. Of the five, two (space-time and faster-than-light) were patently out of the question—the B-2 was not a time machine and it could not even muster the speed of sound—and two more (mass/inertia manipulation and zero-point exploitation) were still some way from a practical breakthrough. Only one, the last of the five, seemed to have resulted in any kind of payoff. And Podkletnov had tripped over it by accident because of somebody's pipe smoke, which meant it had been out there, waiting to be discovered, for as long as anyone needed it.

Applied to the B-2, using some of the many billions that had gone into its development, the kind of weight reductions that the Russian had been reporting (anywhere from 2 percent to 5 percent) would have been highly significant. The B-2 had already shown its ability to fly halfway around the world and back—a 37-hour, 29,000-nautical-mile return flight from Whiteman Air Force Base, Missouri, to Guam in the Pacific with several air-to-air refuelings en route. With gravity shielding—if such a thing could be moved from the laboratory to a fully fledged aircraft program—either its range could be extended or the number of midair refuelings cut. Either of these would make the technology a powerful draw.

The biggest argument against the existence of antigravity technology had seemed to me to be the lack of any visible hardware from production programs. Now, I was having to confront the possibility that antigravity played a vital part in the most important technological development since the bomb.

Chapter 12

I'd been aware of rumors about the B-2 for some time, but they were so bizarre as to be quite unbelievable, so I'd ignored them completely. In following the thread that had been dropped by Marckus at the estuary, however, I discovered that it led somewhere that was already familiar. The chief proponent of the idea that the B-2 utilized an exotic propulsion source was my old friend Paul LaViolette, the Ph.D. who had tripped over the reference to antigravity in the Library of Congress.

LaViolette had written an elegant thesis about the B-2 and its antigravitational properties soon after the publication of a revelatory article in Aviation Week, the "bible" of the U.S. aerospace industry, in which a number of black-world engineers had whistle-blown to the author, the magazine's West Coast editor, Bill Scott, about a host of amazing new technologies supposedly being developed in the deeply classified environment. One of these related to "electrostatic field-generating techniques" in the B-2's wing leading edge with a view to reducing the giant Stealth Bomber's radar cross section.

LaViolette had taken this revelation and coupled it to his own knowledge of Thomas Townsend Brown's work and patents and drawn the conclusion that the B-2 was the embodiment of Project Winterhaven, T.T. Brown's proposal in 1952 to the U.S. military for a Mach 3 saucer-shaped interceptor powered exclusively by electrogravitics—antigravity.

In an essay entitled "The U.S. Antigravity Squadron," LaViolette outlined the reasoning behind his extraordinarily bold assertion.

The B-2, he held, was simply a scaled-up version of the subscale discs, the little charged saucer-shaped condensers, that had whizzed around Brown's laboratories in front of multiple witnesses from the U.S. Air Force and Navy in the late '40s and early '50s. If true, it explained why superficially the U.S. Air Force had shown such little interest in Winterhaven, while on the inside—I remembered the recovered transcripts of conversations between Air Force generals Bertrandias and Craig following the former's visit to Brown's lab in 1952—those who had seen the tests were going apoplectic with excitement.

While conventional wisdom had it that the B-2's outer skin was composed of a highly classified radar-absorbent material (RAM) that made it invisible to radar, LaViolette plausibly argued that the RAM was in fact a ceramic dielectric material able to store high amounts of electric charge. The material was said to be made from powdered depleted uranium—an incredibly hard substance, commonly used to tip armor-piercing tank shells—with three times the density of the "high-k" ceramics proposed by Brown in the 1950s. This would give the B-2 "three times the electrogravitic pull" of the Mach 3 saucer at the heart of the Winterhaven study.

Another useful bit of synchronicity was the fact that Brown had, for a short period of time, worked for General Electric, the company responsible for the B-2's engines.

But try as I might, I couldn't get LaViolette's theory to fit. For the thesis to be accurate, it hinged on something approximating a switch in the Stealth Bomber's two-man cockpit that would permit the aircraft to transition from normal jet-powered flight—something, according to LaViolette, that it used on takeoff and landing and other occasions where witnesses might be present—to antigravity cruise mode.

If there were such a thing as this switch, I knew, pound to a penny, dollar to a cent, its existence would have leaked.

The B-2 first flew in 1989 and the first operational aircraft arrived at Whiteman Air Force Base in 1993. A total of 20 aircraft had been built at $2 billion a shot and all of them had been delivered by the end of the decade. Dozens of crewmembers had been trained in that time, and many of them had been interviewed. The B-2 had started as a black program (or more accurately, a dark-gray one, since its existence had been confirmed officially from the start, all other details being classified). But now it was in the open, albeit, still, with some highly classified features. Pilots—an inherently talkative breed—would have let it slip somewhere along the line. Rumors would have developed about such a switch. But they never had. Moreover, B-2 pilots and engineers hadn't just denied the antigravity story, they had scoffed at it openly. Intuitively, my colleagues and I were agreed, the B-2 antigravity story was wrong. In fact, the whole notion of it was absurd.

The end result was that "the B-2 as antigravity vehicle" had been consigned to the columns of conspiracy mags and tabloids; the mainstream aerospace press, afraid of an adverse reaction from its conservative readership, had refused to touch it.

With one exception.

Enter Britain's most eminent aerospace journalist, Bill Gunston, OBE, Fellow of the Royal Aeronautical Society, and an article he'd penned entitled "Military Power."

Gunston, who served as a pilot in the RAF from 1943 to 1948, was scrupulous over his facts—as editor of Jane's yearbook on aero-engine propulsion, he had to be. "Military Power," published in Air International magazine, was a walk-through dissertation on the development of aero-engine technology since the end of the Second World War; good, solid Gunston stuff.

Until the last couple of pages, when, to the uninitiated, it appeared that the aerospace doyen had lost his mind. Gunston not only portrayed the B-2 antigravity drive story as fact, but went on to reveal how he had been well acquainted with the rudiments of T.T. Brown's theories for years, but had "no wish to reside in the Tower [of London], so had refrained from discussing clever aeroplanes with leading edges charged to millions of volts positive and trailing edges to millions of volts negative."

Gunston explained why he felt that there was much more to the B-2 than met the eye, drawing on a lifetime of specialized knowledge. In short, if you applied the laws of aerodynamics and basic math to the known specifications of the B-2, there was a glaring mismatch in its published performance figures.

It was clear, Gunston said, that the thrust of each GE engine was insufficient to lift the 376,500-pound listed gross weight of the aircraft at takeoff.

The only way the B-2 could get into the air, therefore, was for it somewhere along the line to shed some of its weight. And that, of course, was impossible, unless you applied the heretical principles of Thomas Townsend Brown to the aircraft's design spec. The B-2 wasn't a black world aircraft program anymore. It was operational, had been blooded in combat and was frequently exhibited to the public. If it used an antigravity drive system, the proof of the phenomenon existed in plain sight.

If it didn't, then someone, somewhere had gone to some lengths to make a number of highly respected aerospace experts believe that it did.

In October 1990, Aviation Week published a report based on an analysis of 45 different daylight and nighttime eyewitness observations of strange aircraft over the desert Southwest—Bill Scott's backyard. In this, he concluded that there were "at least two—but probably more—types of vehicles" beyond the F-l 17A and B-2 under test. One was a "triangular-shaped, quiet aircraft seen with a flight of F-l 17A stealth fighters several times since the summer of 1989"; another was a "high-speed aircraft characterized by a very deep, rumbling roar reminiscent of heavy lift rockets"; a third was a "high-altitude aircraft that crosses the night sky at extremely high speed . . . observed as a single, bright light—sometimes pulsating—flying at speeds far exceeding other aircraft in the area." Because the latter was always seen above 50,000 feet, where you wouldn't routinely expect to hear engine noise, Scott deduced that the second and third aircraft might be one and the same type.

Speculation that the Reagan administration had embarked on a massive program of black world aerospace and defense research began circulating in earnest among Washington reporters and defense journalists following the publication of a "line item" called "Aurora" in the Pentagon's fiscal year 1986 budget. Aurora was supposedly a "sleeper site" used by the Pentagon for burying B-2 funds at a time when the Stealth Bomber was still highly classified. But this explanation, put about by "highly placed Pentagon sources" when the Aurora story hit the streets, simply smacked of backpedaling. As Aurora was listed under the "Other Aircraft" category and was projected to receive a huge increase in funding between fiscal years '86 and '87—a jump from $80.1 million to $2.272 billion—the sleuths concluded that its inclusion in the budget request was a genuine mistake, that the aircraft was real and, because it was listed in the "reconnaissance" section, must have been a replacement for the Mach 3.2 Lockheed Blackbird, which was earmarked to retire from its strategic spying duties in the early 1990s.

Then, when that dark triangular shape was seen by a trained Royal Observer Corps spotter over the oil rig in 1989, people put two and two together and deduced that Aurora wasn't just a line item, but a real flying aircraft.

One of the supreme ironies of the black budget system is that, thanks to U.S. bureaucratic procedure, you can work out, almost to the cent, what the Pentagon is spending on its most deeply classified programs. Every year its financial planners submit an unclassified version of the defense budget to Congress. It is a remarkably detailed document, listing major line items of expenditure in the military research and development (R&D) and weapons procurement arenas. Trawl down the list, however, and some of the dollar values of these line items are missing. Many of those in this category have strange-sounding code names like Forest Green, Senior Year, Chalk Eagle or Centennial. Others have curiously nondescript headings such as "special applications program" or "special analysis activities."

These are black programs. Because the unclassified budget includes accurate total budgets for all three armed services, all you need do is subtract the total dollar value of the line items from each category, and the difference is what the Pentagon is spending on black world research and acquisition.

In 1988, the total was computed to be $30 billion for R&D and secret weapons programs—more than the entire annual defense budget of a major European NATO nation such as Britain, France or Germany.

What we were talking here was an industry within an industry, multiple layers deep and compartmentalized to death horizontally. The black world's inaccessibility was based not just on its segregation from the outside, but on the inability of managers and engineers in one of its compartments, or on one of its layers, to have oversight of anything that wasn't within his or her "need to know."

In a system whose existence had been designed to be denied, examples were few and far between, but one shone clear. General George Sylvester, head of the Air Force's R&D program in 1977, was not "accessed" to the Lockheed Have Blue program, even though the program itself was run out of his office at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. One of the "bright young colonels" at Air Force Special Projects in Washington who ran the Air Force's portion of the black budget had decided to cut Sylvester out of the loop.

It was small wonder, then, that reporters and investigators began to level the charge that the black world had spiraled out of control.

How deep did the layers go? How many compartments did the system contain? What kind of technologies were being pursued within it?

The truth was, nobody knew. The black world was labyrinthine and it was essentially unaccountable; its whole system of compartmentalization so convoluted, so tortuous, that if people like Sylvester had been excluded, then God only knew how many others who should have had the "need to know," didn't.

It was in this climate of hidden expenditure that Bill Scott reported what he was seeing and hearing in and around Palmdale.

The prognosis was that Aurora was a massive leap forward in aerospace terms, that it was powered by a new form of "combined-cycle" engine fueled by liquid methane or hydrogen to give it a cruise speed anywhere up to Mach 8—5,300 mph. It was also a fair bet, Scott and others reported, that the Lockheed Skunk Works, which was in the process of shifting to Palmdale, was the firm responsible for building it.

Outwardly, the Skunk Works had next to no work on the stocks, but something was keeping its 4,000 employees busy just the same and something was rattling the windows of the desert Southwest at night.

From mid-1991 until the mid-'90s, the U.S. Geological Survey, the agency that monitors earthquake activity, revealed that an unknown aircraft, with sound footprints different from the SR-71 or the Space Shuttle, was causing "airquakes" as it crossed the California coastline from the Pacific, heading inland for southern Nevada. Couple this with some fresh U.S. eyewitness sightings after the North Sea encounter of a huge, arrow-shaped aircraft that left a weird, knotted contrail in its wake and made a noise "like the sky tearing apart," and a recent program of expansion at the Air Force's test site at Area 51 in southern Nevada, and it all added up to a black world economy that was, so to speak, booming, too; a situation that continued even after the Cold War ended.

Following the dissolution of the Soviet Union, the U.S. Air Force budget, in concert with those of the other armed services, was cut and black world funding along with it. But as a proportion of the overall budget, the classified segment of the USAF's R&D and acquisition spending actually increased and, even in the mid—late 1990s, hovered comfortably at around the $11 billion a year mark. This left more than enough money for the Air Force to pursue a range of exotic technologies for the 21st century.

In early 1992, Scott was contacted by a group of black world engineers who had decided to break cover and talk about some of the programs they were working on. Their reasoning was simple. The Cold War was over and there was no need for the U.S. government to protect some of its most highly classified technologies any longer. Some of these technologies, the engineers told the reporter, could actually be spun into the white world of commercial aerospace programs to give the U.S. an enormous economic advantage over its international aerospace trade rivals.

In revealing their presence to Scott, they acknowledged that they were breaking a "code of silence that rivals the Mafia's." The dangers of their approach were already manifest. Two engineers said that their civil rights had been "blatantly abused" by their black world controllers in a bid to prevent them from leaving the deeply classified environment.

"Once you're in, they don't let you go," one of them said.

Amidst the revelations that the engineers dangled in front of Scott were a number of technologies for reducing the visible signatures of the B-2.

To people in the business, Northrop's winning of the $40 billion Stealth Bomber competition against Lockheed in 1981 had long been something of a mystery. It was, after all, Lockheed that had made the breakthrough in mathematically computing stealth in 1975. But then, the

F-117A, composed of its mass of angled flat panels, was "first-generation stealth."

The B-2, or the Advanced Strategic Penetrating Aircraft, as it was known when it was still deeply gray, was a second-generation aircraft and this, according to Northrop, was manifest in its blended aerodynamic shape. Instead of being rough and angular like the F-117A, it was smooth and rounded—a product, Northrop claimed, of five years' worth of improvements in computing technology between the start of the Have Blue program and the ASPA.

Improved software algorithms processing had allowed Northrop to come up with a shape—a refinement of the YB-49 flying wing jet bomber it had first flown in 1947—that allowed the aircraft to look and fly right and to remain invisible on enemy radar screens.

Not only that, but according to LaViolette it had the capability to fly electrogravitically as well.

In my basement, where the noise of the city couldn't intrude upon the sort of silence you needed to sift a decade's worth of documents and files on the arcane properties of stealth, I still wasn't happy about LaViolette's assertion, because of the absence of that all-important switch, the one that kicked in the B-2's antigravity drive system.

There was one other beguiling aspect to Scott's story. His sources said that charging the airframe electrostatically not only helped to make the B-2 stealthy, it also reduced friction heating of the airframe, its sonic footprint and its drag.

This last point was crucial. If it were possible to alter the "drag" or air resistance of an aircraft, you could either make it fly farther or faster or both.

The drag reduction system was supposed to work as follows: By creating an electrostatic field ahead of an aircraft, it ought in theory to repel air molecules in the aircraft's path, allowing the plane, in effect, to slip through the atmosphere like a thin sliver of soap through warm water.

Like antigravity itself, the whole notion of using electricity fields to reduce aircraft drag was heresy—it was, according to traditionalists, just smoke and mirrors. But here, in Scott's article, was a reference to Northrop having conducted high-grade research in 1968 on just such a phenomenon: the creation of "electrical forces to condition the air flowing around an aircraft at supersonic speeds." Furthermore, the California-based aircraft company had supposedly submitted a paper on the subject to the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics that same year.

I hit the Net and went into the AIAA website, then did a title search. But the papers on the AIAA site went back only as far as 1992 and I was out of time.

I rubbed my eyes. In two days I was due to attend an aerospace convention in Las Vegas. And I wasn't any closer to solving the puzzle.

Or was I?

During the Second World War, I remembered Thomas Townsend Brown had been involved in experiments that sought to show how you could make a ship disappear on a radar screen by pumping it with large doses of electricity. Between 1941 and 1943, Brown had supposedly been involved in tests, I saw now, that were identical in principle to the methodology that Northrop seemed to have applied to the B-2 to make it the ultimate word in stealth. Researchers had never taken Brown's wartime experiments seriously because the precise nature of the work had been obscured by the myth of parallel dimensions aboard the USS Eldridge—the ship at the heart of the "Philadelphia Experiment." Brown had also used electrostatics to power his model discs and, by his own testimony and that of witnesses—including a general from the U.S. Air Force—they had flown by defying gravity.

Could it really be that in researching the B-2 I had picked up the threads of T. T. Brown's work again? Work that the U.S. had continued to develop in the black?

I jotted the keywords on a piece of paper, like a crossword player consigning letters to a page in the hope of unraveling an anagram. Brown—electrostatics—stealth—antigravity—and then, against my better judgment—parallel dimension.

I studied the words for a long time, but nothing jumped out at me.

Below: Alleged photograph of Rudolph Schriever.

Right: The Legend's rendition of the Schriever/ Habermohl/Miethe disc.

Right: Richard Miethe.

Below: Artist's impression of foo-fighters engaging a formation of B-17 bombers. (All images via Bill Rose)

Above: Thomas Townsend Brown.

Right: Patent illustration showing experimental layout of the charged condenser plates Brown demonstrated to the US Air Force and Navy.

Aug. 16, 1960 T. T. BROWN 2,949,550
ELECTROKINETIC APPARATUS
Filed July 3, 1957 2 Sheets-Sheet 2

FIG. 6
40
43
44
45
46
47
41
56
57
57
56
50
53
55
HV SOURCE
56
57
FIG. 7
57
50
51
54
55
56
HV
FIG. 8
65
66
62
61
67
63
64
60
HV

INVENTOR
THOMAS TOWNSEND BROWN
BY ATTORNEYS

THOMAS TOWNSEND BROWN:
BAHNSON LAB 1958-1960

ELECTROGRAVITICS LEVITATION EXPERIMENTS

ORIGINAL SILENT FOOTAGE TRANSFERRED TO VHS VIDEO

See New Styles of Electrogravitic Prototypes Designed for Vertical Flight and Hovering, Captured on Film at the Bahnson Laboratory

/Above: Brown holding a disc capacitor prior to charging.

Left: A demonstration of electrogravitic lift at the Bahnson Laboratories in the late 1950s.
(All images via the Integrity Research Institute)

Left: John Frost.

Below: A cutaway illustration of the Avro Silverbug showing the radial flow gas-turbine.

Below: John Frost (right) with other members of the Avro SPG team in front of the Avrocar. (All images via Bill Rose)

Above: A full-scale engineering mock-up of the Project Y Manta at Avro's factory in Malton, Ontario.

Right: General arrangement of the proposed Avro Project 1794, showing arrangement for its six Viper turbojets.

Below: Avro's test-rig for the Mach 4 Project 1794 saucer. (All images via Bill Rose)

UPPER IMPELLER AND TURBINE
PILOT'S COCKPIT
UPPER AND LOWER INTAKES INTEGRAL FUEL TANKS FLAME HOLDERS ENGINE INTAKE OUTER WING
FLIGHT CONTROL SHUTTERS
INNER WING DIFFUSER SECTION
TURBINE EXHAUST
6 A. S. M. VIPER 8 ENGINES
LOWER IMPELLER AND TURBINE ENGINE TAILPIPE
SECTION A-A

Above: British Aerospace's concept of an advanced fighter interceptor, powered by an anti-gravity lift engine.

Below: Another British Aerospace design for a heavy-lift anti-gravity vehicle. (Both images via BAE Systems)

Above left: Tom Valone of the Integrity Research Institute. (Tom Valone)

Above right Paul LaViolette. (Paul LaViolette Ph.D.)

Below: Dr Evgeny Podkletnov (left) with Dr Ron Evans, Head of BAE Systems' Project Greenglow. (BAE Systems)

Above: The Northrop Grumman B-2 Stealth Bomber. (Northrop Grumman)

+
+
+
B-2
G FORCE
G Field
G Field
+
-

Left and below: LaViolette's schematic illustrations of the B-2's electrogravitic drive system, showing positive and negative charge and flow distribution. (Electrogravitic Systems)

Left: The Lockheed Martin F-117A Stealth Fighter over typical desert terrain.

Below: 50 years of Skunk Works Products - those that the company has owned up to.

50 years of Skunk Works aircraft
T-33
YC-130
P-80
1940
1950
U-2
JETSTAR
1960
U-2R
1970
XF-104
1980
A-12
TR-1
1990
D-21
SR-71
HAVE BLUE
F-117A
YF-22
2000
AND BEYOND

Right: Ben Rich and the F-117A.
(All images via Lockheed Martin)

HELENDALE
PALMDALE
RTE STATE HWY 18
RTE HWY 14
RTE STATE HWY 138
RYE CANYON
RTE I-5
BURBANK

Above: Map showing key California-based sites of the Skunk Works in the late 80s/early 90s. (Lockheed Martin Skunk Works)

Right: Jack Gordon, head of the Skunk Works in 1996. (Lockheed Martin Skunk Works)

Below: An artist's rendering of Aurora, the USAF's mythical hypersonic spyplane. (Julian Cook)

Right: The concrete henge structure at the Wenceslas Mine - test-rig or cooling-tower? (M. Banas)

Below: The Wenceslas Mine, Ludwigsdorf, Poland, looking across what was once a covered railway marshalling yard. (Nick Cook)

Above: The Wenceslas Mine. The henge-like structure is situated behind the trees in the distance. (Nick Cook)

Right: The entrance to the Mittelwerk at Nordhausen. (I. Witkowski)

Below: SS General Hans Kammler - the only known photograph of him in uniform; France, 1944.

Above: A partially lined gallery a the SS-run 'Giant' underground manufacturing complex near Waldenburg, Poland. (M. Banas)

Left: A completed gallery at the 'Giant' underground complex. (M. Banas)

Above: Viktor Schauberger and his implosion-based home power generator in 1955, with interior shot.

Left and below: The Schauberger Repulsine with and without cone-shaped intake. (All images via Schauberger Archive)

Left: Bob Widmer, chief designer of General Dynamics Convair, in his office in the late 1950s. (Lockheed Martin)

Below: A grainy shot of a wind-tunnel mode of Kingfish, Widmer's Mach 6 spyplane proposal. (Air International)

Right Bob Widmer in his Lockheed Martin office at Fort Worth, in 1996. (Nick Cook)

John Hutchison in his Vancouver apartment, surrounded by equipment integral to the Hutchison Effect. (John Hutchison)

Metal ingots 'disrupted' by the Hutchison Effect. (John Hutchison)

Chapter 13

Vegas. Two thumps through the 747 and I was on the ground at McCarran International, an airport, like Miami's, that crackled with illicit activity; you could just feel it. We taxied to the terminal and passed engineering shops filled with propeller planes that looked like they should have been scrapped decades ago; old classics running freight operations now, with radial engines that dripped oil on the ramp and coughed clouds of smoke, their tired but sturdy airframes lined with irregular rows of rivets and bumps.

I raised my eyes and took in the view. Vegas, sprawled there just beyond the perimeter fence under an upturned bowl of blue sky, half a dozen giant new hotels since I'd been here last, half a dozen more going up amidst a thicket of cranes.

I loved and loathed this city with equal measure.

Down on the Strip, with the sun setting on this city of broken dreams, I took in the glare of the lights from the back of the cab, half listening to the driver's lament over the mob's exodus and its replacement by corporate America.

The slipping sun played over the tops of the mountains that bordered the southern end of the Nellis Air Force Range, a closed-off piece of government land the size of Switzerland where the Air Force tested its latest military hardware and ran air warfare exercises, and the driver's voice still filling my head about the days when people in the city had lived and died by a set of rules everyone understood.

I grunted something neutral as I tracked the Convention Center where tomorrow I'd tramp the hallways, doing what I always did on these occasions: talk to old friends, meet contacts, trawl the stands, hoover up data, collate stories, file copy, hit the town, go to bed late, get up early and then go through it all over again.

The cab pulled into the Sahara, a hotel that exuded the Vegas of Sinatra, Martin and the mob; the mid-'50s, when it had opened.

It had been face-lifted so many times, it seemed like the demolition teams would be here at any moment, but through half-closed eyes you could still see how it once had been, which gave it a strange kind of charm. The Sahara suited me just fine.

Its pile-'em-in, rack-'em and stack-'em ethos, ideal for gamblers passing through, meant it was shunned by most of the show delegates, but it had the enormous advantage of being a stone's throw from the Convention Center.

The following day, I picked up my reporter's pass and filed into the exhibition hall. It was jam-packed with aerospace and defense companies from across America, their stands and booths ranged in rows either side of the carpeted walkways.

From all over the hall, TVs plugged into videos on permanent loop flashed with images of combat aircraft going through their paces or weapons under test, the pictures backed by deadpan monologues and Top Gun-style soundtracks.

I slipped into the routine, walking the course, checking the stands for signs of developments or breakthroughs.

Sometimes stories came from a new aircraft, spacecraft or weapon system depicted in model form or artist's impression, but such copy as this generated was merely the low-hanging fruit—things that the public affairs people wanted you to see. As long as it constituted news, most reporters, myself included, were happy to go through the motions.

More often than not, though, the developments we looked for were more subtle: a missile fitted with a new seeker or an aircraft with a new sensor, denoted by an aerial or antenna window on the display model that hadn't been there last time around.

Such changes, though seemingly inconsequential to an outsider, pointed to performance gains that signaled real news to a defense reporter, news that the industry's primary customers generally didn't want to see in print.

But there was another side to show reporting, a side that I altogether preferred: chewing the fat with people in the business I'd known and liked for years, gathering data that gave hints of longer-term trends; what was really happening to the industry in the face of Cold War budget cuts, where the technology was headed, who was buying, who wasn't.

Three days at an aerospace and defense exhibition gave you information you couldn't get from a month's worth of phone calls. And after the intensity of weeks spent scrutinizing obscure pieces of data for hints of a black world antigravity program, the change was refreshingly good.

On the third day, long after the press conferences had dried up and I'd filed my final piece of copy to the magazine, I hit the Northrop Grumman stand and started talking to a guy who'd worked a whole range of the company's programs, including the B-2 Stealth Bomber.

Careful not to provoke the reaction that usually greeted the antigravity question, I asked him what he made of the stones that the B-2 charged its surface electrostatically.

This time, no derogatory smirk, just a straight answer and a half smile.

It was impossible, he told me. If you charged the airframe of the B-2, you'd fry its onboard electronics. He went on to describe a secondary problem. All aircraft need to discharge the static electricity they absorb naturally as they move through the air—usually via small wire aerials on the wing tips. Deliberately adding to this static buildup with a man-made electrical charge would be enormously risky, the engineer maintained. Since it would be impossible to discharge the electricity fast enough, it would turn the aircraft into a giant lightning conductor.

I called Marckus from my hotel room the following morning. The eight-hour time difference meant that he was at home, the day's work finished. Classical music filled the background, Brahms' Symphony Number Four turned deafeningly high, giving me, in a moment of insight, a clear view of Marckus' domestic situation. I knew then the man lived alone.

"He said what?" he shouted back.

I repeated the engineer's assertion. Marckus left the phone for a few seconds to turn the music down.

"The man's an idiot," he said when he came back. "Either that or he deliberately lied to you."

"Why should he do that?"

"Why do people normally lie?"

"Come on, Dan, it's too damned early here for twenty questions."

"The guts of the B-2 are held within a Faraday Cage," Marckus explained. "It doesn't matter how much electricity you pump across the skin. The inside remains insulated from it. The guy was bullshitting you. And it's not even very good bullshit."

The rest of his argument was badly flawed also, Marckus said. If you looked at the B-2 from the top, it looked like a boomerang, with straight, sharp leading edges and a serrated trailing edge. Regular aircraft had two wing tips; two points from which to discharge their natural buildup of static. But the B-2 was a flying wing. With its sawtooth back end, it had, in effect, seven wing tips from which to discharge the continuous flow of electricity from its supposed flame-jet generators.

At low altitude and low speed, the discharges would be difficult, if not impossible to see with the naked eye. But at cruise altitude, with enough plasma buildup around its leading edges, an aircraft—particularly a supersonic or a hypersonic platform—would glow like a lightbulb. It would pulse.

"A high-altitude aircraft that crosses the night sky at extremely high speed . . . observed as a single, bright light—sometimes pulsating—flying at speeds far exceeding other aircraft in the area," one of the nighttime eyewitness observations reported in the October 1990 edition of Aviation Week.

"Northrop has been playing around with electrostatics for years," Marckus said. "In 1968, it submitted a paper called 'Electroaerodynamics in Supersonic Flow' to the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics."

"I know," I told him, happy for once I had something he didn't. "I tried to find it on the AIAA website, but the papers on their electronic database don't go back far enough. I'll have to request a copy from their archives instead."

Even across eight time zones, I caught Marckus' withering sigh.

"Don't bother. I applied eight years ago. It's missing. They couldn't find any record of it. Almost certainly, some special projects office in the Pentagon pulled it. Made it disappear. That happens occasionally. Someone screws up and the black world has to go clean up. Actually, it wasn't all Northrop's fault. Back in the '60s, they had some noble ideas that this technology could be applied as a drag-reduction device for supersonic airliners, cutting heat friction and fuel burn. It was only when someone clocked the fact that a plasma shield around an aircraft also reduces its radar signature that the military really woke up to it. It's been rumored for a while that Northrop had come up with something revolutionary in this field. The missing paper proves it."

Marckus carried on. I closed my eyes and tried to think.

The signal I was picking up was painfully indistinct against the background mush of interference, but I could see that it added up to something important.

The B-2 clearly used some kind of skin-charging mechanism to lower its radar (and quite possibly its heat) signature. But it was also clear, from the nature of the paper that Northrop had written in 1968, that the origins of this electric shield, this stealth cloaking device, were actually rooted in another field of research altogether—drag reduction. According to Marckus, who now admitted to having witnessed similar experiments in the U.K., the electrostatic field could also be made to behave like a big "jet flap," an extension of the wing. Deploy this invisible jet flap on takeoff and it was the same as if the wing area had been substantially increased, with a parallel reduction in drag and a concomitant improvement in lift—by perhaps as much as 30 percent.

Bingo.

This could explain how the B-2, or an aircraft like it, staggered into the air with a full bomb-and-fuel load. Thirty percent seemed far too high, but even a few percentage points would constitute a breakthrough. A substantial lift improvement was the equivalent of a substantial reduction in weight. Maybe the B-2 lost weight, so to speak, aerodynamically, not electrogravitically. It would explain why Northrop had beaten Lockheed to the B-2 contract. While the Skunk Works had been playing around with Maxwell's equations and two-dimensional shapes, Northrop had already worked out how an aircraft could be enveloped in a shield of static electricity and how that energy could be put to work: as both a cloaking device and a method for reducing its air resistance.

No laws of physics broken, no antigravity switch in the cockpit, but an extraordinary development nonetheless.

A weight reduction device by proxy.

And in working this through, I realized something else. The B-2 antigravity story actually played into the hands of black world security. It was so fundamentally unbelievable that it discredited any serious investigation of the application of electrostatics to aircraft. What defeated me was why the spooks should have worked so hard to stop its disclosure—pulling papers from the AIAA and so forth—and yet be content for details to be released of the Lockheed stealth method.

But then, disinformation works best when you mix it in with a little truth.

It was then that the picture cleared momentarily and I glimpsed something through the snow and distortion. The keywords I'd written down and then hurled into the bin in the basement of my home a few days earlier swam into focus. If I could just hold the picture a second or two longer . . .

Marckus' voice, punchy and impatient on the other end of the line, brought me back to the here and now of my room in the Sahara.

I'm still here, I told him.

He was asking me where I was headed next.

I told him there was only one possible place I could go. If Northrop had been working on electrostatics since the 1960s, if it was now operationally deployed on a $2 billion frontline bomber that had been designed in 1980, there had been plenty of time in the intervening period for improvements and refinements. I knew there was no way that Lockheed, now Lockheed Martin, would have taken Northrop's B-2 victory standing still.

Aviation Week had written about the "fast mover" that had been observed crossing the night sky as a single, pulsating point of light. And others had reported the manifest contradiction of a prominent Air Force contractor at Palmdale that was filled to capacity with workers, was hugely profitable, yet had nothing to show for it.

I told Marckus that my request to interview the head of the Skunk Works, Jack Gordon, had just been given the green light.

Better still, it was to take place within the holy of holies itself.

It was only on the road to Lancaster, my next stop, across the border in California's Antelope Valley and a three-hour drive across the Mojave Desert, that I found the quiet I needed to work through what I'd been unable to finish in my call to Marckus.

Its starting point was one of the keywords that I'd written down on the note I'd penned and then trashed five days earlier: stealth. It all started and ended with stealth. In 1943, Brown had been involved in an experiment that sought to make a ship radar-invisible. His test was the first attempt by anyone—certainly, as far as I knew—to have conducted a genuine radar-stealth experiment.

At its heart was a technique developed by Brown to wrap a ship in a field of intense electromagnetic energy, produced by powerful electrical generators.

In the mid-1970s, the U.S. Department of Defense was briefed by Lockheed on a new form of technology—essentially, to do with airframe shaping—that reduced the radar cross section of a fighter-sized aircraft to that of a large insect.

In 1976, the company was awarded a contract to develop the Have Blue stealth demonstrator. Two years later, Lockheed was given the go-ahead to develop the F-l 17A, the world's first "stealth fighter."

A new military science had been born—one that was about to change the defense planning of entire nations.

As a result, the technology was classified to the rooftops. Stealth had become America's biggest military secret since the bomb.

It was then that somebody must have remembered Northrop's research papers into drag-reducing plasmas and dusted them off, recalling, probably, that electrostatics had a highly beneficial spin-off effect: it could reduce—perhaps even cancel altogether—the radar signature of an aircraft.

A picture formed in my mind's eye of an insect-sized image on a radar screen winking out altogether. The B-2, three times the size of the F-l 17, would be 100 percent radar-invisible if it worked as advertised with its plasma cloak activated.

Since the development of big-budget weapon systems is all about risk reduction, the Northrop approach, fundamentally different from Lockheed's, would have appealed to the bright young colonels of Air Force Special Projects.

If one of the methods failed to deliver, you could always rely on the other one to show you the money. It gave the colonels two bites at the problem.

Soon afterward, Northrop won the contract to build the B-2A Stealth Bomber, based on its use of electrostatics to make it ultra-stealthy. The technique, first developed by Brown, also improved its aerodynamic efficiency and reduced its drag. It represented a phenomenal breakthrough—a development that would give the U.S. a ten-year lead, maybe more, over the Soviet Union.

But herein lay a problem.

The whole science of stealth would need to be protected like no other strand of weapons science before—the lessons of the bomb being uppermost in the minds of those charged with securing the Air Force's precious new secret.

A novel protection strategy, one that overcame the flawed security model established to protect the bomb 40 years earlier, needed to be set in place.

Eradication and disinformation, coupled with the secure compartmentalisation of the program, formed the basis ofthat strategy.

From that moment on, past clues or pointers to stealth would have slowly and carefully been excised from officialdom. It was most likely at or around this point that the Northrop paper was pulled from the archives of the AIAA.

But then, in the archive trawl, somebody would have come across the work ofT. T. Brown. Brown's stealth work for the U.S. Navy in the early 1940s, coupled with his use of electrostatics in his electrogravitic work, was an unexpected discovery that needed to be handled with great care. The man's work was a dangerous liability. Something needed to be done—something truly innovative.

In 1978, the authors of the Philadelphia Experiment, Berlitz and Moore, were apparently approached by two U.S. Air Force officers who claimed to have knowledge of a fantastic secret. They told how they had had a chance encounter with a man who'd claimed to have been on the \JSSEldndgeinl943.

The man had told the two officers how the warship had vanished from its moorings during a test that sought to make it invisible to radar.

In 1979, after further research by Berlitz and Moore, much of it supplied by their elusive and slippery source Carlos Allende, aka Carl Allen, The Philadelphia Experiment appeared in print—and Brown's name became forever linked with the myth of the Eldridge,

The story's primary twist was that the ship had been transported into another dimension—kooky stuffand, to any sensibly minded individual, wholly unbelievable.

In the 1980s, the decade when stealth came to be fielded operationally, the technology had acquired its own tailor-made cloak of disinformation.

Tempting as it was to assume that Winterhaven or something like it had been pursued in the black since the 1950s, there was simply no evidence for it.

There was no doubt in my mind that LaViolette's articles on the B-2 were sincere, but they had only helped to muddy the Brown story further. When the B-2 and its antigravity propulsion system appeared in print, Brown—whose work was at the heart of this technology—was already a highly discredited figure. Whichever way you approached the story of his life and work, sooner or later you hit the Philadelphia myth. It blew all hope of dispassionate reporting on the man out of the water.

It turned out that the removal of the AIAA paper wasn't the only example of censorship in this field. Before leaving Vegas, I'd called Tom Valone of the Integrity Research Institute. Valone told me that he had been trying for years to locate a copy of an appraisal of T.T. Brown's experiments conducted in 1952 by the Naval Research Lab in Washington, D.C., but had been informed that the NRL no longer had it. The T. T. Brown Electrogravity Device: A Comprehensive Evaluation by the Office ofNaval Research had disappeared into the ether as well.

To deduce from this that Brown had cracked gravity was too big a leap for me. In his experiments, he had demonstrated to the satisfaction of many that an antigravity effect was possible. But that didn't mean he'd got to the point where the technology could power an aircraft. Project Winterhaven had promised to deliver this, but Winterhaven never got off the ground. Not in the white world, anyhow.

Somewhere between the junction at Barstow and Boron, a tiny mining community on the edge of the Mojave, the sun finally slipped behind the southern tip of the Sierra Nevadas and I knew I'd taken the disinformation angle as far as it would go. There were just two things that wouldn't fall into place. One of them related to the words on that self-penned note. Brown, electrostatics, stealth and antigravity: all of these elements were bound together in the disinformation story—those who had assembled it operating on the age-old principle that a little truth really does go a long, long way.

Why, then, did they introduce the fifth element? The part about the Eldridge slipping into a parallel dimension? How had such an improbable notion popped into the heads of the disinformation gurus?

Somehow, I had the feeling Marckus knew about all of this, yet hadn't passed the knowledge on. As I hit the freeway and turned west toward Lancaster, night falling as fast as rain, it was this thought more than any other that troubled me most.

The Desert Inn motel, its lobby replete with signed photographs of test pilots, display-case models of their aircraft and other Right Stuff memorabilia, was located on an invisible confluence of routes connecting the various nodes of the Air Force's classified desert kingdom. Twenty-five miles to the north lay Edwards Air Force base, home of the USAF's premier test pilots from the days when Chuck Yeager had broken the sound barrier in the Bell X-l. Proof of a link between Edwards and Area 51, the Nevada test base that didn't officially exist, 250 miles away as the crow flew, had been ascertained in a neat piece of detective work by Glenn Campbell, the leader of an outfit called the Desert Rats, a group of dedicated "stealth watchers" who hung out in the scrubland around Area 51, hoping for a glimpse of some exotic piece of classified hardware. Campbell had come by a procedures manual for security personnel assigned to Area 51 in which they were advised to tell anyone who professed any interest in them that they were attached to a facility called "Pittman Station." Going through local county records, Campbell found papers attesting to the fact that these personnel had been sworn in as local deputies. One of them had listed his mailing address as "Pittman Station, Henderson 89044," but all of them said that they were affiliated to something called "DET AFFTC." Campbell knew that AFFTC stood for the Air Force Flight Test Center at Edwards.

A powerful Web search engine did the rest. It turned up a 1990 NASA résumé for an Air Force astronaut candidate called Captain Carl Walz who was employed at "Pittman Station, Nevada," which in reality, Campbell knew, was nothing more than an abandoned electricity substation on the Boulder Highway. Another biography, found by a Net sleuth colleague of his, ascertained that Walz had served as a flight-test program manager at "Detachment 3 of the Air Force Flight Test Center at Edwards." Because there was no Det. 3 at Edwards itself, Campbell deduced that it had to be Area 51 and that Pittman Station was the mail drop.

Edwards, then, was the white world mirror image of Area 51, the super-classified facility at Groom Lake.

Both the "pulser" and the aircraft tracked by the U.S. Government Survey's seismic equipment (more than likely one and the same aircraft type) were viewed on a heading that either led into or out of Groom Lake.

Twenty miles to the west, somewhere behind the palms surrounding the Desert Inn's swimming pool, lay the "Tejon Ranch," Northrop's RCS range, a remote facility buried in a gulley on the southern end of the Tehachapi Mountains. People who found themselves in the vicinity of this place in the dead of night had reported seeing orbs of light within the confines of the range and, inevitably, stories that Northrop was testing recovered alien spacecraft began to circulate among UFO buffs. Based on Northrop's highly classified work applying electrostatics to the B-2, these pieces of eyewitness testimony now perhaps had a more plausible explanation.

UFO stories had grown up around the two other radar test ranges in the area—Lockheed Martin's and McDonnell Douglas' (now Boeing's)—a score of miles to the east. Closer still, was Plant 42, the site on the airfield at Palmdale where the Skunk Works' huge manufacturing facility was located. It was there that I was due to meet with and interview Jack Gordon, bright and early after breakfast.

It was sometime in the dead hours that I heard the sound of scratching coming from the lock. I turned toward the handle, no more than four feet from the head of the bed, and saw it move, fractionally, but perceptibly, in the thin sliver of light spilling from a crack in the bathroom door. In my head, I knew exactly what was happening even before the action started. Someone was about to hard-key the front door lock and there was nothing I could do about it. As I braced for the bang from the hammer that would drive the platinum tool into the barrel of the lock and core it out in a split instant, it happened, but so fast, all I could do was lie there, paralyzed, as the door flew in and the bolt cutters took down the chain. Then, I saw them: three shapes silhouetted momentarily in the doorway—black jumpsuits, body armor, kevlar helmets and semiautomatic weapons. A glint of reflected moonlight on the barrel of the gun as it moved and then it was hard against my forehead, grinding against the thin skin between my eyebrows. More pressure, killing pressure, as the snub-barreled M16 was pushed down harder and harder, the force driving my head deep into the mattress. And above it all, the double click of the bolt being cocked and locked, a shock of white teeth in a face otherwise hidden by the shadows as he braced to take the shot.

It was then that I came up for air, sucking it down in great gulps, my hands outstretched, pushing against bodies I could still see but weren't there and never had been.

Slowly, the ropey, '70s charm of my motel room at the Desert Inn pulled into focus. I was bathed in sweat and my hands were shaking. I lay there motionless until the sweat dried on my skin and then I tried to get back to sleep, but against the rattle of the air-conditioning unit, I knew I was righting a losing battle. Around four-thirty, I gave up, got out of bed and stepped outside, a bottle of Coke in hand, into the enveloping warmth of the tinder-dry Mojave night air.

The liquid shimmer of the night sky had been diluted by the first traces of dawn light, dimming the intensity of the stars a little, but not the overall effect. I lay back on the hood of my car and tried to lose myself in thoughts of the cosmos and Garry Lyles' dreams of a "50-year fast trip" to Alpha Centauri in a craft whose modus operandi was beyond the comprehension of the best brain talent in NASA.

After six months of sniffing around the black world, even longer reporting on its periphery, I had found nothing within the Air Force or its attendant industry to suggest the remotest link with any of the five methodologies espoused by NASA for cracking the gravity code. All I had found was a possible link to T. T. Brown and, significant though this was, it left too many gaps in the overall picture.

While Brown's early work might conceivably have explained how an aircraft with the performance characteristics of a UFO had come to be "within the present U.S. knowledge" in 1947—the footnote to the memo I'd found between USAAF generals Twining and and Schulgen (now stained with the coffee I'd spilled across it)—it begged other questions: why NASA had studiously chosen to ignore his work, for example, as a pathway to antigravity.

The official reason, according to Valone, LaViolette and others, was that the Air Force had carried out its own investigation into the Brown effect as recently as 1990 and had found no cause to believe it was real. In a report on "Twenty-first Century Propulsion Concepts," prepared for the Air Force Systems Command Propulsion Directorate, the author, Robert Talley, had concluded from his experiments that "no detectable propulsive force was electrostatically induced." This failure to replicate

Brown's work was cited by both NASA officials and Dr. Hal Puthoff as a valid reason for excluding the Brown effect in their search for exotic propulsion technologies.

But what the Air Force report did not make clear was that Brown had consistently advocated using very high voltage to induce an electrogravitic effect—50 kilovolts in the case of the 2-foot diameter discs and 150 kV in the follow-up experiment that had supposedly exhibited results "so impressive as to be highly classified." In Winterhaven, Brown had urged further tests using a 10-foot diameter disc charged at 500 kV—the Air Force, by contrast, had not raised the voltage in its tests above 19 kV.

During two out of dozens of readings, it conceded that it had recorded some "anomalous" results, but it then made no attempt to explain these anomalies in any subsequent analysis.

I tried to figure why this should be.

Was the Air Force afraid of the truth—or merely trying to suppress it?

In the clarity of thought that can come in the aftermath of dreams, the other notion I latched onto was this: Ever since I'd stepped into the black world I'd not been moving forward, as I'd hoped, but backward; to a period of research I'd already covered, rooted in work that had gone on a half century earlier.

I was trying to find answers in high-tech hot spots like the Skunk Works, when something told me I was looking in the wrong place; the wrong time, even.

And Marckus, I felt sure of it, had known about this from the beginning. He'd been in possession of the facts surrounding the B-2 and for all I knew he was bang up to date on NASA's advanced propulsion activities as well. For the past God knows how long all I'd done was duplicate his vast knowledge in a couple of key areas.

I'd been set some kind of practical exam and gone along with it.

After breakfast, I set off for my appointment with Gordon, keeping the railway on my left and the sun behind me. In the distance, through the early morning haze, a giant hangar pulled into view. It had been built in the '70s as a final assembly hall for Lockheed L1011 airliners, but subsumed since the early '90s by the Skunk Works for the only official work on its stocks: a bunch of "onesie-twosie" upgrade programs associated with the U-2 and F-117A.

The hangar dominated the desert scrubland for miles.

I pulled into the parking lot across the road from the main facility and was met by Ron Lindeke, a seasoned veteran of Lockheed's PR machine.

Since the interview was to take place on the main site itself—a rare sanction, Lindeke reminded me—I was reminded to leave my camera and tape recorder in the PR building. This functioned as an air lock between the outside world and the organization's highly secure operations on the other side of the road.

We drove in his car to the main gate, where our documentation was double-checked and triple-checked. It took an age before we were finally admitted to aerospace's inner sanctum.

Gordon's office was located in an administration block in the lee of the giant hangar. There was a low-slung building to the left of the gate and a cluster of busy-looking facilities to the right. These were the factories where the bulk of the company's classified work went on.

The giant hangar was what you were meant to see. The real work went on in the buildings in its immense shadow.

I followed Lindeke to Gordon's office. The cool, low-lit atmosphere chilled the sweat on my back and I wondered what it must be like to work in this windowless environment all the time, day in, day out; and whether it was true, as the engineer had told Bill Scott, that they really didn't let you go once you were inducted.

We stepped into an office, as dimly lit as the corridor I had just left. A tall, powerfully built man got up from a table on the edge of the room. Jack Gordon, the fourth president of the Skunk Works, smiled hesitantly and shook my hand.

The Skunk Works and its dynastic leadership system was founded in 1943 by Kelly Johnson, a hugely talented, opinionated and irascible aerospace engineer, in response to an urgent U.S. Army Air Forces requirement for a jet fighter to counter the emergent threat of the Messerschmitt 262. The Me 262, a twin-jet swept-wing fighter-bomber of revolutionary performance, had recently been identified by Allied intelligence as being under development for the Luftwaffe.

Johnson had long been badgering the Lockheed leadership for a special engineering department—small, agile and free of the overweening overheads and administrative baggage that encumbered technical progress in every large aerospace corporation (including Lockheed); and with the XP-80 project he finally got it. The XP-80 was built in just 143 days and, despite arriving too late for a showdown against the 262, went on to become an aviation classic.

The unorthodox methods Johnson pioneered to bring the XP-80 in on time and under budget—all the while under conditions of intense secrecy—set the standard for everything that followed. Ten years later, when the CIA drafted a requirement for a spyplane that could overfly the Soviet Union, it was Lockheed that came up with the solution. When the Agency needed an aircraft to surpass the performance of that aircraft, the glider-like U-2, again it was Lockheed that furnished the answer, this time with the extraordinarily graceful Mach 3 A-12 Blackbird.

Like the U-2, the A-12 started as a black program, but gradually moved into the light, emerging finally as the USAF SR-71, the fastest operational aircraft in the world until its retirement in 1990. To this day, there is nothing faster, but that, of course, presupposes the "Aurora" stories aren't true.

Ben Rich, who succeeded Johnson in 1975, denied in his book Skunk Works, which serves as its semiofficial history, that Aurora ever existed. But Rich did not offer any plausible explanation for what his company had been up to since it produced the last F-117A Stealth Fighter in 1990. There had been rollouts of two YF-22 prototypes—the forerunner of the USAF's new F-22A Raptor advanced tactical fighter—and a couple of unmanned DarkStar reconnaissance vehicles, but neither of these could account for the comings and goings of 4,000 workers or the busy appearance of the low buildings I had passed on my way in.

I was questioning Gordon about the Skunk Works' operating charter when he let slip that in the course of his 23 years with the company he had worked on 15 "real flying aircraft"—adding hastily that he could only talk about 12 of them.

It was in the ensuing seconds that the thought formed and rapidly solidified in my sleep-starved brain.

Whatever was going on here, however many secret programs the Skunk Works had on its books, none of them had anything to do with antigravity.

Perhaps Aurora was real. Maybe it was the "fast mover" that people had described crossing the high frontier above the Southwestern U.S. as a pulsating point of light—as reported in Aviation Week in the late 1980s. Maybe it employed a drag-reduction device of even greater sophistication than the one apparently on the B-2. But whatever it was or wasn't, Aurora was an aircraft, designed and developed by aerospace engineers.

Forty years earlier, T. T. Brown had proposed specifically that Project Winterhaven should be built outside the aerospace industry. Maybe Brown knew intuitively what it had taken me months to grasp. The aerospace industry had more to lose from antigravity than it could ever gain from it. Gordon's entire business base relied on the science of aerodynamics. Take that away and he, it—everything about the aerospace industry, in fact—ceased to have any role or purpose.

Antigravity threatened to wipe the aerospace industry off the map.

Was this the reason for the crushing silence that had followed the industry's initial burst of enthusiasm for antigravity in 1956? If so, it was the simplest explanation of all. And I had spent months on the wrong heading.

I pressed Gordon on the missing three aircraft, but in view of the direction my thoughts had taken, I must have unintentionally signaled my indifference.

When he raised his eyes to mine, they told me that the meeting was over.

Minutes later, Lindeke escorted me back toward the high heat that was baking the floor of the Antelope Valley.

Just before I left the building, I stopped in front of a large chart on the wall of the lobby area. I hadn't noticed it on the way in.

It proudly illustrated the lineage of every Skunk Works aircraft since the XP-80. Past the picture of the U-2, past the SR-71 Blackbird and the F-117A Stealth Fighter, past the YF-22 and DarkStar, and there was something called "Astra."

Sitting at the top of the tree, Astra looked like an ultra-high-speed reconnaissance aircraft; every pundit's dream of how Aurora ought to look.

It was difficult to gauge Lindeke's reaction because he did not remove his sunglasses, but he knew as well as I that the Skunk Works had built nothing since DarkStar; and DarkStar, being unmanned, looked nothing like "Astra."

In the car, I pressed him for an answer and he promised to come back to me. It was several weeks later, long after I returned to England, that he finally did.

"Astra was a high-speed airliner we studied in the 1970s that got canned," he announced without any preamble. "I checked."

It took me a moment to absorb this. "The thing I saw was at the very top of the chart, Ron, and it was most certainly not an airliner."

"Hey," he interjected testily, "the only Astra anyone here ever heard of was something we considered more than 20 years ago and never built. Take it or leave it." For a moment, the receiver filled with the sound of his breathing. "Call me if you got any further questions, won't you?" And with that he was gone.

Chapter 14

There were two final way points on the invisible network of nodes and links that held the black world together and here was the first of them, the Pentagon, with its long, wide corridors leading to the offices of Lieutenant General George Muellner, principal deputy, Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Acquisition. After a month's interlude in the U.K., I was back in Washington on official business.

It was Muellner's last day as the service's chief procurement officer. Tomorrow he retired, the culmination of a service career that had begun in the late '60s as a pilot flying F-4s out of Cam Ranh Bay, South Vietnam.

According to his bio, he had more than 5,300 hours on F-4s, A-7s, F-15s and F-16s. Muellner completed 690 combat missions over Vietnam and logged another 50 combat sorties during the Gulf War in 1991, at which time he commanded a deployment of Joint STARS battlefield surveillance aircraft. In 1991, Joint STARS was still officially under experimental test, but its belly-mounted radar proved invaluable in picking out Iraqi tanks and Scud launchers against the flat backdrop of the desert. It was, to use the jargon, an "enabling technology" that had helped the Coalition to win the war.

Another "enabler" had been stealth, a technology with which Muellner was intimately familiar, although you would never guess it from his official past. The merest clue that he had once been bound up in the stealth revolution came in the fourth paragraph of the "assignments" section of his bio, the part that outlined the key milestones of his career. While the maximum period of time contained in each of the 17 other paragraphs covered a year, two at the most, the fourth paragraph spanned an unusually long length of time: May 1973 to July 1982.

During these nine years, Muellner's activities were described as "F-15 operational test pilot, 4486th Test Squadron, Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.; chief of systems testing, USAF Test Pilot School; test pilot with the F-16 Combined Test Force; and operations officer and commander, 6513th Test Squadron, testing classified aircraft." It was kind of like Pittman Station all over again.

So, Muellner had the Right Stuff in spades and he had lived a great deal of his professional life in the black. His nine years in the test community, it turned out, covered one of the most intense periods of development in the U.S. Air Force's history—a time when it had had to take a long hard look at its equipment and tactics and rapidly come up with a raft of new ideas and hardware to ensure that it was as ready for the next conflict as it had been ill-prepared for the one it had just fought and lost in Vietnam. It was this period that presaged the biggest hike in black world spending since the days of the first and most grandiose black world project of all: the bomb.

By even stepping into the building—the great edifice constructed by General Leslie Groves prior to his appointment as director of the atomic bomb project—I knew I had entered a world of Catch-22s. If the Air Force was developing antigravity, there was no way, of course, that Muellner was simply going to come clean and admit it. Then again, if it was going on, it was also possible Muellner had been excluded from it. If this was the case, Muellner's answers to my questions, whether they were true or not, would have "plausible deniability"—the earnest and sincere response of an official whose résumé said he should be in the know, even though in reality he wasn't.

It seemed an apposite way to start, so I asked the general whether he was satisfied that he'd been briefed on everything that was being procured for the Air Force in his name.

He replied without missing a beat. "I believe so. You know, it's one of those questions you never know the answer for sure, but I think the answer is 'yes.' '

So, just what was the Air Force developing in the black?

"Things that push the envelope beyond where we're at," he replied, again without hesitation. Next-generation stealth, certain breakthrough weapons technologies, information warfare, spy satellites. That sort of thing.

Civilians who made it their business to keep tabs on such affairs, sleuths like the Desert Rats who ventured as deep as it was possible go into black world territory without getting their heads blown off, claimed that there might be as many as four secret "platforms" flying out there, I probed, including the fabled Aurora—or was it Astra now?

Suddenly, Muellner looked uncomfortable in his stiff, blue uniform; a shirtsleeves airman who'd have gladly swapped the formality of his Pentagon suite for something a little closer to the front line of advanced flight test.

"If they are," he said, "then my earlier answer about knowing about all our programs may be faulty, because I'm certainly not aware of them."

The Air Force, he added, had no need for a reconnaissance aircraft that could fly around the globe at Mach 7 or Mach 8 when the satellites it already had in place could, for the most part, do the same job at a fraction of the cost.

Stealth, however, was a different matter and here the Air Force was developing a range of new technologies in the black.

Muellner wouldn't be specific, but he hinted that at least part of this effort entailed the development of "reactive skins" that would enable a next-generation stealth fighter to change color like a chameleon, blending against its background from any perspective. A cloaking device that could, in effect, make an aircraft disappear into the surrounding ether. Visual stealth to add to the radar and infrared variety already in place.

None of these efforts had resulted in any new operational aircraft yet, but there were test programs under way, he said, designed to "mature technology."

From this it was acceptable to deduce that something had been developed at the time of the Aurora sightings over the North Sea oil rig and elsewhere, that something real had been tripping the seismology sensors of the USGS, but that for whatever reason the vehicle had not been procured for front-line service. Why? Because Muellner didn't need to be saying any of this. The Air Force never talked about black programs; but on this, his last full day in office, had the general decided to invoke his other responsibility as the service's "chief information officer" and set the record straight?

The black world had taken a pasting of late. The rumors about what the Air Force was doing away from the public light of accountability were starting to spiral out of control. There were certain things that the Air Force would always need to develop in the black to maintain America's readiness in an uncertain world, Muellner said.

"And the rest?" I asked him, easing between the agreed subject matter of the interview and the antigravity question. What about the people—apparently sane and credible witnesses—who said that they saw things in the desert night skies that seemed to defy the laws of physics? Craft that hovered right over them sometimes, huge, motionless, silent?

Muellner smiled. Get him the name of the contractor, he said, because he'd love to put them under contract. Whatever was out there, it had nothing to do with the Air Force.

But here was the disconnect. People were seeing things that defied explanation in the vicinity of Area 51, Nevada, the U.S. Air Force base that didn't exist a hundred miles north of Las Vegas, north of a bend on Highway 375—the "Extraterrestrial Highway," as it had been dubbed by the Nevada state legislature.

Here, Tikaboo Valley, 25 miles wide and six times as long, as lonely a place as you could find on the planet, stretched into the distance till it merged with the horizon.

It was Tikaboo Valley that connected the outside world to Area 51, hidden as it was by the jagged peaks and ridges of the Groom Range and the Jumbled Hills. Right above it, high on top of Bald Mountain, elevation 9,380 feet, sat the radar site and observation post that gave security officers an unrestricted view of all traffic entering and transiting the area. It was the first of several security rings and sensor networks employed by the Air Force to ensure that nothing penetrated the discreet cordon sanitaire around the base. The others, if you were unlucky, could be a lot less passive, more in-the-face: the sworn-in deputies from "Pittman Station" who patrolled the valley looking for miscreants and who occasionally locked them up and were said to throw away the key; and the Black Hawk helicopters that had been known to sandblast the odd Desert Rat from his hidey-hole on the high ground overlooking Area 51's 27,000-foot runway.

Already one of the longest paved runways in the world, it had been specially extended in the late 1980s in a move that supported the widely held view in the "stealth-watcher" community that a very high-speed aircraft was under test at Area 51. Couple this with the unmarked charter planes and buses with their windows blacked out that were ferrying up to 4,000 workers in and out of the base from Los Angeles and Las Vegas every week and word soon got around that Area 51 was as busy as it had ever been in its 40-year history—ever since, in fact, Kelly Johnson, the Skunk Works' founder, brought the U-2 here for testing in the mid-1950s.

But alongside the stealth-watchers, another set of pilgrims regularly made the trip to Tikaboo Valley. Many of these people had been drawn to Area 51 by the revelations of a man named Robert Lazar, who in 1989 claimed to have worked on recovered alien spacecraft at a site adjacent to Area 51 known as S-4. While Lazar's claims seemed wild, his followers consistently reported sightings of strange orbs of light over the base; objects that seemed to defy the way aircraft—even the top secret variety at Groom Lake—ought to fly.

But tread the fine line between the world of black programs and the world of UFOs and you entered another minefield of disinformation.

In 1997, the CIA admitted in a set of released documents that it had encouraged reports of flying saucers in the 1950s and 1960s to obscure the flight trials of its then top secret U-2 and A-12 spyplanes. The implication was that if you saw one of these things overflying the highway and reported it, there was something wrong with your reasoning. It was a tactic that worked well.

Add this to the highly compartmentalized, watertight environment in which black program engineers and scientists worked, and the fear they were reportedly subjected to, and here, as with the Philadelphia Experiment, was a cheap, but highly effective means of maintaining program secrecy. By the cusp of the millennium, there was so much bad information mixed in with the good about black programs that it was often impossible to tell them apart.

Was Astra another case in point?

On my return from California I'd left a message on Marckus' answering machine. Maybe, I'd conceded, talking to the machine like it was a confessional, I had been expressly meant to see that chart. Maybe Astra was a subtle piece of disinformation; a misleading fragment planted ahead of my visit. Then again, maybe it wasn't. Maybe it was genuine.

Faced as I was with the official denial, Astra was every bit as effective as a hit team equipped with Colt Commandos and a platinum hard-key. Less messy, too.

This time, Marckus had called me back. I told him then what I thought of his wild-goose chase. He never attempted to deny it. I got the impression he truly believed it was good for me, like it was an extension of my education or something.

In the small hours of a particularly hot night, three days after I'd sat in Muellner's office, I watched from my mountaintop lookout as a ball of shining golden light rose above the hills that separated Groom Lake from Tikaboo Valley. The light appeared to hang in the air for a few moments before drifting lazily downrange and disappearing behind a mountain peak 50 miles to the south.

It left me strangely unmoved.

In the kind of silence that you can shred with a razor when you're a hundred miles from anywhere, I found myself thinking again about the memo from Lt. Gen. Nathan Twining, head of the U.S. Army Air Forces' Air Materiel Command, to Brig. Gen. George Schulgen, chief of USAAF intelligence in September 1947. The memo I'd spilled coffee over in my basement back in London.

Twining's observation—that objects "approximating the shape of a disc, of such appreciable size as to appear to be as large as a man-made aircraft" were neither "visionary nor fictitious"—was written just three months after the supposed crash of a UFO at Roswell, New Mexico, in July 1947: the period that most people tout as the real start of the modern UFO sightings era.

What was it that Twining had written? That it was possible, "within the present U.S. knowledge—provided extensive detailed development is undertaken—to construct a piloted aircraft which has the general description of the object above which would be capable of an approximate range of 7,000 miles at subsonic speeds."

In mid-August 1945, I recalled, too, that 300 railroad freight cars of V-2 components captured in the European theater of operations had trundled westward across the wilderness from the Gulf of Mexico to the Organ Mountains, deep inside the dry, desert hinterland. Every railroad siding from El Paso, Texas, to Belen, New Mexico, a distance of 210 miles, had been seen to be full of cars all headed for the White Sands Proving Ground, 125 miles to the west of Roswell. Following on behind them were approximately 40 captured German scientists recruited under the covert selection program known as "Operation Paperclip." They were led by Wernher von Braun.

Maybe Roswell had happened, maybe it hadn't. But if something had come down in that summer of 1947, something extraterrestrial, there was no definitive proof, more than half a century later, to say that what had crashed there was alien; and dozens, if not hundreds of researchers had sought to discover the truth about it.

But if Roswell's extraterrestrial dimension was simply a piece of fiction, then why not turn the thing around, look a little to the left or the right, and see what swam into focus.

When I looked at Roswell this way, I saw the White Sands Proving Ground. And then I saw something else.

The V-2 rocket program had started under the aegis of the German Army, the Wehrmacht, but had been transferred in the final stages of the war on Hitler's orders to a higher authority: Reichsführer-SS, Heinrich Himmler. The same had been true of the Me 262 jet fighter and just about every other German high-tech weapons program. Most of them had started under Luftwaffe control and then migrated in the same direction. In short, anything that had shown any real promise as a weapon system—in particular, anything that appeared to represent a quantum leap over the then state of the art—had ended up under the oversight of the SS.

Eight thousand feet above sea level, I felt a constriction in my throat. I was so keyed up, my breath was coming in short, sharp gasps. But the thoughts kept on tumbling.

Just as it seemed I'd been wrong in trying to connect antigravity with the USAF, so I realized, in a moment of clarity, I'd made the same mistake in Germany.

What had Lusty actually stood for? Luftwaffe Secret Technology.

In looking for evidence of an antigravity program in the raw intelligence reports of Project Lusty, had I been heading up a blind alley?

If antigravity had been developed by the Nazis, then perhaps it hadn't been under Luftwaffe control at all, but that of the SS.

I called Marckus from a public phone in a windswept diner just after I turned off the Extraterrestrial Highway for Vegas. I told him the conclusions I'd reached and that the available clues said I should take another look at Germany.

"I think you're making a mistake," Marckus said. "If anyone has cracked it, it's the Americans. Stay in the States, use your contacts, go deeper."

I neglected to tell him that, thanks to his field test which showed that my research in the U.S. was merely duplicating his knowledge, I'd wasted enough time already.

Chapter 15

In the reading room of London's Imperial War Museum, under a skylight battered by autumn winds and icy rain, I immersed myself in books and papers that plotted the SS's gradual takeover of the German aerospace and weapons industry in the last two years of the war. But as the evidence mounted, I found myself increasingly distracted by thoughts of Marckus. Why had he warned me off the German research angle? Why did Marckus, with his incisive mind and razor-sharp reasoning, insist on belittling information that seemed more beguiling by the hour?

It was the intractible aspect of this contradiction that led me to pledge quietly to myself that from now on I'd be much more careful about what I told him.

It was in August 1943, just three months after the first successful test shot of the A-4 rocket, better known as the V-2 vengeance weapon, that Himmler, head of the SS, managed to wrest the V-2 from the control of the Wehrmacht, the German Army. Himmler was at the Wolf's Lair, Hitler's remote headquarters in the forests of East Prussia, when the Führer, in the company of his deputy Martin Bormann, brought up the subject of A-4 manufacture and his concerns about program secrecy. Hitler, as was his wont, was demanding the impossible.

The recent test of the A-4, which had landed just five kilometers off-target over a distance of 265 kilometers, had finally convinced Hitler, after months of vacillation, that the rocket would thwart the Allies' developing invasion plans and quite possibly bring Britain to its knees. He demanded that 5,000 rockets should go into immediate production and be delivered in the shortest possible time.

Himmler saw his chance. Quick to exploit an opportunity, the Reichsführer knew that neither the Wehrmacht nor Albert Speer, Hitler's young and energetic minister of armaments and war production, could deliver the project under existing arrangements. Hitler had decreed that "only Germans" should be employed in the production of the A-4, but the sheer size of the task meant, practically speaking, that foreign civilian workers—Poles, Hungarians, Czechs and others from the conquered east—would have to be involved sooner rather than later in the process. But with foreign workers came the risk of the security leaks that Hitler had expressly sought to eliminate. It was to this apparently insoluble conundrum that Himmler claimed he had the answer.

What he offered Hitler, he promised, was watertight: his proposed workforce would be drawn not from the diminishing manpower resources of the Reich's civilian labor pool, but from the SS-controlled concentration camps, from which there was no escape. The same workforce, Himmler added, could be used to build the underground manufacturing facilities that would keep the A-4 secure from Allied bombing. Faced with the logic of this proposal, Hitler agreed, but informed Himmler that he must cooperate with Speer.

Though the SS controlled the camps, it was the armaments ministry that had masterminded the revitalization of the German manufacturing economy, achieving month-on-month growth, in spite of the ferocity of the Allies' strategic bombing campaign, since Speer's appointment the previous year. Yet, when he was informed of Himmler's proposal, Speer couldn't help but object to it, knowing that Himmler, whose dreams invariably exceeded his abilities, would never be able to deliver what he had promised. This was undoubtedly the case, but it was not what Hitler wanted to hear. The following day, Himmler informed Speer that he had taken charge of the manufacture of the "A-4 instrument" (as it was known to conceal its identity and purpose to outsiders) and demanded Speer's full cooperation as a subordinate. This the outmaneuvered armaments minister was forced to provide.

Thus, within 24 hours, did Himmler not only acquire control of the V-2 program, but in the process lay the foundations for the SS takeover of all secret weapons programs within the Third Reich.

For years, the Reichsführer-SS had harbored a grand scheme to turn the SS, originally established as Hitler's bodyguard, into a self-sustaining economic entity, capable of funding and running its affairs without reliance on the everyday financial and administrative mechanisms that maintained and sustained the Reich. It was via the camps that Himmler and his leading economic authority, Oswald Pohl, realized that they could achieve their aims. By 1943, population of the camps had surged—from around 25,000 on the eve of the war, to well over half a million, a figure that did not begin to reflect the millions that had already died in death camps like Auschwitz, Dachau and Mauthausen and the millions more that would die of disease, starvation and the gas chambers before hostilities were over.

In a perverse reflection of the growth of the camps, the size of the SS itself surged from an eve-of-war strength of 240,000 to an end-of-war tally numbering 800,000. Aside from its task to maintain security within Hitler's state and its brutal administration of the death and labor camps, the SS also provided 38 fighting divisions alongside the Wehrmacht.

After the abortive bomb plot against Hitler in July 1944, a scheme hatched by anti-Hitler elements within the German Army General Staff, the control of the SS and its grip upon Germany would become absolute. But it was in August 1943, at the Wolf's Lair, that the seeds of the SS's takeover of the armaments industry were sown. Skilled workers and scientific specialists, Himmler told Speer, would immediately be transferred from the camps to begin work on the A-4. Furthermore, the Reichsführer-SS added, he had asked a "young energetic construction expert, who had already proved his outstanding ability, to take charge of the enterprise."

Speer must have had an overwhelming sense of inevitability as to the identity of this individual, but he inquired anyway. The man who was to assume direct oversight of the A-4's manufacture, Himmler told him, was Dr. Ing. (Engineer) Hans Kammler, head of the SS's Building and Works Division—the entity that had masterminded and built the camps.

Kammler's rise inside the SS had been meteoric. Up until 1941, he had been an unremarkable civil servant within the RLM, the Reich Air Ministry, with special responsibility for construction projects—hangars, barracks, administrative offices and the like. In the autumn of that year, realizing that he was never going to rise to the heights to which he aspired, he transferred to the SS, where he received the rank of Brigadeführer and was immediately put in charge of building projects. By the end of that year, Kammler had already drafted a five-year RM13-billion program of construction for SS barracks and concentration camps stretching from the newly captured territories of the Soviet Union to Norway.

The sense that the SS gave Kammler free rein to indulge his ideas and ambitions—suppressed during his years of obscure service at the RLM—is unavoidable. No sooner had his appointment taken effect, than he was drawing up detailed plans for the rapid expansion of the camps, egged on by Pohl, who had impressed upon him their value as the engines of growth for his and Himmler's grotesque vision.

To turn it into reality, Kammler immediately saw what needed to be done and requested to expand the capacity of the camps to four million; three months later, he increased this figure again to 14 million.

While the building program got under way, he set about industrializing the existing camps, but progressively found himself thwarted by Speer, who, irrespective of any feelings he may or may not have had about the moral consequences of such a scheme, believed that the camps were not the answer to Germany's manufacturing needs. Yet it was a confrontation that Speer was bound to lose, as he tacitly admitted in his memoirs; for, in Kammler, he was essentially battling against a twisted image of himself.

"He too came from a solid middle-class family, had gone through university, had been 'discovered' because of his work in construction, and had gone far and fast in fields for which he had not been trained." Speer, it is clear, was jealous of Kammler, but while Speer patently wrestled with his conscience, especially during these years, there is no sign of any moral doubt on the part of the 40-year-old SS officer.

Kammler was cut from the same cloth as SS-Obergruppenführer Reinhard Heydrich, the author of the "Final Solution of the Jewish Problem," who was assassinated by Czech agents in Prague in 1942.

"Both were blond, blue-eyed, long-headed, always neatly dressed, and well bred. Both were capable of unexpected decisions at any moment, and once they had arrived at them would carry them through with a rare obstinacy," Speer noted.

With Heydrich dead, Himmler had found in Kammler a cold, ruthless and energetic executor of his wishes; the man who would carry though his simple, yet grandiose vision.

Kammler set about his task as overseer of the A-4 manufacture program with clinical zeal. One week after Himmler's fateful meeting with Hitler at the Wolf's Lair, he dispatched the first group of concentration camp inmates from Buchenwald to Nordhausen in the Harz Mountains of central Germany, where work on a giant underground construction facility for the A-4/V-2 commenced.

Within a month, Kammler and Speer, the latter in his new capacity on the project as junior partner to the SS, established the low-profile Mittelwerk GmbH (Central Works Ltd.) to run the rocket venture.

By the end of the year, 10,000 Buchenwald prisoners—mostly Russians, Poles and Frenchmen—had been dispatched into the limestone cliffs of the Kohnstein, the mountainous ridge close to the village of Nordhausen into which the facility was tunneled, to bring about the impossible: the construction of the largest underground factory in the world, a facility a kilometer and a half long containing 20 kilometers of tunnels and galleries, dedicated to the construction of rockets, missiles and other top secret weapons. It was finished in a year—20,000 prisoners dying in the process.

Plans show that it was the first phase in a construction program that would have made the Mittelwerk part of an enterprise three times the size.

Thereafter, Kammler's ascent to the top levels of the bureaucracy surrounding Hitler's inner cabinet was unstoppable. As 1943 drifted into 1944, the SS's steadfast refusal to believe in anything other than final victory ensured its deepening involvement at all levels of state. In March 1944, at the formation of a combined "Fighter Aircraft Staff composed of senior Luftwaffe and armaments ministry officials tasked with increasing fighter production in the face of the Allies' determination to wipe it out with carpet bombing, Kammler represented the SS as Himmler's special delegate, offering two primary areas of expertise: his rapidly developing knowledge of underground factory construction and his ability to mobilize vast numbers of concentration camp laborers. In recognition of this, Reichsmarschall Hermann Goering, head of the Luftwaffe and Hitler's nominal successor, tasked Kammler with transferring strategic aircraft factories underground. Just over three months later, Himmler was able to report to Hitler that ten aircraft factories with an underground floor space of tens of thousands of square meters had been constructed in just eight weeks.

As the Reich's decay accelerated under the relentless news of defeat on all fronts—the D-Day invasion had placed Allied troops in France, the Red Army had just crossed into Poland and British and American bombers were pummeling German cities daily from the air—Kammler's influence spread. In the air of paranoia that followed the bomb plot of July 20, his ascendancy entered its final and most decisive phase. On August 6, following Himmler's appointment as head of armaments, adding to his portfolio as chief of internal security and commander in chief of the reserve army, Kammler was given responsibility for all aspects of V-2 operations—from design through manufacture to deployment and offensive operations against England and the Low Countries. In effect, Kammler now had sole charge of the project from planning to firing; a position that, thanks to his obsessive eye for detail, gave him an insight into the running of a strategic weapons program that no other individual has enjoyed before or since.

In January 1945, with the Red Army in Budapest and Warsaw and the Western Allies turning the tide of the Germans' Ardennes offensive, Kammler was appointed head of all missile programs—defensive as well as offensive. On February 6th, Hitler transferred cradle-to-grave responsibility for all air weapons—fighters, missiles and bombers—to the man that many Party insiders now viewed as the most powerful and influential state official outside Hitler's inner cabinet.

Kammler had first come to Hitler's attention with a carefully crafted hand-colored design for the Auschwitz concentration camp. It was his perverse capacity to retain control of the minutiae of a project without ever relinquishing grip on the strategic objectives, a trait shared by Hitler himself, that drew him increasingly into the Führer's orbit; a characteristic that came to the fore when Kammler "reengineered" the Warsaw Ghetto after the crushing of the uprising in August 1944. He not only leveled the "contaminated area," but made sure that each of the 34 million bricks from the Ghetto was used for other essential building projects. He was also called in to advise on methodologies for increasing the daily output of the camps' gas chambers and ovens from 10,000 to 60,000. For this and his other work he was rewarded with an SS general's rank of Obergruppenführer.

By the beginning of April 1945, with the Red Army driving toward Berlin and Hitler now ensconced in the Führerbunker below the Party Chancellery, Kammler had acquired control of every single major aircraft—or rather, aerospace—program of any importance within the Third Reich. His empire now included any project or facility that had either an SS influence or was aircraft or missile related. Geographically, this gave him the authority to enter and operate any weapons plant within the shrinking borders of the Reich, by now restricted to Norway, Denmark, northern Germany, southern Bavaria, Czechoslovakia, Austria and northern Italy.

What is astounding is the belief of the Nazi leadership, even at this terminal stage of the war, that Kammler would bring about miracles and deliver the German people from the relentless advances of the Soviets in the east and the British and Americans in the west. "The Führer has had prolonged discussions with Obergruppenführer Kammler who now carries responsibility for the reform of the Luftwaffe," propaganda minister Joseph Goebbels wrote in his diary on April 3. "Kammler is doing excellently and great hopes are placed on him."

Yet, for all the power vested in Kammler at this late stage of the war he barely rates a mention in standard works of reference on the Luftwaffe or its major programs. There is so little data on him, in fact, that archivists at London's Imperial War Museum confessed that their files contained next to nothing on him.

Just when I thought I was going to have to look elsewhere, perhaps in Germany itself, I received a phone call from a diligent researcher at the Imperial War Museum who'd become as engrossed as I was by the lack of information on Kammler.

The researcher told me, a note of triumph in his voice, that he had turned up a book on Kammler after a rigorous search: a slim volume, with a curious title—Blunder! How the U.S. Gave Away Nazi Supersecrets to Russia—penned by a British Cambridge graduate-turned-foreign correspondent named Tom Agoston.

What Blunder! contained, however, was dynamite, for Agoston had established what no other researcher has managed to before or since.

While Kammler carried out his job to the letter, churning out the rockets and jet aircraft that Hitler hoped would turn the tide against the Allies in the closing weeks of the war, he also set up, unbeknownst to anyone connected with those projects, a top secret research center tasked with the development of follow-on technology, a place where work on "second-generation" secret weapons was already well advanced.

"In modern high-tech jargon, the operation would probably be referred to as an 'SS research think tank,' " Agoston wrote.

In the jargon of the U.S. aerospace and defense industry, however, Kammler's "think tank" would have been known by a different term—one that would have been familiar, though, to anyone who had ever been consigned to the black world.

What Kammler had established was a "special projects office," a forerunner of the entity that had been run by the bright young colonels of the USAF's stealth program in the 1970s and 1980s; a place of vision, where imagination could run free, unfettered by the restraints of accountability. Exactly the kind of place, in fact, you'd expect to find antigravity technology, if such an impossible thing existed.

Chapter 16

According to Agoston, Kammler set up his special Stab (staff) for these visionary projects in a highly compartmentalized section of the Skoda Works in the Reich Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia in the vassal Nazi state of Czechoslovakia. Through the brutal administration of Heydrich, the Protector of Bohemia-Moravia until his assassination in June 1942, the SS had come to treat the industry of the entire Czech region as its own private domain. In March 1942, Himmler formally took over the operations of the Skoda Works, a giant industrial complex centered on the Czech towns of Pilsen and Brno, as an SS-run operation. In the process, he managed to bypass Speer, who knew nothing of the arrangement until Hitler told him it was a fait accompli. With the SS in charge of Skoda, Hitler tasked Himmler with evaluation and, where appropriate, duplication of captured enemy weapon systems whose performance outstripped the Germans' own. Under the leadership of Skoda's director general, honorary SS-Standartenführer (colonel) Wilhelm Voss, this project was completed in record time. On May 11, 1942, Voss was able to explain to Himmler what it was that had enabled him to progress the development of these back-engineered weapon systems so successfully—"by concentrating all developments for the Waffen-SS in the liaison staff of Skoda and Bruenn [Brno] weapons plants, and assuring systematic, intense cooperation with the SS Ordnance Office."

In effect, Voss was telling Himmler that he had been able to move as quickly and effectively as he had thanks to the removal of the overweening bureaucracy that went hand in hand with projects administered by Speer's armaments office.

As far as the regular mechanisms of the Reich procurement machine were concerned, then, the Skoda operation was to all intents and purposes beyond oversight. This would set the scene for the Kammler special projects group, which was so deeply buried, so beyond regular control, it was as if it did not exist.

Voss, "tall, quietly reserved in manner, graying, upright and elegant," would become Kammler's alter ego in the administration of the special projects group. Seven years older than the SS general and with a reputation as an industrialist that was as solid as a rock, Voss, with his nuts-and-bolts background, was the ideal complement to Kammler's driven bureaucrat. Even better, the two men had a task from Hitler and Himmler to run the special projects group without the least interference from Goering or Speer. Apparently, neither Goering, head of the Luftwaffe, nor Speer, head of all armaments programs, would have the least idea it existed.

But for Tom Agoston, in fact, the reality of the Kammlerstab might never have emerged at all.

Agoston was a Cambridge graduate who had served during the war as an air photo interpreter. After the war, he traveled to Germany to report on the Nuremberg war crimes trials. It was there that he ran into Voss.

Though not indicted by the war crimes tribunal, Voss was so close to the Nazi elite that his name was constantly on the lips of the prosecutors.

"Everyone wanted to interview Voss, but they couldn't find him," Agoston told me over the phone from his home in Germany a half century later, the satisfaction still evident in his voice. "As he was sheltering in my house at the time, this was hardly surprising."

In the course of several extended interviews in 1949, Voss unburdened himself of the whole Skoda story, speaking of his activities there with "unique frankness."

Tired and disillusioned, Voss was patently grateful for Agoston's company and when the subject of the Kammler Group surfaced, he told the reporter everything.

The Kammler special projects office was regarded by the select few who knew about it as the most advanced high-technology research and development center within the Third Reich. It was totally independent of the Skoda Works' own R&D division, but used Skoda for cover.

All funding for the programs at the Kammlerstab was channeled through Voss, who reported alongside Kammler directly to Himmler. The scientists were culled from research institutes all over the Reich, chosen for their acumen as engineers and scientists, not for their allegiance to the party.

"Many scientists, anxious to see their work in print, even if it was kept top secret, prepared papers for a central office of scientific reports, which circulated them to specific recipients. Some of these reports were used as the basis for selecting candidates for employment at Skoda," Agoston wrote.

Once recruited to the special projects group, whether they liked it or not, the scientists set about their work, their activities protected by a triple ring of security provided by SS counter-intelligence specialists assigned specially for the task.

These security rings were established by Himmler around Skoda's sites at Pilsen and Brno and their administrative center in Prague.

Voss described the activities of the scientists at the Kammlerstab as beyond any technology that had appeared by the end of the war—working on weapon systems that made the V-l and the V-2 look pedestrian. Among these were nuclear power plants for rockets and aircraft, highly advanced guided weapons and antiaircraft lasers. The latter were so far ahead of their time that by the end of the 20th century there was still no official confirmation of laser weapons having entered service, despite the best efforts of the Russians and the Americans.

In March 1949, several weeks, after he briefed Agoston, Voss was pulled in for questioning by the U.S. Counter-intelligence Corps.

Shortly afterward, he wrote in secret to Agoston and requested that die heisse angelegenheit—"the hot matter"—they had discussed earlier that year was not for publication.

Voss had told the CIC agents about the range of research activities that had been pursued by the special projects group and they informed him, in no uncertain terms, that he was never to speak about the Kammlerstab or its programs to anyone.

Voss gave them his word, neglecting to tell them, of course, that he had already briefed Agoston.

Agoston duly honored Voss' request to put a lid on the matter, but with Voss' death in 1974 he was absolved of his obligation and began picking up the threads of the story again. Voss' interrogation reports should have been freely available under the U.S. Freedom of Information Act, but despite persistent requests, Agoston was told they were unavailable; that there was no record, in fact, of any such interrogations ever having taken place.

I recalled from the Lusty documents I had examined in Washington a report that had been filed by OSS agents, forerunners of the CIA, from Austria in April 1945. Bundled into a collection of unprocessed notes on Nazi high-technology weapons "targets" examined by U.S. intelligence specialists, the report had mentioned a location in Vienna where experiments had supposedly been conducted on "antiaircraft rays"—laser weapons.

"Research activity is conducted in a house at the above address (87, Weimarerstr. Vienna). Research personnel were not allowed to leave house (reported hermetically sealed)."

Funny, I thought, how this much later on in the investigation I saw things through a markedly different prism. At the time, I'd been focused on the technology. Now, the fact that the Germans had been working on directed energy weapons was subordinate to a subtly different observation: that the Nazis had operated a compartmentalized security structure like the one now operated by the black world.

It was then that I saw the Kammler special projects group for what it was; not as a facility where experiments were conducted, but as an R&D coordinating center. Testing wouldn't have been performed at Skoda itself, but in the field.

It was exactly as Agoston said it was: a think tank, not an experimental site.

I put out feelers into the Czech Republic and Poland. I now saw that if there had been any truth at all in the reports of flying saucers developed by the Germans at the end of the war, this was the place to start looking. If the legend that had grown up around the supposed activities of Messrs. Schriever, Habermohl, Miethe and Bellonzo was in any shape, way or form based on truth—and while my earlier research had shown there wasn't a shred of solid evidence to say they were, I was convinced there was no smoke without fire—two places always seemed to recur in so-called testimony.

The first was Prague, not a million miles from Skoda's twin hubs at Pilsen and Brno (Bruenn). The second was Breslau in the German province of Lower Silesia. Then part of Germany, Breslau—renamed Wroclaw—is today in southwest Poland.

I turned my attention back to Kammler.

In March 1945, Kammler moved his headquarters from Berlin to Munich, working out of the regional Waffen-SS and Reich Police Construction Office. On April 16, three weeks after he had received his mission from Hitler to change the course of the war, Kammler delegated Gerhard Degenkolb, industrial plenipotentiary for the manufacture of jet aircraft at Speer's ministry for armaments and war production, to assume special responsibility for manufacture of the Messerschmitt 262, Germany's last-ditch hope in the war in the air. On April 17, with the Third Reich crashing around his ears, Kammler sent a message to Himmler at SS Command Headquarters in Berlin denying Himmler the use of a heavy truck that the Reichsführer-SS had requested from the Junkers aircraft factory motor pool—an order so obsessive in its attention to detail, given the inferno that was burning around Kammler, that Speer later described it as "both terrifying and laughable."

Be that as it may. It was the last official message anyone ever received from Kammler, who by April 18 had dropped off the map—effectively without trace.

"In the course of my enforced collaboration with this man," wrote Speer of Kammler after the war, "I discovered him to be a cold, ruthless schemer, a fanatic in pursuit of a goal, and as carefully calculating as he was unscrupulous."

If there was one thing I had learned about Kammler in the short time I had spent analyzing his activities, it was that nothing in the clockwork routine of his life happened by chance. By the beginning of April 1945, while Hitler was heaping new responsibilities on his shoulders almost by the day, the general would have been acutely aware that it was just a matter of time before Germany collapsed.

In contrast to Himmler, who vainly believed that he could enter into armistice negotiations with the Allies and emerge from them with a leadership role in the reconstituted Germany, Kammler was a realist. His part in the construction of the concentration camps, the clinical way in which he had sought to boost the throughput of the gas chambers and ovens, not to mention the methods he had employed in leveling the Warsaw Ghetto, would have placed him high on the list of SS officers sought by the Allies for war crimes.

Unlike Himmler, however, Kammler had something of value to deal—something tangible. By early April, Hitler and Himmler had placed under his direct control every secret weapon system of any consequence within the Third Reich—weapons that had no counterpart in the inventories of the three powers that were now bearing down on central Germany from the east and the west.

A man who had no trouble transforming the grand visions of others into reality while retaining control of the minutiae, would have found it just as easy to talk victory and plot an exit strategy at the same time.

The clues, which double as the countdown to Kammler's disappearance, were there from the beginning of that month.

On April 3, Kammler had his meeting with Hitler in Berlin. As Goebbels reveals, following their discussions about the "miracle" weapons that could still win Germany the war, the Führer retained great faith in him. But Kammler had already moved his headquarters out of Berlin to Munich for reasons that Speer guesses at—accurately, it seems—in his memoirs: given the expected failures of these projects, it would have been dangerous for him to remain within Hitler's reach.

Before he left Berlin for the last time, soon after his final meeting with Hitler, Kammler paid Speer a visit. He had come to say good-bye.

"For the first time in our four-year association, Kammler did not display his usual dash," Speer recalled. "On the contrary, he seemed insecure and slippery with his vague, obscure hints about why I should transfer to Munich with him."

Speer might have put this down to the fact that the central part of Kammler's kingdom, at least as far as he, Speer, was aware—the giant Mittelwerk underground A-4 construction complex at Nordhausen in central Germany's Harz Mountains—was about to be overrun by the U.S. First Army. With most of the A-4/V-2 program team still in place at Nordhausen, Kammler's nervousness was understandable. He needed to get them out.

But then, Kammler told the armaments minister that "efforts were being made in the SS to get rid of the Führer."

As Speer was also in the throes of a desperate scheme to assassinate Hitler, using poison gas to kill him and his entourage in the bunker beneath the Reich Chancellery, this perhaps came as no great surprise, except that it came from Kammler's lips. Speer did not know it, but SS General Walther Schellenberg, Germany's combined intelligence chief, had already opened secret surrender negotiations on behalf of Himmler with Count Folke Bernadotte, vice chairman of the Swedish Red Cross. These were transmitted to the Western Allies, but promptly and roundly rejected.

But then Kammler told Speer he was planning to contact the Americans and that in exchange for a guarantee of his freedom he would offer them everything—"jet planes, as well as the A-4 rocket and other important developments." He informed Speer that he was assembling all the relevant experts in Upper Bavaria in order to hand them over to U.S. forces.

"He offered me the chance to participate in this operation," Speer said, "which would be sure to work out in my favor." Speer turned him down. In a late display of remorse for his years of unquestioning devotion to Hitler, the armaments minister now saw it as his solemn duty to prevent Hitler carrying out his scorched-earth policy in the face of the advancing Allies. As soon as Hitler was issuing orders for factories to be burned to the ground or blown up, Speer was countermanding them, arguing with frightened and bewildered plant managers that the war was lost and these facilities would be needed for the economic revival of the "new Germany."

On April 10, Army General Walter Dornberger, onetime head of the A-4/V-2 program, now subordinated to Kammler, ordered 450 key A-4 scientists to evacuate the Nordhausen complex and head for the mountains south of Munich. Those that could not board a special southbound train, nicknamed by those on it the "Reprisal Express," would be left behind at Bleicherode close by, where Dornberger and von Braun had established their headquarters.

Von Braun argued against this move on the grounds that it would mean deserting his men in the Harz, but Dornberger reminded him that Kammler had issued the order and if they did not obey it, "the SS would shoot them all."

Kammler did not come with von Braun and Dornberger on the journey south, but he did make arrangements to meet them at the Hotel Lang, near Oberammergau, which was already serving as an evacuation site for Messerschmitt's advanced projects team, evacuated late the previous year from the company's bombed-out factory at Augsburg.

Von Braun and Dornberger made their way by car to Oberammergau, arriving there on April 11, the day that U.S. forces entered and overran the underground factory they had just left. The two men, who had cooperated on the rockets from the beginning, were settled into a compound that had been prepared for them by the SS. On his arrival, von Braun remarked on the beauty of his new surroundings, the snow on the peaks, the lush pasturelands, but noted, too, that the barbed wire had been designed to keep them in, not the Americans out.

Soon after he arrived, von Braun made his way to the Hotel Lang.

As he sat in the lobby, he could hear two people talking in an adjoining room. Straining to catch what they were saying, the rocket engineer recognized the voices as those of Kammler and his chief of staff, SS-Obersturmbannführer Starck.

The two men were discussing a plan to burn their uniforms and lie low for a while in the 14th-century abbey at Ettal, a few kilometers down the road. From the tone of the conversation, von Braun was unsure if they were serious or joking. It was at that moment that an SS guard appeared and ushered him into the room.

Kammler, sitting next to Starck, appeared relaxed and affable—very different from the man that Speer had described a week earlier in Berlin.

He asked von Braun how he found the accommodation, whether his team was comfortable, if the broken arm that von Braun had suffered in a car crash the previous month was causing him any great distress, whether the team would be able to begin its design work again soon.

Von Braun, noting the machine pistol propped beside Starck's chair, replied as enthusiastically as he could to Kammler's questions, careful to maintain the charade. To have done anything less might have been fatal given Kammler's ruthless nature; besides which, von Braun had made provisions of his own.

Before leaving Nordhausen, he had had his men stash ten tons of blueprints relating to the A-4 and its successor, the intercontinental A-9/A-10 rocket, in a deserted iron-ore mine several kilometers from the complex. Had Kammler any inkling of this, von Braun had no doubt as to the fate that awaited them all.

But with the A-4 team settled in Bavaria, the general didn't appear overly concerned about the scientists anymore. He had other matters to attend to, he told von Braun, matters relating to his duties as Hitler's special plenipotentiary for jet aircraft production. He would shortly be leaving Oberammergau for an indeterminate period. SS Major Kummer would assume command in his absence. Kammler got to his feet. The meeting was over.

They said their good-byes and von Braun left.

It was the last time anyone of any standing could corroborate seeing Kammler.

Yet there are traces of his movements in the days, even weeks, that followed; and some of his subsequent actions are decipherable—to a point.

Kammler told von Braun that he had to leave Oberammergau to oversee production of the Me 262 jet fighter according to Hitler's wishes. Yet, five days later, on April 16, the general appointed Degenkolb to the job, thereby delegating his responsibility; to someone eminently capable, as it turned out. Kammler communicated this decision from his office in Munich, dispatching it to Speer, Goering, Himmler, Hitler's Luftwaffe liaison officer Colonel Nikolaus von Below and SS General Hermann Fegelein, Himmler's liaison officer in the Führerbunker. Describing this communiqué years later as a bafflingly "unimportant message," even Speer signals his bewilderment at Kammler's determination to spread the word to all and sundry about Degenkolb's appointment.

It seemed obvious with the benefit of hindsight that Kammler wanted as many people as possible to see that he was on top of his assignment—that he was in Munich doing what he had been told to do.

With Degenkolb in charge of Me 262 production, a job that required constant supervision, it left him free to pursue other matters.

When Kammler told Speer that he would offer the Americans "jet planes and the A-4 rocket," he must have known that their currency was devalued by the sheer numbers of people associated with them. The Me 262, Arado Ar 234 and the Heinkel He 162 jets were in widespread service with the Luftwaffe at the end of the war and plans for hundreds of other jet aircraft were on drawing boards at aircraft factories across the Reich. The Americans arid the Russians could take the blueprints for these projects and the design staff associated with them irrespective of Kammler.

The same went for the A-4. As von Braun's actions testify, the rocket had been secretly earmarked for handover to the Americans for some time by the people who had designed and built it. Whether Kammler was aware of these moves or not is immaterial; the fact that there were hundreds of V-2s in various stages of construction at Nordhausen meant that the Americans would simply take them as war booty, with only the fate of the design engineers left to negotiate.

If Kammler did have plans to hand the Dornberger/von Braun design team over to the Americans, these came to naught. It appears, though, that he never even tried.

On April 13, von Braun succeeded in persuading Major Kummer to disperse the scientists into the surrounding villages, ostensibly to cut down the risk of their being wiped out by air attacks on Oberammergau. Von Braun's real fear, of course, was that it would be Kammler issuing the orders for their annihilation.

The move may well have saved their lives, but it also left von Braun free to make his own deal with the U.S. agents that had been dispatched into Bavaria to seek him out.

On April 17, Kammler sent his message to Himmler about the "truck"—the last signal he was known to have dispatched from his Munich headquarters. Under German communications procedure, his teletyped "signature" was preceded with the letters "GEZ"—an abbreviation for "Gezeichnet or "signed by"—denoting to the recipient that he was physically where he claimed to be.

The fact is, he could have been anywhere—anywhere within a narrow corridor of territory then still in the Reich's possession.

As I immersed myself in as many sources as I could regarding Kammler's mercurial existence, a single question pounded repeatedly above the others.

Where had he gone?

Degenkolb was taking care of jet aircraft production. The inner circle in the Führerbunker, cut off from reality and increasingly from the world, had its own problems. No one seemed to care anymore about the whereabouts of the golden boy—the keeper of the miracle weapons who would save Germany from annihilation.

They could have had little idea that he was planning to bargain them for his freedom—for his life.

What did Kammler hope to trade? The rockets were gone. The jets were gone. That left the "other developments" he had told Speer about.

On April 17, the GIs of General Devers' 6th Army Group were just days—hours, perhaps—from Munich. All Kammler would have to do was hole up and wait for them.

But what evidence there is suggests he did something quite else.

There is testimony that Kammler moved on from there to Prague, a journey that would have taken him right past the Skoda Works at Pilsen.

Voss had spoken about nuclear propulsion, highly advanced guided weapons and lasers. What other secrets resided within the Kammlerstab?

If the witness testimony was accurate, if Kammler did move into Czechoslovakia, what was so precious about the inner workings of the "special projects group"—this Pandora's box of advanced weaponry—that it compelled him to go east, not west? Toward the Russians, of all people?

Nothing in Kammler's carefully coordinated life happened by chance. I knew that much. The documentation led nowhere. Even Agoston had reached the end of the trail.

All that was left, was Kammler's lasting legacy: the underground factories that riddled his kingdom, built to his carefully exacting standards, forged by the Holocaust that was also largely of his making.

I requested some time off work and booked myself a fly-drive package to Hanover. From there, with a good rental car, I would be in the Harz Mountains less than two hours after the wheels of the aircraft greased the airport tarmac.

Chapter 17

I entered the complex from the southern end of the Kohnstein—a long ridge dotted with pine and deciduous trees that rose like the hackles of a crouched beast above a sleepy plateau in the Harz Mountains close to the small town of Nordhausen. Inside, I hesitated before drawing breath. Twenty thousand people had died in the construction of Nordhausen, many of them right here, inside the mountain itself.

Anywhere else and you could half pretend that you were in the bowels of an archaeological site; where lazy reveries about the past of the place were part of the experience. But the imprint of what had happened here within the bare limestone walls was indelible and overwhelming.

I was standing at the entranceway of Gallery 46, a long tunnel with a semicircular roof. It was still littered with wartime debris. The records said that it had been used in the construction of the V-l flying bomb.

Every now and again it was possible to recognize a piece of hardware—components of an Argus pulse jet destined for a V-l, a section of fuel tank or a part of a wing—but, for the most part, in the dim yellow electric light, it could have been any old scrap metal. Next to nothing had been touched, my guide informed me, since this part of the facility had been reopened to visitors in 1994.

Soon after the war, when eventually the Americans left the site—but not before they'd shipped 100 fully assembled A-4/V-2s back to the States—the Soviets sealed Nordhausen by blowing the entrances to the long galleries. In time, the trees had returned to the Kohnstein and East Germans could almost forget that the place had ever been here.

There was a kind of symmetry to this; the Nazis had gone to very elaborate lengths to conceal it during the war, even from their own people.

The Mittelwerk was vast. At the height of its activities, it had been turning out thousands of V-ls and V-2s a month and had consisted of almost 100,000 square meters of floor space. Built in the 1930s as an underground storage facility for fuel oil, the complex—already huge—gave Speer and Kammler a head start in the construction program they began and completed between 1943 and 1944.

The site consisted of two main tunnels running in parallel between the northern and southern faces of the ridgeline. One of these, Tunnel B, the main V-2 production line, was a kilometer and a half long.

Between the tunnels, like the rungs of an enormous ladder, were 50 "galleries," each between 100 and 200 meters long. Many had been component manufacturing facilities for the giant rocket assembly line. Some, such as those given over to the manufacture of jet engines, were assembly lines in their own right.

Until the construction of concentration camp Dora nearby, the slave workers who had prepared Nordhausen for the V-l and V-2 had lived in situ.

Six thousand prisoners had crammed into three tunnels, Number 46 being one of them. Initially, they had slept on straw, their surroundings lit only by a few carbide lamps. Then, they had been allowed to build bunks, four-story affairs that touched the ceiling, but which still failed to accommodate everyone. Since work went on around the clock, this did not matter; the laborers went to work and slept in shifts.

Beyond Gallery 18, deep inside the mountain, there was no ventilation, water or heating. Every explosion set off by the tunnelers filled the galleries with blinding, choking dust and gases.

This, mixed with the smell of the open latrines—oil drums sawed in half with two planks on top—made the air almost unbreathable. They also made the tunnels a place of terrible disease and infection. It was a privilege to be on the evening rota that loaded the latrines onto train wagons and emptied them in the open air.

A little more than 50 years later, as I walked the galleries beneath the Kohnstein, I found the silence deeply troubling. I'd wanted to concentrate on the science and engineering, to look at the Mittelwerk as a place that had been responsible for the most awesome piece of technology to have come out of Europe during the war; to breathe the same air as those who'd created the A-4 rocket's assembly line, to soak up that atmosphere in the way that a profiler would use a murder scene to build a picture of the killer. This place, after all, was one of the final staging posts to Kammler's disappearance. I needed to think as he had thought. But uppermost in my mind was the sheer scale of the crime that had been committed down here and its unexpected proximity to my own ordered existence. The people who'd toiled and died down here to create this Dantean design from Kammler's notebook, the same one perhaps that had spawned his delicate sketches of Auschwitz, were just a generation away from the safe confines of my own world. And all I had succeeded in doing was immersing myself in the fate of its slave workers, not in the thoughts of the icy technocrat who'd driven them on. In the subzero chill of the tunnels, all I could hear were the cries of the dying, not Kammler's whispered escape plans.

Only when I reemerged from the tunnels could I reapply my mind back to the problem.

When the building work on the tunnels stopped, those that survived went on to work on the rockets. At first, quality control was poor and many of the rockets exploded or went off course.

Suspecting sabotage, the SS ordered mass executions.

On one day in March 1945, the guards hanged 52 people in Gallery 41, tying a dozen at a time to a beam which was then pulled up by an electrical crane. Those next in line to die were forced to watch.

Then there was Gardelegen, 80 miles to the north. On April 13, two days after advance U.S. units entered Nordhausen, the SS forced a thousand evacuated prisoners from Dora into a barn that had been pre-soaked with gasoline, locked the doors and set light to it. When American troops came across the scene, they found some of the bodies still in the barn, some in a partially dug mass grave. Twenty men had survived by sheltering in holes they had dug beneath the charred corpses of those that had perished in the first moments of the conflagration.

These were Kammler's hallmarks. Others might have pulled the trigger, operated the cranes or poured the gasoline, but these acts had been carried out according to his wishes. More than 50 years later, you could sense it.

This was something about the man that I had pulled from the dank, subterranean air.

It was curious, then, that so few people after the war—the many tens of thousands whose lives had been touched by Kammler—could recollect him in any detail. I found this incomprehensible at first, remembering occasions in which concentration camp survivors had identified their tormentors decades after the war.

Even those who had not been directly traumatized by Kammler commented upon this mercurial ability to blend in. A U.S. diplomat who had served in Berlin until the U.S. entered the war in 1941, whom Agoston had interviewed, recalled his ability to "soothe and tame an unruly horse, using a magically gentle touch, and then minutes later order a negligent groom to be brutally horsewhipped.

"I always thought he was a man to watch," the American told Agoston.

"But I never saw him again. When I got back to Berlin after the war, no one seemed to remember him."

How could this man, this monster, the most powerful individual in Nazi Germany outside Hitler's inner circle in the last days of the war, come to be quite so easily forgotten?

It was only outside Nordhausen's giant bombproof doors, as I gazed again at the single wartime picture that exists of Kammler—in his general's uniform, striding for the camera, his cap with death's head badge enough to one side to betray more than a hint of vanity—that I began to understand. Kammler was fair, as so many Germans are. There was a gleam of raw intelligence behind those expressionless eyes and a hint of cruelty about the mouth. But take away the uniform, take away the job, the jut to the jaw and the energy in the stride, and he could have been any average 40-year-old European male.

In the chaos of the collapsing Reich, Kammler could have gone anywhere he wanted, assumed any persona he liked, and no one would have been the wiser.

On April 11,1945, when the first elements of the Third U.S. Armored Division of the First Army swept into Nordhausen, Kammler's legacy would have been plain for the Americans to see.

Clearly, however, his war crimes were not uppermost in their minds.

When Voss was picked up by agents of the U.S. Counter-intelligence Corps soon after hostilities ended, he told them about the existence of the Kammlerstab at Skoda. Their reactions surprised him. They appeared so unmoved by the notion that the special projects group contained a Pandora's box of exotic military secrets, he concluded that U.S. intelligence already knew.

When Voss went on to propose that they should spare no effort in finding Kammler before the Russians got to him, the CIC agents appeared equally uninterested.

This, from a nation that had mounted the biggest plunder operation of all time—involving the Army, Navy and Air Force, as well as civilian agents—to bring advanced German technology back to the United States.

At first, I wondered if their behavior had to do with the fact that Pilsen had fallen within the designated Russian zone of occupation. Maybe the CIC recognized that Kammler was beyond their reach and had simply abandoned any hope of finding him?

Then I came upon the final piece of the jigsaw.

The rapid eastward push that had brought the Third Armored Division to Nordhausen did not stop there. Disregarding agreements signed by the exiled Czech government and the Soviet Union, troops of Patton's Third Army to the east of Nordhausen crossed the Czech frontier on May 6.

Deep into the Soviet-designated zone of occupation, a forward unit of Patton's forces entered Pilsen that morning. Records I'd had sent to me from the U.S. National Archives before I left England showed that U.S. forces had the run of the Skoda Works for six days, until the Red Army showed up on May 12. Following protests from Moscow, the U.S. Third Army was eventually forced to withdraw.

Six days is a long time if you're retrieving something you already know to be there.

Had Kammler already done his deal with the Americans? Speer, during his initial interrogation at the hands of the U.S. Strategic Bombing Survey Mission on May 21, less than two weeks after the German surrender, intuitively believed so.

Asked by the mission for technical details of the V-2, he replied: "Ask Kammler. He has all the facts."

As I pushed eastward toward the Czech border, using wartime documents I'd gathered in London and a worn copy of Blunder! as my guide, I found myself following a scent of collusion that was still choking more than 50 years later.

Chapter 18

On the morning of Sunday May 6, 1945, five days after the announcement of Hitler's death in Berlin, troops of the U.S. 16th Armored Division pushed cautiously through an eerie, soulless landscape that its soldiers described as "neither German nor Czech." The local people—German-speaking, terrified by their Slav neighbors to the east and undecided whether to remain in their homelands or flee westward—were powerless to resist the U.S. troops.

The war was all but over and everyone knew it; everyone except a hard core of Waffen-SS in and around Prague, southern Czechoslovakia and Austria that had signaled their intention to defend this, one of the final remaining pockets of the Reich, to the very last.

As the half-tracks rolled deeper into Czech territory, the U.S. soldiers passed ragged columns of Wehrmacht troops rolling westward to the comparative safety of the U.S. zone of occupation. The U.S. objective was Pilsen, a place known to the soldiers of the 16th Armored for its beer, not the giant armaments factory where Skoda had cranked out guns and munitions for the Nazis for the best part of seven years.

Inside the U.S. half-tracks, you could cut the atmosphere with a knife. No one wanted to end up a statistic in the last few days of the war. But still, the pace was relentless. Rumor had it that Patton wanted to reach Prague ahead of the Russians. And that meant a confrontation with the SS.

Approaching Pilsen, the atmosphere changed. The U.S. troops noticed a scattering of red, blue and white Czech flags in place of white flags of surrender. As the half-tracks left the Sudetenland behind and pushed on into the heartland of Czechoslovakia proper, the people came out into the streets, waving and cheering as the 16th Armored swept past. "It was Paris all over again, with the same jubilant faces, the same delirium of liberation," one soldier recalled in the 16th Armored Division's official account of the liberation of Pilsen.

By 0800 hours, the U.S. troops were in the center of Pilsen, their advance all but halted by the crowds that had spilled off the pavements and into the streets. The situation was chaotic. It was only when German snipers opened up in many sections of the city an hour after the Americans arrived that sanity of a kind was restored. The civilians fled back into their homes, leaving the U.S. soldiers to mop up what resistance remained and carry out house-to-house searches.

One unit from the 16th Armored soon came upon Lt. Gen. Georg von Majewski, the German army commandant in Pilsen, with 35 members of his staff in the Wehrmacht's town headquarters. As American troops entered von Majewski's office, the general surrendered his forces to the officer in charge, then pulled a pistol from the drawer of his desk and shot himself through the head in front of his wife.

Von Majewski was one of 14 enemy dead that day. Around 4,500 more surrendered. The Americans had suffered one fatal casualty in the whole Pilsen operation.

A second 16th Armored unit, Task Force "Casper," captured the airport and a third, Task Force "Able," occupied the Skoda Works.

An air raid by U.S. B-17s several weeks previously had rained destruction on a large part of the facility. The forward units of Task Force Able reported that the central administrative building had been 80 percent destroyed.

The news that Pilsen had fallen to the Americans was picked up on the radio that night by the onetime head of the Skoda Works, Dr. Wilhelm Voss, who was hiding out with his wife and family at a hunting lodge on a Skoda estate south of Prague.

Voss had been out of a job since January, when Goering had dismissed him for refusing to accept two of his nominees on the Skoda main board.

For weeks, Voss had been monitoring the Allies' radio reports for news of their advance, knowing that it was touch and go whose forces would get to Pilsen first. Armed with the news he wanted to hear, Voss seized the moment soon after the German surrender on May 7 and set out for Skoda.

Given Voss' former position and the chaos that engulfed the former Protectorate, this was a hazardous undertaking. Czech partisans were summarily executing all the Germans they could find. While the bulk of the Waffen-SS units had officially surrendered, some were reported still to be holding out against the Russians in and around Prague. But as Voss told Tom Agoston during their conversations in 1949, he was determined to hand over the blueprints of Kammler's SS special projects group to the Americans, not the Russians.

According to Blunder!, Voss finally pulled up in front of Skoda's main gates on May 10. He bluffed his way past the American guard and found a very different place from the one he remembered; a Skoda in transition, with Germans, Czechs and Americans milling about the plant. In the confusion, he located a member of the Kammlerstab, who told him that survivors from the group had already recovered some documents, marked them up as personnel and payroll records, and loaded them onto a truck. They were hoping to get them to a place of safekeeping before the Russians arrived. The facility was due for handover to the Red Army in two days' time.

Sensing that this was the time to act, Voss sought out the U.S. officer in charge, informed him who he was, then told him what was in the truck. The American listened, unimpressed by what he was hearing, and finally informed Voss he was under orders to hand everything over to the Russians. Voss insisted, but the American was adamant; nothing was to be moved. An American ordnance team had already inspected the plant earlier that week, he told the exasperated industrialist, and had picked up everything it needed.

Two days later, Voss watched as the truck was driven away by a Red Army transport officer.

In Blunder!, Tom Agoston had traced records showing that a British-led Combined Intelligence Objectives Sub-Committee team entered the Skoda Works on May 12 and promptly got the runaround from Skoda's newly ensconced Czech managers, who wanted to cooperate with the Russians and no one else.

I had found another set of CIOS reports, from a British team that entered Skoda one week later on May 19 with the plant now firmly under Soviet jurisdiction. This report, CIOS Trip No. 243, summarized a combined U.S.-U.K. operation—the U.S. team, it said, having entered the plant on May 16—in which nothing of any real interest was discovered, except for certain new projects in the ammunition field and some advanced German design and production methods for guns and munitions.

The triple ring of security put in place by Himmler and Kammler around the Kammlerstab had done its job, even after hostilities had ended.

Voss' story implies that Kammler never made it to the Skoda Works to retrieve the blueprints of the Kammlerstab—that instead the papers were ignominiously removed by the Russians and taken back to the Soviet Union.

It didn't look that way to me.

Based on what was happening in Germany, where U.S. technical intelligence agents were systematically targeting any weapons facility of interest and plundering the contents, it is inconceivable that they would have ignored Skoda, even if they had been unaware of the SS-run special projects group in its midst.

The U.S. officer who stonewalled Voss over the papers in the truck told him that a U.S. "ordnance team" had inspected the plant earlier that week. "Earlier that week" could only mean that the "ordnance team" had walked into the plant alongside or directly behind the combat units of 16th Armored's Task Force Able on May 6.

There is no official record of any such unit's visit to Skoda. There are, however, reports that a U.S. team with nuclear expertise entered the plant and gained access to documents that outlined the SS cell's work in conjunction with the Junkers company at Dessau on nuclear propulsion for aircraft. I had been informed by someone that an account of this activity was contained in Atomic Shield, the official history of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. But after extensive inquiries with archivists at the U.S. Department of Energy, the AEC's successor, I was assured that there were no references in that book or any other to Skoda, its purported SS think tank or German nuclear research at Pilsen or Dessau.

Given Voss' claims that nuclear propulsion work had been one of three primary areas of research within the Kammlerstab, alongside lasers and guided weapons, it is inherently credible that some such work had gone on there.

It is at odds, however, with the official view that Germany was nowhere near as advanced in nuclear weapons technology as the Americans, who by May 10 were less than two months away from detonating their first atomic bomb in the New Mexico desert.

According to Speer, official Nazi sanction for attempts by Werner Heisenberg, the father of the would-be German atomic bomb, were rescinded in 1942 on the grounds that the earliest timetable for an available weapon was 1946—too late, Speer concluded, to be of any use in the war.

In late 1944 and early 1945, U.S. technical intelligence agents from the Alsos Mission ("alsos," in a quirky piece of coding, being ancient Greek for "grove," i.e. General Leslie Groves, who was in charge of the U.S. bomb project) tore into France, Belgium and Germany searching for signs of German atomic bomb work and quantities of German-held uranium oxide ore—a material that is inert until it has been subjected to neutron bombardment in a nuclear reactor.

On April 23, an Alsos team led by the unit's commander, Lt. Col. Boris T. Pash, a former high school teacher turned Army G-2 security officer trained by the FBI, arrived at the locked steel door of a box-like concrete entranceway in the side of a cliff above the picturesque German town of Haigerloch, near Stuttgart.

Pash, who had been in a race against the French to get there, shot off the lock and found himself in a chamber with a concrete pit about ten feet in diameter in the middle. Within the pit hung a heavy metal shield covering the top of a thick metal cylinder. The latter contained a pot-shaped vessel, also of heavy metal, about four feet below the floor level.

What Pash had discovered is what history describes as one of only two German reactors assembled, or partially assembled, before the end of the war—the other, at Kummersdorf, being captured by the Russians.

Using heavy water as a moderator and 664 cubes of metallic uranium as its fuel, the Haigerloch reactor had achieved a sevenfold neutron multiplication just a few weeks earlier.

Heisenberg had calculated that a 50 percent increase in the size of the reactor would produce a sustained nuclear reaction.

Had he done so, Hitler would have had the means to enrich enough fissionable material to construct a bomb.

This is the official view of the extent of the German atomic bomb program and it is terrifying enough. The Nazis had come close to developing a weapon.

But look a little to the left and right of the official view, as I had before leaving London, and an even more frightening scenario pulled into view.

On May 19, a German U-boat, the U-234, docked at the U.S. Navy port of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, having surrendered to a U.S. Navy destroyer two days earlier off the eastern seaboard. Her commander had received high-level orders to sail from Kristiansand in Nazi-held Norway to Japan on April 16.

On board, the Americans found an Aladdin's Cave of technical equipment and blueprints, most of them related to advanced German jet aircraft. The U-234 was also ferrying technical experts, a nuclear technician among them.

This fact alone tipped off U.S. investigators that U-234 was no ordinary U-boat. A secondary examination showed she had been modified to carry a very dangerous cargo. Set in her six adapted mine-laying tubes were 560 kilos of uranium held in ten gold-lined containers. The loading manifest maintained that it was uranium oxide, the state in which uranium is found when it is extracted from the earth and safe enough to carry around in a paper bag. That the U-234's converted mine-laying tubes were gold-lined indicates that its cargo was emitting gamma radiation. This, in turn, meant the uranium oxide ore had been subjected to enrichment from a working nuclear reactor. The gold lining was to prevent the radiation from penetrating the U-boat's hull.

And yet, officially, there had been no nuclear reactor in Germany capable of fulfilling this task.

Not in Speer's orbit of operations. But what about Kammler's?

The journey to this point had revealed the extent to which the SS had ring-fenced its top secret weapons activity from the rest of the German armaments industry. Could the Kammlerstab have contained the plans of a working nuclear reactor? Its secret location, even? It was a possibility I had to confront.

The lack of data in U.S. archives concerning the fate of the U-234, its cargo and its personnel is astonishing. But then, everywhere I'd looked prior to leaving London, a pattern had been emerging.

Protracted searches by archivists at the U.S. National Archives for any data on Kammler had failed to locate a single entry for him.

It was the same for Skoda.

Given Kammler's range of responsibilities in the final months of the war, this absence of evidence was remarkable; so much so, that one archivist at Modern Military Records, College Park, Maryland, said that it "redlined" him in her book.

I asked what she meant.

Somebody, she replied matter-of-factly, had been in and cleaned up.

Tom Agoston had found evidence of much the same thing. Despite Voss' extensive debriefings on Skoda by U.S. CIC agents at the U.S. European Command Counter-intelligence Center at Camp Oberursel, near Frankfurt, no one had been able to trace any records or transcripts of the interrogation.

When Agoston ran checks on Kammler, it transpired that his name hadn't even registered at the Nuremberg war crimes trials—the very least that might have been expected of someone who had played such a prominent role in the Holocaust.

Unlike Martin Bormann, whose body was never found after he was reported killed during his escape from the Führerbunker on May 1, Kammler was never tried in absentia at Nuremberg. There is no evidence that anyone ever bothered to look for him. This, despite the fact that the four versions of his death conflict with each other so markedly that none stacks up under scrutiny.

The first version says he committed suicide in a forest between Prague and Pilsen on May 9, two days after the German unconditional surrender.

The second says that he died in a hail of bullets as he emerged from the cellar of a bombed-out building to confront Czech partisans that same day.

The third version says that he shot himself in a wood near Karlsbad (Karlovy Vary in today's Czech Republic), also on May 9.

What these variations on a theme do manage to assert is that Kammler was in or around Prague just prior to the German capitulation.

One witness quoted by Agoston, an official with the Prague regional office of the Buildings and Works Division of the SS Economic Main Office, recalled the date: "Kammler arrived in Prague early May. We did not expect him. He gave no advance notice of his arrival. Nobody knew why he had come to Prague, when the Red Army was closing in."

I could see only two reasons why Kammler should have made such a journey. First to retrieve the mother lode of documentation on the special projects group at Skoda and the Skoda administrative offices in Prague; and secondly to bury it somewhere prior to setting up the deal that would save him from the gallows and buy him his freedom.

Where in the crumbling, collapsing edifice of the Reich would Kammler have considered hiding this priceless cargo? Certainly not in Czechoslovakia, not with the Russians closing in. And it was unlikely that he would have headed west through the partisan-infested forests between Prague and the German border.

The fourth version of his death, I felt, offered the best possible clue.

The German and Austrian Red Cross, according to Agoston, held two relevant documents after the end of the war, the first posting Kammler as "missing," the second updating the first and listing him "dead." The first report had been filed by a relative. It placed Kammler's last known location as Ebensee in Steiermark, Austria. The updated report was based on the testimony of unnamed "comrades." No burial place was specified.

I did some thinking of my own, using the reference books I had brought with me as pointers.

In early May, the province of Steiermark was putting up a vigorous defense against the Russians, while bracing iself for the American advance, under the leadership of Gauleiter Siegfried Ueberreither. The gauleiter—the Nazi party's chief administrator for the Steiermark "gau"—was backed in his decision to hold the province to the last by large numbers of Wehrmacht and SS troops.

Kammler knew Ebensee well. Under his orders and supervision, work had commenced there in 1943 on a giant underground complex for the intercontinental A-9/A-10 rocket—the weapon that Hitler had intended to use against New York. The facility was code-named Zement and a large section of it had been completed by the end of the war. Zement was tucked into the mountains abutting the shoreline of Lake Traunsee.

On May 8, 1945, Lake Traunsee could be considered the epicenter of the Nazi empire on the eve of its surrender; a seething confluence of terrified citizenry, refugees from the east, heavily armed German troops and Nazi party members looking for places to lie low until the frenzy of capitulation had subsided. Gauleiter Ueberreither himself, having urged his people to fight to the last bullet, slipped out of his office in Graz and disappeared. Years later, he emerged in Argentina.

I began to make arrangements that would get me to Ebensee. But shortly before I could complete them, I received a call from Poland. A researcher there had responded to my request for information about German wartime research activities around Breslau, one of the two purported homes of German flying saucer research.

The guy's name was Igor Witkowksi and he had been recommended to me by Polish sources through my work at Jane's as someone who was both highly knowledgeable and reliable. Witkowski, they told me, had self-published a series of books in Polish detailing his findings.

For years, Witkowski had been sifting through archives related to the many secret Nazi scientific establishments in and around Breslau—modern-day Wroclaw—looking for traces of wartime secret weapons work. What he'd uncovered was evidence of a systematic SS-controlled R&D operation in a rat run of interconnected facilities, many of them underground, in the remote Sudeten Mountains in the southwest of Poland—Lower Silesia as it had been, before its handover to Poland under postwar reparations by Germany.

Witkowski's research led him to conclude that a number of these facilities had been used by the SS for nuclear research work. But one site did not conform to the pattern. In this case, he said, a series of experiments had taken place in a mine in a valley close to the Czech frontier. They had begun in 1944 and carried on into the April of the following year, under the nose of the advancing Russians.

The experiments required large doses of electricity fed via thick cabling into a chamber hundreds of meters belowground. In this chamber, a bell-shaped device comprising two contra-rotating cylinders filled with mercury, or something like it, had emitted a strange pale blue light. A number of scientists who had been exposed to the device during these experiments suffered terrible side effects; five were said to have died as a result.

Word had it that the tests sought to investigate some kind of antigravitational effect, Witkowski said. He wasn't in a hurry to agree with this assessment, he added, but he was sufficiently intrigued by the data to alert me to the possibilities.

Like Witkowski, I was skeptical, a feeling that grew when he told me who had presided over the work: Walther Gerlach, Professor of Physics at the University of Munich and head of nuclear research at the Reich Research Council in 1944-45.

Wilhelm Voss, joint head of the SS special projects groups inside the Skoda Works, had made it clear to Tom Agoston that German nuclear work had absorbed a large part of the group's research activities. By early May, Kammler should have had adequate intelligence that Pash, the FBI-trained former teacher and head of the U.S. Alsos Mission, had located most, if not all Germany's nuclear research centers in the western zone of influence along with the scientists that went with them. Kammler might also have known that the U-234 had sailed with its cargo of uranium ore for Japan; maybe he'd been responsible for the order himself.

While he could not have known that the Americans were close to perfecting their own nuclear weapon, or that the U-234 would fall into U.S. hands, he didn't seem like a man who would gamble his life on providing America with a technology it had already acquired via diligent detective work. It didn't tally with his profile.

My feeling was that Kammler would offer them something so spectacular they'd have no choice but to enter into negotiations with him; and, intriguing as it was, this experiment down the mine didn't seem to fit the bill. The sickness suffered by the scientists appeared to be the result of radiation poisoning. As for the device itself, I said, by now thinking out loud, since it fell within the Soviet zone of influence, it hardly conformed to the plan that Kammler had outlined to Speer in Berlin.

It was then that Witkowski, who had listened for several minutes patiently enough, interrupted me. His research had uncovered the existence of an SS-run "Special Evacuation Kommando (command, team or unit)" that had evacuated the "Bell" and its supporting documentation prior to the Russians' overrunning the facility. The evidence said it had been shipped out, destination God only knew where; except it wasn't there when the Russians arrived.

Despite the warmth of my hotel room, I felt a sudden chill. For all the months I had been following Kammler, he had been a remote figure, even at his closest in the wet, freezing-cold underground galleries at Nordhausen. Now, fleetingly, I felt him in the same room as me.

"And the scientists?" I asked. "What happened to them?"

I thought the line had gone dead, but it was just Witkowski taking his time, choosing his words.

"They were taken out and shot by the SS between April 28 and May 4, 1945. Records show that there were 62 of them, many of them Germans. There were no survivors, but then that's hardly surprising."

He paused. "It's quite clear that someone had gone to very great lengths to clean up."

It was the second time in as many weeks that this expression had been used in the context of Kammler. Within the hour, I had booked myself on a flight to Warsaw.

It was thus—simply and irrevocably—that I was pulled into the extraordinary story of the Bell.

Chapter 19

We left the Polish capital in the haze of an overcast dawn, moving quickly past drab living blocks half-hidden by a frenzy of construction work.

Witkowski drove, apologizing in advance for the schedule ahead. The Wenceslas Mine was 50 kilometers or more the other side of Wroclaw and Wroclaw, formerly Breslau of the German gau of Lower Silesia, was around 350 km from Warsaw. The drive would be hard, he said, much of the route consisting of poorly maintained single-lane roads, but all being well we would reach our destination before sunset. In the meantime, he would bring me up to speed on his research, which had started with a phone call from a Polish government official.

Witkowski, a former defense journalist, did not want to tag his informant, but he assured me that his integrity was impeccable. The official had permitted him to view some documents, to make notes, but not to take anything away with him.

Witkowski had taken him at his word and transcribed most of what he had been allowed to view verbatim.

At the airport, his stocky appearance was just as I had imagined him. He was younger than I, with a thickset expression, high Slavic cheekbones and dark, intensely serious eyes. From the word go, we talked about little else but the research that united us. Had Witkowski been in any way a lightweight, I would have turned around and got on the first plane home. But when I saw him, I knew he was OK. There were aspects to him that I saw in myself. Like me, Witkowski was consumed by a thirst for knowledge. Knowledge of a highly specialized kind.

After months on the road it felt good to be sharing data again. And the very fact he'd let me in on his discovery told me that Witkowski felt the same way. We were walking a tightrope. If either of us were wrong about the data we'd collated, it'd be a long fall. On the phone, Witkowski had convinced me that he could take me to places that only he and a select group of local researchers knew about.

The papers that Witkowksi had been allowed to transcribe detailed the activities of a special unit of the Soviet secret intelligence service, the NKVD, forerunner of the KGB. Attached to this unit were two Polish officers, General Jakub Prawin, head of the Polish military mission in Berlin, and Colonel Wladyslaw Szymanski, a senior member of his staff.

It was during their "debriefing" of a former high-ranking official from the Reichssicherheitshauptamt, the Reich Central Security Office or RSHA, that Prawin and Szymanski learned of "General Plan 1945."

Their interrogation subject, Rudolf Schuster, had worked at the RSHA—one of four security organizations run by the SS-controlled Sicherheitsdienst or Security Service—until his deployment on June 4, 1944, to the Special Evacuation Kommando, an organization unknown to the NKVD, which prided itself on knowing everything. Schuster, it transpired, had been responsible for the ELF's transportation arrangements.

Schuster's information must have set alarm bells ringing at the highest Soviet levels, for Prawin and Szymanski had learned that the man behind General Plan 1945 was none other than Martin Bormann, Hitler's deputy, last seen fleeing the Führerbunker on the night of May 1. Though supposedly killed in the attempted breakout, Bormann's body had never been formally identified. Tying Bormann into a scheme for some kind of evacuation procedure, therefore, had disturbing implications, but pumping Schuster was evidently pointless as it was clear he was only privy to the transportation details. The SS, operating its traditional compartmentalization system of security, had kept him from the broader aspects of the plan. It was apparent, however, that much of the Kommando^ activities centered on the territory of Lower Silesia, now southwest Poland.

The next piece of the jigsaw was provided by SS-Obergruppenführer Jakob Sporrenberg, who from June 28,1944 had commanded a section of the Kommando attached to the Gauleiter of Lower Silesia, Karl Hanke. Hanke, like all gauleiters, who were the party's representatives in the gaus or regions, was answerable directly to Bormann, the party chief.

Sporrenberg had been captured by the British in May 1945, but was handed over to the Poles because he was a general in the SS and had been active in Poland, the scene of many of the SS-run death camps. Had they realized Sporrenberg's true brief, it is unlikely they would have been quite so quick to release him.

Sporrenberg was a big shot, one of a scattering of senior SS police generals of exalted rank and status positioned to give Himmler absolute power throughout Germany in the closing years of the war. To put his seniority in perspective, he carried the same rank as Ernst Kaltenbrunner, the brutal Austrian who succeeded Heydrich as head of the Reich Security Office, the Nazis' central agency for internal counter-espionage and repression. For Sporrenberg to have been assigned the command of the Special Evacuation Kommando unit attached specifically to Hanke's gau of Lower Silesia shows how important Bormann's evacuation plan was considered to be.

And, I thought, just how secret. There has never been any official acknowledgment of the existence of the Special Evacuation Kommando.

Exactly what, I asked Witkowski, was the Kommando tasked with evacuating?

The taciturn Pole, concentrating on the road ahead, flashed me a look. Patience. Everything in its own time.

Sporrenberg, he continued, was sent for trial and sentenced to death in 1952, but not before he had testified in secret before the Polish courts about his role as one of Lower Silesia's main plenipotentiaries for the evacuation of high-grade technology, documents and personnel or his part in the murder of 62 scientists and lab workers associated with a top secret SS-run project in a mine near Ludwigsdorf, a village in the hills southeast of Waldenburg, close to the Czech border.

Sporrenberg, operating under the political oversight of Gauleiter Hanke, had been in charge of a Kommando cell tasked with "northern route" evacuations via Norway, which remained in German hands until the very end of the war.

The NKVD/Polish intelligence team learned that SS-Obersturmbannführer Otto Neumann, who had commanded a Kommando detachment in Breslau, had been responsible for all southbound shipments to Spain and South America.

Neumann was never caught, but was reputed to have escaped to Rhodesia, where he was supposedly sighted after the war.

According to some estimates, Witkowski said, the air bridge established by the Kommando's southern command between the Reich's remaining occupied territories and neutral, but Axis-sympathetic Spain managed to evacuate 12,000 tons of high-tech equipment and documentation in the final months of the war using any commandeered Luftwaffe transport it could lay its hands on.

The Kommando southern command had one other exit route available to it up to the end of the war—albeit an even more hazardous one. Using some of the northern Adriatic ports that remained in German hands up to the surrender, a brave or foolish U-boat commander could conceivably have run the gauntlet of Allied air and maritime superiority to evacuate cargo and personnel by sea.

But it was Sporrenberg's northern route operations that underpinned the reason for the trip, because it was Sporrenberg who provided the only details that have ever come to light on the Bell.

The experiment started out at a top secret SS-run facility near Leubus (Lubiaz in modern-day Poland), northwest of Breslau, in early-mid 1944. With the Soviets' rapid push into Poland during late 1944/early 1945, the unit was transferred to a castle on a hill above the ancient village of Fuerstenstein (Ksiaz), 45 kilometers to the south, close to the Lower Silesian coal-mining center of Waldenburg. From there, it was moved again to the mine near Ludwigsdorf (Ludwikowice), 20 kilometers the other side of Waldenburg, nestling in the northern reaches of the Sudeten Mountains. The Wenceslas Mine, where the Bell ended up, had been requisitioned by the SS as part of a neighboring underground weapons complex, code-named Riese—"Giant."

Riese, only part-completed by the end of the war, was an attempt to transform an entire mountain into an underground weapons production center. The many tens of kilometers of galleries that had been tunneled by the end of the war had been clawed from the rock by inmates drafted in from the nearby concentration camp of Gross-Rosen. Modern excavations of Riese show that the SS had been attempting to link it to the Wenceslas mine via a tunnel almost ten kilometers long.

By mid-afternoon, Witkowski and I had reached Wroclaw, a smoky industrial city on the banks of the River Oder that in 1945, as the "fortress" city of Breslau, had held out against the Red Army for more than 70 days, despite total encirclement.

In September 1944, long before the Russians were at Breslau's gates, the German military commander, General Krause, proposed the evacuation of 200,000 civilians, but Gauleiter Hanke refused, seeing it as a sign of weakness.

Four months later, as the Soviet ring of steel closed around the city, Hanke finally relented and women and children were permitted to leave.

But in the depths of a winter that was cold enough to freeze the sweeping waters of the Oder, those that weren't cut down, killed or raped by the Russians succumbed in their thousands to the subzero temperatures.

In February, the troops of SS Fortress Battalion "Besselein" launched a ferocious counterattack in an attempt to break the siege. While the German troops met the Russians head-on in some of the heaviest street-fighting since Stalingrad, Hanke exhorted his citizens to victory under the slogan "Every house a fortress." He then ordered a ruthless conscription of manpower that produced five regiments of Volkssturm—old men beyond normal fighting age—and Hitler Youth.

Following the briefest of training regimes, principally in the use of antitank "panzerfausts," they went out and died in the thousands.

We edged forward in the heavy traffic, soon finding ourselves on a long wide thoroughfare, the former Kaiserstrasse, which by April 1945 had been transformed into a landing strip for medium transport aircraft after the Russians captured the airport. It signaled the beginning of the end, but still the defenders fought on.

German Red Cross flights of Junkers Ju 52s removed 6,000 of the more seriously wounded and beneath the dense overcast that merged with the factory smoke a half century later, I could almost hear the rumble of trimotors as they swept into land, touching down at night under the guiding light of flame torches, and the crump-wump of artillery explosions in the suburbs.

By this stage, the defenders—soldiers and civilians alike—were forced to battle the Russians on all conceivable fronts, including the sewers beneath the streets.

On May 4, two days after the Russians took Berlin, a delegation of churchmen begged General Niehoff, Krause's replacement, to surrender. Two days later, he agreed and on May 7 the Red Army marched in.

Furious at having been held at bay by such a vastly inferior force, the Soviets launched heavy reprisals against the soldiers and citizenry of Breslau; a fate that Gauleiter Hanke chose not to share. He had flown out of the city on May 4 in a Fieseier Storch liaison aircraft to take up his post as successor to the disgraced Himmler, whose surrender negotiations had been uncovered by Hitler shortly before his suicide.

Hanke, local administrator of Bormann's enigmatic General Plan 1945, the man to whom the Breslau-based detachment of the Special Evacuation Kommando was directly acountable, was never seen again.

When I told Witkowski about Kammler, how he too had vanished off the face of the earth, he was unmoved. It was simply part of a pattern, he told me. Hanke, Kammler . . . there were dozens of high-ranking former SS or Party members that had never been called to account. They had simply disappeared. Many of them shared the distinction of having had access to highly advanced technology.

In the immediate aftermath of his death sentence, Sporrenberg, head of the Special Evacuation unit's Breslau operations, was smuggled to Russia, milked by the NKVD in one last brutal round of interrogation, then disposed of. Schuster, in charge of the unit's transportation arrangements, died "mysteriously" in 1947 and Szymanski and Prawin, the two Polish intelligence officers who'd interrogated them, also met untimely ends after their release from the special NKVD investigation cell—Szymanski in an air crash and Prawin in a drowning accident.

"What was it that killed them?" I asked. "Their knowledge of the Special Evacuation Kommando or the fact they knew about the mine?"

Witkowski kept his eyes on the road. "The Germans maintained a special detachment of aircraft, probably Ju 290s, and a single Ju 390, both rare heavy transport types, based at Opeln—Opole today—a hundred kilometers from here. Witnesses say the planes were well camouflaged and that some were painted with yellow and blue identification markings, which suggests they were masquerading as Swedish planes. If so, it was almost certainly a unit of KG 200, the Luftwaffe special operations wing, which frequently flew aircraft under the flag of enemy or neutral countries. The point is, the Evacuation Kommando had the ability to move thousands of tons of documentation, equipment and personnel, and they could move it north or south. Sporrenberg's brief was to go north. The whole operation was highly secret. But nothing, it seems, was more secret than the Bell."

We crawled out of Wroclaw in a heavy convoy of trucks bound for the Czech border. I focused on a faint ribbon of sky between the clouds gathering to the south and the outline of the Sudeten Mountains, the inner core of Kammler's high-tech kingdom, indistinct yet somehow threatening, on the distant horizon.

Chapter 20

In his interrogation sessions with the NKVD and his deposition to the Polish courts, SS General Jakob Sporrenberg could only tell the interrogators and the prosecutors so much, Witkowski told me. Sporrenberg was a policeman and an administrator, not a technician. He could relay what he had seen and heard, little snippets he had picked up, but the technology itself was beyond him. He had been tasked with getting men, materiel and documents out of Lower Silesia before the Russians reached them; he had had no need to know much else. This was standard SS operating procedure.

I asked what else he knew about Sporrenberg.

Witkowski stared straight ahead as he talked. First, I had to understand that Sporrenberg was very high up the chain of command. Records showed, he said, that Sporrenberg was appointed deputy commander of the Waffen-SS VI Korps under SS-Obergruppenführer Walter Krueger in 1944. Krueger, as far as Witkowski had been able to ascertain, had been involved in a series of top secret SS-conceived operations in the closing months of the war, including a plan to occupy neutral Sweden, the evacuation of Nazi wealth to South America and other neutral or nonaligned states, a harebrained scheme to strike at New York with V-ls launched by submarine and, of course, the special evacuation of Nazi secret weapons and high technology. Sporrenberg was appointed plenipotentiary in charge of northern-route "special evacuations" to Norway on June 28, 1944. Like Kammler, it seemed that General Sporrenberg was recognized and rewarded for his ability to organize, not for his ability to fight.

Following his capture, as much as Sporrenberg was able to divulge to Soviet intelligence and the Polish courts about the Bell was this, Witkowski said. The project had gone under two code names: "Laternentrager" and "Chroms" and always involved "Die Glocke"—the bell-shaped object that had glowed when under test. The Bell itself was made out of a hard, heavy metal and was filled with a mercury-like substance, violet in color. This metallic liquid was stored in a tall thin thermos flask a meter high encased in lead three centimeters thick.

The experiments always took place under a thick ceramic cover and involved the rapid spinning of two cylinders in opposite directions. The mercury-like substance was code-named "Xerum 525." Other substances used included thorium and beryllium peroxides, code-named Leichtmetall.

The chamber in which the experiments took place was situated in a gallery deep belowground. It had a floor area of approximately 30 square meters and its walls were covered with ceramic tiles with an overlay of thick rubber matting. After approximately ten tests, the room was dismantled and its component parts destroyed. Only the Bell itself was preserved. The rubber mats were replaced every two to three experiments and were disposed of in a special furnace.

Each test lasted for approximately one minute. During this period, while the Bell emitted its pale blue glow, personnel were kept 150 to 200 meters from it. Electrical equipment anywhere within this radius would usually short-circuit or break down. Afterward, the room was doused for up to 45 minutes with a liquid that appeared to be brine. The men who performed this task were concentration camp prisoners from Gross-Rosen.

During the tests, the scientists placed various types of plants, animals and animal tissues in the Bell's sphere of influence. In the initial test period from November to December 1944, almost all the samples were destroyed. A crystalline substance formed within the tissues, destroying them from the inside; liquids, including blood, gelled and separated into clearly distilled fractions.

Plants exposed to the Bell included mosses, ferns, fungi and molds; animal tissues included egg white, blood, meat and milk; the animals themselves ranged from insects and snails to lizards, frogs, mice and rats.

With the plants, chlorophyll was observed to decompose or disappear, turning the plants white four to five hours after the experiment. Within eight to fourteen hours, rapid decay set in, but it differed from normal decomposition in that there was no accompanying smell. By the end of this period, the plants had usually decomposed into a substance that had the consistency of axle grease.

In a second series of experiments that started in January 1945, the damage to the test subjects was reduced to around 12—15 percent following certain modifications to the equipment. This was reduced to two to three percent after a second set of refinements. People exposed to the program complained of ailments, in spite of their protective clothing. These ranged from sleep problems, loss of memory and balance, muscle spasms and a permanent and unpleasant metallic taste in the mouth. The first team was said to have been disbanded as a result of the deaths of five of the seven scientists involved.

This, Witkowski said, was all contained in the documents he had been shown. What impressed him—and what I now confessed had me intrigued as well—was their level of apparent detail. It told him—and me—that in all likelihood something had happened down the mine; something mysterious. But what? Witkowski insisted that it had all the hallmarks of an antigravity experiment. But I wasn't so sure. Before I could begin to believe this was the Holy Grail, I needed to check off a set of more rational explanations first. And the most glaring of these was the probability that this had been some kind of test involving nuclear material. The documents that Witkowski had seen had mentioned the involvement of Professor Walther Gerlach, the man charged with oversight of Germany's atomic weapons programs. Disturbingly, they also cited Dr. Ernst Grawitz, head of the euphemistically labeled SS Medical Service. Grawitz had been the boss of Josef Mengele, the infamous doctor of Auschwitz. Inevitably, there were reports that the Bell had been tested on humans as well. Again, if the Bell had emitted radiation, the Nazis—given their record on war crimes in this area—would have probably monitored its effects.

I said nothing, however, out of deference to Witkowski, who told me that much of the rest of his evidence was visible at the Wenceslas Mine itself.

As we approached Waldenburg, Walbrzych as it is today, the landscape altered. After nothing but lowlands and flatlands all day, the road now started to twist and climb as we headed into the foothills of the Sudeten range.

Waldenburg itself was bleak, its imposing mix of late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century architecture, Germanic to the rooftops, blackened with coal dust and beset by decay. Though it had escaped the ravages of the war, the Soviet advance passing it by to the north and the south, it had been less fortunate in the wake of the communist collapse. By the early 1990s, almost all mining operations in the region had been shut down, transforming it overnight from one of Poland's most prosperous areas to its poorest.

Men with nothing to do gathered on street corners and intersections and passed bottles of cheap vodka among one another, eyeing us suspiciously as we swept by.

On the narrow road leading out of Waldenburg to Ludwigsdorf, I asked Witkowski what had led him to believe that the Bell experiments had been an attempt by the Nazis to manipulate gravity.

There were scant clues, he admitted, but those that Sporrenberg had provided in his testimony seemed to add up to something. Many of the descriptions used by the Bell scientists did not gel with any of the accepted terms associated with nuclear physics, nor were there any obvious radioactive materials used in the experiments themselves. One of the terms Sporrenberg had picked up had been "vortex compression"; another was "magnetic fields separation." These were physical principles that had come to be associated with the new wave of gravity and antigravity pioneers—people like Dr. Evgeny Podkletnov, Witkowski said.

Podkletnov. Now, I began to pay more attention. If I'd interpreted Witkowski correctly, there was some kind of a relationship between the Russian's experiments with spinning superconductors—the effect he had tripped over in Finland when his assistant's pipe smoke had hit that column of gravity-shielded air—and the effect produced by the Bell.

I needed to call Marckus and run some of this stuff past him; if, that is, he was still talking to me after my refusal to dig deeper in America.

Witkowski also claimed there were anomalies in the curriculum vitae of Professor Walther Gerlach that placed him firmly in the orbit of the gravity scientists, despite the fact that, ostensibly, his discipline was nuclear physics. In the '20s and '30s, Witkowski discovered, Gerlach had immersed himself in phenomena such as "spin polarization," "spin resonance" and the properties of magnetic fields—areas that had little to do with the physics of the bomb, but much to do with the enigmatic properties of gravity.

A student of Gerlach's at Munich, O.G. Hilgenberg, published a paper in 1931 entitled "About Gravitation, Vortices and Waves in Rotating Media"—putting him in the same ballpark as Podkletnov and the Bell. And yet, after the war, Gerlach, who died in 1979, apparently never returned to these subject matters, nor did he make any references to them; almost as if he had been forbidden to do so.

"The Germans ignored Einstein and developed an approach to gravity based on quantum theory," Witkowski said. "Don't forget that Einsteinian physics, relativity physics, with its big-picture view of the universe, represented Jewish science to the Nazis. Germany was where quantum mechanics was born. The Germans were looking at gravity from a different perspective to everyone else. Maybe it gave them answers to things the pro-relativity scientists hadn't even thought of."

Kammler, Witkowski told me, had the ability to vacuum up all scientific activity, whether it was theoretical or practical, through an SS-run organization called the FEP, for Forschungen, Entwicklungen und Patente—researches, developments and patents. The FEP introduced the last major player in the story of the Bell and the Special Evacuation Kommando, an SS-Obergruppenführer called Mazuw. A high-ranking general, Emil Mazuw had been able to acquire any significant technology, science theory or patent application that had come to the attention of the SS—and via its prolific security arms, there wasn't much that passed it by. The FEP, according to Witkowski's researches, operated independently of the Reichsforschungsrat, the Reich Research Council, but would unquestionably have had oversight of it.

My guess was that the FEP had been administered by Kammler's secret research cell within the Skoda Works. After the war, the Allied powers seized 340,000 German-held patents from the captured records of the Reich Research Council.

But here was something else: the cream of Germany's wartime scientific research that had been skimmed off by the SS and compartmentalized for its own use. Its value would have been immeasurable. Perhaps this really was what Kammler had returned to Czechoslovakia for in the death throes of the Reich?

There were other clues, too, but these, Witkowski repeated, were the physical traces at the mine itself and were best explained when we got there.

At Ludwigsdorf we followed the line of an old railway that had been built before the war to connect the region's network of industries to the outside world. As the road climbed, we found ourselves in a valley bordered on both sides by tall trees. A patchy mist clung to the upper branches as we ascended into the hills.

Then we rounded a bend and the scenery opened up. We were in a valley, one that had appeared out of nowhere. Witkowski parked on a patch of gravel overlooking some level ground. The railway track, overgrown from years of disuse, followed its median line, eventually disappearing from view behind a large derelict building whose tall arched windows rose cathedral-like into the mist. It was next to this building, Witkowski said, that the shaft of the mine disappeared belowground.

I stood on the edge of a steep bank a short walk from the car. The valley was around 300 yards across, the trees either side of it so dense you'd never know the place existed unless you happened upon it.

The bank, which was 20 feet high, was mirrored by an identical feature on the opposite side. During the war, this expanse of land had been an underground marshaling yard, Witkowski told me, thick wooden planks called sleepers topped with turf hiding a six-lane section of track where the railhead met the workings of the mine.

Even the buildings disguised the facility's true purpose.

High on the opposite bank was a large redbrick house, an original 19th-century feature of the Wenceslas Mine. But look a little closer, Witkowski said, and you could see where the Germans had tunneled into the ground underneath and constructed a large concrete bunker, one of the many blockhouses scattered around the complex. All of the bunkers had been covered with earth and trees planted on top.

In short, the Germans had gone to a great deal of trouble to ensure that the place looked pretty much as it had always looked since mining operations began here at the turn of the last century, a clear indication that whatever had happened here during the war had been deeply secret. Now, half a century after the Germans had left, second-guessing the use to which it had been put, simply from the available physical evidence, was far from easy.

When, immediately after the war, the Poles repatriated the local German population, substituting German place-names for Polish ones in the process, they removed any witnesses who could have shed light on the SS' activities. Almost everything that was known about the Wenceslas Mine had been handed down from Sporrenberg.

It had been run by the SS, had employed slave labor and had been sealed from the outside world by a triple ring of checkpoints and heavily armed guards.

Beyond that, Witkowski said, we were into the realm of analysis, interpretation and detective work; the skills required for such a task being more akin to those of an archaeologist.

Although the locals had used the site for small-scale industrial activity in the years since the war—I could see freshly milled lumber stacked on a flat piece of land over by the valley entrance—it had been entirely neglected by the history books; its wartime use known only to the handful of people Witkowski had brought here.

That, I could understand. The place was as far off the beaten track as I'd ever been on the continent of Europe. I felt like I was tramping on ground that had hardly been touched since the Germans had pulled out more than half a century earlier.

The first thing to point out, Witkowski said, was the structure at the end of the valley. This, built before the war, was a power station capable of burning a thousand tons of coal a day—enough to provide the valley with vast quantities of electricity. It had more than likely been this single feature that had drawn the SS to the site, Witkowski said, since it had helped to make the place entirely self-sufficient. After the war, when the Russians eventually made it into these hills, they would have found an abandoned complex given over to some quasi-military purpose, a mine shaft that had been flooded, possibly deliberately, and little more.

"With the help of Sporrenberg's testimony, we have an edge that was denied to the first Red Army units to enter this place," Witkowski said. "Come, I want to show you something; something very strange."

We clambered back into the car and made our way down the track that led past the abandoned power station. It was now dark enough for Witkowski to use his lights, the beams catching in the weeds that tumbled through the cracks in the prefab concrete roadway laid by the Germans during the war.

Whatever the SS had been moving around here, it had been pretty heavy-duty, Witkowski remarked.

The track cut through a wood, emerging in a clearing on the far side of the power station. Caught in the headlights, rising out of the ground straight ahead, was a circular concrete construction 30 meters wide and 10 high. With its 12-meter-thick columns and horizontal beams, it was part-reminiscent of some ritual pagan edifice.

Witkowski parked the car, but left the headlights on, the beams bathing the columns of the object in bright white light.

"What is that thing?" I asked.

But Witkowski was already out of the door, crouching over something a few feet from the car. He was studying what looked like a partly exposed underground drain. Its concrete cover had cracked to reveal a duct about a foot across.

"This carried the electricity cable from the power station," he said. "It disappears into the ground just beyond the car, but diverts via this thing."

"What is it?" I asked again.

"I am not sure. But whatever it is—whatever it was—I believe the Germans managed to complete it. In this light it is difficult to see, but some of the original green paint remains. You do not camouflage something that is half-finished. It makes no sense." He paused. "There is something else. The ground within the structure has been excavated to a depth of a meter and lined with the same ceramic tiles that Sporrenberg describes in the chamber that contained the Bell. There are also high-strength steel hooks set into the tops of the columns. I think they were put there to support something; to attach to something. Something that must have exerted a lot of power."

I looked at him. "What are you saying?"

He took a moment before replying. "I'm saying I think it's a test rig. A test rig for a vehicle or an engine of some kind. A very powerful one."

That night I tried to call Marckus on my cell phone, but the isolated farmhouse where we were staying was buried in a deep valley, every bit as remote as the one that housed the nearby Wenceslas Mine complex, and I couldn't get a signal.

The Polish couple who owned the small farm let out a room to Witkowski whenever he came south from Warsaw to visit. They shared his curiosity about the mine and the neighboring rat run of uncompleted tunnels that were part of the SS-run "Giant" underground weapons complex. For all they or anyone else knew, the tunnels extended under the ground I was standing on. But being only second-generation inhabitants of this region, their parents having been shipped in to replace the Germans who'd lived here for three hundred years previously, they knew as little about the history of the place as Witkowski and I did. This, undoubtedly, helped to give the place a detached, soulless air.

There was no anecdotal evidence to fall back on; the only evidence was history's imprint on the topography itself.

I needed Marckus. I needed to run every last detail of the mine past him to see if it rang any bells in that weird analytical mind of his. I needed his guiding expertise again. Without some input from a physicist, the data on the Bell was nothing more than a bunch of science mumbo jumbo.

As I collected my thoughts under the swath of clear, starlit sky between the ridgelines, I elected to concentrate on a matter I did know something about; something that had been nagging at me ever since Witkowski had mentioned it: the matter of the KG 200 unit at Opeln, the base that had operated the Ju 290 and 390 transport aircraft on detachment to the Kommando. It was a highly significant development.

The Ju 290 was quite a rare bird; the 390 even more so. The 290 had been a big four-engined aircraft designed for the maritime reconnaissance, transport and bombing roles. The first transports had been used in the Stalingrad air bridge in 1942, but toward the end of the war, the final variants were modified for extreme-long-range operations. Three such aircraft are known to have made flights to Japanese bases in Manchuria. The Ju 390 was a six-engined modification of the Ju 290 with even more impressive operating characteristics. Though only two prototypes were built, they clearly demonstrated the Ju 390's ability to mount ultra-long-range operations of up to 32 hours endurance. On one occasion, a Ju 390 flew to within 12 miles of New York and back again. It could also carry a very heavy payload.

Above all, though, the Luftwaffe had referred to these aircraft as "trucks."

A book in Witkowski's possession, The Nuclear Axis by Philip Henshall, had provided this one essential detail. Henshall had picked up on Tom Agoston's story of Himmler's request for a "truck." But Henshall had arrived at a markedly different interpretation of the data. When Kammler had telexed Himmler on April 17 from his Munich office—the last signal anyone ever received from him—refusing the Reichsführer-SS the use of a "heavy truck" from the Junkers "motor pool," he hadn't been referring to a truck in the conventional sense. He had been referring to an aircraft. A long-range one with a heavy payload.

Kammler had been telling Himmler, his superior, that he couldn't have a Junkers 290 or 390 for his own use, because it was committed elsewhere. It could only have been for use by the Special Evacuation Kommando. Why else stamp such an ostensibly bland, innocent message geheim—secret? Why else would Himmler have been bothering himself with trucks?

With Bormann, Hitler's deputy, in charge of the evacuation plan, Kammler would have been in a unique position to call the shots. Although Hitler viewed Himmler as a valued and trusted ally—certainly up until the moment his secret surrender negotiations were discovered—it was Bormann, Hitler's gray eminence, who had his ear.

Kammler could safely refuse Himmler permission to use a Ju 290 or 390 without fear of recrimination. With such aircraft at its disposal, the Kommando could have flown its cargo of documents, personnel and technology pretty much anywhere it wanted. Spain, South America—Argentina, even—would have represented no problem to such a long-range platform.

The realization pulled me up short. What was the point of chasing Kammler, if he 'd already shipped everything out?

After dinner, a good but simple meal of boiled eggs and local ham, I wandered back outside to take the air, leaving Witkowski inside to talk to our hosts.

I gazed at the ridgelines again. A few miles away, lay the Wenceslas Mine.

Part of me was transported back to the desert around Groom Lake, to the time when I'd stood vigil over the hills that shielded Area 51 from the outside world.

The part-completed Giant underground manufacturing complex and the Wenceslas Mine were a lot closer than I'd ever been able to get to the 27,000-feet-long paved runway on the desert lakebed. But the feeling they evoked in me was curiously similar.

The SS had installed a security system around the mine every bit as impenetrable as the cordon around Groom Lake. That, undoubtedly, was a part of it.

As was the fact that the technologies at the heart of both places were essentially a mystery to everyone but the people who'd worked on them.

It was not knowing what lay beyond those ridgelines that made me do this. It was the not knowing that drove me on.

All these sensations contributed to the almost tangible atmosphere that imbued both places.

I was consumed with the need to go on until the picture steadied.

I knew then that I was tired—more tired than I'd ever been. I had got to the point where my every living minute was filled with a need to know the truth of something this insoluble, and that it had got ahold of me so badly that my subconscious mind was trying to solve it in my sleep, failing in the process and turning in on itself, twisting raw thoughts and images into the worst kind of dreams. Here, in the depths of Kammler's kingdom, a thousand miles from the warm archives of the Imperial War Museum and the Public Records Office, the scale of the Holocaust had begun to cling to me like a second skin.

Amidst it all, though, a particular sequence of images had stuck in my mind since my visit to the mine. Try as I might to stop it, I couldn't. I saw it with my eyes open and I saw it with them shut. In the chill air between the ridgelines, I saw it now.

It started with the arrival of a convoy of Opel trucks a week before the end of the war.

The scientists would have had mixed feelings about leaving: a sense of regret at having to abandon the project; relief to be escaping the oppressive feeling of the place; joy at the knowledge they were getting out ahead of the Russians.

A late spring day, the guns a long way off, the scientists talking and smoking in threadbare suits, their bundled possessions to hand, as the convoy was readied for departure. Sixty-two scientists meant three trucks' worth; perhaps another five to transport the crates. Eight trucks in all, moving west, gears grinding on the steep roads through the mountains. A disciplined unit operating to a fixed schedule, the details drawn up by Sporrenberg's bureaucrats in Breslau.

Two kinds of troops attached to the unit: drivers and logistics personnel to oversee the evacuation procedure and an armed sonderkommando group acting as escort.

To these special-action troops, the scientists were simply "subjects." The trick was to maintain their docility and compliance until the last possible moment.

After multiple "operations" in the ghettos of Lodz, Warsaw, Minsk and the other occupied towns and cities of Central and Eastern Europe, the SS had found that by sticking to a preprepared book, the subjects could be kept as passive as cattle.

For some of the scientists, there may have been a tremor of foreboding as the three trucks peeled off from the main body of the convoy and headed into the forest.

But for most it would only have hit them when the tailgates dropped away exposing a line of troops with SS runes on their collars, their guns raised.

The Waffen-SS would have outnumbered the subjects two to one, their crushing shock and bewilderment combining with the SS's weight of numbers to make them respond without question to the barked orders as they moved toward the edge of the ditch. At no point, special-action orders decreed, should subjects feel that the executioners offered the remotest kind of hope.

And so, it had come to this. Two shifts, 31 bullets per shift, each shot three, maybe four seconds apart. The first victims facedown in the dirt for each member of the second shift to witness in a terrible moment of finality as he stepped up to the ditch, their grave, the proportions worked out in advance in some warm administrative office a long way from the front.

Sixty-two men meant a ditch ten meters long, two meters wide and one meter deep, the bodies stacked two high.

If the executioner tasked with placing his pistol at the base of each head observed the guidelines laid down for his benefit, the act of pulling the trigger was calculated to be no more arduous than switching off an electric light.

When the trucks left, the only thing to denote the scene of the crime would have been a mound of freshly dug earth half a meter high.

By the following spring, the mound would have collapsed to the exact same level as the ground around it. This, too, would have been carefully calculated according to the known decay rates of human tissue and the ambient conditions of the ditch.

To preserve the secret of the mine, the SS had consulted not even a page, but a paragraph or two from the execution manual it had drawn up for the Holocaust. It had tapped on the crime of the century to do this to a handful of its own people.

Though none of this was proven fact, remember this, I told myself, should you ever be tempted to view this as a technology hunt in a remote place that has little or nothing to do with you.

Chapter 21

The next day, I was back into Germany, on my way to Austria, making good progress on the autobahns in the rental car I'd picked up across the border, when the phone rang. It was Marckus. Hearing his voice, I felt a wave of relief, the cellular link between us suddenly feeling like a lifeline.

I spent the next 20 minutes briefing him on the mine. To begin with, he put up some resistance, trotting out his old belief that it was pointless pursuing the Germans for anything remotely as advanced as antigravity technology. But I had a feeling that Marckus was simply going through the motions.

The longer I talked, the more he listened. By the end, he was firing the questions at me.

I told him I had a hunch; that the Wenceslas Mine complex had been some kind of nuclear installation, the strange, henge-like construction being redolent of a reactor housing, with a tile-lined coolant pool in its midst. I didn't buy Witkowski's test-rig thesis, but then again I wasn't dismissing it either.

As for the Bell, I had absolutely no idea what it could have been, but without my notes at hand, I couldn't give Marckus the kind of details he required to conduct an in-depth analysis.

I promised to send him an email with the facts that night, as soon as I got to my hotel in Bad Ischl, across the Austrian border.

"What happens in Bad Ischl?" Marckus asked.

I told him about the Junkers "truck" business and how it had altered my plans. With long-range transport aircraft at his disposal, Kammler had had the means to ship the core secrets of the Skoda Works anywhere he wanted. And for all I knew, he had gone with them. It was pointless trying to pick up the clues of his disappearance in Ebensee or anywhere else for the time being. It was enough to know that the Nazis had, via Kammler's special projects group, a repository of technical secrets that had gone way beyond the V-weapons they had developed and used by the end of the war.

It had taught me other things, too. For years, I had read of the SS' involvement in exotic weapons technology, but dismissed it as inadmissible claptrap peddled by people with an unhealthy interest in its warped ritualistic ideology; this, despite Speer's solid documentation of Himmler's penchant for unconventional scientific solutions to Germany's dire military position in the closing years of the war. In Infiltration, Speer's account of how the SS eventually succeeded in establishing its own industrial empire within the visible economic framework of the Reich, he had listed some of Himmler's more absurd ideas: producing fuel from fir-tree roots, tapping the exhaust fumes of bakery chimneys for the manufacture of alcohol and producing oil in abundance from geraniums.

Speer also attests to Himmler's willingness to entertain any radical ideas for new weapons—especially those that leaped the current state of the art. One such was a proposal for turning the upper atmosphere into a giant high-voltage conductor, presumably for the purpose of frying the Allies' B-17, B-24 and Lancaster bombers as they flew into Reich airspace. These ideas, many of which were based on unsound science, came to naught, but it would have taken only one far-reaching proposal underpinned by some solid scientific reasoning for this vast array of funded research activity to deliver the payoff so desperately sought by the Nazi leadership.

Like lasers, for example. Or an atomic bomb.

It had also taught me just how effective—and this word, of course, glosses over the grotesque cruelty of its methods—the SS security machine had been.

The Kammlerstab had been protected by a triple ring of counter-intelligence agents to prevent word of its activities from leaking. If it hadn't been for Voss and Agoston, the existence of the special projects group at Skoda might never have surfaced at all.

It had been the same story at the Wenceslas Mine. A combination of active security measures and a neighboring populace that had been rounded up and removed en masse, and its wartime activities had all but disappeared from existence.

But there was an even more powerful reason why none of this had ever properly surfaced before.

By involving the concentration camps, the SS had unwittingly set the seal on any serious postwar investigation of the science and technology it had pursued during the conflict. Because it had been the SS, not so much Speer's Armaments Ministry, that had backed so-called high-payoff, "visionary" projects with funding, German industry found itself in league up to its collective neck with the perpetrators of the Holocaust.

Many of the companies that had benefited from SS money, and employed concentration camp labor in the process, are still in existence today.

Bosch, Siemens, Zeiss and AEG all maintained highly secretive research and development operations in Lower Silesia.

It remains in their interests for their activities at this time to stay largely undocumented. I doubted, in any case, even if they were to open up their archives, whether anything of real value remained in them. Like the records pertaining to Kammler's past, I suspected they'd long since been cleaned out.

This, I said to Marckus, was how secrets came to be locked away, buried for all time, leaving nothing but myths and legends in their aftermath.

Maybe the Nazis had initiated a flying saucer program; maybe some of the technology had borne fruit. There was certainly enough anecdotal evidence to support the view that a variety of disc-shaped craft had flown before the end of the war. It was simply that there was no proof.

My journey into Kammler's kingdom had opened my mind to possibilities I wouldn't have begun to entertain a few months earlier. And in the process of this willingness at least to confront new ideas, I had found myself drawn to Bad Ischl.

It was there, before leaving London, that I had arranged to meet with the family of Viktor Schauberger.

I had picked up on the Schauberger story via the Legend forwarded to me by my friend and former colleague, Lawrence Cross, in Australia. I had initially dismissed it out of hand because not being an engineer but a simple forester, what this Austrian inventor was said to have achieved technically hadn't made any sense. And the phone conversation I had had with his son Walter, who back in 1991 had urged me to visit the family-run "bio-technical institute" in the Salzkammergut mountains so I could make up my own mind, had only served to alienate me further.

But Bad Ischl was less than 15 minutes' drive time from Ebensee. And a lot had changed in the interim. I knew, for example, thanks to Podkletnov and his lab assistant's pipe smoke, that whatever antigravity was or wasn't, it had to be induced by something highly unconventional. And Schauberger's approach to the energy-generation process he referred to as "implosion"—if the Legend as relayed to me by Cross contained even a grain of truth—was certainly unconventional.

The Schaubergers maintained a large archive dedicated to Viktor's work in their house, the location of the institute, on the outskirts of Bad Ischl. If they would allow me to take a look at it, perhaps I would be able to find something, some proof, that the Germans really had developed a new and exotic propulsion medium.

They were reluctant to do so and I could understand why: It was well documented in the legends that had grown up around him that Viktor Schauberger had worked for the SS.

In my initial assessment of Schauberger's work, this association seemed to have been drawn straight from the mythology surrounding SS activities during the war and had merely compounded the case against him.

Now, of course, it was quite the reverse.

I'd reached the end of the road; told Marckus everything I'd learned. It was only when I finished that I realized he hadn't interjected once.

I thanked him for listening. He stopped me just before I cut the link.

"Call me, won't you, if you need to talk. I mean it. Day or night. Sometimes it can be good to download, clear the mind for what lies ahead."

As I journeyed on toward the mountains, I felt better about Marckus than I had in months. It was difficult to put my finger on, but it had something to do with the fact that, for once, I was telling him about material of which he had no prior knowledge. I wasn't entirely sure why, but for the first time I felt I could trust him.

Something about Marckus' final tone of voice told me something else.

I felt sure that he knew exactly what I was going through.

As soon as I crossed the Austrian border, I took a break at a rest stop, got out the laptop and pulled up Cross' notes on the Legend. The relevant portion, the part devoted to Viktor Schauberger, boiled down to the following precis:

Late in the war, despite being close to pensionable age, Schauberger was called up for active duty in the German Army. Soon afterward, he received orders to report to an SS institution in Vienna. From there, he was taken to the nearby concentration camp of Mauthausen, informed by the camp commandant that his inventions had received the blessing of Reichsführer Himmler himself, and ordered to handpick a group of engineers from among the prisoners. This would be the "team" that would help him complete his work on an energy device of radical design that Schauberger had begun working on before the war. If he did not comply with this order, the commandant informed him, he would be hanged and reprisals instituted against his family. Schauberger did as he was told.

By 1944, serious work had begun on a Schauberger machine that appeared to have a dual purpose: first as an energy generator and second as a power plant for an aerospace vehicle of saucer-like appearance. Descriptions of the workings of this generator, sometimes referred to as a "trout turbine," were always woefully inadequate. One such relayed the apparent fact that "if water or air is rotated into a twisting form of oscillation known as 'colloidal,' a buildup of energy results, which, with immense power, can cause lévitation."

Details of the chronology were hazy, Cross explained, but Schauberger's team had apparently claimed success a few days before Germany surrendered. One of the scientists who'd worked with Schauberger reportedly said that at the first attempt to run the machine "the flying saucer rose unexpectedly to the ceiling and then was wrecked. The apparatus functioned at the first attempt. . . . and rose upward trailing a blue-green and then a silver-colored glow."

The craft in question, Cross said, had a diameter of 1.5 meters, weighed 135 kilograms and was started by a small electric motor with takeoff energy supplied by the so-called trout turbine.

The next part, Cross' text alerted me, was really weird. "A few days later an American group reportedly appeared, who seemed to understand what was happening and seized everything (his emphasis, not mine)." Schauberger was kept under "protective U.S. custody" for six months to a year, Cross maintained, and some of his work was reportedly branded by the Americans as "atomic energy research." Cross ended up saying he had no idea what happened to Schauberger after this period.

I kept all of this in mind as I drove through Ebensee, scanning the mountains for a glimpse of the entrance to Kammler's tunnel system: the Zement complex that would have developed and manufactured the A-9/A-10 intercontinental rocket. I saw nothing but for some road signs directing visitors to a Holocaust Memorial. Zement had become a tourist attraction.

Following directions from Schauberger's grandson, Joerg, I pushed through Bad Ischl, following the River Traun through a patchy expanse of woodland until, on the left-hand side of the road, I spotted the institute, a large imposing house with a tower rising from one of its wings, the initials "PKS" painted in letters six feet high on one of its walls. It was here that the Schauberger family organized periodic lectures and seminars devoted to the heretical scientific principles promulgated by Viktor and his son Walter. Walter had since died, but his son Joerg continued to push the ideas that his father and grandfather had promoted for the creation of a better world.

All I knew about the Schaubergers was what I had read; that Viktor, through his early work as a forester, had developed a passionate set of theories about the essential characteristics of air and water as living, energizing media and that he viewed Nature as a complex interaction of forces that constantly created or reinvigorated matter—against the orthodox view that matter is in a natural state of decay.

Walter, a trained mathematician, had taken his father's theories a step further, merging Viktor's views with Pythagorean concepts of harmonics and the laws of planetary motion developed by Johannes Kepler. It was no coincidence, Walter believed, that a carefully cut cross section through a Pythagorean hyperbola or the elliptical planetary orbits plotted by Kepler happened to be egg-shaped, a form that was one of Nature's highest expressions of energy and strength. PKS, I remembered now, stood for Pythagoras-Kepler System.

It sounded more than a little like New Age craziness, the last place that someone with my background and training should have gone out of his way to visit; but then again, I reminded myself, maybe it was actually no crazier than NASA's Garry Lyles telling me that man would be journeying to the stars by the end of the 21st century in a spacecraft that used some kind of warp drive or wormhole.

I eased the car onto the Schaubergers' property. The institute lay at the end of a long drive. The snow-capped tops of the mountains beyond were dazzlingly bright against the blue sky.

Joerg Schauberger, Viktor's grandson, greeted me on the steps of the house and led me to the basement area where a series of small-scale experiments had been set up to demonstrate the theories developed by his father and grandfather. Viktor's maxim had been "comprehend and copy Nature" and central to this thesis had been his understanding of the vortices that occurred naturally in the environment.

These "energy spirals," as he saw them, creative whirlpools of Nature, were visible everywhere: from the spiral galaxies of the outer cosmos to the power of a tornado or simply in the whorled horn of a kudu's antler or the double helix of a DNA strand.

Nature, Viktor Schauberger had believed, employed the vortex as its most efficient conduit for the transmission of energy.

When this three-dimensional spiraling energy pattern was channeled inward, not outward, in a process Viktor called "implosion," it became endowed with "higher order" properties—characteristics which Viktor himself described as "atomic" (although his understanding of the word was quite different from that of a nuclear physicist's).These properties were capable of generating phenomenal levels of force. Transposed into machinery, Viktor had even coined a term for it: "bio-technology."

One such device, an implosion-based generator, stood disused and rusting in the corner of the basement area where Joerg Schauberger and I now viewed the fruits of his forebears' lifework.

Joerg Schauberger had signaled during our phone conversations his reluctance to prize open the family archives to a complete stranger. But he was content for me to come to Bad Ischl to plead my case. I was glad that I had. He was roughly my age and had an open, honest face. I liked him immediately. I could see that he was weighing me up every bit as carefully as I was assessing him. Both of us were entering uncertain territory. For me, his grandfather's experiments bordered on the incredible. But Joerg wasn't interested in publicity. This in itself gave me confidence. Whatever lay in the archives, I knew it would be fresh, untainted evidence, free from any kind of interpretation or bias.

Joerg was proud of his family's achievements. In the lofty, baronial entranceway of the family institute, he had shown me a cutaway section of a log flume that his grandfather had built in the forests for the efficient removal of lumbered trees.

It was then that I realized the impression painted of Viktor Schauberger in the Legend was a misleading one. Schauberger wasn't a forester in the strict sense of the word. He was an engineer; and from the look of the machinery around the house an extremely accomplished one. His milieu happened to be the forest.

Now, as we stood beside the implosion machine, his grandson spelled out his fears. Others had documented Viktor Schauberger's experiments, he told me; there was little, he believed, I or anybody else could add to this body of knowledge—the more so in my case, as, by my own admission, the science of the processes involved wasn't principally what had led me here.

I was after proof of a technology that conventional science said was impossible.

If, as the Legend had it, his grandfather had cooperated with the SS, what did his family and its reputation possibly have to gain from my seeing the archives?

I had thought long and hard about this during my drive through Germany, but whichever way I cut it, there was nothing reassuring to say.

So I told him instead about the journey that had brought me to his house; about the series of statements in 1956 by U.S. aerospace companies that the conquest of gravity was imminent, that all that was required to make it happen—to usher in an era of clean, fuelless propulsion technology, of free energy—was money and a little application from the U.S. government.

I told him about Thomas Townsend Brown's efforts at much the same time to interest the U.S. Air Force and Navy in an electrogravitically powered Mach 3 flying saucer and how aspects of Brown's ideas had emerged in the B-2 Stealth Bomber more than three decades later.

I told him how Evgeny Podkletnov had defied the theoreticians of NASA's Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program by engineering a device that shielded gravity by as much as five percent and how, officially, Brown's work had been discredited by the U.S. military—despite its very real application to the B-2.

We spoke, as well, about the glaring discrepancy between General Twining's view in 1947 that the development of a manned aircraft with the operating characteristics of a UFO was "within the present U.S. knowledge" and the fact that, even in the black world of modern U.S. aerospace technology, there were so few traces of this knowledge it was as if it had never existed.

Which had brought me to the Germans.

There was, via the Kammler trail, a mounting body of evidence that the Nazis, in their desperation to win the war, had been experimenting with a form of science the rest of the world had never remotely considered. And that somewhere in this cauldron of ideas, a new technology had been born; one that was so far ahead of its time it had been suppressed for more than half a century.

Joerg Schauberger's grandfather, I felt sure, was integral to the truth of what had happened at that time. But unlike the Wenceslas Mine, where few traces of Sporrenberg's court testimony remained on view, Viktor Schauberger had left records. That, I told his grandson, was why I was here.

At this, he gave an almost imperceptible nod and indicated we should head upstairs. It was getting late and there was a lot of material we needed to get through in the short space of time I was in Bad Ischl.

Like me, he said, pausing at the base of the steps that led to the upper levels of the house, he was only interested in the truth. In the complex world his grandfather had lived in, it was a commodity that was not always so easy to get a handle on.

It was then that I understood. Joerg Schauberger had been trying to assemble his own jigsaw puzzle—one that explained the intricate mystery of his grandfather's life.

I held pieces of the puzzle he didn't possess.

In regulating the movement of water via dams and irrigation schemes, man had obstructed the complex, vortex flow patterns that water naturally adopted for itself, Viktor Schauberger said, causing widespread degeneration and decay in the ecosystem. Harnessed in this unnatural state, water, he came to believe, acted as a pollutant upon the earth, not a life force.

In seeking to come up with methods to restore the earth's ecological balance, he turned to the development of "bio-technical" machinery and promoted his ideas through books, some of which came to the attention of Berlin.

In 1934, a year after Hitler came to power, Schauberger was summoned to the German capital to explain to his Führer and fellow countryman how processes of natural motion and temperature and the vital relationship between soil, water and vegetation combined to create a sustainable and viable society; a society, in effect, that was at ease with itself.

At the meeting was Max Planck, the great German physicist and pioneer of quantum theory, who when asked by Hitler at the end of Schauberger's talk what he thought of his theories replied testily, "Science has nothing to do with Nature" and withdrew from the discussion. Hitler nonetheless asked his technical and economic advisers what could be done to incorporate Schauberger's ideas into the country's four-year economic plan, but nothing ever came of it.

For his part, Schauberger told Hitler that the short-termism of Germany's economic strategy would undermine and ultimately destroy the country's biological foundations.

As a result, he said, the thousand-year Reich would be lucky if it lasted ten.

By using an "impeller"—a propeller that induced an inward-, instead of outward-flowing motion—to draw water through a tube, a flow pattern Schauberger referred to as "centripetal [the opposite of centrifugal] force," he found that the output he was getting was nine times greater than could be achieved with a conventional pressure turbine.

His early egg-shaped implosion machines were also generating extremely high vacuum effects.

By substituting air for water, Schauberger began to envisage a device that with some refinement could be put to use as a radical form of aero-engine; one that sucked rather than pushed its way through the atmosphere.

In 1939, he conceived of a device that could be put to use either as an energy generator or as a power plant for aircraft or submarines. In the application he lodged to the Reich Patent Office the following year, Schauberger described the essential characteristics of this machine as a "multistage centrifuge with concentrically juxtaposed pressure chambers."

Shortly afterward, he wrote to his cousin that he had invented an aircraft that didn't make any noise.

With these devices, Schauberger realized he had created an entirely new methodology for propelling vehicles through air and water.

As Joerg Schauberger and I settled into the archive, which was crammed full with the old man's files and papers, it was clear that Viktor Schauberger had documented every turn of his career in meticulous detail.

Through his letters, duplicates of which he always placed on file, it was possible to paint an intricate profile of the man and his inventions. The challenge, even for his family, lay in decoding the shorthand Schauberger had used to decribe his work.

During the war, he had concentrated on the development of several types of machine—the Repulsator and Repulsine for water purification and distillation, the Implosion Motor for electricity generation, the Trout Turbine for submarine propulsion and a "flying saucer" that used air instead of water as its driving medium. Because they all worked on the same principles, Schauberger tended to interchange the names of these devices and their applications when it suited him.

So, when Viktor wrote in 1940 that he had commissioned a company in Berlin called Kaempfer to build a "Repulsator," it wasn't immediately apparent what this machine was for. It was only when he ran into contractual difficulties with Kaempfer, which was having enormous problems manufacturing the machine to Viktor's demanding specifications, that its function became clear.

By February 1941, Viktor had switched contractors to the Kertl company in Vienna, and here, in correspondence, he described the prototype (which he was building at his own expense) as having a two-fold purpose: to investigate "free energy production" and to validate his theories of "levitational flight."

The machine relied on a turbine plate of waviform construction that fitted onto a similarly molded base plate. The gap between the plates was whorl-shaped, mimicking the corkscrew action of a kudu's antler.

Having drawn air in via the intake, the rapidly rotating turbine propelled it to the rim of the rotating mass under centrifugal force.

The vortex movement of air created by the waviform gap between the plates led to its rapid cooling and "densation," producing a massive reduction in volume and generating a vacuum of enormous pressure, which sucked more air into the turbine.

t
B
S
D
W
C
S
A
E
t

The machine required a small starter motor to commence the process (as depicted in the Legend), but having whipped the turbine up to around 15,000-20,000 rpm the motor was turned off and the operation became self-sustaining.

By connecting the machine to a gear shaft, electricity could be generated from it; or left to its own devices, it could be made to take off.

This capacity to fly Schauberger partly attributed to the creation of the vacuum in the rarefied region immediately above the plates. But the primary levitating force, he claimed, was due to some other process altogether—a reaction between the air molecules in their newly excited state and the body of the machine itself.

Here, we had touched on the heart of the matter: Had Viktor Schauberger created an "antigravity" device?

If the files were anything to go by, the answer was unequivocal.

Soon after work on the device restarted at Kertl, an associate of Schauberger's made an unauthorized test run while Schauberger was absent from the plant. During this experiment, the machine generated such a powerful levitational force that it shot upward, smashing against the roof of the hangar.

Schauberger's correspondence makes it clear that March 1941 was when things really started to happen. It was then, while work began on repairing the Kertl device, that the Gestapo, the secret police arm of the SS, became aware of his work.

That same month, he reported that Professor Ernst Heinkel, inventor of the world's first jet aircraft, was also showing an interest in his technology.

In fact, Professor Heinkel had illegally obtained sight of Schauberger's patent application at the Reich Patent Office and, without the Austrian inventor's knowledge, had begun to incorporate his ideas into a Heinkel project—one that is presumed by some who have studied the Schauberger archive to have been the He 280 fighter, which made its maiden jet-powered flight on March 30, 1941.

While it is known that development of the He 280 ran into technical problems, especially in the area of its troubled HeS 8 turbojets, there is no confirmation that the He 280 was the aircraft in question. And so I found myself wrestling with a heretical notion. It could just as easily have been the "Flying Top" proof-of-concept vehicle supposedly being built by Rudolf Schriever in a "garage" under Heinkel's guidance at Marienehe, near Rostock on the Baltic coast. Try as I might to resist the notion, it would be bolstered by additional data on Heinkel in the space of a few more minutes.

The Schriever story was part of the legend that had grown up around Rudolf Lusar's German Secret Weapons of World War II, the book that had drawn me into the contentious area of German flying disc research. In it, Lusar, who had been well informed on all other aspects of Geman secret weapons activity, made the bold assertion that the first Nazi flying saucer projects commenced in 1941 and that the research was centered on two places: Prague and Breslau.

Heinkel coerced the patent office into restricting the use of Schauberger's technology to water purification and distillation applications, leaving Heinkel free to make fraudulent use of Schauberger's innovations in his aircraft projects. When the Reich Patent Office offered Schauberger a patent on this basis, the Austrian refused and consequently had his application turned down.

In May 1941, Schauberger was formally approached by the "Gestapo," who served him notice (in the company of his patent lawyers) that they would not restrict his work—far from it—but in future he had to pursue it in secret.

This meeting appears to be the trigger for a period of highly covert activity in Schauberger's life, about which he leaves few clues in his letters. Weeks after his meeting with the Gestapo (which, in Schauberger-speak, could just as easily have been any SS personnel), he wrote to his son Walter saying he was in Gablonz (present-day Jablonec) in Czechoslovakia and that "what I am doing is secret."

Today, Jablonec is almost exactly where the Czech, German and Polish borders meet. During the war, it was bang in the heart of Kammler's high-tech kingdom.

In a letter the following month, Schauberger told his son that he had an agreement with a "factory" in the Sudeten region which was undertaking unspecified "research." This factory appears to be one and the same place Schauberger had mentioned earlier: Gablonz.

Looking at the map and trying not to be seduced by the Legend, I noted that Gablonz was conveniently located between Prague and Breslau.

In the same correspondence, Schauberger reveals two other facts of significance: first that work at Kertl (apparently on repairs to the device that smashed against the roof of the hangar) is "going so slowly it is as if someone is deliberately trying to slow it down"; and that he has become aware that Heinkel has stolen his ideas.

Schauberger also reveals that his source in the Heinkel matter is a member of the "secret police"—a term Schauberger used interchangeably with "SS."

In July 1941, Schauberger describes how "an intermediary" has approached him in a bid to rectify certain problems Heinkel was experiencing with the technology he had lifted from Schauberger's patent application. With ill-concealed schadenfreude', Schauberger reveals that Heinkel's engineers have made a mistake copying his design, and that he knows what the error is. Through his dialogue with the intermediary, Schauberger believes that Heinkel is trying to substitute conventional engine technology with technology of his own.

On the face of it, this ought to mean one of two things: that the compressor technology of the troubled He 280's HeS 8 turbojets had been marked for replacement by Schauberger turbine components, the "centripetal compressors" of his successful 1936 patent application; or that Heinkel was attempting to swap complete Schauberger power-plant units for the underperforming HeS 8 turbojets.

The first explanation makes little sense. Adding a "centripetal compressor"—one that causes air to flow radially inward—would have destroyed the carefully tailored flow dynamics of the HeS 8 engine, which was a centrifugal gas turbine based on a principle diametrically opposed to the Schauberger implosion technique.

The second explanation is equally vexing. Strapping Schauberger's engines, which worked on a suction principle, onto the He 280 would have made a total nonsense of the aircraft's graceful aerodynamics.

History, in any case, tells us that the Air Ministry (RLM) would give the He 280 a production order only if Heinkel substituted the HeS 8 engine for BMW 003 or Jumo 004 axial-flow turbojets. Neither of these would fit, so the entire project was scrapped.

There has never been any mention in Heinkel files, so far as I am aware, of any association between the He 280 project and Viktor Schauberger.

This process of elimination allowed me to entertain the notion with greater confidence than I had earlier that Heinkel had been working on some altogether different form of air vehicle—one that would have worked best with a Schauberger engine, not a gas turbine; and one that has never come to light.

It is interesting to note that the legend of the Schriever Flying Top makes specific mention of the fact that construction of full-sized disc-shaped vehicles was transferred from Heinkel's Marienehe facility at Rostock to Czechoslovakia in 1943.

From late 1941, Schauberger's correspondence makes it plain that he is busily engaged in secret work in Czechoslovakia. In late 1941, he found himself in a "weapons factory" at Neudek (now Nejdek) near Karlsbad (Karlovy Vary), around 120 km southwest of Gablonz. In December 1941, he was back in Gablonz eagerly awaiting the arrival of a starter motor—presumably, the little electric engine that was needed to kick-start his implosion device. At one point he tells his son that he is having to make frequent visits to the train station at Reichenberg (today, Libérée in the Czech Republic) to see if the "apparatus" has arrived.

In early 1942, Schauberger transferred to the Messerschmitt prototype works at Augsburg in Bavaria. There, he worked on the further development of a Repulsator implosion machine. In his correspondence, it is not clear if this is the same machine as the ones on which he was working in secret at the two locations in the Czech Republic, although it seems unlikely. What appears to be the case is that Schauberger's work was central to a number of parallel activities during 1941 and 1942: Heinkel's mysterious work at Marienehe, the two secret weapons factories in Czechoslovakia, the Kertl company in Vienna and Messerschmitt at Augsburg.

From Schauberger's writings, we know what happened to the Kertl and Messerschmitt machines. Work on the former ceased due to the company's inability to obtain essential supplies for the repair of the damaged device. This is not unreasonable, given Germany's growing inability to get hold of strategic raw materials from this period on, but Schauberger still voices his doubts, being convinced that somebody has ordered the work to be slowed deliberately.

The Messerschmitt device suffered a catastrophic failure due to the use of substandard casting techniques (and probably low-grade metal alloys) during the manufacture of the turbine. According to Schauberger it suffered a "meltdown" as soon as it reached its maximum rotational velocity. A company in Vienna, Ernst Kubiznak, was ordered to repair the device under a "Führer directive," but this, like the Kertl work, appears to have come to naught.

This leaves the Heinkel work and the secret activities in Czechoslovakia.

After the war, when Schauberger picked up on rumors of German flying saucers that supposedly flew near Prague during the closing stages of the conflict, he voiced his conviction that these were developments of his own ideas—and, given the way Heinkel had behaved, this may have been the case. It was already quite clear that the Sudeten region was the epicenter of some of the Nazis' most secret and unconventional research of the war period. But flying saucers? Antigravity propulsion?

In April 1944, after a yearlong period of inactivity, Schauberger was summoned before a "draft panel" of the Waffen-SS.

In June, he traveled to Breslau, ostensibly to join an SS-Panzergrenadier division. But more than six months before the Red Army had battled its way to the gates of the city—before Gauleiter Hanke had sifted the citizenry of Breslau for men far fitter than Schauberger—it is ludicrous to suppose that the SS would have recruited an Austrian of his age to fight in the defense of a patch of the Fatherland hundreds of kilometers from his home. In April 1944, Schauberger was 59 years old.

Given the SS penchant for extreme secrecy, coupled to the fact that Schauberger had already been up to his eyes in secret program work in Czechoslovakia, it is infinitely more likely that the Panzergrenadier story was a cover and that Schauberger was taken to Breslau for a specific purpose; one that played to his primary talent as an inventor.

This would have been an ill-disciplined leap of faith, a lapse in cold reasoning on my part, but for one thing.

By June 1944, the SS was almost a year into its takeover of the German secret weapons industry. Bit by bit, the Luftwaffe and the Wehrmacht were being eased out of arms production. In spite of the failures at Kertl and Messerschmitt, there is ample justification—based on what happened next—to assume that the Czech-based projects had validated at least some of Schauberger's ideas.

A month previously, a month before Schauberger went to Breslau, he was ordered to Mauthausen concentration camp to handpick a team from among the inmates to start building as many as five different types of Schauberger machine. This is confirmed by the Schauberger archive. The SS wanted him to stop "tinkering around with prototypes and begin serious construction work."

Somewhere along the line, someone must have been convinced that the technology worked.

The essential point, the point that made the hairs on the back of my neck stand on end as I settled into the part of Schauberger's diary that dealt with the last six months of the war, was one of which Viktor himself would have been unaware as he arrived outside the stone walls of Mauthausen camp in that summer of 1944. The big picture, which was in the possession of a mere handful of individuals in Berlin, was that the concentration camps were the designated production engines of the "state within the state," as Speer had called the SS; the grim new powerhouses of the Reich economy.

Viewed this way, it shed light on Schauberger's frantic activities during 1941, when his feet had hardly touched the ground as he dashed between project locations in Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia, a time that could now be reinterpreted as the start date for prototype work of a diverse and highly secret nature; work that continued until early 1944, when the SS became satisfied that the machines were ready for manufacture.

The immediate task of Schauberger's handpicked team at Mauthausen was to produce engineering drawings from which production work could begin.

Schauberger's diaries tell us what these machines were. One was a water purifier. Another was an energy device capable of generating high-voltage electricity. A third was for "biosynthesizing" hydrogen fuel from water. A fourth was a machine that "naturally" produced intense heat or cold. The fifth, dubbed the "fleigende scheibe, "or "flying saucer," was the unconventional aero-engine that had come to the attention of Heinkel and others during 1941. It was this latter device that I now focused on.

Schauberger set up design offices in the SS technical engineer school, in the Rosenhugel district of Vienna.

Working under oppressive conditions, effectively at gunpoint, he managed to gain a number of key concessions from the SS. Telling them that he needed personally to select his team from Mauthausen's inmates and that these men should be removed from the camp environment, fed and clothed properly if they were to work productively, he was able to extract around 25 former technicians from the camp and set them up in workshops nearby.

The first set of preproduction drawings were signed off on in August 1944 and delivered from the engineer school to these facilities. Schauberger moved between the two sites, his visits to Mauthausen increasing in frequency as metal was cut on the propulsion device, which he referred to sporadically in the text as the Repulsine (even though this name had come to be associated in former years with other projects).

By early October 1944, Schauberger's diary shows that he was already starting to mill components for the Repulsine. On October 6, he made the first preproduction drawings of a part of the device he refers to as the Schaufelentwurf, a design for a cone-shaped air intake that bolted onto the top of the disc.

Five days later, work is interrupted by the first of many air raid alerts as Vienna and its environs are hit by Flying Fortresses on daylight missions against local industrial targets. Mauthausen was close to Linz, home of the Hermann Goering Works, a giant heavy engineering complex. It is clear from these and other entries that Schauberger was racing against the clock to complete his task.

On October 14, he wrote: "I wish I could work longer, but I have to stop at four in the afternoon. There is a shortage of materials and tools. I had to construct parts today from an old tank." Because much of the raw material was of low quality, he instructed his team to be particularly mindful of heat stresses and welding quality.

It was also clear that he was being forced to shift between projects as demands required. On October 23, he turned his attention to developing a more efficient carburetor for Opel Blitz army trucks, presumably on the instructions of the SS, an activity that distracted him for the best part of ten days. On November 4, one of the water-based devices needed his design input. On November 26, it was the turn of the Repulsine again—the electric starter motor needed to be checked and fitted.

The team worked on the Repulsine on Christmas Day and on into the New Year, all the while having to contend with power cuts and air raids. Finally, on February 28, Schauberger moved his operations center to the little village of Leonstein in Upper Austria. The decision was a fateful one on two counts. It not only took him away from the bombing, but placed him squarely in what would later become the U.S. zone of occupation. Had he stayed in Vienna, Schauberger would have found himself in the Soviet zone of influence.

In light of what happened to him in the days, weeks and months that followed the end of the war, it might have been the softer option.

On April 5, 1945, the diary reveals that final assembly of the Repulsine had commenced. A month later, it was ready to go. But the end, when it came, was almost surreal. Instead of firing up the turbine for its first test run as planned on May 6, Schauberger awoke to find that the SS officers charged with oversight of the operation had fled into the night. The team stopped work on May 8, hours before the surrender of German forces took effect at a minute past midnight on May 9.

The SS machine had not flown in the last days of the war, as the Legend had maintained, but in almost all other respects it had held up remarkably well.

The diary had made it clear that Viktor Schauberger had built a machine that had flown earlier in the war at Kertl (and almost certainly during Schauberger's secret period of research in Czechoslovakia). It was also quite clear that the device's modus operandi was wholly unconventional—that is to say, the method by which it generated lift was insufficiently explained by current scientific knowledge.

The diary had given me something I could believe in at long last.

Via Schauberger, the Nazis had been deeply involved—no question—in what can only be described as flying saucer technology. And from this flowed the corollary that other parts of the Legend were perhaps also based on fact.

Couple the Schauberger evidence with what I had seen in the Lusty files and suddenly it wasn't so hard anymore to believe that the Germans had developed prototype remote-controlled air vehicles—craft that had the ability to latch onto the exhaust wakes of Allied bombers or the infrared signatures of the aircraft themselves—that explained many of the foo-fighter sightings of 1944 and 1945.

It was also highly likely that some of these "conventionally powered" German disc-shaped craft were test beds for Schauberger-type propulsion systems.

And therein lay another subset to the mystery.

Something about this whole strand of development had conspired to make it the most classified form of technology in existence. Even more so than the bomb.

Unlike the bomb, however, this was a secret that had held for more than 50 years.

Days after the end of the war, U.S. intelligence agents found Schauberger in Leonstein and apprehended him. Exactly as the Legend had it, the agents, who were almost certainly Counter-intelligence Corps—the same outfit that had detained and interrogated Skoda's director, Wilhelm Voss—were remarkably well informed about his entire operation. It was as if, Schauberger noted later, someone had guided them directly to him.

Across the country, at almost exactly the same moment, Russian intelligence agents located and entered his apartment in Vienna. They removed anything of value they could lay their hands on, then blew the place up, presumably to prevent anyone else from discovering information they had overlooked.

For the next nine months, until March 1946, Schauberger was held under close house arrest and extensively debriefed by U.S. technical intelligence about his activities during the war. Years later, he disclosed that it was his knowledge of "atomic" energy that had got the Americans so vexed. This is understandable. The merest suggestion that Schauberger had engaged in nuclear research would have set alarm bells ringing at the local headquarters of Boris Pash's Alsos agents, the U.S. team charged with scouring the former Reich for atomic weapons activity.

And yet, it would have taken the CIC and Alsos days, if that, to ascertain that what Schauberger had really been up to had nothing to do with a Nazi bomb or even atomic energy production—at least, not in the sense Los Alamos understood it.

That night, back at my hotel, I applied myself to a study of the Schauberger effect that had been written up by a researcher named Callum Coats. I had picked up a copy of one of his books at the Schauberger institute. In it, there was a description of what happened when a Repulsine was rotated at 20,000 rpm. The high rotation speeds appeared to cause the air molecules passing through the turbine to pack so tightly together that their molecular and nuclear binding energies were affected in a way that triggered the antigravity effect. "A point is reached where a large number of electrons and protons with opposite charges and directions of spin are forced into collision and annihilate with one another," Coats wrote. "As lower rather than higher orders of energy and the basic building blocks of atoms, they are upwardly extruded as it were out of the physical and into virtual states."

Virtual states? What the hell did that mean?

A few paragraphs on, Coats elaborated on this theme: "Through the interaction between centrifugal and centripetal forces functioning on a common axis, he was able implosively to return or re-transmute the physical form (water or air) into its primary energetic matrix—a non-spatial, 4th, or 5th dimensional state, which has nothing to do with the three dimensions of physical existence."

"I stand face-to-face with the apparent 'void,' the compression of dematerialization that we are wont to call a 'vacuum,' " Schauberger had written in his diary on August 14, 1936. "I can now see that we are able to create anything we wish for ourselves out of this 'nothing.' '

More than 60 years after Schauberger had consigned these thoughts to paper, I had stood in the Austin, Texas, offices of Dr. Hal Puthoff and listened to the American's descriptions of a near-identical scientific process. All you had to do—somehow—was perturb the zero-point energy field around an object and, hey presto, it would take off.

Long before the term had ever been coined, Schauberger had been describing the interaction of his machines with vacuum energy—the zero-point energy field.

Part of the contribution to the craft's ascent, Coats explained, was due to a quasi-aerodynamic phenomenon—something I knew as the "Coanda effect." But another part came from the expulsion of the densely compressed "emulsion" of molecules and atoms that had not been "virtualized" as they passed through the gill-like slits of the craft's

Teil Nr.	Gegenstand	Stückzahl	Material	Norm Nr.	Gewicht	Bemerkung

Buchstabe	Buchstabe kommt vor	ÄNDERUNG	Datum	Name

Gezeichnet
Geprüft
Genehmigt

VIKTOR SCHAUBERGER

Ersatz für
Ersetzt durch

Maßstab: 1:1;

Apparat - Repulsine Type ~~IV~~. V
Z. Nr. 70 Rotor-Oberteil

Nr d. Zeichng. 71

compressor blades. This would have produced a glowing bluish-white luminescent discharge akin to ionization, exactly as described in the Legend.

I closed the book and reached for the large manila envelope that Joerg Schauberger had given me before I left his home.

"Drawing No. 71," signed off on by Schauberger at Mauthausen, showed the simple innards of the Schaufelentwurf, the design for the shovel intake, that had bolted onto the top of the craft. I pressed the drawing flat, amazed that a thing of such organic grace should have come from a place that had once been the embodiment of evil. I thought, too, of the effect this must have had on the fragile psyche of the onetime forester, the man who had wanted to bequeath his grandchildren's generation—my generation—a limitless source of safe energy, to do good for the world, but who'd ended up working for the machinery of the Holocaust.

Chapter 22

The sun was just hitting the peaks of the Salzkammergut and the roads were all but empty. Two and a half hours to Munich airport via Bavaria, the cradle of Nazism, and I could box up this whole thing and head home. The beauty of the topography and the shadows of the past were inextricable. It was time to move forward again.

I now had a sequence of events that allowed many of the pieces to fall into place. I had seen the plans of a craft that had drawn on a source of energy that could not be explained by conventional science. The Germans, a people who knew the value of good engineering when they saw it, had had sufficient confidence in the technology to throw money and resources at it. When all else fails, follow the money. It rarely lies.

It must have freaked the Americans out.

At the end of the war, the U.S. Counter Intelligence Corps, the CIC, had spent nine months debriefing Schauberger. They would rapidly have come to realize that implosion technology had nothing to do with "nuclear" energy in the bomb sense, even though Schauberger himself described the processes at work as "atomic."

What they would have learned, however, would have been no less unsettling.

Schauberger believed that his machines were generating an antigravity effect whose power potential was unlimited.

The CIC agents would have had little comprehension of the mechanics of the device—why should they?—but somebody must have been spooked by it. Why else did they incarcerate the old man for nine months? Why else did they threaten him?

By the early part of 1946, following the debriefings and their admonition to Schauberger never again to involve himself in "atomic" science, the CIC would have had in its possession the rudiments of an entirely new propulsion medium—one that 18 months later would have allowed General Nathan Twining, head of the USAAF's Air Materiel Command, to admit to a subordinate in a classified memorandum that it was possible "within the present U.S. knowledge—provided extensive detailed development is undertaken—to construct a piloted aircraft" with the operating characteristics of a UFO; a craft that seemingly defied the laws of physics.

What had happened to this knowledge?

Part of the answer, I felt sure, lay in some curious synchronicity between the final months of Viktor Schauberger's life and events that had started to unfold at around the same time in quiet corners of the North American aerospace industry.

In the spring of 1958, Schauberger, by now 72 years old and in poor health, was visited by Karl Gerchsheimer, a German-American acting as an intermediary for a U.S. financier and multimillionaire named Robert Donner, who had heard of Schauberger's inventions and wanted to develop and implement them in America.

Gerchsheimer, a 55-year-old German living in the U.S.A., was a man with a colorful past. He left Germany in 1922, eventually settling in Texas in 1937. During the war, he appears to have been deeply involved in U.S. counterespionage activities, ending up as an intelligence agent, almost certainly for the CIC. From the war's end in 1945 to 1950, he was the U.S. civilian property administrator-in-chief in charge of all civil administration, logistics, transport and accommodation for the U.S. army of occupation, and in this role was described as "the most powerful nonmilitary individual in the U.S. zone." In 1950, he returned to the U.S., where he set up a metal fabrication business that ended up doing significant business, ironically, with NASA.

It was during the '50s, according to Callum Coats' book, that Gerchsheimer met Donner, the retired former owner of the Donner Steelworks in Philadelphia. Donner, Coats wrote, was a "patriot who waged constant war against subversive activity in the United States." Between them, Gerchsheimer and Donner became sold on the idea that there had to be an alternative to the use of explosive forces to generate power and motion—a view that Gerchsheimer, through his NASA work, even took up with the master of rocketry himself, Wernher von Braun.

In 1957, Gerchsheimer came to Schauberger's home in Austria, telling him that there were millions of research dollars waiting for him in the United States and an engineering facility in Sherman, Texas, that was all ready to implement his ideas for safe, clean energy production. All he had to do was cross the Atlantic and make it happen. Schauberger, who was suffering from emphysema and a bad heart, took some persuasion, but eventually agreed, the stipulation being that he would stay just long enough to get things up and running—around three months—before returning home to Austria. His son Walter, a trained physicist and mathematician, would remain on in the U.S.A. for a year to turn his ideas into blueprints from which the Americans could put his implosion technology into production.

Throughout this dialogue, it is clear that Schauberger felt that Gerchsheimer had come to him as some kind of representative of the U.S. government. And while Gerchsheimer subsequently denied this, his evident connections with U.S. law enforcement and intelligence agencies, connections that he never hid from the Schaubergers, merely reinforced the view in the inventor's mind that the offer carried official U.S. sanction. This impression was compounded when Viktor and Walter arrived in the States and Gerchsheimer and Donner tapped physicists at the National Atomic Research Laboratories at Brookhaven, Long Island, for expert advice on implosion technology. Seven weeks after the Schaubergers' arrival in Texas, Gerchsheimer instructed them to write up separate reports about implosion, then forwarded them to Brookhaven for analysis.

At first, Viktor Schauberger was happy to go along with the Gerchsheimer/Donner plan because at long last he believed here was something that would allow him to implement his free-energy ideas for the benefit of mankind. But as the weeks dragged into months, and negotiations in the high heat of Texas turned sticky, Schauberger's health became ever more fragile and he yearned increasingly to go home.

Gerchsheimer and Donner, meanwhile, had become frustrated at the painfully slow pace with which Schauberger was transcribing his ideas onto paper, and the whole relationship broke down.

Prepared to do anything that would enable him to get home quickly, Schauberger made the cardinal error of signing a document that he had not bothered to translate properly. When, later, he fully absorbed the text of it, he realized that everything he owned—models, sketches, prototypes, reports, even intellectual property—had become the sole possession of the Donner-Gerchsheimer consortium.

The release form also stipulated—just as U.S. intelligence agents had, 12 years earlier—that Schauberger was to commit himself to total silence on the subject of implosion and that any further ideas he might develop were never to be discussed with anyone other than designated U.S. personnel.

It was the last straw. On September 25, five days after arriving back in Linz, Viktor Schauberger died a broken man.

There was no point looking for any explanation of this tragedy on the U.S. side. Other researchers had petitioned U.S. intelligence agencies under the Freedom of Information Act for papers relating to Schauberger's period in Texas, but had been blocked by officialdom, which would neither confirm nor deny the existence of such records, always citing the National Security Act of 1947.

In seeking to find something that explained this final sequence of events in Schauberger's life from the Austrian's side, however, I had come across a small, almost throwaway reference in the Schauberger archive that had seemed to act as the trigger for it.

Shortly before the Gerchsheimer approach, Schauberger records that he was contacted by two aircraft companies, one American, the other Canadian, and that they both offered him substantial sums of money—the U.S. company, according to Schauberger, pitched its bid at $3.5 million—for the rights to acquire his propulsion ideas.

Schauberger never referred to either firm by name, but as this period coincided exactly with the rise of John Frost's shadowy Special Projects Group and its design of a top secret Mach 3-4 flying saucer for the U.S. Air Force—Project Y2/Silverbug—the Canadian company could only have been Avro. No other Canadian aerospace firm at that time was remotely engaged in such advanced technology work.

I recalled my long phone conversation with Frost's son and his revelation that his father had once made a secret visit to West Germany in 1953. There, at a "Canadian/U.K. government installation," according to declassified documents in Canada, John Frost had met with an engineer who claimed to have worked on a flying saucer project at a site near Prague in 1944-45. Since Frost was probing in all the right areas, he would inevitably have come across Schauberger's work; the engineer whom he debriefed might even have known him personally.

Schauberger rejected both offers because neither company would meet his twin overarching demands: that his turbine should be used "for the common good"—i.e. for commercial aviation purposes—and that the deal should be made public.

This period, of course, also coincided with the period in which George S. Trimble of the Martin Aircraft company, backed by his counterparts in other aerospace firms across the U.S.A., was talking up the conquest of gravity and the impact this breakthrough would have on air and space flight. The world, they announced, was poised on the brink of an era in which free, clean energy would be the norm; and one day, they predicted, it would take us to the stars. In 1955, Trimble had set up RIAS—Martin's Research Institute for Advanced Studies—-whose charter had been "to observe phenomena of Nature and to encourage, promote and support investigations in search of underlying knowledge of these phenomena . . . to discover fundamental laws . . . and to evolve new technical concepts for the improvement and welfare of mankind."

RIAS' charter could have been Schauberger's own.

And look at what had happened next.

No sooner had people started showing an interest in Schauberger again than a man with clear ties to the U.S. intelligence community turns up on his doorstep, tempts him over to the United States and shuts his operation down—permanently.

In 1956, Trimble and others announce to the world that gravity can be harnessed in the same space of time it took to develop the atomic bomb.

Within two more years, all of the companies that had been waxing to the rooftops about the coming antigravity revolution had fallen silent on the subject. By 1960, it was as if none of them had ever even thought of it.

In the meantime, Avro Canada, the only company in the world to have openly admitted to working on a flying saucer—a dog of a thing that has trouble even getting off the ground—has had the rights to the real but highly secret technology, the supersonic models that show phenomenal promise, acquired by the United States. Then that operation is shut down, too.

John Frost, the man who headed up Avro's Special Projects Group, takes its secrets to his grave and George Trimble, many years into his retirement, gets spooked by a seemingly mundane journalistic inquiry 40 years on from these events.

I returned to that central question. What was it about these complementary technologies—the saucer airframe and antigravity propulsion—that had caused such extreme and violent reactions in people directly linked to them?

For the next three decades, no one in scientific circles would have dared discuss these twin strands of development for fear of the ridicule it would have brought upon them. The cult of the UFO—a phenomenon that has clearly been "spun" by the military-intelligence community from time to time—simply made this worse. It was only in the 1990s, as NASA and other scientists began to strive for propulsion methods that far outstrip today's state of the art, that the whole antigravity business started to gain currency again outside the black world. But even then, you had to proceed with caution.

But the real mystery was this. If the principles of antigravity technology had been available since the war—earlier, perhaps, if T.T. Brown's contribution should be given credit—then why were some of the best math and science brains on the planet still struggling to develop the theory underpinning it?

It was this question, I knew, that would take me back to the States one last time.

Shortly before I boarded my flight at Munich, I checked my cell phone for messages. There were four and Dan Marckus had left three of them. Whatever was on his mind, I knew I was on to something, because, for once, Marckus was chasing me.

With one eye on the departure gate and another on the clock, I called him back.

Even over the bustle of movement in the departure hall and the static of a bad line, I could tell something was definitely up.

"You need to get yourself to Sheffield the middle of next week," Marckus said, his voice scarcely audible. "Podkletnov's come out of hiding. He's going to be talking about his gravity-shielding experiments to a small group of invitees at the university there—aerospace industry and defense ministry types mainly. It isn't a closed session, so you should be able to get yourself on the list. Go talk to him. Something tells me he knows a lot more than he's letting on."

An airline official at the desk was looking at her watch and beckoning for my ticket. I was about to sign off, when Marckus stopped me.

"There's something else," he said.

I showed the girl my ticket and passport and carried on talking while I proceeded to the aircraft.

Marckus started to talk about the experiment down the mine. He'd got my email and now he wanted to talk physics.

"Dan, I'm about to get on the bloody airplane. This can wait, can't it?"

"I know what they were trying to do," he said simply.

I stopped a few paces short of the door of the aircraft.

"I know what the Bell was really about," he repeated.

My tone softened. "OK, go ahead. I'm listening." I was staring out of a small window at the end of the jetway. The rain was beating down on the wings of the aircraft. I could see passengers settling into their newspapers through the fuselage windows.

"They were trying to generate a torsion field."

"What is a torsion field?"

"Laternentrager means 'lantern holder.' But it's the second code name that's the giveaway. Chronos. You know what it means, don't you?"

"Yes, Dan. I know what it means. What is a torsion field? What does it do?"

"If you generate a torsion field of sufficient magnitude the theory says you can bend the four dimensions of space around the generator. The more torsion you generate, the more space you perturb." He paused momentarily, long enough for me to make the connection. "When you bend space, you also bend time."

Chronos.

The third experiment in NASA's BPP study and the one that Puthoff had predicted would be the first to yield a result.

""Now, do you understand what they were trying to do?"

I said nothing. It was Marckus who closed the loop.

"They were trying to build a fucking time machine," he said.

Chapter 23

Viewed from the back of the lecture theater, Dr. Evgeny Podkletnov, the man who claimed to have nullified gravity, cut a slight, shy figure as he gazed up at his audience, a mixed gathering of academics and defense industry types.

Wearing my Jane's hat, I had managed to get myself invited to the Russian's presentation by Dr. Ron Evans of BAE Systems, formerly British Aerospace or plain "BAe." It was Evans who single-handedly ran the giant aerospace and defense company's antigravity effort, Project Greenglow. BAE, I was given to understand, had sponsored Podkletnov's trip to the U.K.

Evans' name was one of the two I'd scribbled down in my notes after Professor Brian Young's lecture, "Antigravity: The End of Aerodynamics?," in London in 1991. The other name, of course, had been that of Dr. Dan Marckus.

Though Podkletnov's English was immaculate, he talked so softly that I found myself leaning right forward to catch his words, which were marked by a strong accent. He didn't look like anyone's idea of a rebel.

He was, I supposed, in his mid-to-late 40s and thin of stature. His dark eyes, which had an intensely haunted look about them, radiated seriousness and conviction. I knew the day his lab assistant's pipe smoke had hit the wall of the gravity shield he claimed to have created, he had found himself locked on a course against the science mainstream. Its reaction had been so vehement and overwhelming that he had gone into exile for the best part of four years to recover from the shock of it—and, word had it, to refine his experiments.

For a heretic, Podkletnov had acquired for himself a nice, quiet audience in this, his first appearance since the personal trauma of that time. Aside from a handful of graduates and undergraduates from Sheffield University's Department of Electronic and Electrical Engineering, the small group of invitees included observers from the U.K. Ministry of Defense, Rolls-Royce aero-engines and BAE Systems.

I let my mind wander back to the day I'd ambled, innocent of all knowledge on the subject, into the marbled hallway of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers in the center of London eight years earlier to hear Professor Young's lecture. Some of the faces in the audience today looked familiar from that evening, though I couldn't exactly say who or why. If I'd known then what I knew now, I wondered if I'd have ended up where I was sitting today. It had been a long haul.

Podkletnov started by recapping the events that had shaped his life and work over the past decade.

By using rotating magnets to spin up his superconducting doughnut-shaped discs to speeds of around 5,000 rpm, he had found that any object placed in the area of influence above them was losing a part of its weight.

Weight reductions of between 0.3 and 2 percent were found to be easily repeatable, he claimed. Five percent reductions had been recorded, although not with the same repeatability. "For a physicist, this is an enormous weight loss, for a practical engineer it is not," he noted. I thought of the NASA engineers at Huntsville struggling to reduce the cost of space access. For every hundred kilos of rocket, Podkletnov was offering them a launch weight reduction of two kilos.

He was right. It wasn't a whole lot. But then again, gravity shields weren't supposed to exist.

I jotted everything down as best I could, knowing that the better my notes, the better Marckus' efforts at interpreting them for me in plain-talk later. He was reluctant for us both to show in the same place, especially with so many members of the establishment present. Once again, I was acting as his eyes and ears.

The Russian peppered his talk with references to General Relativity and Quantum Theory, the unique properties of superconducting materials and his admiration for other pioneers in his field, among them Hal Puthoff, whose idea that gravity might be a "zero-point fluctuation force" Podkletnov professed, with characteristic Russian understatement, to find "rather interesting."

He started to talk about torsion fields, a term still fresh in my mind from Marckus' analysis of the experiment down the mine. Igor Witkowski, my Polish guide, had also talked of "vortex compression," a term used by SS police general Jakob Sporrenberg in his deposition to the Polish courts. Witkowski had remarked how this had linked in with Podkletnov's gravity-shielding experiments.

"The observed effect," Podkletnov said, talking about his own tests, "might be caused by a torsion field excitation of the physical vacuum inside and outside the superconductor."

The idea came from somewhere far and remote, then steadied long enough for me to begin processing it.

Marckus and I had spoken at length since my return from Austria about the Bell experiment and Schauberger's ideas. There was no doubt at all in his mind that what the Nazis had been trying to do at the Wenceslas Mine constituted an investigation into the arcane properties of space-time. And the fact that they had tested the effect of the torsion field on vegetation, lizards, mice and, God only knew, humans as well, suggested that there had been a practical aspect to the experiment as well. There was evidence, Marckus had told me, that particles appeared to slow down when they entered a torsion field.

"Since the zero-point energy field is composed of billions of tiny fluctuations of energy that pop in and out of existence every split second, relentlessly and infinitely," he'd explained, "anything that can mesh with those fluctuations, so the theory goes, can tap into them and extract energy from the field. That's what some people, myself included, believe that a torsion field does."

A torsion field, he'd continued, was best imagined as a rotating whirlpool. If you created one of these whirlpools, dipped it into the zero-point energy field, the seething mass of latent energy that existed on an almost undetectable level all around us, there was evidence to show that it reacted in an almost magical way by directing the flow of energy. Anything that rotated, even a child's spinning top, Marckus said, was capable of generating a torsion field, albeit a very small one.

"There's evidence of this?" I'd interjected.

Marckus had looked at me and nodded. "If you imagine the zero-point field as a giant vat of treacle and man-made torsion field generators like the Bell and Schauberger's Repulsine as mix-masters—food-blenders—then you can begin to visualize their effect."

Some things were better at stirring the zero-point field than others, Marckus had said. Anything that generated an electromagnetic field was a case in point.

"The Bell would have been radiating like hell," according to Marckus, "generating electromagnetic energy on all frequencies, from radio waves to light—no wonder they'd buried the damned thing so deep." The fact that the Germans had also filled the rotating cylinders with a mix of different metals was also significant, he believed. If you could get the proportions exactly right you stood an even better chance of interacting with the zero-point field. But it would have been a very hit-and-miss process—an observation that was borne out by Sporrenberg's testimony. Each test had been very short, lasting on average of around a minute.

It seemed very much as if the scientists had been trying to "tune" the Bell, much as you would a radio set.

"Get it right and you've got a very interesting piece of hardware," Marckus had told me, "get it wrong and all you've got is some expensive junk."

Sixty-two scientists shot dead by the SS told both of us that the Bell tests had to have been at least partially successful.

It had been the same with Schauberger's machine. The air molecules whirling around within it had been spun into such a state of super-excitement that something very strange seems to have happened.

Compounded by collisions of electrons and protons—"the building blocks of atoms," as Callum Coats had called them—the result had been the creation of a vortex—a torsion field—similar to the Bell's, only without the electromagnetic component.

This was no ordinary "twister" in a three-dimensional sense, but a coupling device to the zero-point field—a pump, if you will—that not only acted as a conduit for its infinite source of energy, the seething mass of fluctuations, but had combined with an aerodynamic lift component and the Coanda Effect to produce lévitation.

If, as Puthoff and others were suggesting, gravity and inertia were component forces of the zero-point field, along with electromagnetism, then the vortex/torsion field was also responsible for interacting with the zero-point field's gravity and inertia properties. Tune the machine right and you could manipulate them.

Manipulate the inertia of an object and you removed its resistance to acceleration. Put in space and it would continue to accelerate all the way up to light-speed—and maybe even beyond.

Manipulate the local gravity field around an object and you could get it to levitate.

Both of these pathways to "advanced propulsion" were being explored within NASA's Breakthrough Propulsion Physics initiative.

But here was the truly wild part. The vortex, Marckus said, wasn't a three-dimensional phenomenon or even a four-dimensional one. It couldn't be. For a torsion field to be able to interact with gravity and electromagnetism it had to be endowed with attributes that went beyond the three dimensions of left, right, up and down and the fourth-dimensional time field they inhabited; something that the theorists for convenience sake labeled a fifth dimension—hyperspace.

It was here, they said, beyond the vacuum of absolute space, beyond what we now know to be a "plenum" (the opposite of a vacuum) flooded with zero-point energy, that the binding mechanisms of the universe actually lay.

To date, we know of four of these fundamental forces: gravity, electromagnetism, the strong nuclear force and the weak nuclear force.

If a whirling torsion field with or without an electromagnetic component was binding with gravity to produce a levitational effect—an antigravity effect—it wasn't doing so in the four dimensions of this world, but somewhere else.

It explained why the Germans had attempted to use a torsion field to act upon the fourth dimension of time. Time, like gravity, the theorists said, was simply another variable stemming from the hyperspace.

"Say," Marckus had told me, "to use an extreme example, the Germans had been able to slow time within the area of the Bell's torsion field, this ceramic-lined chamber, to one thousandth the rate at which it was progressing outside and you sat inside the chamber for a year. What you've done is slow time down on the inside, while on the outside it progresses at its normal rate. Step outside the chamber after a year has ticked by on your calendar and you find yourself a thousand years into the future."

The chances were, Marckus said, the Germans had only been able to generate a tiny time perturbation—perhaps of the order of a hundredth or a thousandth of one percent. Its area of influence, mercifully, would also have been very localized. God only knew, Marckus said, what effect a larger-scale manipulation of the space-time matrix would have had otherwise. Science itself could offer few clues.

I believed from what I had seen in the Schauberger archive that antigravity was real and that the Germans had thrown considerable resources into cracking the problem.

It struck me then that they wouldn't have pursued a single pathway to antigravity, but several. In the same way that the Americans had pursued several different theoretical and applied approaches to the creation of an atomic bomb.

And in the same way that NASA was investigating multiple different routes to breakthrough propulsion physics for taking us to the stars.

In my mind's eye I imaged the strange henge-like edifice next to the power station. Maybe, just maybe, Witkowski was right. Maybe it had been a test rig of some sort. A test rig for a highly unconventional engine or a large circular aircraft.

If the Germans had been looking for an antigravity effect at the Wenceslas Mine, they would have needed something robust to test the forces generated.

And what of the weirdest variable of all? The gateway to the hyperspace itself?

There was a burst of applause in the lecture theater. If I'd got the Russian right, he was saying that gravity shielding—antigravity by another name—was a torsion field "excitation" of the physical vacuum, soaked as it was with zero-point energy.

The Bell, Schauberger's work and Podkletnov's were all linked by torsion fields and torsion fields appeared to be the key to a host of effects science was at a loss to explain; effects that came from somewhere, some other place, that lay beyond the vacuum of nothingness.

In the Q&A session after the formal part of his talk, Podkletnov had made a reference to something that I needed to follow up on. He'd mentioned that during a recent round of experiments he had generated an even more pronounced shielding effect, one that demonstrated a consistent weight loss in objects exposed to the beam of five percent—double his previous best—for short periods of time.

No doubt mindful that NASA had been unable to produce superconductors of the required size, strength and fidelity to duplicate the Russian's experiments, a member of the audience asked him what size discs he'd been using. With a look of evident pride, Podkletnov replied that he'd been using 30-centimeter discs—so strong that the president of Toshiba had been able to stand on one without breaking it.

Half an hour later, during a buffet organized by the university for its unconventional guest and the assortment of government and industry types who'd come to hear him speak, I managed to talk to Podkletnov in a quiet corner of the room.

He must have known that I wanted to pick up on the Japanese angle, because no sooner had I hit him with my business card, than he announced that most regrettably the topic of Japanese sponsorship wasn't for discussion. He had said more than he ought on the subject and that was that.

This in itself, of course, was interesting. But the block on this avenue of inquiry was so abrupt that for a moment it wrong-footed me.

I grappled for some new purchase on the conversation. "How about aerospace applications?" I asked.

I half expected Podkletnov to tell me what he had previously told Charles Platt, the American journalist who'd tracked him down in the wilds of Finland. Platt had revealed that Podkletnov was working on a spin-off of the shielding effect that had allowed him to achieve "impulse reflection"—using gravity waves as a repelling force. These, Podkletnov had told the writer from Wired, would one day permit the development of a "second generation of flying machines," beyond the brute-thrust types we rode on today.

But Podkletnov went off on a different tack altogether.

"I have discovered," he said slowly, watching and weighing me as he spoke, "a new and truly bizarre effect."

"What kind of effect?" I probed. The low-key nature of the Russian's lecture had already signaled that he wasn't in the habit of using hyperbole.

"I'm not sure that I am ready to talk about it publicly yet," Podkletnov said, smiling awkwardly.

I was about to return to the subject of the Japanese for leverage, but in the end I didn't have to.

"I am, however, happy to share this news with you," he said. He paused to give the room a quick sweep. There was no one close enough to overhear us.

"If the superconductors are rotated considerably faster than the 5,000-rpm speeds I've been mainly using until now, perhaps five to ten times as fast, the disc experiences so much weight loss that it actually takes off."

"Have you experimented?" I asked.

"Yes," he said meaningfully, "with interesting results."

It was then that I asked him if he had heard of Viktor Schauberger. It kind of came from nowhere but in actual fact it wasn't such a wild shot in the dark. There was something incredibly familiar about those rotation speeds.

Schauberger had been generating a lévitation effect using rotational velocities of 15-20,000 rpm. If these were rapid enough to produce a usable torsion field, no wonder Podkletnov had been getting "interesting results" from 25-50,000 rpm.

Podkletnov weighed his response before replying.

"You should understand that I come from a family of academics," he said after a long moment of reflection. "Both my father and grandfather were scientists. Shortly after the war, my father came to acquire a set of Schauberger's papers. Some time later, when I was old enough to understand them, he showed them to me."

"Original papers?" I asked.

Podkletnov said nothing, but in itself this told me as much as I needed to know.

When the Red Army entered Vienna, Russian intelligence agents had made a beeline for Viktor Schauberger's apartment. There, they had found documents and certain component parts that Schauberger had spirited out of Mauthausen and the SS technical school at Vienna-Rosenhugel shortly before the SS transferred him and his design team away from the bombing to the little village of Leonstein.

Afterward, the Russians had blown up the apartment. But they had evidently taken what they could from it. And for some reason, Podkletnov's father had acquired some of the plunder.

"Perhaps you know that the Germans experimented quite extensively with gyroscopic forces for aircraft during World War Two," Podkletnov continued.

I wanted to tell him about the evidence I had uncovered in Austria and Poland, to share some data quid pro quo so I could learn more about his father's work, but out of the corner of my eye I could see one of the civil servants from the Ministry of Defense making his way toward us, a plate of sandwiches in one hand, a notepad in the other. A discussion about Podkletnov Senior and German "gyroscopic aircraft" would have to wait till another time.

On the way to the train station, I called Marckus and told him about the three significant facts I had learned that day. First, that the Japanese were in on the antigravity/free-energy act; and Toshiba wasn't routinely in the business of throwing good money at crackpot ideas. Second that Podkletnov was generating a free-floating levitational effect by rotating his superconductors at 25-50,000 rpm. And third, that Evgeny Podkletnov's father had come to acquire original Schauberger documents soon after the end of the Second World War.

"What would Evgeny's dad have been doing with them, Dan? It's a hell of a coincidence, isn't it?"

"Leave it with me," he said, "I'll call you back."

He did so within the hour. He'd been on the Internet, he said, scanning, processing stuff, eventually finding what he was looking for on the IBM patent-server, a voluminous website. I could tell from his voice that this was Marckus' kingdom; the place where he was happiest.

"I grind away at this material in low gear like a Stalin tank, but I always get there in the end."

"What did you find?" I asked.

"Something . . . curious. More than a coincidence, I believe. It seems that Podkletnov's father filed a master patent in 1978. It's funny, because I damn near quipped to you earlier that he'd probably turn out to be the father of the Moscow sewerage system. Well, guess what? The patent relates to industrial techniques for the continuous pure enameling of metal pipes. Evgeny's dad, in other words, had come up with a novel way of lining steel water pipes. It tells us two things: that he was a materials scientist, just like his son; and that he knew about water. My guess is that the Podkletnovs would have been quite comfortably off under the old Soviet system."

"How did he come to acquire the Schauberger papers?"

"Ah, well, let's postulate a little. Russian intelligence agents enter Schauberger's apartment in Vienna at the end of the war and find a bunch of papers, the contents of which they really don't begin to understand. But they know they're important, because they've already tied Schauberger to the SS secret weapons program. So they bring the documents back to Moscow and look around for someone who can decode them. Most of Schauberger's work, remember, related to machines that used air and water as their driving medium. What was Evgeny's dad? He was a leading academician in the hydro-engineering field—a pipes man. Not exactly the first person you'd think of approaching to do the work had he lived over here, but then again, in Schauberger's field, remember, there weren't any dedicated experts. So, Podkletnov Senior, a water engineer, got the job."

"You think the Soviets took the technology further?"

"Who knows? The Russians have never been afraid to exploit weird science. Remember the remote-viewing program kicked off by the CIA under Hal Puthoff? The reason the CIA was into it at all was because it picked up on the fact that the Soviets had started to dabble in the psychic spying business. There is ample evidence that the Russians have been tinkering with torsion fields for a long time, too. But my guess is that they never found enough in Schauberger's apartment to make practical use of his theories."

"But enough for Evgeny's dad to be intrigued by them," I suggested.

Marckus paused.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Podkletnov's discovery probably wasn't the accident he's cracked it up to be."

"You mean, when his assistant's pipe smoke hit the column of gravity-shielded air he was already looking for an effect?"

"That's certainly how it appears now we know what we know about his father."

"Jesus," I said, "if he can do it on a shoestring, anyone can."

"Right. Scary, isn't it?" He sounded like he meant it, too.

But I was still left staring at the end-wall of the same blind alley in which I'd found myself on the way back from Bad Ischl.

"Here's the problem I'm facing, Dan. If Schauberger and Podkletnov can crack antigravity, more or less in their garden sheds, then why can't NASA, for Christ's sake, with billions of dollars at its disposal?"

He thought about it for a long moment, then lightly cleared his throat.

"My best shot, and it doesn't help you much, is that what you and I have learned tells me that there are two kinds of science. The stuff they teach you in college and all the weird shit they don't. The aerospace and defense industry is inherently conservative. It doesn't like change. This . . . knowledge, if you can call it that, is dangerous stuff. It's change with a capital C and it's not easy to get your head around. The aerospace and defense industry says it likes people who think out of the box, because they're the guys who give us the breakthroughs . . . radar, the bomb, stealth and that. But think this far out and they look at you like you're crazy. They might even put you away."

I thought back to the article that had landed on my desk all those years ago and my failed attempt to interview George S. Trimble.

Only a maverick, an enlightened one at that, would have pushed for the foundation of something as bold as RIAS—the research institute spun out of the Martin Aircraft Company that Trimble had helped to set up in 1955, at exactly the time he was making his public pronouncements about the imminent conquest of gravity.

I liked to think that all those people who'd been talking up antigravity in the mid-1950s had been forced into silence by some murky intelligence outfit tasked with guarding the truth about the Germans' achievements during World War Two.

Yet, they might just as easily have been silenced by their own chief executives—people who realized they were talking up the premature death of the aerospace industry itself. A science that made their whole world redundant.

Like white goods, fast-food chains and cars, the aerospace and defense industry of the 21st century has become a global enterprise. Back in the 1950s, though, as a modern entity, one that we would recognize today, it was only just getting going.

The 1950s was the decade that spawned the intercontinental ballistic missile, the Mach 2 jet fighter, guided weapons and transatlantic jet passenger planes. It was a time when the industry needed brilliant individuals—mavericks like Kelly Johnson and Ben Rich of the Skunk Works—to bring about those revolutionary advances.

Maybe that was why one name had kept popping into my head since my return from Austria.

When I had first inquired about Trimble and RIAS at Lockheed

Martin, my contacts there had recommended I interview a man who routinely talked about the kinds of things that had once been integral to the RIAS charter.

A man who tended to talk about Nature, not science; a physicist who looked at things quite differently from other people.

Boyd Bushman was a senior scientist for Lockheed Martin's Fort Worth Division, the part of the corporation that turned out F-16 and F-22 fighters for the U.S. Air Force. If you're interested in antigravity, then talk to Bushman, they'd said.

Bushman, the guy who'd levitated paper clips on his desk.

I hadn't, because back then Bushman's theories had sounded just a little too weird. And back then, I hadn't begun to accept the fact that antigravity and the multibillion-dollar interests of the aerospace industry went together like chalk and cheese.

But it was all a question of perspective. I saw things very differently now from the way I'd seen them then.

What, I wondered at this moment, was an antigravity man doing at the world's most prolific manufacturer of good old-fashioned, jet-powered combat aircraft?

If Bushman was talking up antigravity in the midst of an industry that didn't want to know, then maybe, just maybe, he could provide the answer to the $64,000 big one; the discrepancy between clear evidence in the real world of the existence of antigravity technology and the people at NASA who were, at this very moment, spending ten times that amount scratching around for theory to make it work.

In two weeks' time, I was due on another defense industry junket to the U.S. West Coast. From there, it would be easy to route back to England via Texas.

Journeying into Kammler's kingdom had taught me the value of analyzing data in situ. Now, as I prepared for one last trip to the States, I needed something to help me acquire a different kind of mind-set.

I considered how, in July 1986, an F-117A Stealth Fighter crashed at dead of night into a desert canyon just outside Bakersfield, California. For me, the crash had always held a special kind of significance, since it was one of those rare occasions when the black world had been flushed into the light.

In 1986, the very existence of the Stealth Fighter was still a classified secret even though the aircraft had been in full squadron service for three years.

What did Bakersfield say about the system that had been set up to protect America's most deeply classified secrets? Had it been a murder site, what would a profiler have deduced from the traces this incident had left in the environment?

Back at my desk, I started sifting through a pile of newspaper clippings that I'd kept since the time of the crash. Through the clippings, I had traced the whereabouts of a number of witnesses to the events of that night. One of them, Amelia Lopez, now a local law enforcement officer, had reluctantly promised to act as my guide should I ever find myself in that neck of the woods.

I checked to see that I still had Lopez's numbers. Then I picked up the phone and called the public affairs department of Lockheed Martin, Fort Worth.

Chapter 24

The flight was several hours out of Heathrow, when I reached into my hand luggage and extracted the book that Marckus had made me promise I'd read before I got to the States. He'd sent it to me ten days earlier, but in the hurly-burly of stories that needed to be written before I disappeared off to America, and in the course of preparations for the weeklong trip itself, I simply hadn't had the time to pick it up.

Not only that, but the book, which was called Blowback—The First Full Account of America 's Recruitment of Nazis, and Its Disastrous Effect on Our Domestic and Foreign Policy, looked rather academic and heavy-going. Even now, as I gazed at the cover, I found myself reluctant to make a start on it, the more so as Marckus never told me what it was about the book that made it essential reading. But I'd read the newspaper, established that there were no movies on the entertainment system worth watching and had even plundered the in-flight magazine for items of interest. With nowhere left to go, I turned to Blowback and started reading.

It began promisingly enough, although the territory itself was more than familiar. By Chapter 3, the author, Christopher Simpson, an American, had got his teeth into his country's recruitment program of German scientists after the war—an operation that had started under the code name "Overcast." As early as July 1945, barely two months after the end of the war in Europe, the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff gave its authorization for Overcast to commence. Its job was to "exploit. . . chosen rare minds whose continuing intellectual productivity" America wanted to use in the continuing war against the Japanese and in the gathering Cold War against the Soviet Union. Under the top secret project, the JCS directed that 350 specialists, mainly from Germany and Austria, should be brought immediately to the United States. Among the Germans who came to the U.S. at this time were rocket specialists like von Braun and his boss, Army General Walter Dornberger.

I did as I always did with books that held details of Germany's wartime technology effort: I flicked to the index and looked for references to Kammler. More often than not, Kammler never rated a mention, such was the ease with which he had blended into the bland backdrop of the Nazi administrative machine. Here, in Blowback, however, Kammler did score a single entry, but only in the context of his relationship with Dornberger at the Nordhausen underground V-2 plant. An arrangement was struck, the book stated, in which the SS, under Kammler, assumed the day-to-day administration of Nordhausen, leaving Dornberger in charge of the rocket technology and the V-2's production schedules.

By 1946, the Pentagon's Joint Intelligence Objectives Agency wanted to recruit even more former Nazi scientists in the gathering standoff against the Russians, but because U.S. immigration laws forbade entry into the U.S. of any former Nazi Party officials, President Truman was forced to authorize a more extensive effort than Overcast, code-named Paperclip, on condition that it was kept secret and that only "nominal" Nazis—opportunistic party members who had not committed any war crimes—were to be allowed into the country.

I read on, but the rest of the chapter told me nothing I didn't already know. Simpson's research was excellent, but it was marred by the fact I'd previously read Tom Bower's compelling work, The Paperclip Conspiracy. From this, I'd gleaned as much as I needed to absorb about Paperclip: that by September 1947 it had officially been canceled, but in actuality had been replaced by a new "denial program"; one so secret that Truman himself was unaware it existed. Paperclip continued as a "deep black" program (as it would be described today), recruiting its last scientist in the mid-1950s. Through Paperclip, hundreds, if not thousands of former Nazi engineers, many of them with highly undesirable backgrounds, were permitted entry to the United States and employed on cutting-edge defense and aerospace projects, not the least of which was NASA's moon program.

I pressed on, but from Chapter 4 onward, Simpson's book took a new turn, describing the CIA's recruitment of former Nazi intelligence agents, the spy networks they set in place against the Soviet Union, and the State Department's elaborate efforts to cover up its wholesale recruitment of these people.

I laid the book down and took a pull of my drink. When Simpson had written Blowback in the late 1980s, I could see it had been hard-hitting, revelatory stuff. But I couldn't see why Marckus had gone to such lengths to persuade me to read it.

I continued to wonder about this long after I landed in Los Angeles and arrived at my hotel. But given the time difference between California and the U.K., it was too late to call Marckus and by the following morning, as I journeyed up the coast to Santa Barbara, the scene of several appointments with a number of defense electronics companies that day, my mind was preoccupied with other things.

After Santa Barbara, I headed inland to Bakersfield, met up with Amelia Lopez and proceeded to the site where the F-117A Stealth Fighter had crashed in 1986, two years before it was unveiled. That the security surrounding the plane had remained in place after the crash was mainly down to the fast footwork of special Air Force crash-recovery teams, whose policy included sieving the earth up to a thousand yards from the crash site for pieces, then scattering bits of a '60s-vintage Voodoo fighter prior to their departure to throw the curious off the scent.

To me, Bakersfield said two things. It said that the black world would stop at nothing to prevent America's "quantum leap technologies" from spilling into the public domain until its bright young colonels were satisfied nothing more could be gained by holding the lid of secrecy in place. And two, in scattering bits of Voodoo, an aircraft that hadn't been flown actively for years, it wasn't averse to sending a signal.

When restrictions on the site were lifted, aircraft enthusiasts went into the hills and picked over the site to see if they could find any evidence that for the first time would point to the reality of the Stealth Fighter's existence. When they brought back little pieces of aircraft and had them analyzed, they knew exactly who'd been yanking the chain. The pieces of Voodoo were the telltale flourish that anonymous artists leave to denote the authorship of their work to cognoscenti of their talent.

It was in the canyon where the Stealth Fighter had gone down that I saw the book again in a flickering moment of clarity. When Amelia Lopez and I were clambering back across the rocks to our cars, the picture steadied and I knew why Marckus had wanted me to read it. The book was the key to everything, not least Marckus' role in all this. His fatalism, humor, cynicism and cunning clicked neatly into place. It was so simple yet overwhelming it almost took my breath away.

Fort Worth owes its very existence to the military, which in 1849 established a small outpost on the Clear Fork of the Trinity River some 30 miles to the west of Dallas.

A quarter of a century later, the coming of the railroad turned what until then had been little more than a cluster of tents and wooden huts into the biggest cattle railhead west of Chicago, a status it retained until shortly after World War Two.

By the 1940s, Fort Worth had begun to profit from other industries aside from cattle and oil, and as you drive out of the city, heading west, it is impossible not to notice Air Force Plant No. 4, a low building a mile long that rises from the Texas plains like an enormous rock escarpment.

Plant 4 had been set up during World War Two to manufacture the B-24 Liberator heavy bomber. In 1944, when output reached its peak, the plant was turning out almost ten aircraft a day; a feat of mass manufacturing that would never be equaled again.

Today, Plant 4 produces the Lockheed Martin F-16 at just a handful of aircraft per month. Lockheed Martin inherited the F-16 program from General Dynamics, whose aircraft and missile businesses were purchased by what was then simply the Lockheed company in the early 1990s.

GD had, in turn, acquired the Fort Worth operation from Convair, with which it merged in 1954. During World War Two, Convair was known as Consolidated Vultee Aircraft. Originally centered on San Diego, Convair, together with the USAAF, decided to set up the B-24 production line about as far from the Pacific as you could get, as a precaution against bombing by the Japanese.

In 1942, a young engineer called Robert Widmer moved from the San Diego operation to Fort Worth to begin work on the B-36, a massive intercontinental bomber that would make even the B-24 look tiny. It had been specified in 1939 to bomb Germany from the United States in the event that Hitler succeeded in invading Britain. It rolled out of Plant 4 in 1946 and went on to become the backbone of Strategic Air Command during the 1950s.

Bob Widmer spent much of the late '40s and early '50s lobbying to save the B-36 from cancellation before going on to design the B-58, SAC's first supersonic bomber. But by the late 1950s, Widmer had also begun throwing his energies into another project—one that was so advanced that the details would still be beyond the public domain four decades later.

The project was called Kingfish and it emerged out of a requirement by the CIA for a very fast high-altitude reconnaissance aircraft to replace the U-2, which was rapidly running out of places to hide from the Soviets' SA-2 Guideline surface-to-air missiles in the rarefied air over the Soviet Union.

As chief engineer of Fort Worth at the time of the Kingfish program and, almost 40 years later, still a consultant for Lockheed Martin Fort Worth, Bob Widmer was someone I very much wanted to meet.

What was so special about Kingfish that it had remained out of the limelight all these years? Questions about this aircraft take on an even more bizarre twist, when you consider the official history of the program that spawned it.

I was interested in Widmer and Kingfish, because to me it appeared to offer a link—one that had been overlooked by everyone else—to Aurora, the large black triangular aircraft that had supposedly been sighted over the North Sea in 1989.

In August 1959, the CIA's contract for a high-flying, super-fast reconnaissance aircraft went not to GD Convair, but to Kelly Johnson's Skunk Works, which went on to deliver an aircraft called the A-12 under a program code-named "Oxcart."

The A-12 flew for the first time in 1962 from the USAF's remote test center at Groom Lake, Nevada, better known today as Area 51. The 15 A-12s that were built conducted three years' worth of operational reconnaissance missions up to the program's cancellation in 1968. By then, an Air Force version of the plane, the Lockheed SR-71 Blackbird, had entered service.

With a top speed of Mach 3.4, the Blackbird remained the world's fastest operational aircraft until its retirement in the early 1990s. If you exclude the evidence for Aurora, there is, even today, nothing remotely as fast.

In official versions of the Kingfish/A-12 contest (declassified by the CIA only in the early 1990s) the Convair and Lockheed proposals were remarkably evenly matched. Both aircraft were optimized for cruise speeds of Mach 3.2, but the Lockheed proposal beat its rival's by tiny margins on key parameters such as range and operating altitude. On this evidence, then, it was only right that Lockheed got the deal.

But in the same way, as Marckus observed, that there are two kinds of science, so there are two kinds of history.

In 1995, a small photo of a wind-tunnel model of Kingfish appeared for the first time in the pages of an aerospace magazine. Scrutiny showed the model to be much more advanced than the paltry details in the caption suggested.

When I made inquiries at Lockheed Martin, under whose historical aegis both of these programs (Kingfish and the A-12/SR-71) now fell, I discovered that Bob Widmer, Kingfish's designer, was still employed at Fort Worth as a consultant. At 80 years of age, Widmer was busying himself in unmanned combat air vehicle technology. UCAVs—cheap, pilotless fighter planes—are seen very much as the future. It says a great deal about Widmer's skills as a designer that he was still employed at the cutting edge of aerospace and defense engineering almost 60 years after he joined Consolidated; but then Widmer, I was about to learn, was no ordinary engineer. Like Lockheed's Kelly Johnson and other "engineer-leaders" of the day, he'd helped to shape the modern U.S. aerospace industry.

His official biography describes him as an "innovator and a maverick" and the "first engineering leader to totally integrate airframe, propulsion and avionics into a single weapon system, the B-58."

What it does not say, but what I had gleaned from others, was that he blended these skills with those of a pastor, acting as guide and mentor to his team. In the 1950s, the pressure on GD Convair to outperform its rivals was intense, but the atmosphere inside the plant was informal and shirtsleeves—almost familial. To many of the younger engineers, Bob Widmer wasn't just a brilliant designer, but someone they could turn to for advice—something of a father figure, in fact.

We started by talking about Convair's own black ops capability, a special projects facility that stayed in the shadows, unlike Johnson's entity over at Lockheed, which reveled in its status as black world aviation's one-stop shop for special programs.

"Kelly was the catalyst, the guy who did things differently," Widmer said, "but, hey, we had a 'skunk works,' too; the difference was, we never spoke about it."

Widmer's slight, sinewy body, so much frailer than it had been in the black-and-white shots from the '60s, trembled with excitement. His small eyes shone.

As the talk drifted into the early days of the Cold War, a time when GD Convair came into its own as a reconnaissance specialist, I could see that the minder assigned to me from the PR department was beginning to lose interest. An individual I hadn't come across before, he was there as a matter of routine to ensure that I did not encroach upon matters that would put Lockheed Martin in a bad light or compromise national security. But since this was history, history from way back at that, it hardly constituted a threat to either. It was late and the minder looked tired. His eyes were closed, to focus on the conversation more intently perhaps? But if I hadn't known better, I'd have said he was asleep.

In this atmosphere of near-conviviality, I asked Widmer about Kingfish.

At first, he was reluctant to say a great deal, but seeing that I knew some of the details already, he began to open up. As we talked, I could hear the anger in his voice; anger, I thought, that stemmed from the fact that the CIA had chosen Lockheed's plane, not his, for the contract.

This portrait of Kingfish—the one that Widmer now began to talk about—was markedly different from the official CIA version. And here was one element of the mystery. In its final design form, Kingfish had been at least twice as capable as the variant that is recorded in official agency files.

The final iteration of Kingfish was optimized to cruise at 125,000 feet at a speed of Mach 6.25. It had contained a great many "firsts," including two powerful ramjets—a radical form of power plant that, to this day, has never been deployed on an operational aircraft—a blended, stealthy airframe shape composed of high-temperature steel and a special heat-resistant substance called "pyro-ceram" that also acted as a highly effective radar-absorbent material.

Kingfish would have streaked far above the Soviets' air defenses, twice as fast as any aircraft the Russians ever consigned to the drawing board; and it would have been all but invisible to radar.

Kind of chilling, too, was the fact that its specification was a near-perfect match for most people's idea of what Aurora should look like—and Widmer had designed the aircraft almost 30 years before rumors of a high-speed Mach 6-8 reconnaissance plane had begun circulating in JDW and Aviation Week.

That the CIA bought the A-12 instead of Kingfish is, of course, an enormous tribute to the Lockheed project team, which went on to overcome unprecedented design challenges to make the A-12/SR-71 Blackbird a reality. But while Blackbird is now a museum piece, the finer details of Kingfish, the loser in the CIA contest of 1958-59, will forever remain locked inside Widmer's head.

At the end of the competition, the CIA moved in and ordered all the blueprints, plans and files to be shredded. They also told him never to talk about it again.

I asked what effect this had had upon him.

"At the time, the CIA were in their glory," he replied. "I don't want to go into detail about the kind of life I had to lead . . . how I had to conduct myself, my family and so forth."

"Was it very restrictive?"

Widmer looked over his shoulder at the minder, who must have detected the change in mood. The minder looked at me and I looked at Widmer.

The former chief designer continued. I could see that he was determined to say his piece. "It was unbelievable. It wasn't just restrictive. It was counter to my conscience and morals and so forth."

"The whole business of black program secrecy?"

He nodded and I got the sense he was speaking not so much for himself as the younger members of his team, the people who'd looked to him for guidance. For an aerospace engineer the black world was a regime that ought to be endured only for a small window in a person's career—and even that was a crime, Widmer said. It was not, he added, what he would call a good formula over a long haul.

When I noticed his hands, I saw that they were shaking.

After a pause that was long enough for me to image the mixture of suspicion and draconian security that had once stalked him, he added: "I mean, the degree they went to in order to hold the secrecy was unbelievable."

The look in his eyes was so far-off and intense that I was reluctant to intrude further. But I needed to ask him one last question.

"Did it frighten you, ever?" I said.

"Yes," he replied, his voice scarcely a whisper.

As I left the room, heading under escort for my appointment with Bushman in the cavernous interior of Plant 4, the minder and I said nothing. Perhaps this way, it was easier to pretend that nothing had happened. But as we walked across the shop floor that had consistently churned out combat aircraft for the past 50-odd years and then stepped back into the strip-lit corridors and past endless security-sealed doors, the air-conditioning cold on our faces, I couldn't help but wonder at the senselessness of it all. One look at Widmer, another at his résumé, told you everything you needed to know. His ambition had been to design and build aircraft that made GD Convair the best plane-maker in the business and which protected America from its enemies. In most people's eyes, that made him a patriot, not a security threat.

But the CIA, or whoever the hell had terrified the bejeezus out of him and his family, had insisted on making the point. And what for?

Had Kingfish, the official loser in the CIA's high-speed spyplane contest, gone on as a "deep black" development program, emerging years later as Aurora?

Or was the truth more prosaic?

Had Kingfish simply been too expensive to be developed, forcing someone, somewhere to consign its design principles into a black hole of ignorance, the mythic warehouse that Ben Rich had told me about, where no one would ever be able to get at them?

If so, how many other technologies were in that place? How many more Widmers had been terrified into keeping that perpetual oath of silence?

Hundreds. Thousands in all probability.

Whether George S. Trimble had developed antigravity in the black or not, as head of advanced programs at Martin Aircraft, he would have been forced to abide by the same austere security oath. No wonder, then, he'd had second thoughts about our meeting all those years ago. No wonder my PR contact at Lockheed Martin had relayed the observation that he'd sounded scared.

Trimble must have been scared for the same reasons Widmer had been.

God only knew what they thought might happen to them.

Like an unsinkable ship, the black world had been built up around multiple, layered compartments, each securely sealed. Some of those compartments, it is now clear, had been designed never to be opened again. Ever.

The Kingfish story provided a tantalizing glimpse of the contents of one such compartment. By approaching the black world from another direction altogether, I had come to learn of the contents of at least one other.

At the end of the Second World War, via Schauberger's work and, no doubt, a wealth of other captured technology from Germany that has never seen the light of day either, America acquired knowledge of the most dangerous kind.

The Germans' secret weapons program had yielded a power plant—a free-energy source, to boot—that had given America the ability to design a radically different form of air vehicle, one that reflected General Twining's assessment to General Schulgen that a "circular or elliptical" craft that normally made no sound, which could turn on a dime and was capable of extreme acceleration, could be constructed, "provided extensive, detailed development" was undertaken.

Something of the order of the Manhattan Project that had yielded the atomic bomb.

But there is no evidence that the Pentagon ever initiated such a program.

The closest thing to it that has reached the light of public accountability was the recently declassified Project Silverbug, the USAF's development of the supersonic saucers designed by Avro Canada in the mid-late 1950s. But Silverbug, being jet-powered, was conventional compared to what the SS had tried to develop in Czechoslovakia, Lower Silesia and Austria.

If the U.S. agents who debriefed Viktor Schauberger in 1945-46 so much as half appreciated the ability of his or other devices to cause disturbances, however small, in the fabric of space and time, to unleash untold "variables" hidden in dimensions that conventional science hadn't begun to see or understand, then someone, somewhere would have taken the view that it should be kept secret for a very long time.

There were other even more disturbing possibilities.

During their time in America, it had dawned on Viktor and Walter Schauberger that the implosion process could be harnessed to create a massive weapon—one that was infinitely more destructive than the hydrogen bomb. More than anything else, they were terrified that their "hosts" would latch onto the same idea.

I filed this away in the back of my mind as something to put to Marckus.

Bomb or not, it appears that antigravity was boxed up and put away, ready for the day when American science could harness it consistently enough to control it. Besides, in the 1940s and 1950s, it wasn't as if the world really needed it. The global economy—and none more than America's—has been reliant on oil and the technology that supports it for more than a century. It is only now that we're having to confront the end of the petro-chemical era and seek alternative power sources.

I was left with an image of Widmer's hand, shaking with anger, and a cold feeling I hadn't had since Witkowski told me about the murders of the 62 Bell scientists at the hands of the SS. It didn't take a whole lot of introspection to get to the root of it.

For years, I'd labored under the assumption that it had been the bomb program that had kick-started America's black world into being. It hadn't, of course. From a security standpoint, the Manhattan Project was a flawed model. It had leaked like a sieve and the Soviets had acquired the most powerful technology on earth, the atom bomb, a scant handful of years after the Americans.

In 1944, when the Joint Chiefs of Staff established their high-level committee to hunt down on America's behalf every military and industrial secret that Nazi Germany possessed, they couldn't have begun to foresee the full consequences of that directive. America, more than any other ally, had acquired a vast array of German-derived technology. Much of it, like von Braun's V-2 rocketry, was highly advanced, but essentially recognizable. Some of it, however—notably the nonconventional science pursued by the SS—came from a different culture altogether.

To master the weapons it had acquired from the Germans, America found that it had to recruit the engineers responsible for them. Some were former Nazis, but many were just scientists, no more no less, who'd simply been doing their job.

The trouble was, it didn't end there. With the help of German-derived science, America's technological lead over the rest of the world accelerated exponentially after the Second World War. But the black world was a low-grade reflection of the system that had been employed to protect the secrets of the Kammlerstab within the confines of the Skoda Works.

The state within a state had been transported four thousand miles to the west and somehow, I just knew, Kammler had come with it.

The intuitive feeling I'd experienced all these years in obscure corners of the U.S. aerospace and defense industry had suddenly acquired a face.

Throughout the next interview, I felt the presence of the info-minders like a low-intensity headache. After the near-informality of my time with Bob Widmer, the proximity of three company caretakers in the room gnawed away at my concentration. They were here to watch over the man who could levitate paper clips on his desk.

But now that the interview was over, the minders were looking the other way. They'd done their job and I'd done mine. Boyd Bushman had spilled no secrets either on or off the record and that was what mattered. Nor had he in any way tarnished the reputation of the Lockheed Martin company.

That I had learned nothing of value must have shown on my face, for without warning, Bushman leaned forward and put his hand on my shoulder.

He asked me what was wrong and I told him.

"It's a lonely walk, but a rewarding one," he said, so quietly that I almost missed it. I looked into his eyes, which were quite blue but for that superficial milkiness that sometimes denotes the onset of old age.

He smiled at me. "Keep traveling the road and you might just find what you're looking for."

"What do you mean?" I asked cautiously.

"In all my years with this company, no one has asked me the questions you came here with today." He paused a moment, then said: "Here, I want to show you something."

He produced a vidéocassette from the folds of his loose-hanging suit and gave me the same smile that had crossed his face a number of times during the interview; usually, I noticed, when he needed a moment or two to think about a particularly awkward question I'd thrown at him. He looked not unlike Walter Matthau, the Hollywood actor, with a kindly, hangdog expression and thick straight hair to match. Instinctively, I'd liked him. But more to the point, I knew that I could trust him. Unusually for someone who toiled in the heart of the U.S. defense-industrial complex, he looked like someone who was incapable of telling a lie.

Bushman appeared beyond the retirement age of most good man-and-boy company men, which in itself spoke volumes about his ability.

Before I met him, I'd been told that he was a one-off, one of those people who liked to think out of the box—defense jargon for a guy in the trade who looked at things differently. Just how differently, I was about to find out.

The picture on the TV screen steadied and I found myself staring at a scene of such ordinariness I thought for a moment that Bushman had plugged in the wrong tape.

From the graininess of the film and the way the camera trembled, it rapidly became clear that this was some kind of a home movie. It depicted the interior of a garage or workshop. In the middle of the frame was a saw on a pockmarked wooden work surface. Beside it was a pair of pliers and a handful of nails.

For a while, we both just stood there watching a picture in which nothing happened. The minders had taken a quick look and apparently decided it was an eccentric end to a quirky afternoon's work, because they went back to their own conversation.

My gaze drifted back to the TV just as one of the nails in the center of the screen began to twitch and the pliers moved—jumped, rather—a centimeter to the left. Within seconds, everything was shaking, as if rocked by a series of earth tremors. And then, quite suddenly, the nails stood up, like hairs on a cold forearm.

I looked at Bushman, who was studying the screen intently. "Watch," he urged, "this is the best bit."

One by one, the nails took off and shot off the top of the screen. A moment later, the pliers started to do a crazy nose-down dance across the work surface and the saw began flapping around like a fish out of water. Then they both went the way of the nails, shooting out of frame toward the ceiling.

Then, the picture switched: same background, different still life.

Ice cream was creeping up the sides of a see-through tub. A lump of it broke away and rose toward the ceiling trailing little pearls of cream. Seconds later, the whole tub jumped off the bench.

My skepticism was working overtime. But Bushman read my thoughts. "It's no fake," he said. "This is as real as you or I." He cast a look over his shoulder at our companions. "The man responsible is a civilian, nothing to do with the defense business. That he's a genius goes without saying, of course. You needed to see this, because it's confirmation of the data." He emphasized the word as if somehow it would help me understand what I had just seen. "You must get to see this man. I think, then, you will be closer than you think to the end of your journey."

"Data? What data?" I looked at him more closely, hoping for more, but he said nothing.

As I was ushered out of the room, the scientist looked down at the thick pack of material he'd handed me before the interview. I hadn't had time to look at it. Now, I wished I had.

That evening, I sat down with Bushman's file in my hotel room. He'd loaded me down with so many papers, I didn't know where to begin or what I was really looking for. There was a stack of photostats relating to the patents he'd filed during a long and illustrious career that had included stints at some of the giants of the postwar U.S. aerospace and defense industry: Hughes Aircraft, Texas Instruments, General Dynamics and Lockheed.

There was his résumé, which noted his top secret security clearance, as well as copies of scientific papers, stapled neatly at the corner, with exotic-sounding titles that meant little to me.

My eyes swam over pages of complex mathematical equations and algebra sets. I was looking for clues, but seeing nothing that made much sense.

I pressed the "play" button on my tape recorder.

From the tenth floor of my Fort Worth hotel room, the lights of the city shimmered in the sizzling 90-degree heat, even though it was a good half an hour after the sun had slipped below the skyline. Inside, the air-conditioning was cold enough to prickle my skin.

". . .1 went back to some of the first work on gravity done by Galileo. . ."

Bushman's voice crackled in the darkness, clashing for a moment with that of a CNN reporter on the TV. I adjusted the volume on the tape recorder, hit the fast-forward button and pressed play again.

"So, what I think is: Follow the data and log your data very well and don't throw it away because you have a theory. The theory of gravity is just a theory. Einstein improved on the original theories of Newton and he was verified by data—and data gave precedence. No one believed Einstein until the data arrived. Well, our data's arrived . . . "

I scrolled the tape again. As I did so, I spotted something among the collection of papers Bushman had given me. Tucked beneath the patents and company brochure material on weapons technology was a grainy photocopy of a UFO flying low over a straight stretch of desert road. A handwritten caption underneath identified the location as Santa Ana, California, and the date as 1966.

Flicking past it, I found another cluster of photostats taken from the "Ramayana of Valmiki—Translated from the Original Sanskrit." A stamp on the title page identified the book as belonging to "Lockheed/Fort Worth."

Puzzled, I toggled with the buttons on the tape recorder and finally found the part of the interview I'd been looking for.

"Nature does not speak English," Bushman had been telling me. "Not only that, but if we verbalize it, we're probably approximating, but not telling the truth. Math comes close, but it isn't there either. What Nature tells us is what must be honored. It has been talking to us on many domains."

I let the words echo in my head for a moment.

Bushman was a senior scientist for one of the world's biggest defense contractors; a member of the fraternity that I'd looked to for expert comment all my professional life, and he was telling me to trust in what I saw. Follow data, he'd said, not theory. He worked on programs that lay beyond the cutting edge of known science.

"I can't talk to all the theoreticians," he'd told me, "because there don't exist theories where I am."

For the past ten years, I had been following data and the data had shown me the existence of something real. And yet some of the brightest minds on the planet were struggling to produce theory to underpin it. How could there be no theory for effects that were genuinely manifesting themselves in the environment?

What Nature tells us is what must be honored. It has been talking to us on many domains.

And we'd only understood a fraction of what it had been saying.

If we verbalize it, we're probably approximating, but not telling the truth.

And then it hit me. That's all theory was or ever had been—an approximation of the truth. Sometimes that approximation worked out and held fast, becoming scientific currency; other times it didn't and was superseded by another theory.

In this case, there were so many holes in our knowledge, it had allowed for people like Podkletnov and Schauberger to fall through the gaps, to show us things that science couldn't account for. Because science theory hadn't mapped them yet.

Not outside Nazi Germany, at any rate.

Einstein had followed Newton and data had verified them both. But in this field, as with other fields of scientific endeavor, the data was still coming in.

It rendered NASA's theory, in this particular area, at least, quite meaningless.

I flipped another piece of paper in Bushman's file and saw a man with a mop of unkempt hair staring at me from a grainy photostat. He was standing in the same garage I'd witnessed in the film Bushman had shown me at Plant 4.

A note told me his name and that he lived in Vancouver—a place, if Bushman was right, that one way or another looked like being where the road ran out.

Chapter 25

George Hathaway, a science and engineering Ph.D. who ran a consulting firm on "nonconventional propulsion technology" in Ontario, Canada, offered a suitable staging post between the reality of sorts that exists in London and the world inhabited by the man in the photostat that Bushman had shown me: self-trained scientist and inventor, John Hutchison.

I met Hathaway in the coffee shop of my Toronto hotel and was gratified to note that there was nothing remotely flaky about him. Hathaway, whom I guessed to be in his early 50s, looked like most people's idea of a slightly unconventional nine-to-five scientist: a tall man, dressed in jeans and a tartan shirt, with wire-framed glasses, Bill Hickok mustache and hair over the collar. The briefcase gave him a suitably businesslike air as well; he was someone you could talk turkey with.

Hearing him talk, I began to feel a lot better.

I was booked on a flight that afternoon to Vancouver, but had been filled with doubts about the whole trip ever since my arrival in Canada.

It was three weeks after my visit to Fort Worth and I had flown halfway around the world on my own ticket to meet a man who claimed to be able to levitate objects with equipment he'd salvaged from electrical shops and thrift stores.

I had managed to grab myself two days off work. Two days to get to Vancouver and back via Toronto. The ticket had cost me a small fortune.

Faced with a sizable hole in my finances, the whole thing suddenly seemed to stretch credulity, even if it had come with an endorsement from Bushman.

Worse, I'd been unable to make any kind of contact with Marckus.

As was his wont, he had vanished off the face of the planet. I'd called, left messages, sent emails, but he wasn't answering. In the end, I had been unable to put off the opportunity to travel any longer.

Hathaway's ability, therefore, to converse in hard-and-fast science and engineering terms about Hutchison came as an enormous relief. The key point was that he and a colleague, a South African called Alexis Pezarro, had believed in Hutchison sufficiently to back him financially for a considerable chunk of the 1980s. And even though they weren't linked in any business sense anymore, Hathaway still professed to be a fan of his work.

"There are three kinds of people involved in the advanced propulsion field in my experience," Hathaway had told me over the phone a few weeks earlier. "There are the professionals, people like Marc Millis at NASA."

Millis. The guy who ran the space agency's Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program out of a lonely office at the Glenn Research Center in Cleveland, Ohio. I cast my mind back. It seemed like a lifetime ago.

"Then there are the Tesla types who have an intuitive grasp of electromagnetics who come in from the ground up," Hathaway continued. "And then there's John Hutchison who doesn't fit into either category."

Hutchison, it was more accurate to say, fitted into no real category at all.

He had been born in 1945 in North Vancouver and had grown up an only child, surrounding himself with the only things that he seemed to show any real empathy for—machines. Reading between the lines, it was clear that he had not fitted in as a kid. He'd dropped out of school at Grade 10 and had gone on to complete an education of sorts with the aid of a private tutor (mirroring, I recalled, the schooling regime that Thomas Townsend Brown had endured 40 years earlier).

Amassing a large collection of machine tools, steam engines, old guns, chemical equipment and electromagnetic gear, Hutchison became infatuated from a young age with the theories of Einstein and Faraday, even though he was not remotely academic. His interest in them stemmed from his intuitive grasp of science in general and of electromagnetism in particular. His great hero was the turn-of-the-century electrical engineering pioneer, Nikola Tesla.

I had done my homework on Tesla, because Bushman's papers had been peppered with references to him.

Tesla was a Serb engineering graduate from Prague University who in 1884 at the age of 28 emigrated to America in the hope of finding work in the then fledgling electricity industry. With nothing more to his name when he arrived in New York than a letter of introduction to the man widely regarded as the father of the electricity industry, Thomas Edison, Tesla rapidly established himself in Edison's eyes as an engineer of great skill.

But while Edison used him primarily as a glorified Mr. Fixit to repair and refine his power generators, which were by then beginning to proliferate across the eastern seaboard, Tesla had set his mind on introducing an electricity supply system that was infinitely better than Edison's. If Edison would only use his, Tesla's, method of alternating or AC current instead of direct or DC current, which was notorious for its inability to travel over long distances, Tesla knew he could deliver a system that was far more efficient.

Yet, by the mid-1880s, Edison's entire infrastructure—indeed, his entire business base—revolved around the supply of DC power, whatever its manifest deficiencies. As a result, Tesla left the Edison Electric Company to set up on his own.

From then on, his career was dogged by a series of business disasters, but as an inventor—and the man who gave the world AC current into the bargain—Tesla was without parallel. In 1891, he developed the Tesla Coil, a remarkable invention that remains the basis for radios, televisions and other means of wireless communication.

But it was the wireless transmission of energy that became his great goal and for most of his professional life Tesla dedicated himself to the pursuit of a system that promised to give the world a free supply of energy. It hardly seemed to enter his head that big business, which by the early 20th century was starting to make handsome profits out of electricity, would be resolutely opposed to the idea.

Tesla's wireless energy transmission system was initially based upon technology for sending power through the air, but he soon developed a far more efficient transmission medium: the ground. In a series of experiments in Colorado, Tesla showed that the earth could be adapted from its customary role as an energy sinkhole—a place to dump excess electricity—into a powerful conductor; a giant planetwide energy transmission system that obviated the need for wires.

Tesla died penniless in 1943, mumbling to the end about fantastic beam weapons that could blast aircraft from the skies or be bounced off the ionosphere to strike at targets anywhere on the globe. One of the wilder theories that still cling to his memory revolves around a supposed experiment to beam some kind of message to the Arctic explorer Robert Peary, who in mid-1908 was making an attempt to reach the North Pole. According to legend, Tesla, who had built a powerful transmitter at Wardencliff on Long Island, beamed the "message" on June 30 and awaited news from Peary. The explorer saw nothing, but thousands of miles away, in a remote corner of Siberia, a massive explosion equivalent to 15 megatons of TNT devastated 500,000 acres of land centered on a place called Tunguska.

The Tunguska "incident" is generally ascribed to the impact of a comet fragment or a meteorite, but the absence of evidence for the impact theory has enabled Tesla proponents to maintain the line that it was Tesla's "death ray" that caused the blast. Certainly, Tesla himself seemed to believe he was responsible, for immediately afterward he dismantled the "weapon" and reverted to other pursuits.

What Tesla and Hutchison shared was a complete sense of ease at being around electricity. Tesla, for example, knew it was perfectly safe to pass high voltages through his own body, provided the current was kept low. Using himself as a conductor, he would stage dramatic demonstrations aimed at validating the safety of AC power. In one of them, he would hold a wire from a Tesla Coil in one hand while drawing a spark from the fingers of the other to light a lamp. The newspapers of the day would frequently run photographs of him in morning dress, his whole body alive with sparks. It must have seemed like magic, but was nothing more than straightforward evidence of Tesla's deep-seated feel for his subject.

It was the same with Hutchison. By the age of 15, he had already assembled his own laboratory, cramming it with Tesla machines he had constructed himself; signal generation equipment, static generators and a uranium source housed in a copper tube that used a magnetron pulsed by an old rotary spark plug system to transmit microwaves. During the 1970s, Hutchison set up shop in a bigger, more sophisticated laboratory in the basement of a house in Lynn Valley, North Vancouver, which contained racks full of signal generators, low-power radar systems and phasing equipment coupled to refinements of his earlier devices.

One evening in 1979, Hutchison was in his laboratory, sitting amid the sparks and high voltage effects of his equipment, when he was struck on the shoulder by a piece of metal. He threw it back and it hit him again. This was the ignominious beginning of the Hutchison Effect. In the ensuing months, Hutchison found that by tweaking the settings on the equipment, he could get things—ordinary household objects—to levitate, move horizontally, bend, break and even explode. In the latter case, this portion of the effect came to be known as "disruption."

In 1980, Hutchison went into partnership with a company called Pharos Technologies, which had been formed by Hathaway and the South African Pezarro. Pharos Technologies was designed exclusively to promote the Hutchison Effect, which in these early days was billed as a "lift and disruption" system. This, however, barely begins to describe some of the extraordinary phenomena Hutchison was manifesting in his Lynn Valley basement.

Using only tiny amounts of power—between 400 and 4,000 watts via a 110 AC wall socket—Hutchison found he could raise any kind of material—sheet metal, wood, styrofoam, lead, copper, zinc . . . whatever—from a few ounces to a hundred pounds in weight at distances of up to 80 feet. From a physics standpoint, it was meant to be impossible, of course, but Hutchison was doing it—regularly, if not exactly on demand. Nine times out of ten, nothing would happen. The rest of the time it was like a bad day on the set of the film Poltergeist', objects rising slowly from the area of influence in the center of the equipment and looping back somewhere else; or shooting skyward in a powerful ballistic arc and striking the ceiling, kicked there by a massive energy impulse; or simply levitating and hovering, continuously, for ages.

What was more, Hathaway said, it had been captured on hours of film and videotape and had been demonstrated in front of hundreds of witnesses.

As for what might be producing the Effect, there were many theories. Some said that it was triggered by opposing electromagnetic fields that canceled each other out, creating a powerful flow of zero-point energy to any object in the zone of influence; others that Hutchison was causing electromagnetic fields to spin or swirl in some unknown way and that this was the trigger for lévitation—shades of the torsion fields generated by Schauberger, Podkletnov and the Bell. Another camp maintained that Hutchison was generating the Effect himself by psychokinesis.

What was interesting, Hathaway said, was that Hutchison himself did not know what caused it and he had no control over it once it started. Sometimes the Effect produced lévitation, sometimes it caused objects to shred, tear apart or evaporate; other times, it would cause transmutation—the alteration of an object's molecular composition; Hutchison, like an alchemist, could change one metal into another.

"You're shitting me," I said.

But Hathaway shook his head. "John's a wild and crazy guy. He lives in his own world and he can't readily express what he's doing in terms an engineer or a physicist might always understand. You should go see him, no question." He paused, then added: "A visit to John is definitely a once-in-a-lifetime thing."

As the Canadian Airlines A320 tracked westward above the Great Lakes, I sat alone at the back of the aircraft, my mind still beset by doubts, in spite of Hathaway's no-nonsense assessment of the man I was about to meet.

The one thing that kept me going was the germ of a mystery rooted in some hard, incontrovertible fact I'd managed to glean separately from Hutchison and Hathaway: in 1983, a Pentagon team spent money on Hutchison—tens of thousands of dollars over a period of several months—analyzing the Effect.

In promoting Hutchison's technology to potential investors—people to exploit its potential as a propulsion or "disruption" system—Hathaway and Pezarro had come into contact with a unit inside the Pentagon that was prepared to take their claims at face value.

Led by Col. John B. Alexander of the U.S. Army's Intelligence and Security Command, INSCOM, the team put up money to move Hutchison's cramped lab at Lynn Valley to a large empty warehouse on the edge of North Vancouver.

The facility was set up under tight security and anything pertaining to it was classified.

The "INSCOM group" tasked with analyzing the Hutchison Effect comprised five people besides Hutchison, Hathaway and Pezarro—two scientists from Los Alamos National Laboratory, a representative of the Office of Naval Research, an Army R&D specialist and Alexander himself.

The presence of the Los Alamos and ONR representatives appeared to be significant, since both of these organizations were driving forces behind the Strategic Defense Initiative. SDI—"Star Wars," as it had been dubbed by the media—had been the brainchild of Ronald Reagan's science advisers and Reagan had hawked it to the rooftops as the be-all and end-all arms program of his presidency: a space-based ring of steel comprising sensors, laser weaponry and missiles that would protect the United States from an all-out nuclear strike by the Soviets.

SDI was unveiled in March 1983 and from then until its death later in the decade was heavily staffed by experts from Los Alamos and ONR.

For the life of me, I couldn't think what Hutchison's work had to do with it.

Soon after Hutchison's lab was moved to the large warehouse on the edge of North Vancouver, the experiments began in readiness for the INSCOM visit. The Pentagon's funding was good for four months. Alexander had provided Hutchison, Hathaway and Pezarro with objects on which to test the Hutchison Effect in its new location. One of these was a six-by-quarter-inch molybdenum rod. Molybdenum is an incredibly strong but light metal used in nuclear reactors. It has a "sag" temperature of 3,700 degrees C. Alexander had deliberately marked the rod so it couldn't be switched. Give it a whirl, he told Hathaway. See what happens.

A few days later, the colonel was contacted by Hathaway and told that the test runs had been spectacular. The test specimens were dispatched to the INSCOM team for analysis forthwith.

The Effect had snaked the molybdenum rod into an S shape as if it were a soft metal—lead, tin or copper. There were other successes to report, too. A length of high-carbon steel had shredded at one end and transmuted into lead the other. A piece of PVC plastic had literally disappeared into thin air before the eyes of the evaluators. Bits of wood had become embedded in the middle of pieces of aluminum.

And, of course, things had taken off—all over the laboratory, items had been levitated; some deliberately, others in parts of the lab that were nothing to do with the experiment. The lab at one point had also become self-running, drawing its electricity from God only knew where—since the power was down at the time.

Keep everything exactly as it is, Alexander told him. We're on our way up.

When the INSCOM team got off the plane in Vancouver, everyone was gibbering with excitement about the looming set of tests—everyone, that is, except for the more senior of the two Los Alamos scientists, a dour man who'd been given the unaffectionate nickname "Big Bad Bob" by the other team members.

Bob remained convinced that somehow it was all just a bunch of jiggery-pokery.

Someone, he'd told Alexander, was being had here.

A shimmy through the airframe as the A320 thumped down on the tarmac at Vancouver and here I was, same place as the INSCOM group, different time.

Like them, I was thinking of the encounter to come; and for a reason I couldn't entirely put my finger on, I felt anxious.

I set out from the hotel for Hutchison's apartment 12 hours later.

It was a crisp morning, warm air from the Pacific mixing with the cold air of a blue sky to form a thick layer of cloud in the waterways of the harbor below. I followed Hutchison's directions, turning left on a wide run-down street, eventually spotting what I was looking for: a brown apartment building with an antenna farm on one of the balconies.

I could see Hutchison in silhouette at one of the windows, scanning the street for my arrival.

He met me at the entrance and we shook hands. He was dressed in jeans and a denim jacket. A strand of thick black hair fell over one lens of his glasses. The other had a crack running through it. He was tall and powerfully built, but his voice was softer than I remembered it on the phone. Through the handshake I could sense he was as restless as I was. We exchanged a few pleasantries, then I followed him inside. A minute later, there was a rattle of keys and tumbling of locks as Hutchison pushed back the door of his apartment.

The door traveled about 18 inches, then stopped abruptly.

"Sorry, it's kind of a squeeze," he said, forcing his way through the gap and disappearing inside. I followed suit and found myself in a dark, narrow corridor with what looked like crates lining the walls. The gap down the middle was barely wide enough for a child. Hutchison pushed the door shut and somehow managed to squeeze past me, heading for the back.

He pulled a drape off the window and light flooded the room. Outside, the aerials and dishes I'd spotted from the street pointed skyward at crazy angles. It was only when I turned back to study the apartment interior that I realized the crates I'd seen were radios—huge, metallic, gray, lifeless things, some the size of tea chests. I peered into the kitchen, the bathroom and bedroom and saw more radios.

Every available inch of floor and wall space, in fact, was filled with radios and radar screens, gear that had gone out with the Stone Age, complete with dials, valves and analogue readouts.

It was like stepping into a cross between a military surplus store and Radio Shack circa 1952.

Hutchison lowered his huge frame to the floor and assumed the lotus position on the chocolate-colored carpet. He had an almost childlike innocence about him. He'd never once asked why I'd come all this way to speak to him and he gave me the impression that only a small part of his mind was here in the room with me.

The equipment, he told me, had been requisitioned from some '50s-vintage Canadian warships he was helping to dismantle in the harbor. In return for his salvage services, the Canadian military said he could have all the stuff he was able to carry away with him. Clearly, they'd underestimated his strength.

Radios, sonar systems and electronic countermeasures devices lined shelves suspended from the ceiling. Hutchison told me he'd consulted the plans of the apartment block and had drilled holes in all the right places.

"There's a ton and half of the stuff above your head, but it's safe enough," he smiled. I glanced up nervously and noticed a heavy-looking cluster of boxes suspended over me, then asked if this was the equipment that had been used in the INSCOM tests. Hutchison shook his head. Much of it had been confiscated by the Canadian police and after their intervention, he'd found it hard to carry on, though recently he'd rebuilt the lab and was readying to start operations again.

He showed me an aluminum ingot that looked as if it had blown apart from the inside and a file filled with letterheads I recognized: Boeing and McDonnell Douglas had been but two of Hutchison's backers.

But he was getting ahead of himself and so was I. First things first. "What happened after the arrival of the INSCOM team?" I asked.

He scrolled back 15 years and told me about the plow.

The building had been unremarkable, another storage facility in the outer suburbs. There was no security, just an eight-foot wire fence and the warehouse's relative obscurity amid the smoke and grime of Vancouver's industrial quarter. It was not optimum, but guards would only have attracted attention.

The equipment was housed behind a wall of breeze blocks in the middle of the warehouse. The breeze blocks extended halfway to the roof—around 15 feet.

This was the target area.

Behind the wall was the large Tesla Coil containing the uranium source, a device around four and half feet tall with a doughnut-shaped metal coil on top.

Diagonally across the room, on the other side of the target area, sat a powerful Van de Graaf generator capable of producing a 250,000-volt DC static charge.

The other prominent piece of technology was a three-and-a-half-foot double-ended Tesla Coil, known as the "dumbbell," suspended from supports running across the top of the wall.

Between these three main equipment items were an assortment of smaller devices, all connected to each other by multiple coils of wire and cabling.

There were tuning capacitors, high-voltage transmission caps, RF coils and a spark gap that would snap every 40 seconds or so sending an earsplitting shock wave throughout the building while it was up and running.

Now, though, as the equipment warmed up prior to the test, all it emitted was a low-intensity hum.

Outside the target area lay a pile of unclaimed scrap metal. Leaning against the wall were three old streetlights and a spool of wire hawser. Set in front of them was a rusting horse-drawn plow, three times the weight of a man.

In the flickering light of the monitoring screens members of the team would see their shadows moving on the edge of their vision. Several said it made it feel like there were people there, watching them.

Between the scrap metal and the target area a bank of receivers and monitoring equipment rested on a workbench.

Hutchison, then in his late 30s, sat at the bench, watching monitors and tuning dials.

The Pentagon and DoE evaluation team had flown in from across the border the previous night. The atmosphere was relaxed as it could be—shirtsleeves, first-name stuff—but everyone was tense. No one knew what to expect; no one, that is, except Big Bad Bob, the crusty old skeptic from the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

What was happening here, Bob told anyone who'd listen, was just a bunch of smoke and mirrors, a waste of fuckin' time, effort and money.

His sidekick, John, was blessed with a more open mind and, given the nature of the assignment, he expressed the view, though not when Bob was around, that this was no bad thing.

Only a few days earlier, tongues of fire had licked their way up through the concrete floor, a manifestation of the Effect that had not been encountered before.

Everyone except Bob had accepted the Canadians' version of events at face value.

As Hutchison adjusted the monitoring equipment, he could hear the ladder behind him groaning under Bob's considerable bulk. Bob was gazing down on the equipment from the top of the wall. (Hutchison never made clear to me the reasons for the wall. Had it been put there to contain the Effect or possible fallout from it—an explosion perhaps?) Colonel Alexander, who was pacing in the shadows to the left of the workbench, asked him what he could see.

The equipment was humming and the cameras were turning. The target, a length of steel rod, wasn't moving—wasn't even quivering—so no friggin' surprise there, Bob replied.

Just then, the radio crackled. Bob's deputy was running some checks with special monitoring equipment outside the building. He was 300 feet from the warehouse and picking up some kind of distortion. Something, he said, was happening.

Alexander stepped out of the shadows and studied one of the monitors. He peered at the readings, then glanced at the video image of the steel bar, but it was just as Bob had said: nothing was moving. Nothing had changed.

Suddenly, without anyone touching anything, the ceiling lights switched on and began to glow intensely bright. For a moment, the entire floor area was bathed in incandescent white light. Then the bank of bulbs blew, sending a shower of red-hot filaments and glass onto the target area.

Except for the glow from the monitors, the warehouse was plunged back into darkness. Bob, who was standing a little to the right of Hutchison, started to laugh.

Out of the corner of his eye, over by the scrap area, the Canadian caught the movement, real movement this time, and instinctively ducked his head.

The crash was followed by a cry from Big Bad Bob, then silence.

The plow had sailed across the room at shoulder height and buried itself into the wall close to where he had been standing.

After the INSCOM team departed, Hutchison's work continued. The lab moved again to a different part of Vancouver and people came and went.

This much I know to be true, because Hutchison showed me copies of the reports.

Among Hutchison's visitors at this time was Jack Houck of the McDonnell Douglas aerospace corporation, who in 1985 spent two days analyzing the Effect. Houck came away satisfied that no fraudulence had occurred during the experiments he attended, during which, in a subsequent report, he pronounced that "some very interesting events" had been captured on videotape. However, he went on, "some of the biggest events occurred outside the target area. The first evening a gun barrel and a very heavy (60-pound) brass cylinder were hurled from a shelf in the back corner of the room onto the floor. Simultaneously, on the opposite side of the room toward the back, three other objects were hurled to the ground. One was a heavy aluminum bar (% inch by 2% inch by 12 inch). It was bent by 30 degrees."

Houck attested to the randomness of the Hutchison Effect and postulated that it might in part be attributable to psychokinesis—that Hutchison, in other words, was either boosting the energy generated by the machinery with his mind or that his mind alone was responsible for the manifestations produced.

These phenomena, Hutchison was now able to report, included time-dilation—pockets of altered space-time within the target area—and, most extraordinary of all, the capacity of the Effect to turn metal ingots transparent. It was as if, momentarily, the ingots were there, but not there; visible in outline yet totally see-through.

It had been Hathaway's dream in the early stages of their work to develop Hutchison's machinery into a "stationary launch-assist" device: an antigravity aerospace platform.

This was based on his initial belief that the inertial properties of the machinery itself appeared to have altered during some of the experiments; this, in addition to the clearly altered weight condition of the objects placed in the target area—objects that I'd seen in the video Bushman had shown me in Texas.

But in 1986, Hutchison and Pharos Technologies went their separate ways, Pezarro and Hathaway having failed to secure the kind of backing for the Effect they'd always hoped for. It all fell apart, Hathaway said, when it was suggested that Hutchison "was an integral part of the apparatus"; that the Effect, in other words, was unachievable without the presence of Hutchison himself.

For his part, Hutchison vehemently denies this, but the fact that the most spectacular manifestations of the Effect always seemed to occur when he was around is hard to refute. The psychokinesis proponents hold this up as evidence that their theory is the right one; the technologists counter that it is Hutchison's intuitive feel for the machinery, his ability to tune it to the hairsbreadth tolerances required for things to start happening, that makes his presence necessary.

The fact that two aerospace companies—Boeing and McDonnell Douglas—felt it necessary to investigate the Hutchison Effect is at least telling.

Boeing partly funded a series of experiments during the late 1980s. By then, however, Hutchison had become disenchanted with the Canadian scene and in 1989 went on a scouting tour of Europe intent on moving his lab to either Austria or Germany. When he came back to Vancouver at the turn of the decade, he found the Canadian government had confiscated half of his equipment. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police maintained that it constituted an environmental hazard; Hutchison that the Canadians had been leaned on by the Americans.

Hutchison's suspicions were compounded when attempts to have the Los Alamos report released under the Freedom of Information Act resulted in failure.

No one in officialdom had been able to locate the files. It looked as if the report had been buried.

Later, Colonel Alexander, the head of the INSCOM group, told me that the report had been classified, but was subsequently downgraded to "confidential." In the end, it had been "routinely destroyed."

Alexander's take on the "plow incident" was also markedly different from Hutchison's. On the day in question, he said, nothing mysterious had happened. That, from INSCOM's point of view, was the problem.

I asked Alexander what he felt about it all.

"Oh, it's real all right," he told me, "the trouble is, sometimes it works and sometimes, it doesn't. But four out of five of us came away believing."

Chapter 26

I met Marckus in a country pub close to the haven on the estuary where we'd hooked up at the very beginning. It had been several years since our initial rendezvous, but when I walked in and saw him in the corner, time might as well have stood still. He looked up from his paper, gave me a wave and clicked his fingers for some attention from the bar. Other than a bored-looking girl behind the pumps, there was no one else in the room.

After she'd taken my order, she came over and set my beer down on Marckus' paper. Marckus clucked like an old hen and handed the glass to me. The circle of condensation, I noticed, had partly ringed the word "doom" on a headline about the forthcoming earth summit. It felt about right. It had been raining solidly for months.

"So you know," he said with an air of finality. "Good. I can't stand awkward explanations."

Before departing for Canada, when I'd been desperate for him to brief me on Hutchison, I'd left messages on his answering machine telling him I wanted to talk about Blowback—the book he had lent me about U.S. recruitment of high-value Nazis. Marckus must have figured out that I'd known then.

"Where have you been?" I asked him.

"I decided to make use of some vacation time that's been owing to me." He held up his hands. "I'm sorry. I should have told you."

"So where did you go?"

He looked down at his beer. "I've been following in your footsteps, paying a few respects. Bavaria is beautiful this time of year. From the little hotel where I was staying you can see the snow on the mountains. Maybe on a clear day, if you could only see through the wire, you might have glimpsed the same view from Dachau."

"How many members of your family did you lose?" I asked.

"A couple that I know of. An uncle and aunt on my father's side. Most of me is as English as you are." He paused. "I'm sorry I put you through the hoops. It must all seem a little trite, I suppose. But it was important to me that you found things out for yourself.

"When you started out on the path that you did, sooner or later the trail was going to lead you to Germany. I was happy to help you with the science, but it was important that I held back certain kinds of information. It has taken me decades to build the knowledge that you have acquired in just a few years. But if I'd told you the full story from the outset, you'd have written me off as a crank."

"Do you think the Americans have mastered the technology?" I asked.

He shrugged theatrically. "We're going in circles again, aren't we? I told you when we first met. I don't know. I know—you know now—that they have access to it, but whether they've mastered it or not . . . it depends on what you mean by 'mastered.' '

He took a sip from his drink and continued. "When the Americans tripped over this mutant strain of nonlinear physics and took it back home with them, they were astute enough to realize that their homegrown scientific talent couldn't handle it. That it was beyond their cultural terms of reference. That's why they recruited so many Germans. The Nazis developed a unique approach to science and engineering quite separate from the rest of the world, because their ideology, unrestrained as it was, supported a wholly different way of doing things. Von Braun's V-2s are a case in point, but so was their understanding of physics. The trouble was, when the Americans took it all home with them they found out, too late, that it came infected with a virus. You take the science on, you take on aspects of the ideology, as well."

"And the black world?" I prompted.

"Well, there are different shades of black, of course. But what interests me is that the bit that is truly unaccountable is the part of the system that's been exposed longest to the virus. So in time, it will simply destroy itself. That, at least, is my earnest hope."

Marckus stared out of the window a while, then shook himself like a dog. "Tell me about Canada."

I took a pull of my drink and set the glass down. I felt tired. "There isn't a whole lot to go by. After the Royal Canadian Mounted Police paid him a visit, Hutchison doesn't even have the equipment to do lévitations or transmutations anymore."

He glanced up. "So, you believe him."

"I believe that he caused objects to lose their weight. I also believe he made iron bars turn momentarily transparent and I believe that he transmuted metals." I tried to rub some of the tiredness away, but the alcohol wasn't helping. "Beyond that, I don't know."

Marckus fell silent for a few seconds, then he said: "Do you have any idea how much energy it takes to transmute a metal?"

At the back of my head, I seemed to recall Hathaway talking in terms of a gigawatt or two. I found it difficult to visualize a gigawatt and said as much to Marckus.

I didn't want another physics lesson, but I realized too late I was going to get one.

"At the low end of the scale, Hutchison was using 400 watts to achieve the effects you're talking about," Marckus said. "Four hundred watts are the heat and light you get from four light bulbs." A kilowatt—a thousand watts—represents the heat you get from a one-bar electric fire. A thousand kilowatts are a megawatt and a thousand megawatts are a terawatt. A thousand terawatts, Marckus told me, were a gigawatt.

"You know now what a gigawatt is?" he said. "A gigawatt is the equivalent energy release of the Nagasaki bomb. And that's what Hutchison was pulling out of his 110-volt AC wall socket to turn steel into lead.

"Transmutation is real. The reason most people don't use it to turn lead into gold is that the power requirements cost more than the gold."

"Why would INSCOM be interested in alchemy?" I asked.

Marckus smiled again, but the look in his eyes was intense. "Transmutation has other purposes. You can use it to change the rate at which radioactive elements decay or you can turn the whole process around."

Marckus was putting me through the hoops again.

"Go on," I told him.

"Think of it," he said, leaning forward, "transmutation, if you can do it the Hutchison way, is a cheap method of enriching uranium, for example. There's another thing, too. Remember when you were heading for Puthoff's place and you asked me for a no-brainer on the power potential of zero-point energy? I gave you the shoebox analogy and how much untapped energy there is in it?"

He swilled the dregs of his beer around, drained them, then set the glass down and looked at me. "Maybe Hutchison doesn't know it. Release that energy slowly and you've got a safe, clean reactor that can go on pumping out power forever. Speed up the process and make all the right connections and you've got a bomb; one that'll make a thermonuke look like a child's firecracker. No wonder they shredded the report at Los Alamos."

I was about to remind him that it had merely been "routinely destroyed," but stopped myself. Standing next to the coffee machine at the Institute of Advanced Studies in Austin, Puthoff had coolly relayed his belief that there was enough energy in my cup to boil the world's oceans many times over. And then I remembered the Schaubergers' fears over the Americans' hijacking of the implosion process—its potential use in the development of a giant bomb.

I could feel my heart in my throat.

"When he does what he does," Marckus said, "Hutchison is reaching into a place that you can't see or touch and he's pulling things out we call 'phenomena.' " He turned his index fingers into quote marks to make the point. "But things don't happen by magic. Phenomena happen because there are laws of physics we don't understand yet. The fact we haven't found the answer yet is our problem, not Nature's. But we're working on it." He stared at me and frowned. "Why on Earth are you smiling?"

"Because you just nailed something down for me. Something that's bugged the hell out of me almost from the very beginning."

"What's that?"

"The Philadelphia Experiment. A neat piece of disinformation, I think you'll agree, but stuffed full of real elements that make it impossible for people like you or me to conduct a meaningful investigation of anything remotely related to it. I'm thinking of T. T. Brown, electrostatics and stealth, of course, but there was always that one part of the story that didn't seem to fit—the part about the ship slipping into another dimension. Even that, it turns out, has a grain of truth in it."

Marckus nodded. "The best disinformation always does."

Bushman was right. Everything had been right there in Hutchison's apartment.

No wonder INSCOM's weird-shit division had shown up at his door.

Sooner or later, someone would succeed in developing a zero-point reactor—a machine that would be able to exploit the fluctuations in the quantum sea as they blinked in and out of existence millions of times every second. It was just a matter of time. "We are at the stage that the fathers of the atomic bomb were at when they put together their first test nuclear reactor in the early Forties—and look what happened a few years later," Puthoff had been quoted as saying recently.

I offered Marckus another drink, but he looked at his watch and said that he had to get going. The wind had started to lash against the window, bringing more rain with it. Marckus pulled up the collar of his coat and readied himself to leave.

But I hadn't quite finished with Dan Marckus just yet.

"So what's it to be?" I asked him. "Are you going to build a bomb or a reactor?"

Marckus made an exaggerated display of busying himself with his coat. He said nothing, so I asked him again.

"I'd like to know what you're going to do with this knowledge, Dan. You know as well as I do that radical technology that destroys existing technology isn't welcome."

"Let me put it another way," he said. "Years ago, a story appeared in one of those pulp American science-fiction rags, Astounding Science Fiction I think it was, in which the U.S. military authorities gathered America's best scientific brains around a table and told them to develop and build an antigravity machine, because it was known that the Russians had already developed something similar. The twist in the tale, of course, was that the business about the Russians was a total piece of fiction, but not knowing this the scientists went away, put their heads together, and came up with a crude, but workable device.

"The point of the story is that nothing is impossible, once it is known to be practicable. I have something infinitely better than that. Physicists have proven the existence of the zero-point energy field and your data shows that people have actually developed antigravity devices that flew. I want you to know that you weren't simply duplicating knowledge that I already had. Let's say I had the big picture and you provided the details. It's the details in this business that are important. What we're faced with here is a simple set of alternatives. Free, clean energy for everyone on the one hand or the biggest bloody bomb you can imagine. I want the good guys to be in the van here, because a day doesn't go by that I don't think about my family and what happened to them under the Nazis."

Marckus strolled across the parking lot, heading for a pathway through the woods on the other side. There was something nagging at the back of my head that I'd meant to ask him, but I couldn't think of it. I closed my eyes, but the inspiration wouldn't come. When I opened them again, he had vanished among the trees.

It was then, of course, that it came to me. I'd meant to ask if he had sent the article that had landed on my desk at Jane's all those years ago.

I smiled to myself. That would have been too Machiavellian; even by Marckus' impressive standards. But I would ask him all the same.

Twenty minutes later, I eased my car along the narrow road that ran beside the abandoned radar establishment and parked up close to the jetty where Marckus and I had first met. The rain had passed, leaving the unmistakable smell of spring in its wake. I got out of the car and gazed skyward. High above a checkered layer of cirrocumulus, an aircraft contrail tracked westward toward America, the silver arrowhead at the point of its creation looking tiny and vulnerable against the deep blue. For years, I had banked on the presumption that technology would pursue a set course—one that had been preordained ever since someone had had the wit to fashion a wheel out of a piece of flat stone. Now I knew that it didn't have to be that way, that there were shortcuts in the process that would allow us to leap the state of the art in moments of searing inspiration. I thought back to the day that Garry Lyles at NASA had outlined his vision of interstellar travel, the fast trip to Alpha Centauri that he earnestly hoped man would make within the next 100 years.

If we looked in the right places, we might just be making it a lot sooner.

Epilogue

A few final thoughts, the first of them regarding George S. Trimble Jr., the man whose comments on the imminent "reality" of gravity control provided the trigger for the investigation behind this book. In 1967, Trimble left the Martin Company for NASA, where he became director of the Advanced Manned Missons Program. His reasons for not wanting to be interviewed about his activities at Martin Aircraft deep into his retirement remain unclear, although, of course, they may be entirely innocent. As an ironic twist on everything that followed, I recently came across a comment of his: "The biggest deterrent to scientific progress is a refusal of some people, including scientists, to believe that things that seem amazing can really happen," the New York Herald Tribune quoted him as saying on November 22,1955. "I know that if Washington decides that it is vital to our national survival to go where we want and do what we want without having to worry about gravity, we'd find the answer rapidly."

Enough said.

In October 2000, the U.S. magazine Popular Mechanics revealed that Ning Li, the Chinese-American scientist working in an area of endeavor similar to Dr. Evgeny Podkletnov, was close to developing an operational machine capable of exerting an attractive or repulsive force on all matter. By using 12-inch disc-shaped superconductors and around a kilowatt of electricity, Li's device would produce a force field, the magazine stated, that would "effectively neutralize gravity above a 1-foot-diameter region extending from the surface of the planet to outer space." Li left the University of Alabama at Huntsville in mid-2000 to pursue the commercial development of her invention and has kept a low profile since. While her eye is said to be on civilian spin-offs of this remarkable breakthrough—NASA scientists at the Marshall Space Flight Center believe her "AC Gravity" machine could be used as a shield for protecting the International Space Station against impacts by small meteorites—it goes almost without saying that it could also be hijacked as a weapon. The same force that can deflect a meteorite or a piece of orbiting space junk can also stop a reconnaissance satellite or a ballistic missile dead in its tracks. Hit a foot-wide gravity-reflecting beam at an orbiting velocity of 17,000 miles per hour and it would be no different to hitting a brick wall, except there would be no evidence to say that you had hit anything. The results, to borrow an expression from science-fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke, would be "indistinguishable from magic," the ultimate in weapons technology.

Over recent years, a wealth of articles have appeared outlining the view of an emerging breed of physicists that we may indeed reside in a multi-dimensional cosmos. The August 2000 edition of Scientific American, for example, generated a mass of copy in newspapers here and in the States on this growing belief—that parallel universes may exist alongside our own and how additional, unseen dimensions would help to unify the fundamental forces of Nature that inhabit our four-dimensional space-time. According to this thinking, much of it wrapped within so-called "string theory," our universe may simply exist as a membrane floating within a higher-dimensional space, with gravity—this impossibly weak, little-understood yet massively influential force—the only one of the four fundamental forces capable of propagating across the dimensions. Over the course of the next decade, experimentation may provide real answers to these tantalizing and complex suppositions. For me, it has simply served to show how taboo notions—taboo science—can, in time, enter the mainstream of ideas.

As I sit here, picking over clippings related to these and other areas of research connected with this book, it has dawned on me only now that attitudes have changed in the relatively short space of time it has taken me to write it. Broadsheet newspapers from the New York Times to the Sunday Times and the Observer have all carried thought-provoking features over the past few years on zero-point energy, faster-than-light travel and other contentious areas of science. Suddenly, the idea of gravity having an antigravity component—this heresy that terrified the professional daylights out of me a decade ago—doesn't seem so strange after all.

On that note, I should add that this book is in not intended to be a catchall explanation for UFOs. While it may go some way toward explaining some of the thousands of sightings that have occurred since the Second World War—many of them documented in official files—the subject is too complex, too multifarious, in my opinion, to conform to a single explanation. Although the data that Boyd Bushman encouraged me to follow to glean the truth about antigravity is sufficient for me to reach some definitive conclusions on that subject, it is inconclusive, to my mind at least, on the question of UFOs. For the time being, it must remain a loose end.

Regarding the definitive fate of SS General Dr. Hans Kammler, there are rumors that he died in Virginia—some have it as Texas—but it amounts to insubstantial testimony and to date there is no hard evidence to say that he came to the States, let alone died there. The U.S. National Archives remain devoid of any meaningful files on him.

In April 2001, the CIA provided confirmation of just about everything Christopher Simpson wrote in Blowback when under Congressional directive it released 20 files on Nazi war criminals recruited by U.S. intelligence at the end of the Second World War. One of these was Emil Augsburg, an SS officer instrumental in drawing up the "Final Solution to the Jewish Question" at the Wannsee conference in 1941. Another was Gestapo captain Klaus Barbie, the infamous "Butcher of Lyons."

Yet to be confirmed at official levels, though likely to be just as true, is the even less salutary story of Gunter Reinemer, an SS lieutenant in charge of death squads at the Treblinka concentration camp. After the war, the CIA gave Reinemer a whole new identity—as a Jewish Holocaust survivor of all people—before dispatching him into East Germany as a spy. In 1988, a few days before he was found dead, Reinemer was unmasked by a German financial investigator named Dieter Matschke. "You have to ask yourself," Matschke was quoted in the London Times on December 15, 2000, "how many other Reinemers did America spirit to safety?"

If the U.S. recruitment program did this for Augsburg, Barbie and Reinemer, it would have bent over backward to accommodate Kammler, keeper of the Third Reich's most exotic military secrets.

Marckus did not place the article on my desk. I checked.

Since the publication of the U.K. edition of The Huntfor Zero Point, one other significant postscript to the story is worth mentioning—in time, the word "momentous" may even be appropriate. On March 26, 2002, a U.S. patent was granted for a device called the "Motionless Magnetic Generator," or MEG, that its supporters say will be the world's first commercially available free-energy home-generator. The MEG has been developed by a team of inventors led by long-time zero point energy pioneer and proponent Dr. Thomas E. Bearden, a retired U.S. Army lieutenant colonel and former nuclear engineer. The MEG is designed to provide an indefinite output of 2.5 kilowatts—enough to run a room or two in your house—by tapping into the infinite energy of the quantum sea. Link three or four MEGs together, proponents claim, and you get enough output to run an entire house. The event is significant, at least, because the U.S. Patent Office traditionally shuns so-called "free-energy" devices; de facto, it has accepted there must be something to this one. As I write this, scant weeks after the patent's acceptance, it remains to be seen whether claims for the MEG will indeed transcend into commercially available hardware. But maybe, just maybe—as I sit here recalling Hal Puthoff's exhortation—3.26.02 will be the date I put in my diary as the day the world changed—forever.

Bibliography

PRINCIPAL PUBLISHED SOURCES:

Books

Agoston, Tom. Blunder! How the U.S. Gave Away Nazi Supersecrets to Russia. New York: Dodd Mead, 1985.

Barrow, John D. Impossibility: The Limits ofScience and The Science of Limits. London: Vintage, 1999

Berlitz, Charles and Moore, William. The Philadelphia Experiment. London: Souvenir Press, 1979

Bower, Tom. The Paperclip Conspiracy. London: Michael Joseph, 1987

Coats, Callum. Living Energies. Bath, UK: Gateway Books, 1996

Darlington, David. The Dreamland Chronicles. London: Little Brown, 1997

Good, Timothy. Above Top Secret. London: Grafton Books, 1989

Greene, Brian. The Elegant Universe. London: Vintage, 1999

Harwood, William. B. Raise Heaven & Earth. The Story of Martin Marietta People & Their Pioneering Achievements. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1993

Henshall, Philip. The Nuclear Axis. Stroud, UK: Sulton, 2000

—. Vengeance. Hitler's Nuclear Weapons, Fact or Fiction. Stroud, UK: Alan Sutton Publishing, 1995

Hirschfeld, Wolfgang and Brooks, Geoffrey. Hirschfeld: The Secret Diary ofa U-Boat. London: Orion, 1997

Jane 's Fighting Aircraft of World War Two. London: Jane's Publishing Company, 1946-47

Jones, R.V. Most Secret War. London: Coronet, 1979

Lomas, Robert. The Man Who Invented the 20th Century—Nikola Tesla, Forgotten Genius of Electricity. London: Headline Book Publishing, 1999

Lucas, James. Last Days ofthe Reich. London: Grafton Books, 1987

Lusar, Rudolf. German Secret Weapons ofWorld War II. London: Neville Spearman Ltd., 1959

Manning, Jeane. The Coming Energy Revolution. New York: Avery Publishing Group, 1996

Masters, David. German Jet Genesis, London: Jane's Publishing Company, 1982

Miller, Jay. Lockheed's Skunk Works—The Official History. Leicester, UK: Midland Publishing, 1995

Overy, Richard. The Penguin Historical Atlas of the Third Reich. London: Penguin Group, 1996

Piszkiewicz, Dennis. The Nazi Rocketeers—Dreams ofSpace and Crimes of War. New York: Praeger Publishers, 1995

Pitt, Barrie (editor). The Military History of World War Two. Twickenham, UK: Temple Press, 1988

Rhodes, Richard. The Making ofthe Atomic Bomb. New York: Touchstone, 1988

Rich, Ben R. and Janos, Leo. Skunk Works. London: Little Brown, 1994

Simpson, Christopher. Blowback. New York: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1988

Speer Albert. Infiltration: How Heinrich Himmler Schemed to Build an S S Industrial Empire. New York: Macmillan Publishing Co., 1981

Speer Albert. Inside the Third Reich. London: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1970

Trevor-Roper, Hugh (editor). The Goebbels Diaries: The Last Days.

—. The Last Days of Hitler. 7th Edition. London: Macmillan, 1995

Vajda, Ferenc A. and Dancey, Peter. German A/C Industry & Production 1933-45. Shrewsbury, UK: Airlife Publishing, 1998

Valone, Thomas MA, PE, (editor). Electrogravitics Systems: Reports on a New Propulsion Methodology. Washington: 2nd Edition. Integrity Research Institute, 1995

Vesco, Renato. Intercept—But Don't Shoot. New York: Grove Press, 1971

Wiener, Tim. Blank Check. London: Warner Books, 1990

Witkowski, Igor. Supertajne Bronie Hitlera. Warsaw: WIS, 2000

Zuk, Bill. Canada's Flying Saucer Projects. The Story ofAvro Canada's Secret Projects. Boston Mills Press, 2001

Articles

"Black World Engineers, Scientists Encourage Using Highly Classified Technology for Civil Applications," William B. Scott, Aviation Week, 9/3/92

"Breaking the Law of Gravity," Charles Platt, Wired, 3/98

"Military Power," Bill Gunston OBE, FRAeS, Air International, 1/00

"Nordhausen," Karel Mevgry, After the Battle, No. 101

"Secret Advanced Vehicles Demonstrate Technologies for Military Use," William B. Scott, Aviation Week, 1/10/90

"Secrets by the Thousands," C. Lester Walker, Harper's Magazine, 10/46

"Taming Gravity," Jim Wilson, Popular Mechanics, 10/00

"The Universe's Unseen Dimensions," Nima Arkani, Savas Dimopoulos and Georgi Dvali, Scientific American, 8/00

"The U.S. Antigravity Squadron," Paul LaViolette, Ph.D., Electrogravitics Systems (Op Cit)

"Without Stress or Strain . . . or Weight," Intel, Interavia, 5/56

Reports

Electro aero dynamic s in Supersonic Flow, M.S. Cahn and G.M. Andrew, The Northrop Corporation, AIAA, 1/68

Electrogravitics Systems: An Examination of Electrostatic Motion, Dynamic Counterbary and Barycentric Control, Aviation Studies (International Limited) 1956

Project LUSTY, U.S. Air Force History Office 1945

Project Winterhaven, The Townsend Brown Foundation 1952

USAF Electric Propulsion Study, Dennis J. Cravens

USAF Report: 21st Century Propulsion Concepts, R.L. Talley, 5/91

Index

Page numbers ofillustrations appear in italics.

A-12 (Mach 3.2 A-12 Blackbird), 8, 18,14, 119,126, 144, 246, 248. See also SR-71 Blackbird
Abelman, Daniella "Dani," 7-9, 21, 85
"About Gravitation, Vortices and Waves in Rotating Media" (Hilgenberg), 194 Advanced Deep Space Transport (ADST), 108
AEG, 204
Aerospace industry, 224-28, 239-40, 247, 252,254
Agoston, Tom, 159, 160-69, 172, 176, 177, 180,181,183,199,203
Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI), 32
Air International ma.ga.zine, 125
Alexander, Col. John B., 262, 263, 266, 268
Alsos Mission, 178-79, 220-21
American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics (AIAA), 129-30, 134, 137,138
Anderson, Lindsay, 115-16
Antigravity, 14
  aerospace applications, 235-36 article, 1996,101-3, 702 articles on, 1950s, 1-4, 5-7, 12, 17-19, 208
  B-2 Stealth Bomber and, 91, 121-22, 123-26, 129-30,132-37
  "Bell, the," Germany, WWII, 182-84, 188, 191-201, 202, 228-29, 232, 234 black programs, 14, 16, 33, 79, 89, 90, 115
  economic effect of, 81, 144-45, 239, 251 experiments, 5, 7, 23, 24, 58, 83-84 five pathways to, 117, 121, 141 gravity shielding as, 103, 104, 107, 117, 121,228,231,234,275
  Hutchison Effect and, 265-67
  lévitation and, 10-11, 211, 213, 233, 236, 237
  Lockheed Martin and, 10-11
  NRL, 24
  Philadelphia Experiment, 24-27, 130, 137-38, 272
  Podkletnov discovery, 101-7, 113-14 propulsion system, 1-4, 44, 208-22, 222, 223
  Puthoffand,79,221
  Schauberger and, 208-22, 222, 223-27, 250-51
  Sheffield, England, talk by Podkletnov, 228,230-31,235-37 silence concerning research or pursuit of, 12
  U.S. shutting down of white programs, 223-27,251 weight reduction of object associated with, 102, 103,104,121-22,231, 235, 236,269
  See also Trimble, George S.
"Antigravity: The End of Aerodynamics?" (Young), 230
Area 51 (Groom Lake, NV), 116, 119, 128, 199
  A-12 test flight, 246 alien spacecraft stories and, 149 link with Edwards, 139-40 sightings of aircraft around, 148—49
  Tikaboo Valley and Extraterrestrial Highway, 149
Astra, 145, 150
Atomic Shield, 178
Augsburg, Emil, 277
Aurora, 14-15,16, 126,127, 144, 148, 246, 249
  link to Kingfish, 245^9 sighting, 1989 and 1990, Belgium, 16 sighting, 1992, North Sea, 15, 246
Austria
  Bad Ischl, Schauberger home, 204, 238
  Ebensee (Zement), underground Nazi complex, 181-82, 206
  Leonstein, 219, 220
  Russian army in, 219, 236-37
  Vienna, Schauberger's apartment, 236-37

  Vienna, secret Nazi research facility, 162
  Vienna, SS technical engineer school, 218,237
Aviation Studies (International), Ltd., 19
Aviation Week, 5, 123, 125-26, 134, 144, 248
Avro company, Canada, 226, 250
  Avrocar, 73-74, 76
  Project Silverbug/Y2 (U.S. Air Force flying saucer project), 73-77, 226, 250

B-2 Stealth Bomber, 119, 121, 122, 123-26, 128-29,132-37,142
B-24 Liberator bomber, 245
B-36, 245
B-58 (first supersonic bomber), 245
BAE Systems (formerly British Aerospace [BAe] Defence), 79, 82, 83-85, 230
Bahnson Company, 34
Bakersfield, CA, F-117A Stealth Fighter crash, ix-xi, 240^1, 244
  Voodoo fighter remains scattered at, 244
Barbie, Klaus, 277
Bearden, Thomas E., 277
Belgium, sightings of aircraft, 1989, 1990, 16
Bell, antigravity device (Die Glocke, code names Laternentrager and Chronos), Germany, WWII, 182-84, 188, 191-201,202 massacre of Nordhausen scientists and, 183-84, 187, 200-201, 233, 251 meaning of code names, 228
  as time machine, 229, 232
  zero-point energy field and, 232-33
Bell, Lawrence D., 3, 4, 7, 12, 20
Bell Aircraft, 3, 20, 35
Belluzzo, Giuseppe, 45, 54, 163
Berlitz, Charles, 25, 26, 137
Bernadotte, Count Folke, 165
Bertrandias, Maj. Gen. Victor E., 29-30, 32,33,123
Biefeld, Paul Alfred, 23
Black operations, 15, 96-97, 121, 250, 269
  A-12,144,150,248
  Air Force projects, 147-48
  antigravity development, 14, 16, 33, 89, 115,121
  Aurora, 126
  budget, 120, 126-27
  "deep black," 116,243,249
  disinformation and, 17, 26, 27, 76, 137, 138,139,149-50,227,272
  F-l 17A Fighter crash at Bakersfield and, x-xi, 240-41, 244
  German, 159, 160-69,177,178, 179-80, 187, 220
  Kingfish program, 245-49, 250
  Operation Paperclip becomes, 243
  origins, 251, 269
  Pentagon and, 146
  "quantum leap technologies" and, 116, 244
  remote viewing (RV), 78-79, 112-13, 238
  Shiva Star, 14, 15,96
  Skunk Works (and Plant 42), 8-9, 10, 115-16, 119, 127, 135, 136,139, 140, 142-45, 149, 239, 246, 247 stealth development, x-xi, 46, 115-22, 124, 240
  Timberwind or nuclear thermal rocket, 94
  See also Area 51
Blowback—The First Full Account of America 's Recruitment of Nazis, and Its Disastrous Effect on Our Domestic and Foreign Policy (Simpson), 242^43, 269, 277
Blunder! How the U.S. Gave Away Nazi Supersecrets to Russia (Agoston), 159, 160-69, 174, 176, 177
BMW (Bayerische Motorenwerke), Bramo, 51-52, 53
Boeing Corp., 20, 140, 265, 268
  Model 15A, 23
Boiling Air Force Base, Washington, D.C., 63,64
Bormann, Martin, 153, 180, 186, 187, 199
Bosch, 204
Bower, Tom, 60, 243
"Breakthrough As Scientists Beat Gravity" (Matthews & Sample), 101-3, 702
Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program (BPP), 99-100, 114, 229, 233, 258
Breslau, Germany (Wroclaw, Poland), 45, 163, 182-84, 185-90,217 subterranean facility, 52-53
Britain
  Bawdsey Manor, antenna masts, 87-88
  Nazi technology, Canadian testing of, 57, 61
  Nazi technology, obtaining, 59-62
  Sheffield talk by Podkletnov, 228, 230-31,235-37
  U.K. Public Records Office, 60
British Intelligence Objectives Subcommittee (BIOS), 57, 58-59
Brown, Thomas Townsend, 7, 20-30, 33-34, 35,44,46, 76,123,124,125,130,136, 137,141,142,144, 227, 258,272
  Gravitor, 23, 29

Brown, Thomas Townsend (cont'd)
  Philadelphia Experiment and, 24-27, 130,138,272
  Project Winterhaven, 30, 31-33, 123, 138,144
Brzezinski, Zbigniew, 116
Bushman, Boyd, 10-11, 240, 249, 252-56, 257,276 videotape from, 253

Cady, Willoughby M, 32-33
Campbell, Glenn, 139-40
Canada
  Nazi technology, testing of, 57, 61
  "Silverbug affair," 73-77
Carpenter, Joel, 46
Carroll, Maj. Gen. Joseph F., 32
Casimir, Hendrik, 109
Casimir Effect, 109
CIA (Central Intelligence Agency)
  Kingfish program and need for high-flying, super-fast spy plane, 245-49, 250
  Mach 3.2 A-12 Blackbird and, 246
  Nazis recruited by, 243, 251-52, 277
  strong-arm tactics by, Kingfish program, 248-49
  See also Aurora
Clarke, Arthur C., 276
Clarke Electronics, 20
Coanda effect, 221-22, 233
Coats, Callum, 221,224, 233
Combined Intelligence Objectives Subcommittee (CIOS), 57, 58-59, 60, 62, 177
Convair (formerly Consolidated Vultee Aircraft), 20, 35, 245
  B-24 Liberator bomber, 245
  B-36, 245
  B-58 (first supersonic bomber), 245
  black operations at, 247
  Widmer at, 245
Craig, Gen., 29-30, 32, 33, 123
Cross, Lawrence, 15-17, 21, 26, 47-48, 53, 57, 58, 63, 77, 204, 205, 206
Curtiss-Wright, 20
Czechoslovakia
  Brno (Bruenn), 160, 163
  Gablonz (Jablonec), 214
  Neudek (Nejdek) weapons factory, 216
  Pilsen, 160, 163, 172, 175, 178
  Prague, German WWII research, 45, 51, 52,76-77,163
  Skoda Works, 160, 169,174, 175-84, 195,202,252
  U.S. Third Army (Patton's troops) in, 173-74,175-76

Degaussing, 24, 26-27
Degenkolb, Gerhard, 163, 167, 168
Desert Rats, 139,147
Disinformation, 17, 26, 27, 76,137, 138, 139, 149-50, 227
  Philadelphia experiment as, 272
  UFOs as, 149-50, 227
Doenitz, Adm. Karl, 65
Donner, Robert, 224, 225
Dornberger, Walter, 165-66, 242, 243
Douglas Aircraft Company, 19
"Drag" or air resistance of aircraft, 129, 132-33,134-35

Edison, Thomas, 258-59
Edwards Air Force Base, 139
Einstein, Albert, 85, 98, 194, 254, 256
Electricity
  AC current, 258-59, 260
  gigawatt, 271
  Hutchinson and, 260-61
  measurement of, 271
  Tesla and, 258-60
  Van de Graaf generator, 265
Electric Propulsion Study (U.S. Air Force), 84, 88, 89
"Electroaerodynamics in Supersonic Flow" (Northrop), 134, 137, 138
Electrogravitics Systems—An Examination of Electrostatic Motion, Dynamic Counterbary and Barycentric Control, 17-20, 30
Electromagnetism, 100-101, 232, 234, 258, 261
Electrostatic fields, 129-30, 132-33, 141-42
Eradication (clean-up, red-lining) of information, 137, 138, 180
  Los Alamos report on Hutchison Effect, 268,271
Evans, Ron, 81-82, 83, 105, 230

F-16 fighter, 240, 245
F-22 fighter, 240
F-l 11 bomber, 15
F-117A Stealth Fighter, x-xi, 46, 116, 118, 119, 120, 125, 129, 136, 144, 145, 240
Faraday, Michael, 85
Fedden, Roy, 61, 62
Fegelein, Hermann, 167
Fifth dimension (hyperspace), 233-34
Fleming, Ian, 59
Flight International, 5

Flying saucer
  Brown's, 23, 24, 31-33, 34,43,124
  Canada efforts to create, 73-77, 226, 227
  German, 45-46, 47, 51-54, 58, 77, 163, 204-22, 222
  Schauberger and, 211, 272, 213-22, 222
  U.S. Air Force's, 226
  See also Foo-fighters
"Flying Top," 51, 52, 58, 213, 215
  Marienehe, Germany, 213, 215
Foo-fighters, 40-44, 54-57, 68-70, 72, 220
  Kugelblitz (Ball Lightning Fighter), 56
  Feuerball (Fireball), 55
Fort Worth, 244-45, 254
  Air Force Plant No. 4, 245
  Lockheed Martin Division at, 240, 241, 245
Frost, John, 73-77,226
Frost, Tony, 75-76

Galileo, 254
General Dynamics (GD Convair), 245, 247, 249,254 loss of Kingfish contract, 246
General Electric, 6, 20, 34, 124
"G-Engines Are Coming!, The" (Gladych), 1-4, 3, 6
Gerchsheimer, Karl, 224-25
  Sherman, TX, facility, 224-25
Gerlach, Walther, 183, 194
German Secret Weapons of World War II (Lusar), 44-46, 47, 214
Germany (Nazi Germany)
  A-4 rocket, 153-54, 155, 156, 165, 168
  A-9/A-10,167
  antigravity research, 182-84, 188, 191-201, 202, 234-35
  anti-Hitler elements, 155, 165 atomic bomb and nuclear development, 178-80, 182, 183, 202, 203, 220-21
  "Bell, the," 182-84, 188, 191-201, 202, 228-29 concentration camps, for labor pool for weapons projects, 154-57, 170, 171, 172, 188,204,217,218 evacuation of secret weapons, 187-90, 199, 202, 204
  Fleissiges Lieschen ("Busy Lizzie"), 45
  "Flying Top," 51, 52, 58, 213, 215
  foo-fighters, 40-44, 54-57, 68-70, 72, 220
  General Plan 1945, 186, 189
  Graf Zeppelin, 87-88
  guided weapons technology and Windhund, 69-70, 72
  Kammlerstab, 160-61,172,177, 180, 203, 252
  massacre of Nordhausen scientists, 183-84,187,200-201,233,251 Mittelwerk GmbH, 156, 165,170 naval advances, 61 remote interference with aircraft, 68, 70-71,203,220
  RLM (State Air Ministry), 51
  Skoda Works, Czechoslovakia, 160, 169, 174,175-84,195,202,252 surrender, 176, 219
  SS, 155, 172, 175, 200-201
  SS FEP (Forschungen, Entwicklungen und Patente), 194-95
  SS oversight of secret weapons research, 151-52, 153-59, 160-69, 178, 199-200, 202-3, 217, 238, 243
  SS "Special Evacuation Kommando" 183,186,187,189,190,195,198, 199 tech-plunder of, 59-63, 64-73, 71, 151, 162,172,178,195,206,250,251 underground facilities, 66, 67-68, 157, 181-82, 188, 193, 196-201 underground weapons factory, Nordhausen, 56, 156-57, 165-66, 167, 170-74, 183-84, 187, 200-201, 243
  V-l flying bomb, 44, 170
  V-2 ballistic missile, 44, 56, 151, 157, 168,170,171,251,269
  Vienna, SS technical engineer school, 218,237
  Vienna secret research facility, 162
  World War II secret weapons, 44-47, 51, 187,250,251,269
Gladych, Michael, 1, 3
Glenn Research Center, Lewis Field, Cleveland, 99-100, 258
Goebbelsjoseph, 158, 164
Goering, Hermann, 55, 157, 161, 167, 176
Gordon, Jack, 136, 142-45
"Gravitoelectric-electric coupling via superconductivity" (Torr & Li), 103 Gravity, 11, 13-14,79-80, 234 electromagnetism and, 100-101
  heat and, 85 reduction and distance, 106 shielding (antigravity), 103, 104, 107, 117,121, 228, 231,234, 235, 275-76 superconductivity and, 103, 106-7, 194, 231
  ZPEand, 113, 117, 121,231
Grawitz, Ernst, 193
Groom Lake, NV. See Area 51
Groves, Gen. Leslie, 147, 178

Gunston, Bill, 124-25
Gyroscopes, 82, 83, 104, 237

Habermohl, Klaus, 45, 52, 53, 54, 163
Hanke, Karl, 186, 187, 188
Hathaway, George, 257, 258, 260, 261, 262, 267, 268
Heinkel, Ernst, 50, 213, 215, 214, 215
Heinkel Aircraft Company, Marienehe, Germany, 50, 215
  He 111, 50
  He 162, 167
  He 178, 50
  He 280, 50,213,215
  HeS 3A turbojet, 51
Heisenberg, Werner, 178
Henshall, Philip, 199
Hermann Goering Works, Linz, 218—19
Heydrich, Reinhard, 156, 160, 186
Hilgenberg, O. C, 194
Hiller Company, 19-20
Himmler, Heinrich, 151, 153, 154, 155, 157, 160, 161, 163,164, 167, 168,177, 186,199,203,205
Hitler, Adolf, 153, 158, 159,161, 164, 175, 179,209
Holocaust, 200-201, 206, 222, 277
Houck, Jack, 267
Howe, C. D., 74
"How I Control Gravitation" (Brown), 23
Hughes Aircraft, 254
Hutchison, John, 256, 257-58, 260-67
  Intelligence and Security Command (INSCOM) visit to, 262-63, 264, 265-67,272 laboratory, last, 267 laboratory, Lynn Valley, 260 laboratory, North Vancouver, 262, 265-67 phenomena and, 272
  psychokinesis and, 261, 267, 268 videotape of experiments, 253
  ZPE and, 261
Hutchison Effect, 260, 261
  Boeing and McDonnell Douglas interest in, 265, 267, 268 description of various results, 264-67
  lévitation by, 253, 260, 261, 263, 267
  Los Alamos report on, 268, 271 molybdenum rod results, 262-63
  Pentagon funding, 261-62 time-dilation and, 267
  transmutation of metal and, 261, 267, 269-70, 271
Hyperspace, 233-34

I. G. Farbenindustrie, 62
IBM patent-server website, 237
Implosion energy generation, 57-58, 204, 205, 207-8, 210, 211, 223, 225, 251 bomb potential of, 271
Inertia, 100, 113, 117, 121, 233, 267
Inertial-thrust machine, 82-83
Infiltration (Speer), 203
Institute for Advanced Studies (IAS), Austin, TX, 78, 79, 108, 271
Integrity Research Institute, 17, 18, 21, 138
Intelligence and Security Command (INSCOM), 262-63, 264, 265-67, 271,272
InteraviaAerospaceReview, 5—7,32
Intercept—But Don't Shoot (Vesco), 48, 54-57,61,72,73,77

Jane, Fred T., 5
Jane's All the World's Aircraft, 5
Jane's Defence Weekly (JDW 2, 4-5, 15, 44, 84, 248
Jane's Fighting Ships, 5
Japan, antigravity research, 235, 236, 237
Johnson, Kelly, 143, 149, 239, 246
Joint STARS, 146
Junkers company, Dessau, 178

Kaltenbrunner, Ernst, 186-87
Kammler, Hans, 155-59, 160-69, 171, 172-73, 174, 177,180-81, 183, 189, 191,194-95,199,202,242-43 denies Himmler's request for a "heavy truck," 163, 168, 190, 198-99, 202 fate of, 252, 277
  Kammlerstab, 160-61, 172, 177, 180, 203, 252
  special projects, 159, 160-69, 172, 176, 178
Kepler, Johannes, 207
Kidd, Sandy, 82-83, 84, 105
Kingfish, 245-49, 250
  Mach 6.25 capability, 248
  ramjets and pyro-ceram, 248
Kirtland Air Force Base, NM, 14
Koller, Gen., 65
Krupp, Meppen, Germany, 61
Kummer, SS Major, 167

Laithwaite, Eric, 83
Las Vegas, NV, 131-32
LaViolette, Paul, 17-19, 30, 33, 34, 47,123, 129,138
Lazar, Robert, 149
Lear, William P., 3-4, 7, 12

Lear Inc., 3, 20
Legend, the, 47, 50-53, 54, 56, 57-58, 204, 208,213, 214, 219-20
Leet, Maj. William, 42
Leoning, Grover, 20
Lévitation, 10-11, 211, 213, 233, 236, 237, 260, 261, 263
Li, Ning, 103, 275
Light-speed barrier, 85, 96 faster-than-light travel, 101, 117, 121, 233, 276
Lindeke, Ron, 142-43
Lockheed Martin, 7, 20, 21, 85, 254 acquisition of General Dynamics, 245 anti-gravity and, 10-11, 240
  Astra, 145
  black programs, 118-19, 124, 144
  DarkStar, 145
  F-16 fighter, 240, 245
  F-22 fighter, 240
  F-l 17A Stealth Fighter, x-xi, 46, 116, 118,119,120,125, 129, 136,144,145, 240
  Fort Worth Division, 240, 241, 245
  Kingfish project, 246-49
  Mach 3.2 A-12 Blackbird (Oxcart program), 8, 18, 14, 119, 126, 144, 246, 248 radar test ranges, 140
  Skunk Works (and Plant 42), 8-9, 10, 115-16, 119, 127, 135, 136, 139, 140, 142-45, 149, 239, 246, 247
  SR-71 Blackbird, 145, 246
  U-2 spyplane, 36, 38, 56, 118-19, 145, 149,150, 245
  XP-80,143,145
  YF-22, 145
Longhurst, John, 19
Lopez, Amelia, ix-xi, 241
Los Alamos National Laboratory, 262
  "Big Bad Bob" scientist observing Hutchison Effect, 263, 266-67 report on Hutchison Effect, 268, 271
Luftwaffe
  air weapons, 66
  Ar 234, 52, 167
  He 162, 167
  Ju 290 and 390, 190, 198-99, 202
  Me 163, 52, 66
  Me 262, 52, 66, 143, 151, 163, 167
  surrender of, 65
Lusar, Maj. Rudolf, 44-46, 47, 214
Lusty (Luftwaffe Secret Technology), 48-49, 63,64-73,77, 152,162
Lyles, Garry, 92, 95-97, 207, 274
Macauley, John, 73
Magnetic fields separation, 194
Manhattan Project, 10, 20, 31, 38, 89-90, 120, 178, 250
Marckus, Dan, 81, 84, 85, 86-92, 97, 108-10,117,121,123,133-36, 142, 152, 153, 198, 202, 204, 205, 228-29, 230,231,232,233,234,237-39,242, 243,244,251,257,269-73
Marshall Space Flight Center, Huntsville, AL, 93-95, 98-99, 101, 103, 275
  DeltaG group, 103-4
Martin-Marietta (formerly Martin Company, Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Company), 2-3, 8, 10, 20, 35, 226
  Research Institute for Advanced Studies (RIAS), 9-10, 226-27, 239, 240
  See also Lockheed Martin
Matschke, Dieter, 277
Mauthausen concentration camp, Austria, 217,218,237
Maxwell Air Force Base, AL, 48-19, 63
Mazuw, Emil, 195
McDonald, Gen. George C, 66, 67, 68
McDonnell Douglas, 265, 267, 268
Meiers, Don, 40, 41,55, 56
Mengele, Josef, 193
Men-in-black, x, 17, 140-41
Messerschmitt works, Augsburg, Bavaria, 216
Miethe, Richard, 45, 52-54, 163
"Military Power" (Gunston), 125
Millis, Marc, 99-104, 257
Molybdenum, 262-63
Montgomery, Gen. Bernard, 60
Moore, William, 25, 26, 137
Motionless Magnetic Generator, 277
Muellner, George, 146-48

NASA (U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration), 85, 92
  AMMP (Advanced Manned Missions Program), 275
  antigravity research, 101, 103-7, 141-42, 227,239,240,275
  ASTP (Advanced Space Transportation Program), 85, 94-96
  black programs and, 97-98
  Breakthrough Propulsion Physics program (BPP), 99-100, 114, 229, 233, 258
  Gerchsheimer at, 224
  Glenn Research Center, Lewis Field, Cleveland, 99-100 interstellar travel and, 95-96

NASA (cont'd)
  Marshall Space Flight Center, 93-95, 98-99, 101,103
  Nazis recruited for, 243
  nuclear rocket development (NERVA and ROVER), 94
  Podkletnov's experiment and, 235
  "Project Greenglow," 85, 230
National Atomic Research Laboratories, Brookhaven, Long Island, NY, 225
National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena (NICAP), 34
NATO's Advisory Group for Aerospace Research and Development (AGARD), 83
Naval Research Laboratory (NRL), 24
Negative-energy density matter, 98
Nellis Air Force Range, 131
Neumann, Otto, 187
New York Herald Tribune, 275
New York Times, 211
Nondifferential linear equations, 11
North American Inc., 20
Northrop Grumman
  B-2 Stealth Bomber, 119, 121, 122, 123-26,128-29,132-37, 142
  electrostatic field research, 129-30, 135, 137
  P-61 Black Widow, 39
  RCS range at Tejon Ranch, 140
Nuclear Axis, The (Henshall), 199
Nuremberg war crimes trial, 180

O'Brien, Lt. Col., 65
Observer (London), 276
Odom, Charles, 42
Office of Naval Research (ONR), 32, 35, 262
Operation Paperclip, 60, 93, 151, 243
  as deep black program, 243
Oppenheimer, Robert, 10
"Overcast," 242
Overholser, Denys, 118
Oxcart, A-12 development program, 246, 248

P-61 Black Widow, 39
Pabst von Ohain, Hans-Joachim, 51
Paperclip Conspiracy, The (Bower), 60, 243
Parallel universes, 276
Pash, Boris T., 178-79, 183, 220
Patton, Gen. George, 173-74, 175-76
Peary, Robert, 259
Pentagon
  black operations and, 146
  Hutchison Effect and, 261-62
  Joint Intelligence Objectives Agency, 243
Pezarro, Alexis, 257-58, 260, 262, 268
Pharos Technologies, 260, 268
Phenomena, 272
Philadelphia Experiment, The (Berlitz & Moore), 24-27,130,137-38, 150, 272
Planck, Max, 209
Platt, Charles, 105-7, 235
Plenum, 234
Podkletnov, Evgeny, 101-7, 113-14, 121, 194, 204, 209, 228, 255,275
  Bell and, 194,231
  father's patent and, 237-38
  gravity-shielding and, 103, 104, 107, 117, 121,228,235
  Schauberger's papers and, 236-38
  Sheffield, England, talk, 228, 230-31, 235-37
Pohl, Oswald, 154
Poland
  Breslau (Wroclaw), 45, 52-53, 163, 182-84,185,188-90, 217
  Leubus (Lubiaz) secret facility, 188
  Opeln (Opole), Ju 290 and 390 base, 190, 198-99
  Waldenburg (Walbrzych), 193
  Wenceslas Mine, Riese underground complex, 188, 193, 196-201, 209, 232, 234-35
  See also Bell, antigravity device
Popular Mechanics, 21S
Possony, Stefan, 45, 46
Prawinjakub, 186,189-90
Project Greenglow, 85, 230
Project 1794, 74
Project Silverbug/Y2 (U.S. Air Force flying saucer project), 73-77, 226, 250
Project Winterhaven, 20, 30-33, 123, 138, 144
Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain, 112
Puthoff, Harold E. "Hal," 78-79, 92, 107, 108,110-14,142, 229, 231, 233, 238, 271,272

Quantum Theory, 231
Quantum vacuum (foam), 109, 110-11, 272

Radford, Adm. Arthur W., 29
Radial-flow-gas-turbine (RFGT), 52, 75, 76
Reagan, Ronald, 119, 120, 126, 262
Reinemer, Gunter, 277
Remote viewing (RV), 78-79, 111-12, 238

Research Institute for Advanced Studies (RIAS), 9-10, 226-27, 239, 240
Reynolds, Josh, 29
Rich, Ben, 115, 116, 117, 119, 144,239,249
  "virtual" warehouse of too-dangerous projects, 117, 249
Rickman, E. J. C., 83
Ringwald, Fred, 39-42, 56
Rolls Royce aero-engines, 230
Russia, 56
  advance into Nazi territory, 56, 157, 181, 188-89
  Cold War and, 115,242 intelligence agents search and destroy Schauberger's Vienna apartment, 236-37 remote viewing (RV), 78, 238
  SA-2 Guideline, 245
  Soviet secret intelligence service, 186 stealth and, 116-17
  torsion fields, 238

Sakharov, Andrei, 113
Schauberger, Joerg, 206, 207, 208, 209, 222
Schauberger, Viktor, 57-58, 204-22, 212, 222, 255
  American custody of, 206, 220, 223, 250
  bio-technology, 207
  centripetal force, 210, 215, 221 contacted by American and Canadian aircraft companies, 226 death of, 225 flying saucer (antigravity device), 211, 272, 213-22, 222, 233, 236
  Heinkeland,213,215,214,215
  implosion energy generation, 204, 205, 207-8,210,211,223,225,251
  Red Army search and destruction of Vienna apartment, 236-37
  Repulsine and Repulsator, 211, 272, 213, 216, 218, 219, 221, 222, 223, 232, 250-51
  Sherman, TX, work with Gerchsheimer, 224-25, 226
  SS associations, 205, 213, 214-15, 217 trout turbine, 206, 211, 226
  zero-point energy and, 221-22, 222, 233
Schauberger, Walter, 58, 204, 206, 214, 225,251
Schellenberg, Walther, 165
Schlueter, Lt. Ed, 39-42, 55, 56
Schmidt, George, 98-99
Schriever, Rudolf, 45, 50-52, 53, 57, 58, 163,213,215
Schroeder, Bill, 118
Schulgen, Gen. George, 35, 38, 44, 141, 150, 250
Schuster, Rudolf, 186, 189
Scientific American, 276
Scott, Bill, 123, 125, 127, 128, 129,143
Sequoia National Forest, ix-xi. See also Bakersfield, CA
Shiva Star, 14, 15,96
Siemens, 204
Sikorsky, 20
Simpson, Christopher, 242-43
Skunk Works (Rich), 115, 144
Sommerfeld, Arnold Johannes, 118
Source Index, 91
Space-time continuum, 98, 117, 121, 229
  Hutchison Effect and, 267
  torsion field and, 232, 234
  zero-point energy and, 232-33
"Special Projects Group," 9, 226 facilities, 8
  See also Lockheed Martin, Skunk Works
Speer, Albert, 153, 154, 155, 156, 161, 164-65,167,171,178,203,217
Sperry-Rand, 6, 20
Sporrenberg, Jakob, 186, 187-89, 191, 194
SR-71 Blackbird, 145, 246
  Mach 3.2 A-12 Blackbird, 8, 18, 14, 119, 126,144,246, 248
Stealth, 8,89, 115-22, 136
  B-2 Bomber, 91, 121-22, 123-26, 128-29,132-37,142
  as deep black program, 116, 136
  F-117A Fighter, x-xi, 46, 116, 118, 119, 120,125,129,136,144, 240
  Have Blue, 116, 117, 118, 127, 136
  RCS (radar cross section), 116 reactive skins, 148
  Skunk Works and, 8,115
Strategic Air Command (SAC), 245
Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI or Star Wars), 262
String theory, 276
Strong nuclear force, 234
Sullivan, Lt. Col. A. R., Jr., 68-69, 70, 72
Superluminal quantum tunneling, 101
Swann, Ingo, 112
Sylvester, Gen. George, 127
Szymanski, Wladyslaw, 186, 189-90

Tachyons, 112
Talley, Robert, 141
Tampere University of Technology, Finland, 102, 105

Tesla, Nikola, 258-60
  Tunguska and, 259-60
Tesla Coil, 259, 265
Texas Instruments, 254
T-Forces, 60-62
Theory of Relativity and General Relativity, 85,98,101,231,254
30 AU RN, 59-60
Timberwind or nuclear thermal rocket, 94
Time, 234
Time machine, 228-29
  torsion field and, 232, 234
  See also Bell, antigravity device; Zero-point energy
Time travel, 101
Times (London), 276, 277
Topology, 11
Torr, Douglas, 103
Torsion field, 228-29, 231, 232, 233, 234, 238,261
Toshiba, 235, 237
Townsend Brown Foundation, 29—30, 32, 33
Transmutation of metal, 261, 267, 269—70, 271
Trimble, George S., 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11-12, 17,21,31,33,38,46,47,76,77, 85, 97, 101, 226, 227, 239, 249-50, 275
Truman, Harry, 243
T. T. Brown Electrogravity Device, The: A Comprehensive Evaluation by the Office of Naval Research, 138
Tunguska, Siberia, 259-60
"Twenty-first Century Propulsion Concepts" (Talley), 141-42
Twining Lt. Gen. Nathan, 35-36, 37, 38, 44, 141, 150, 209, 223, 250

UCAVs (unmanned combat air vehicle technology), 246
Ueberreither, Siegfried, 181, 182
Ufimtsev, Pyotr, 89, 118
UFO
  antigravity aircraft as, 11, 34
  disinformation and, 149-50, 227
  explanation for, 276
  Northrop and, 140
  origins, 47
  photostat, Bushman's, 255
  Roswell crash and, 151
  sightings, 35, 43, 57, 75, 125-26, 128, 134,140, 148, 150, 151
  Twining memo, 35-36, 37, 38, 44, 47, 141,150-51,209,223-24,250
United States
  aerospace industry, 224-28, 239^0, 247, 252,254
  Alsos Mission, 178-79, 220-21
  antigravity technology, state of in, 269
  Kammler and, 165-69, 174
  Nazis recruited by, 93, 151, 242-43, 251-52,269,277 tech-plunder activities, Nazi Germany, 62-63, 64-73, 71, 151, 162,172, 178, 195,206,250,251
U.S. Air Force
  Air Material Command, 36
  anti-gravity and, 84, 88, 89, 141-42
  black programs, 97, 147-48
  crash recovery teams, 244
  F-22A Raptor, 144
  plasma-bullet, 14, 96
  Project Silverbug/Y2 (flying saucer development), 74-77, 226, 250
  "special studies group," 45
  SR-71, 144
  top-secret classification, 116
  Twining memo, 35—36, 37, 38, 44, 47, 141, 150-51,209,223-24, 250
  "vision," 11
"U.S. Antigravity Squadron, The" (LaViolette), 123-24
U.S. Army, Intelligence and Security Command (INSCOM), 262-63, 264, 265-67,271,272
U.S. Army Air Force (USAAF)
  9th, 415th Night Fighter Squadron, 39, 43
  15th, 42
  Convair and, 245
U.S. Counter-intelligence Force (CIC), 162,220-21,223,224
U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS)
  Operation Paperclip and, 251 recruitment of Nazis and, 242
U.S. Office of Technical Services, 63
U.S. Patent Office, 277
USS Andrew Furuseth, 27
USS Eldridge, 25-27,130,137-38, 139

Valone, Tom, 18, 19, 21, 30-31, 33, 34, 47, 138
Vancouver, Canada, 257, 260
Vesco, Renato, 48, 54-57, 61, 72, 73, 77
Von Below, Nikolaus, 167
Von Braun, Werner, 53, 56, 93, 95, 151, 166-68,242,269
Von Karman, Theodore, 66

Von Majewski, Georg, 176
Voodoo fighter, 244
Vortex compression, 194, 231
Voss, Wilhelm, 160-61, 162, 169, 173, 176-78,180,183, 203, 220

Walz, Capt. Carl, 139
Wardencliff, Long Island, NY, 259
Watson-Watt, Robert, 88
Weak nuclear force, 234
Weight reduction of object associated with antigravity, 102, 103, 104, 121-22, 231,235,236,269
Whiteman Air Force Base, 124
Whittle, Frank, 50
Widmer, Robert, 245-49, 251, 252
  Kingfish, 245-49
Winterhaven, 31-32. See also Project Winterhaven
Wired, 236
Witkowski, Igor, 182-84, 185-90, 193-94, 195-97,231,234,251
Worcester, Richard "Dicky," 19
World War II
  German surveillance of British coast, 87-88
  Operation Paperclip, 93, 151, 243
  Russian advance into Nazi territory, 56, 157,181,188-89, 236-37
  U.S. First Army, 165
  U.S. Third Army (Patton), 173-74, 175-76
  U.S. invasion after D-Day, 157
  U.S. pilots spotting foo-fighters, 39-43, 55,220
  See also Germany (Nazi Germany)
Wormholes, 98
Wright brothers, 19
Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, OH, 18, 30, 53-54, 63, 68, 127

Yeager, Chuck, 139
Young, Brian, 79-81
  "Antigravity: The End of Aerodynamics?" (lecture, 1991), 230, 231

Zeiss, 204
Zement, underground Nazi complex, 181-82,206
Zeppelin Werke, Schwarzwald, Germany, 56
Zero point, 100
Zero-point energy (ZPE), 100, 108, 109, 110-11,113-14,117,121,232,273, 276
  Bell, the, and, 232-33
  electromagnetism and, 232, 261
  gravity and, 113,117, 121,231
  Hutchinson and, 261
  hyperspace and, 234 potential of, pro and con, 273 reactor, 272
  Schauberger and, 221-22, 222, 233
  space-time and, 232-33

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Nick Cook is the Aviation Editor of Jane 's Defence Weekly, the world's leading military affairs journal, a position he has held for twelve years. He has also written for national U.K. newspapers, including the London Times, Sunday Times and Sunday Telegraph, and has had many of his stories syndicated worldwide.

https://svalispeaksagain.wordpress.com/2018/08/02/exposing-the-international-sex-trade/

Svali Speaks Again

Healing from ritual abuse and mind control

Mizpah: Svali Speaks Again
About Contact
Blog
Articles
Book Info

svalispeaksagain 3:19 pm on August 2, 2018

Tags: human trafficking, mind control (69), programming (60), SRA (45)

Exposing the International Sex Trade

Trigger warning: graphic description of the international child and infant sex trafficking market

These are recovered memories shared by inside parts, and while I believe them to be true and accurate, others may consider this account fictional. I will let readers decide.

All international occultic societies engage in pedophilia and human trafficking to some degree. In this post, I will expose one of the biggest money-makers for the order I was raised in: the infant and child sex trade.

The center of the "industry" as it is known to brokers (those who buy and sell infants, children and teens for various uses) is in south Amsterdam, known to those in the industry as "sin city". Sin city contains the brothels and sex houses known to the public, but it has a seamy understand that is less known: the trafficking in children and infants.

One of the families I was hosted with as a child was located in South Amsterdam for this very purpose. I was raised with my "Uncle Lou" and "Aunt Sally" there. They each had their idiosyncrasies: I remember that Aunt Sally constantly cleaned and scrubbed the house until it was spotlessly sterile, as if doing penance for her lifestyle. Uncle Lou, when angry with me, used to threaten to ship me to Eastern Russia, terrorizing me by telling me I would be raped to death, since I was a pretty child.

Uncle Lou was a broker in the sex industry, and as a child, he taught me everything about how it worked. I remember being taken in a truck to Eastern Europe (I was only 8 at the time), to "help" as the workers went to orphanages, and found infants and children deemed suitable. The workers dressed in nice Western suits, and let the orphanage directors know that the children would be placed in "loving families" in the West; they also gave a generous donation to the orphanage. I was cynically sure, even at that young age, that the directors of the orphanages suspected that these pretty children were not destined to be adopted out.

The infants were cared for in the truck by peasant women hired for this purpose, to give the infants bottles (with medication, to make them sleep more), to change them, and ensure that the cargo would make it to Amsterdam healthy. These women knew that they were to never talk about what they did, on threat of their entire families being killed. I helped give bottles to the babies, and held or comforted upset toddlers and children, as the truck was filled up during the long journey across Eastern Europe. Other times, the truck made the trip to China, or Russia, but the purpose was the same: to find as many beautiful children and infants as possible, to feed the appetites of the wealthy.

Once the truck was full, it would head back. The infants and children, by now drugged, slept quietly behind a special partition. The border guards were well paid to never inspect the cargo, and it made its way back to sin city. Once the truck came, it was unloaded; the children were given shots, vitamins and inspected carefully. This was when the sorting occurred.

Some children (infants) were destined to undergo specialized sexual training before being placed on auction (twins were especially valued for this purpose, and got a higher price on the black market). Others, a bit older, were placed on a special diet for strength and health, and were destined to go to the special sex parties that the wealthy in Europe enjoyed; or for use in infant porn. The youngest children were often sent directly to a proceurateur (individual whose job was to procure children and infants for the wealthy), who then prepared them with perfumes, oil baths, etc. prior to a sex party. These children were considered “expendable”, and were often killed by the teens or adults who went to the party, once they were sexually abused. At times, the multiple rapes themselves killed the child; other times, the adults killed the child as part of their sexual perversion (e.g. as part of a “snuff” sequence).

I remember the first sex party that I attended, at age 2. My twin sister and I wore diamond dog collars, and nothing else, and the individual who took us in to the party wore a tuxedo (this was the father we loved). We both had special temporary tattoos on our backs and neck that identified us as being private property, and not to be killed (but this did not cause our anxiety to go down, as we watched child after child snuffed that night). Fortunately, in the morning, we were both still alive; the partiers respected the special tattoos.

The purpose of being at the party? To observe the adults, and report any information possible on those who attended, to the Fathers who had sent us there for this purpose. Most adults in that time did not suspect that a young child could be used in this way, or knew that a two-year old can accurately report adult conversations and activities.

I had been to these parties for years, and knew the private practices of the Rothschilds, Battenbergs and others, which were quite perverse. I recalled at times fearing being suffocated due to an intoxicated adult passing out on top of me when I was very young; or fearing that the special temporary tattoos would accidentally get rubbed off during the night’s activities. At age 8, I felt sorry for the infants and young children that the procurateurs for these families and others grabbed, knowing all too well the fate that awaited them.

Once the shipment arrived, word went out, and the buyers for the larger private brothels would come. The Amsterdam child brokers have a list which is updated every month, with the current market price for infants, toddlers, children and preteens; these prices vary by race, training (e.g. whether the child can perform an unusual sexual feat, or has been specially “stretched” since birth to accommodate an adult penis, etc.), whether they are a twin, and other factors. The buyers and the brokers both know the going “list” price, which is set at the private coffeehouses where the brokers gather and discuss prices; I often served these brokers coffee and ran to get them cigars as a young child in my Dutch presentation. After a period of negotiation, the buyers for the brothels (some international) pay and take the children. Some shipments also contain children earmarked for various occultic groups, for use in rituals or other events.

Some children go to the auction houses. The largest is located on the outskirts of Paris, and is a popular destination for the wealthy. After an extravagant dinner served at 11 pm, at which the wealthy wear designer originals and deck themselves with jewels, there is a brief entertainment (such as an orchestra, or singing, etc.) At 1 am, the auction starts, with children exhibited and bid upon. This goes on hour after hour, as the wealthy bid on the children that will accompany them to the next “sex party”, or on ones to be given as “gifts” to return a favor. Some are taken home that night; one that sadly they will likely not live through.

The “industry” brings in billions of dollars a year. An infant in the late 1960’s would sell for thousands of dollars; a child, from 1000 to 10,000 (for an especially pretty child or one with special training); they would certainly sell for more now. One truckload of children back then would bring in hundreds of thousands of dollars. The brokers keep careful track of the money earned, and have specialized accountants for this purpose.

One of my main jobs in my early teens was to help keep the books for some of the larger brokers. I did this for a reason unknown to these individuals: to ensure that the brokers were being “honest” and not embezzling, since the profits from the industry went to the V. The V. had numerous agents around the city who were well aware of how much money was being earned through sales to procurateurs, private brothels, auction houses and others. A strict accounting was done, because to the V., it was ultimately all about money; the children were not valued at all, but simply seen as a money-making commodity.

The top brokers are well aware of the oversight over the trade of an individual from the V., to whom they must pay a “tithe” or “tax” as it is sarcastically referred to. This individual has a huge mansion with walled gardens, and often puts on fabulous sex parties for private guests.

The amount of human pain, misery and death that this industry creates is terrible. The children are not commodities, and the auction houses are centers of corruption, lust and greed.

Earlier in my healing journey, I fantasized about burning down the auction house in Paris (when the children were all gone). I hated it and all it represented. As a teen, I was forced to be a procurateur for a time for the head of the German Illuminati, due to my connections to the industry. I hated having to look for children to feed the appetites of these individuals, and today am ashamed of what I did.

To cope with the shame and guilt, in my Dutch presentation, I had several addictions (sexual ones). At the time, the feeling was “since I must be part of this all, I may as well join in.” It took time and significant inside work to undo the addictions, since at one time, I was the individual who oversaw the “industry” in Amsterdam in the mansion, hosting the parties. I helped to funnel the money from south Amsterdam to others. I am truly sorry for all that I did at this time in my life, and I pray that this terrible buying and selling of children will stop.

Share this:

Twitter Facebook

Loading...

Related

III. How are the Jesuits financed? August 30, 2021 In "mind control"	Mother Programming February 1, 2019 In "mind control"	Working with internal pantheons August 28, 2018 In "healing"

Minhar 11:18 pm on November 30, 2018

Svali I have read all your writings and really love your work. All of this is happening under our noses and we don't even know that which makes me quite sad. I'm a Muslim who lives in a Muslim country and here there's not much children selling or all that illuminati ritual stuff.It happens more in the west. It really scares me how much power these people have and it's looks almost impossible to defeat them. I pray everyday that one day all this would end.I really appreciate that you left the group and all the evil. I know God has for given you for all you did. I really like you and as you've left illuminati I want u to research about all religions and choose the best one. I want u to convert to Islam. We're not terrorists.The illuminati did 911 to create hatred between Muslims and other people.Before that we lived together peacefully. Islam is an upgraded version of Christianity and Judaism. If you converted to Christianity you can convert to Islam. Michael Jackson also converted to Islam but they killed him same with princess Diana. Everyone who wrote a book on 911 most were killed before it published. Please watch this YouTube channel dawahiseasy or dawah is easy. I swear that will help a lot trust me.Its just that i like you a lot and want you to go to heaven.Just research and it's your choice whether you wanna convert or not.Im not forcing.please reply cause I'll be waiting.Also i hope your living a happy life now after getting rid of that group 🙂 .....

★ Like

svalispeaksagain 11:02 pm on December 1, 2018

Dear Minhar,
Thank you for your kind wishes. I do hear that your faith is important to you, and I respect this. I personally have chosen my own faith because it has been a huge support in my own healing, and I am glad that yours helps you.

★ Liked by 1 person

Minhar 11:01 pm on December 8, 2018

I'm only 14 years old and your like my mother. I really like you after reading all your articles and I understand that you wanna stick with the religion you started with.The thing is that all religions are from God and you can use any religion to heal yourself. God sent us to this world to find the true religion and worship him. It's our job to find the true one. Some years ago I started to notice that I had some doubts about my religion. I thought more like an atheist. I was really worried that because of my doubts I would be sent to hell. So I researched and I have no more doubts left. Through this researching I also researched other religions and trust me that made my belief stronger in my own. I'm just telling you to research and convert only if you think you should. I respect your faith as well and understand it's not easy to convert. Just research and if you think your good with your own faith than keep up with it. I give you all my wishes for a happy and a long life as your probably in your 60's now (which probably makes you more like my grandma instead of my mother lol)

★ Like

Zach 9:20 pm on January 6, 2020

Where does Jefferey Epstein and his associates/customers, like Bill Clinton, Prince Andrew and other prominent people and celebrities come into play with the Illuminati sex slave trade? I'm thinking he was a broker, who also transported children and elites on his private jet to his private island estate for sex parties. I'm also thinking he's either not really dead or didn't kill himself, but was probably an expendable fall guy. How and why did he even get exposed? I'm hoping it's because God is at work exposing some of this and bringing some justice. I'd appreciate any further insight you can give. Blessings in Christ.

★ Like

Zachary 12:51 am on January 10, 2020

Where does Jeffrey Epstein factor into this? Do you believe he's a fall guy doing the bidding of people behind the scenes? Is he like a controlled demolition to put certain blackmailed elites on notice that they too could also be thrown under the bus if they don't follow orders? Or is God at work to expose some of this evil?

★ Like

svalispeaksagain 7:36 pm on January 21, 2020

Based on what I have read about Epstein, it appears that he is doing the bidding of others. Usually, in a situation like his, the individual has offended others, who as you noted, use him as an example. Otherwise, the media would not have covered all of this, it would have been kept quiet.

★ Liked by 2 people

Pingback: Exposing the International Sex Trade – The justice league/ fighting for justice

Pingback: Human Hunting | cathy fox blog on child abuse

Hadassah 5:22 am on April 12, 2022

Svali, we so appreciate all you're teaching us. I imagine it is hard to write as it is hard to read sometimes. It hurts the soul to know what Jesus' "little ones" are enduring, and it hurts to know what you've been through. We do grieve with you, Sister. But I read the hard stuff for the sake of the children, to educate myself so we will know how to be aware and fight this evil. I pray the Lord bless you and keep you safe. Much love to you.

★ Like

Leave a Reply

Enter your comment here...

← Growing Up International Part Three: Ages Three to Six

Interview with Jo Getzinger of CARE, INC. Part 1: For Those Helping Survivors →

Blog at WordPress.com.

FIONA BARNETT

EYES WIDE OPEN

2020
LOCKDOWN EDITION
INC. NEW CHAPTERS!

CIA Child Trafficking | MK-ULTRA in Aust
Ritual Abuse & Mind Control | Trauma-Based Force
Trauma-Focussed Integration

Fiona Barnett

Eyes Wide Open

CIA Child Trafficking | MK-ULTRA in Australia
Ritual Abuse & Mind Control | Trauma-Based Forced Dissociation
Trauma-Focussed Integration

Eyes Wide Open

Published online August 2019
Revised October 2019
Lockdown Edition June 2020
© 2020 by Fiona Barnett

Length 267,000 words on 569 pages

TOPICS: CIA coordinated global child trafficking operation; Project MK-ULTRA in Australia; Project MK-DELTA child soldier program; Occult ritual abuse & mind control; Trauma-based forced dissociation methods; Trauma-focussed integration treatment.

Cover: Self-portrait (1991) by author, pencil on paper.

2020 Lockdown Edition Foreword

It's a bit on the conspiracy side for my taste – but yeah, it's brilliant.
- BBC journalist re Eyes Wide Open

I often joke that my 'free bestseller' is flying off the eBook shelves. To date, Eyes Wide Open has been downloaded over 130,000 times from my blog sites alone. The total number of downloads is incalculable because I designed it so. I figured the CIA can't herd cats. My book is being separately hosted on numerous alternate sites, with one reporting statistics of up to 350 downloads per day. Further, many people worldwide have generously printed, bound, and distributed my book within their networks. Thus, Eyes Wide Open is achieving cult status, despite my sites being banned from mainstream social media sites. Keep sharing this book before the internet completely censors the truth.

I will never realise the full impact of Eyes Wide Open. Is it a coincidence that the 'False Memory Syndrome Foundation' quietly dissolved on 31 December 2019, just four months after this book uniquely and thoroughly exposed the FMSF as a CIA cut-out staffed by MK-ULTRA perpetrators? Or was that operation made redundant by this current global takeover? One alternative media personality recently described my book as the only thing that makes sense of the current climate. While writing Eyes Wide Open I felt pressured, like I was working to an invisible deadline. I now recognise that deadline to be Huxley's promised Final Revolution. I released and distributed my book just in time.

People often tell me that what I write sounds impossible and crazy, but then weeks, months, or years later, evidence emerges to prove me right. I laughed hard at a broken cop's post to my social media page: 'Let's be honest, a few years ago we all thought Fiona was fucking crazy. But now look at everything that has come to light since.' Jeffrey Epstein, Prince Andrew, Anthony Weiner, Pizzagate, Clinton Foundation, Podesta brothers, Paul Keating's daughter at Epstein's NY mansion with Prince Andrew, Bob Hawke's coverup of his daughter's rapes: these are just some scandals to have surfaced since I provided my testimony to the Child Abuse Royal Commission in 2013.

Eyes Wide Open warned of a shadow government staffed by the Luciferian elite and their coming Nazi-Communist takeover. And here we are, less than a year later, in unprecedented global lockdown, suffering birth pains that will certainly increase in frequency and intensity. This third, Lockdown Edition of my book sheds a little more light on how we got to where we are today, and where we are headed tomorrow. It consolidates the observations I have made after first publishing Eyes Wide Open, clarifies some abuse memories, and includes relevant blog posts, in one convenient location.

We live in strange, unprecedented times. I have heard multiple accounts of severe PTSD clients suddenly normalising during this 'pandemic.' Trauma victims seemingly feel validated by the external global chaos. The novel environmental conditions create a kind of equilibrium which neutralises the PTSD sufferer's internal state of chaos. Consequently, the world is no longer perceived as threatening, and chronic PTSD sufferers are unfazed by the threat of Covid19. I experienced the same phenomenon during 9-11. While watching the Twin Towers collapse, I nodded and muttered, 'Now the whole world knows how I feel inside.'

Meanwhile, psychologists are cracking. Therapists are simultaneously manifesting symptoms of extreme Future Shock in response to the tidal wave of change and uncertainty. Sadly, I've heard devastating reports of previously stable people contemplating and committing suicide due to the lockdown and restrictions. I hear of people giving up hope because they don't want to live in the emerging social structure in which people are subjected to the same torturous conditions I experienced as a child at the hands of military mind controllers: isolation, deprivation, confusing and contradicting instruction, loss of identity and culture, discrimination, shock and trauma, excessive scrutiny, humiliation, and reduced self-worth. To such fragile folk, I implore: Humanity has been promised that we will never be tested beyond what we can endure. What you experience now, I have endured my entire life. I say with confidence that even in these dark, unprecedented times there is indeed Hope.

We will never return to the life we knew. They will toy with us until we submit - or not. To illustrate, the Nazis did not simply kill everyone upon their arrival at the death camps, and not all were experimented on. Instead, the fascists dragged the internment experience out to where people either broke or persevered. This is because the Devil is doomed, his time is short, and all he can do is bitterly take as many to Hell with him as possible. To achieve this, he must pressure people into willingly giving up hope, giving up God, and relinquishing their right to eternal life. That is why the coming Mark of the Beast, which guarantees eternal damnation, will be a conscious choice.

We are at war. The current battle is for our minds and wills. Their weapon is psychology. Our defence is vigilance, adaptation, wisdom, patience and endurance. It is time for everyone to adapt to the new normal, just as we Military Mind Control victims learned to do as young children. It is time to redefine the meaning of life, the universe and everything, and to realise what truly matters.

The Book of Daniel (12:10) said of these 'end times':

Many shall be purified and made white, and tried;
but the wicked shall do wickedly:
and none of the wicked shall understand;
but the wise shall understand.

* * *

Contents

Introduction vi

I. The Luciferian Cover-up
1. Watergate was Pedogate 1
2. Royal Whitewash 41
3. Victorian Pedophile Network 82
4. NSW Pedophile Network 109
5. Bond University Pedophile Network 123
6. Satan’s Seat 141
7. Witches in the Workplace 152
8. Conspiracy Fact 154

II. The Luciferian Philosophy
9. Soviet-Fascist Agenda 166
10. Justice Denied 173
11. MK-ULTRA & the Occult 183
12. MK-ULTRA in Australia 210
12. MK-ULTRA in the Military 255
13. MK-ULTRA in Hillsong Church 280
14. Confessions of a Sydney Satanist 296
15. Addicted to the Occult 307

III. The Luciferian Application
16. An ‘Ejumacation’ 318
17. The Family 328
18. Ritual Abuse in Australia 340
19. Candy Girl Child Prostitute 362
20. The Relevance of Intelligence 373
21. Personality Assessment System 388
22. The Programming Matrix 399
23. MK-DELTA Child Soldier 430

IV. How to Heal
24. Wendy-Louise Walker 457
25. Psychology 101 484
26. Trauma-Focussed Integration 502
27. Dirty Doctors 531
28. A Life Sentence 541
29. Source of Hope Within 552
30. 2020: What the Future Holds 559

Introduction

The worst thing about being an inspiration is that you have to be perfect.
- Anne McDonald

Eyes Wide Open is not a biography as such, and descriptive dialogue is limited. Consider it more a reference book designed to meet three distinct aims:

1. Provide the relevant historical basis for understanding the existence and coverup of CIA child trafficking, ritual abuse, and mind control.
2. Document my personal experience of this abuse in Australia and the USA.
3. Offer information for combating the techniques which cults, the military and intelligence agencies use to artificially induce dissociation and achieve radical and strategic behaviour modification. I explain the nature of Trauma-Based Forced Dissociation including the victim selection process, why most therapy is ineffective, and why a Trauma-Focussed Integration approach is essential.

My testimony is scaffolded by the extraordinary research of Steve McMurray who assembled the jigsaw of faces, places, and relationships I recalled and relayed. Steve's work features mainly in the chapter, MK-ULTRA in Australia. This book would not exist, and my integration would not have been as thorough, without Steve's research efforts.
The following publications provide a preliminary understanding of ritual abuse and mind control, which my book builds upon:

- Secret Don't Tell: The Encyclopedia of Hypnotism (1998) by Carla Emery.
- How the Illuminati Create an Undetectable Total Mind Controlled Slave (2008) and Bloodlines of the Illuminati (1998) by Fritz Springmeier and his wife 'Cisco Wheeler.'
- A Nation Betrayed: Secret Cold War Experiments Performed on Our Children and Other Innocent People (2002) by Carol Rutz.
- The Greenbaum Speech (1992-3) conference presentation by Dr Corydon Hammond.

The Bible suggests we may know them by their fruits. That is, we recognise the wolves-in-sheepskins by the consequences of their words and behaviour. Be they arrogant academic or bottom-feeding troll, anyone who attempts to discredit the above writings is certainly an operative for the trafficking network. Similarly, whoever attacks my book has a vested interest in the lucrative international child trafficking operation coordinated by the CIA.

This electronic version of Eyes Wide Open is being distributed at no cost because the truth and healing ought to be free. Victims have paid enough. The public is welcome to download, distribute and host complete copies of this book version online for educational and therapeutic purposes. Flooding the internet with multiple book copies combats the increasing censorship and stops the child traffickers burying this information again.

Watergate was Pedogate

> The Watergate break-in was strictly based on one thing - the pedophile records that were being kept at the Democratic National Headquarters.
>
> - Detective James Rothstein (NYPD, Retired)

In October 2016, I presented at Colin Ross' Trauma & Dissociation conference in Seattle, USA. Following my talk, one attendee approached me in the hotel lobby where my fellow presenters sat at their merchandise stalls. 'All this!' she shouted while sweeping her arm across the sideshow alley of over-priced books, stickers, and fridge magnets, 'All this is shit! You have the real stuff! Where's your book?!' Tears welled in her eyes. 'Write a book! Please write a book!'

Yes, I have the real stuff. I am not some left-brain dominant academic pretending to understand what it is like to be a victim of the most heinous crimes. I lived it. I spent my developmental years trapped in a mind control labyrinth. I spent my adult years navigating an escape. I eventually achieved what few victims of the most extreme abuse do, integration. I may therefore declare with authority what does and does not work.

I prefer the term 'victim' to 'survivor' because the latter implies my ordeal is over. My ordeal will likely never end. As Dr Reina Michaelson warned, 'Fiona, I think this is a life sentence.' Indeed, I serve a life sentence for crimes committed against me, with the full knowledge and blessing of the Australian government. I am constantly harassed by police, paid agitators, agent academics and journalists, DID sleeper cells, perpetrator relatives, sold-out victims, fake advocates, professional social media trolls, police SOIs (special intelligence operatives), and retired intelligence community thugs hired to do the dirty work of VIPs who dare not overtly attack me for fear of attracting media attention to their part in the international child trafficking operation.

Recovery from extreme abuse begins with realising the true nature and extent of international child trafficking. In 2015, Newcastle Herald journalist Ian Kirkwood wrote favourable articles in the wake of my Sydney press conference.[1] I consequently passed to him a story regarding David Hogg, the Lifestyle Solutions founder who was later convicted of historical child sexual assault. Kirkwood worked with Joanne McCarthy whose media campaign, starring whistle-blower Peter Fox, helped spark Australia's Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse.

In 2012, Detective Chief Inspector Peter Fox exposed his colleagues' coverup of a massive pedophile network in the Newcastle Catholic diocese. The NSW police hierarchy consequently physically threatened Peter Fox and demanded his doctor allow police to attend his private therapy sessions. University of Sydney law graduate Margaret Cunneen chaired a Special Commission of Inquiry into child sex abuse in Newcastle which attacked and discredited Peter Fox and journalist Joanne McCarthy.

Cunneen had a history of supporting pedophiles. In 2009 she attended the book launch of organised crime boss Roger Rogerson and admitted she had 'known him since he was a detective.'[2] Detective Sergeant Roger Rogerson was dismissed from the NSW Police Force in 1986, meaning Cunneen associated with him during his underbelly heyday when he oversaw the trafficking of drugs and children in Sydney, and committed multiple murders to conceal his crimes. Then in 2002, Margaret Cunneen advised Queensland Police to drop their prosecution of pedophile swim coach Scott Volkers on the grounds: (a) one victim's sexual assault was too 'trivial' to prosecute; (b) 12-year-old female victims were unlikely to have developed breasts and thus allegations Volkers groped them would be difficult to substantiate; and (c) 12-year-old girls could not relax enough to experience orgasm while being abused.[3]

---

[1] Ian Kirkwood (2015). Franca Arena was Right on the Mark. Newcastle Herald. 30 October.

[2] Kate McClymont (2011). An unusual meeting of minds. The Sydney Morning Herald, 7 May.

Firstly, Cunneen's conclusions defy biology. Secondly, my sister-in-law was Scott Volker's assistant coach during the 1990s. Long before Volkers hit the news, I was told he assaulted his own niece whom he regularly drove to swimming practise, that his pedophilia was common knowledge to Queensland Swimming staff including Greg Lawler who caught Volkers showering naked with Olympian Samantha Riley, and that Swimming Australia was generally infested with pedophiles including National Coach Don Talbot (my first swim teacher) who was deported from Canada for impregnating a 14-year-old, prior to being appointed as Australia's head Olympic coach.

The federal Royal Commission into child abuse subsequently vindicated both Peter Fox plus the multiple victims of Scott Volkers who in 2018 was finally charged for the same crimes Margaret Cunneen dismissed. Cunneen was further discredited when Roger Rogerson was convicted of murder in 2014. Cunneen narrowly escaped investigation by the Independent Commission Against Corruption in 2015.

As Chair of the Special Commission of Inquiry, Margaret Cunneen banned Peter Fox from including crucial evidence thereby prejudicing his testimony. She subjected Fox to hours and days of aggressive interrogation, and facilitated his being slandered 'a liar,' 'the devil incarnate,' 'obsessed' with exposing pedophile priests, and involved in a 'conspiracy' with Newcastle Herald journalist Joanne McCarthy who was also interrogated under cross examination. Cunneen branded Fox an 'unreliable' witness who acted 'without integrity.' I enjoyed afternoon tea with Peter Fox and witnessed the toll this took on someone who victims consider a national hero. If only all NSW police were as obsessed with exposing pedophiles.

The NSW Police Force then targeted Deputy Police Commissioner Nick Kaldas for supporting Peter Fox. Kaldas was suddenly subjected to excessive scrutiny, investigation, public discrediting and career destruction. Margaret Cunneen's witch hunt occurred under the command of NSW Police Commissioner Andrew Scipione who publicly supported pedophile Frank Houston, the Hillsong founder who sex trafficked kids to Kings Cross brothels in association with fellow child rapist Roger Rogerson.

So, if the Newcastle Herald would not publish my story, I figured, no other newspaper would. I phoned Ian Kirkwood to request he investigate and publish my full story. If only one mainstream journalist published my testimony against Antony Kidman, I reasoned, it would blow the international child trafficking network wide open. During our call, Kirkwood relayed a conversation he once had with 'a couple of spooks' who told him that all senior politicians are pedophiles because that is how they are controlled. Kirkwood asked me if that was my story.

'That's exactly right! That's consistent with my experience.' I tried to contain my excitement. 'The mainstream media has long documented the CIA's involvement in drugs and weapons trafficking, right?'

---

[3] Paul Bibby (2014). Margaret Cunneen queried whether swimmer's breasts big enough to be groped. The Sydney Morning Herald, 8 July.

Kirkwood agreed, noting there had just been another story about that in the mainstream press.

'Well then, is it so hard to imagine they are also involved in trafficking children which is far more lucrative than guns and drugs? ASIO and the CIA work together to traffic children between Australia and America. They're the ones who trafficked me.'

The journalist promised to consider my request, bearing in mind he had a young family and publishing my story would surely place them at risk. But he never got back to me. A short time later, Ian Kirkwood developed a rare and aggressive form of cancer. I called him, expressed my condolences, and we chatted for a bit. At the end of our conversation, I mentioned I was considering writing a book. I asked him to clarify and elaborate on what he told me of his encounter with the 'spooks.'

'I never said that,' he bluntly asserted.

I sighed in resignation. There went my last chance at breaking into the mainstream media. There sunk years of building rapport and credibility with mainstream journalists. There went years of investigating other abuse cases and passing my findings on to television and newspapers. Years of driving journalists around the district to personally meet victims. Years of results in other cases.

My Gold Coast Hogtie Doctor story went international, with paediatrician Neville Davis being banned from practising medicine in Australia (although that doesn't stop him setting up shop in Thailand). My story on Gary Willis' 18-year child abuse spree ended with a life ban on his teaching for the NSW Education Department (although that didn't stop him working for the Queensland Education Department). My story on Daruk government boys home forced reluctant NSW police and 60 Minutes agent journalists to conduct a mop-up investigation. I broke the Daruk story on my blog and negotiated it into the mainstream news. Sensational headlines about a victim having his penis cut off went global. Police and the media charged multiple low-level perpetrators, and 60 Minutes falsely presented the story as 'exclusive.' Police and media conspired to bury the crux of the Daruk story, that it was a recruitment centre for (a) boy prostitutes used to service ASIO's human compromise operation, and (b) Project MK-ULTRA lab rats. Journalists may print all sorts of child abuse information, except that which exposes the global child trafficking operation.

I had come so close. My October 2015 press conference – delivered in response to Senator Bill Heffernan's announcement that a former prime minister was a pedophile - was statistically the most popular story on the Sydney Morning Herald website that day (although the news site's computer technicians prevented it from displaying as the most viewed article). Another of Prime Minister Bob Hawke's sex assault victims, the daughter of Hawke's architect Kevin Borland, agreed to address a follow-up press conference with me but pulled out last minute. The USA National Inquirer intended to run a front-page story about Antony Kidman being a pedophile, until they received a vicious legal threat from his daughter Nicole Kidman. A journalist and her photographer husband flew up from Sydney to interview me for a major Australian magazine, until Nicole Kidman took a 'Scientology approach to managing' me. And a UK journalist travelled around the country interviewing me and two other victims of Antony Kidman for the Daily Mail, until one of the victims (whose parents were friends with Kidman) was threatened and subsequently withdrew his permission last minute.

Nicole Kidman's PR team shut down my mainstream media exposure by drawing on her lucrative contracts with Australia's media outlets. So, I turned to the internet. Armed with a simple meme app and a right-brain talent for lyric writing, I launched my own social media campaign. I spent five years in front of the computer, communicating with hundreds of victims and supporters, many fake, many genuine. I hit the conspiracy theory jackpot when David Icke featured an enormous photograph of me and my story during his Australian speaking tour.

My tactics worked. Online articles about Nicole Kidman, where the public was free to leave negative comments, were followed by streams of intelligent attacks on her heavily orchestrated stardom. I realised my impact when Kidman's PR team paid the Daily Mail plus a morning television show to feature an article tellingly titled, 'Shame on you, Australia. Stop Hating on Nicole Kidman.'[4] People don't hate Nicole Kidman as an individual. They hate what the Harvey Weinstein scandal subsequently highlighted: that Hollywood rewards something other than an ability to sing, dance or act.

Despite everything the pedophile network threw at me, my story still got out there, such that if you Google Antony Kidman's name the words 'child abuse' soon follow. Yet no amount of alternative media success can match a complete break into mainstream news. So, I admitted defeat. I stopped posting and did not bother checking my blog sites.

PEDOGATE

Days before the 2016 US Presidential Election, I received a barrage of phone texts from old friends asking if I was okay. People started questioning my kids regarding our family's welfare. I had no idea what was happening. Then I checked my blog site. A spike of 100,000 views in one day stemmed from an article that activist group Anonymous published about my being trafficked to American VIPs as a kid. They used my story to expose Hillary Clinton's involvement in a child sex trafficking ring. The Clinton Foundation was a front for the trafficking of children including Haiti earthquake victims.

Bill and Hilary's trafficking network implicated campaign chairman John Podesta, billionaire Jeffrey Epstein, and 'Saint' Mother Teresa. In 1995, the Nobel Peace Prize recipient opened a Mother Teresa Home for Infant Children adoption centre in Washington DC with Hillary Clinton which quietly closed in 2002.[5] Mother Teresa's Roman Catholic order, Missionaries of Charity, came under Indian government investigation for child trafficking, with a nun arrested for selling babies.[6][7] Mother Teresa accepted donations from Haiti dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier.

Jeffrey Epstein sex trafficked minors to VIPs including Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz, Prince Andrew, Kevin Spacey, and Bill Clinton who flew aboard the Lolita Express to Epstein's 'Little St. James' pedophile island in the Caribbean. Epstein is among the many VIPs and government heads who knowingly donated money to the Clinton Foundation child trafficking operation. The Clinton Foundation received $88 million from Australian taxpayers between 2006 and 2014, peaking during Welsh-born Australian ALP Prime Minister Julia Gillard's term.[8]

Hilary Clinton's campaign chairman John Podesta and his brother Tony Podesta were staying in a Portuguese villa owned by UK politician Sir Clement Freud, in the same resort where British child Madeleine McCann was when she disappeared. Clement Freud was

---

[4] Angela Mollard (2017). Shame on you, Australia. Stop Hating on Nicole Kidman. Daily Mail, 22 Jan.

[5] Michael Warren (2016). Hillary 'Worked With' St. Teresa to Create a D.C. Adoption Center That Quickly Closed. Washington Examiner, 5 Sept.

[6] BBC News (2018). Mother Teresa India charity home 'sold babies.' 5 July.

[7] Michael Safi (2018). All Mother Teresa homes inspected amid baby-selling scandal. The Guardian, 17 July.

[8] Andrew Bolt (2016). Why have we donated to Clinton's Foundation? Herald Sun, 31 Oct.

Sigmund Freud's grandson. British media outed Clement Freud as a violent child rapist.[9] John and Tony Podesta perfectly matched the identikit images Scotland Yard released of Madeleine's abductors.

Pedogate, as the scandal became known, surfaced when Wikileaks released emails from John Podesta's account in October 2016. The emails notably outed Hillary Clinton as a self-confessed 'Molech' worshipper, and captured politicians ordering children for pedophile parties using alleged fast-food code words. The content of the Podesta emails is consistent with the following leak from a CIA cut-out company called STRATFOR:

> From: Fred Burton [mailto:burton@stratfor.com]
> Sent: Thursday, May 14, 2009 2:39 PM
> To: 'Don Kuykendall'
> Cc: 'Aaric Eisenstein'; 'Darryl O'Connor'; 'Copeland Susan'
> Subject: RE: Get ready for 'Chicago Hot Dog Friday'
>
> I think Obama spent about $65,000 of the tax-payers money flying in pizza/dogs from Chicago for a private party at the White House not long ago, assume we are using the same channels?

A related email from STRATFOR's president informed Aaric Eisenstein (of SVP Publishing): 'Aaric, you can participate as well!'

'If we get the same 'waitresses,' I'm all for it!!!' Aariac Eisenstein replied.

If STRATFOR staff were talking about a Whitehouse orgy, the word 'waitresses' was placed in inverted comas to indicate its alternative meaning. Waitressed would typically be prostitutes, most likely child prostitutes. According to this email (disseminated by Anonymous and Wikileaks), President Barrack Obama ordered $65,000 worth of fast food, an act which contravened Whitehouse policy dictating all food be prepared onsite using raw ingredients to counter the security risk posed by externally prepared foods. The leaked emails prompted Hilary Clinton to publicly declare Australian award-winning journalist and whistle-blower Julian Assange a 'dead man walking.'

Child prostitutes visiting the Whitehouse is old news. On 29 June 1989, the front page of the Washington Times read:

> HOMOSEXUAL PROSTITUTION INQUIRY ENSNARES VIPs WITH REAGAN, BUSH: 'CALL BOYS' TOOK MIDNIGHT TOUR OF WHITE HOUSE

The sensational headline concerned the Franklin Scandal in Omaha Nebraska that David Shurter was a victim of and witness to. Shurter is also a victim of my perpetrator Lt. Col. Michael Aquino who was implicated in Franklin plus the Presidio and McMartin preschool scandals in which children were sexually and ritually abused.

Pedogate whistle-blowers claimed, children trafficked to Washington DC were held in transit cellars within local businesses including a restaurant where an 'entertainer' was filmed boasting about raping and killing kids. Clean FBI and NYPD officers apparently made multiple attempts to charge Hillary Clinton and other VIP members of the trafficking ring, but their efforts were thwarted by those in the chain of command above them. One of the attempted charges related to a video of Hillary Clinton and her bisexual lover Huma Aberdeen (wife of pedophile Anthony Weiner) conducting a Luciferian ritual in which they skinned the face off a live young girl. The dissemination of this video was the said reason behind YouTube's global shutdown that occurred in late 2018 while I was online. Someone later posted forensic photos of the skinned victim on my Twitter feed which I automatically viewed.

---

[9] Martin Evans & Gordon Rayner (2016). Sir Clement Freud exposed as a pedophile as police urged to probe Madeleine McCann links. The Telegraph, 15 June.

Mainstream media giants launched a cover-up campaign against the leaked Podesta emails and related crimes, to muddy the waters and leave the general public confused about the truth. The likes of CNN (founded by my pedophile rapist Ted Turner) successfully drew the public's attention from what was contained in the emails, to who might have leaked them and spread 'fake news.' The pedophiles coined the term 'fake news' in reaction to the publication of Podesta's emails. Clinton herself never addressed or denied the email contents. The emails were said to have been leaked by US Intelligence community staff opposed to organised pedophilia. Mainstream journalists whose reports were consistent with this version of events were promptly fired. Further, over 100 Clinton staff and associates met untimely deaths, in quick succession, just like the many witnesses to JFK's assassination, and the victim of and witnesses to Kevin Spacey's sexual assaults. Pedogate was discredited as 'fake news' despite NBC's (11 June 2013) televised report regarding Hillary Clinton using her position as US Secretary of State to cease an investigation into child sex trafficking within the State Department.

Despite the mainstream media blackout, Pedogate reached the public via social media. YouTube featured interviews with credible witnesses who testified to the existence of an international child sex trafficking operation involving US politicians and the CIA. That was when I noticed retired NYPD Detective James Rothstein. Pedogate, he explained in interview, was the same VIP pedophile network he investigated for 35 years. The perpetrators were doing everything in their power to shut the Pedogate story down, Rothstein observed. He predicted the perpetrators would successfully bury it just like every other time their network was almost exposed, including the Franklin, Presidio, and McMartin scandals.

Rothstein explained that the NYPD was no ordinary state police force, but a leading investigative agency with national and international offices. Back in 1966, Rothstein became the first police detective assigned to investigate the prostitution industry. Almost immediately he discovered an underground sexual blackmail operation that compromised politicians with child prostitutes. 'Human Compromise' is what he labelled the honey-trap process. Rothstein and his colleagues found that approximately 70 percent of top US Government leaders were compromised in this way. Rothstein said, the CIA conducted the human compromise operation, while the FBI was tasked with covering up any leaks.

The CIA trafficked the kids, the FBI covered their tracks

A subsequent news article validated Rothstein's allegation against the FBI:

> Prince Andrew's role in Jeffrey Epstein paedo scandal is being covered up by the FBI, claims ex top cop who say he has hours of damning CCTV footage
> Jon Lockett, The Sun, 25 Sep 2019
>
> … John Mark Dougan - who fled to Moscow following a raid by the Feds on his home - also says he has hundreds of hours of footage from the billionaire paedo's Florida mansion…

2020 Update

Here are some facts that have subsequently emerged in the Jeffrey Epstein case, which support Rothstein's description of a global child trafficking operation used to compromise VIPs. This case notably features the role of female predators and 'baby breeders' in child trafficking operations – something I argued for years.

- Virginia Roberts testified that Ghislaine Maxwell was a lesbian pedophile who daily sexually assaulted underage girls and sex slaves.
- Ghislaine Maxwell teamed up with Epstein for threesomes with underaged sex trafficked girls.
- Ghislaine Maxwell recruited young girls from parks, into prostitution and sex slavery, under the guise of offering modelling careers.
- Ghislaine Maxwell and Jeffrey Epstein instructed Virginia Roberts to have a baby and sign the newborn over to her perpetrators.
- Prince Andrew participated in a sex orgy with multiple international underaged sex trafficked girls on Epstein Island.
- Epstein and Maxwell prostituted Virginia Roberts to multiple VIPs including British Royalty, billionaires, a Harvard law professor, and world leaders including 'a Prime Minister'.

The following news articles add spectacular evidence to Rothstein's claims:

Jeffrey Epstein book claims he and Ghislaine Maxwell were 'Mossad spies' who 'filmed US politicians and power players having sex with underage girls to blackmail them'

Jennifer Smith, Daily Mail, 6 December 2019

- Dylan Howard's book Epstein: Dead Men Tell No Tales proposes the theory that Ghislaine Maxwell and Jeffrey Epstein were Israeli spies
- It says Ghislaine's late father Robert introduced Jeffrey to Mossad handlers before he died in 1991
- Robert - who was also a Mossad spy, according to the book's sources - told them to 'accept' Jeffrey
- They believe he and Ghislaine then lured prominent politicians and celebrities into sleeping with underage girls they provided, filmed it and blackmailed them
- There is no proof that Epstein has tapes of anyone sleeping with underage girls
- However, several of his victims say his homes were wired with cameras and that he kept the footage in a safe
- Both the FBI and New York authorities which raided his home are refusing to confirm whether or not such tapes exist

'FBI is involved in Jeffrey Epstein cover-up'

Tom Parfitt, The Times, 25 September 2019

> A former US police officer who fled to Russia and claims to have hundreds of hours of video from Jeffrey Epstein's properties has said that the FBI may be helping to cover up Prince Andrew's alleged role in the sexual abuse scandal. MI6 sources fear that John Mark Dougan, a former US Marine and Florida deputy sheriff, may have passed compromising information about the prince to Russian authorities…

James Rothstein said he was alerted to an identical VIP pedophile ring operating in the UK when Scotland Yard consulted him regarding the Profumo Affair. UK agents visited Rothstein in New York to extract anything he knew about British politicians and other VIPs having sex with child prostitutes. Britain were in damage control, tying up loose ends, covering up the true pedophile nature of the Profumo Affair. Here is my email exchange with Rothstein concerning this incident:

From:	Fiona
Sent:	Sunday, July 29, 2018 6:24 PM
To:	Jim
Subject:	CIA Hollywood pedophiles being exposed

Incidentally, someone criticised my writing saying the Profumo Affair was 1963 and before your appointment, and so you are a disinfo agent. Obviously, I don't believe that - but can you tell me what to say in your defence regarding those dates?

Subject:	RE: CIA Hollywood pedophiles being exposed
From:	Jim
Date:	Monday, July 30, 2018 at 10:41 AM
To:	Fiona

That is correct. They did not do the follow up until a number of years later after the Profumo case broke. My source in the business knew the whole story. They were making sure that there was no other connection to the operation we had in New York.

Here is a copy of the actual report. The part they were looking for was from 1963.

In the late 60's, Rothstein is called to attend a meeting with a number of New York Police Department officials and two agents from Scotland Yard at a high-end restaurant on the Upper East Side. (They picked up the tab). Scotland Yard was following up on the Profumo Scandal in 1963. They were trying to find out if their national security had been compromised. Profumo had used the services of Christine Keeler and Mandy Rice Davies. The two girls had also been involved with a Russian, Yevgeny Ivanov. The connection in New York was that Keeler and Davies had been associated with a high-level prostitution ring operating out of an apartment on Fifty Sixth Street and Second Avenue. Rothstein calls on Peggy to determine who was operating the ring and what was going on at the prostitution operation on 56 St. and 2nd Ave. Rothstein conducted an in-depth investigation using Peggy's information and determined that the association between Keeler, Davies, and the Madam of the Prostitution House on 56 St. and 2 Ave. were in fact true. The information Rothstein gleaned from the investigation verified that the location was being used to set-up and compromise victims. Rothstein believes it is a sanctioned State of the Art, High-End human intelligence and human compromise operation.

The late 60's was 68-69. I became a cop in 1965 Feb. 15.

Rothstein and his law enforcement associates realised the international pedophile rings were all connected. He said the VIP members met at various world locations where each destination catered for a different type of degenerate sexual proclivity, including 'satanic-themed' abuse.

Rothstein said he and his colleagues encountered fierce resistance to the investigation and prosecution of members of the child trafficking operation. His journalist contacts at the New York Times and Washington Post could not get stories about the VIP ring printed. All police, FBI, customs and IRS officers who pursued the VIP pedophile network above street level had their careers subsequently destroyed. Rothstein's attempts to arrest key perpetrators were continually thwarted. For example, the time he served the head of the CIA's human compromise operation, Tippy Richardson. According to pedophile-turned-police-informant Ben Rose, in November 1971, Tippy Richardson, businessman Leonard Stewart (from OPEC, Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) and a surgeon named Dr Chesky, raped and murdered three boys aged 14 to 15 years in Ben Rose's apartment on East 64th Street in New York City. The New York State Select Committee on Crime subsequently served subpoenas on both Tippy Richardson and Leonard Stewart. When served, Tippy Richardson said that because he worked for the CIA the subpoena would be withdrawn under the National Security Act by the time Rothstein and his colleague returned to their offices. That is precisely what occurred.

In 1972, Rothstein arrested one of the five Watergate burglars, CIA operative Frank Sturgis. During a subsequent two-hour interrogation, Rothstein discovered the truth about Watergate (plus Sturgis' and the CIA's involvement in the Bay of Pigs incident, and the related assassination of JFK). Sturgis told Rothstein, the Watergate burglars sought something they nicknamed 'The Book' which listed the Democratic and Republican politicians who accessed child prostitutes, their sexual proclivities, the amounts they paid to rape kids, etc.

The official Watergate explanation is that the Liberals broke into Democratic National Committee Headquarters to obtain information about their election strategies. People who lived through Watergate typically comment with a frown, 'That never made sense.' Rothstein's experiences make better sense of why Nixon conspired to quash the Watergate investigation, why he suggested the investigation posed a threat to national security, why his personal secretary destroyed Oval Office tape recordings after they were subpoenaed, why chief CIA psychologist John W. Gittinger was called to testify at the congressional committee that investigated Watergate,[10][11] and why Nixon's own Vice President issued a pardon which protected Nixon from prosecution for any crimes he had 'committed or may have committed or taken part in' as President. If Nixon's crimes included pedophilia, that would make perfect sense.

I am confident President Richard Nixon and his good buddy 'the Reverend' Billy Graham were named in the Watergate pedophile records. I am confident of this because I was sex trafficked by CIA head psychologist John W. Gittinger to both men as a young child.

I spoke with James Rothstein on 13 April 2018, 9:48 am and asked him whether he knew, or had heard, that Nixon was a pedophile. 'No, I did not,' he quipped with surprise and interest. I next asked him whether he knew about Billy Graham being a pedophile. At this, Rothstein chortled and responded confidently, 'Oh, we heard lots about that!'

BILLY GRAHAM: CIA ASSETT

I published a draft of this Watergate was Pedogate chapter on my blog in 2018. It proved popular. 'Watergate was Pedogate is the best thing I ever read,' one reader commented. My article caused great controversy, particularly among Southern Baptist Billy Graham worshippers who told me I was the talk of many a Sunday table. Photographs published by Billy's son Franklin Graham on social media showing him proudly dining on what he described as 'killer doughnuts' at Voodoo Doughnuts in Portland added weight to my allegation, that Billy Graham was a multi-generational Luciferian pedophile. Many concluded that Franklin Graham posted his tweet as a cult threat against me, in direct response to my articles exposing his Freemason father. Conservative Christians found it inappropriate for an evangelical preacher to dine at an establishment that sold doughnuts decorated with encircled pentagrams and which featured Jesus Christ crucified on a penis and testicle shaped doughnut called 'Cock-N-Balls.' My articles caused one elderly Baptist to cut the Billy Graham Foundation from her will.

---

[10] Judith Well (1988). Life Quieter for Retired CIA Man, NewsOK, 26 October.

[11] Pat Lewis Copeland (1986), The CIA man, Tulsa Tribune, 12 February.

Franklin Graham
@Franklin_Graham

Take a look at these killer doughnuts!
#Portland

11:39 AM - 5 Aug 2018

TEAM AQUINO

The CIA intervened to protect their agent Billy Graham.[12] One of my key perpetrators, US Army Psychological Operations expert Lt. Col. Michael Aquino, weighed in on an orchestrated international effort to discredit me. Another perpetrator, Bond University lecturer Katarina Fritzon, responded to my allegations on official Bond University letterhead. The written responses of my two perpetrators mirrored each other in their accusation I was a crazy fantasist. Yet people typically ignore crazy fantasists. People respond to someone who is swaying public opinion and who threatens to expose their cult involvement. Only the most desperate and dumb perpetrators respond personally in writing. After this umpteenth attack on my credibility failed, the fool who published both responses subsequently begged social media sharers to delete Luciferian priest Michael Aquino's email to him, before he disappeared from the internet.

---

[12] New York Times (1967). Graham Denies Knowledge of CIA Funds for Trip, 26 Match.

Team Aquino's angle was to focus on whether Rothstein had personally investigated Billy Graham, and they staged a phone interview with the retired detective. I subsequently phoned Rothstein's home. His wife, who had warmly welcomed Aquino's lackey, was cold and short with me. I phoned Rothstein's mobile. 'How did you get this number?!' Rothstein asked defensively. It was the same number Aquino's lackey called him on.

'It's plastered all over the internet,' I responded. 'You were tricked. A recording of your conversation with Aquino's lackey is everywhere.'

'I thought what you're doing is admirable,' he lamented. 'Can't you just tell people an old man got it wrong?'

No, I could not.

To clarify, Rothstein never told me he personally worked on an investigation into Billy Graham. Rothstein spoke of Billy Graham in the context of having heard about the preacher's pedophile antics from somewhere within his network of associates whose job it was to investigate VIP pedophile rings. We never discussed the source of this information, or whether it came from his own NYPD organisation, or from external agencies like the FBI, or his journalist contacts. He simply immediately and emphatically asserted to me that he and his colleagues 'heard lots' about Billy Graham's pedophile involvement.

I am not the first to publicly accuse Billy Graham of being a CIA agent, Freemason, and rapist. MK-ULTRA victim Kathleen Sullivan, who wrote Unshackled: A Survivor's Story of Mind Control,[13] said he raped her. Former high-ranking Freemason James Shaw described how 33° Freemason Billy Graham was present at his own 33° initiation ritual.[14] Time magazine reported,[15] the CIA funded Billy Graham's 1967 Latin American crusade under a CIA cut-out, the US National Student Association, which also financed the National Council of Churches, Harvard Law School, and AFL-CIO affiliates.[16] The New York Times picked up the story.[17]

Here is correspondence I received from two more Billy Graham victims:

1. 'Fiona, I just came across an article you had written about Scalia and it also mentioned Billy Graham. I was born in 1956 in SC, to a 'church organist' who was in an SRA cult. I am 62 and was 55 before really detailed abuse memories became clear to me. I worked for a while with a Christian therapist who diagnosed me as having DID and being an SRA survivor. Sometimes I doubted my own memories, but he NEVER did, with one exception. He did not believe me when I told him of being taken to a Billy Graham crusade as a small child, perhaps age 6 or 7, and being made to give Graham oral sex. My parents sang in the choir at several of his crusades and his music director, Cliff Barrows... my parents knew them personally... Even after his death, he is one religious leader heavily protected by the media. Anyway, may God bless you for your courage. Please keep exposing evil people... I'm 99 percent sure my

---

[13] Kathleen Sullivan (2003). Unshackled: A Survivor's Story of Mind Control. Dandelion Books.

[14] James T. Shaw (1988). The Deadly Deception: Freemasonry Exposed by One of Its Top Leaders. Vital Issues.

[15] Time (1967). 'Pandora's Cashbox.' 3 March.

[16] Nancy Gibbs & Michael Duffy (2007). The Preacher and the Presidents: Billy Graham in the White House, Hachette, p150.

[17] The New York Times (1967). Graham Denies Knowledge of CIA Funds for Trip, 26 March.

abusers were Luciferians. Definitely involved some Freemasons one of whom was a Southern Baptist minister.'

2. 'I was put through a satanic ritual with Billy Graham when I was 7, hung upside down on a cross, with about ten children and a half circle of men in black robes. I think I called out for Jesus during part of it. He grabbed me by the shoulders and shook me for doing so, screaming at me something like that not even Jesus could help me. That's one ritual. Just one. Billy Graham must have had so many victims. The man is in hell where he belongs.'

* * *

The Rothstein incident is a fine example of the tactics employed by CIA-paid social media agents. They search hard for inconsistencies and try to discredit and dismiss my entire testimony based on one small detail. I spent five years on the internet disproving every accusation. Every time I successfully defended myself, the CIA-paid internet trolls ignored their defeat and moved directly onto their next attempt. That is a CIA tactic and the same thing a courtroom lawyer is trained to do. These CIA social media agents are trained in public persuasion tactics based on Social Psychology, Crowd Psychology, and Bystander Effects. The CIA know that most people do not bother researching facts for themselves; instead, they would come to me and demand an answer to every false accusation, no matter how absurd. The CIA-paid social media trolls will do the same with this book - focus on discrediting my entire 250,000+ words with one stupid point that I do not sufficiently clarify.

2020 Update

On 25 October 2019, the FBI released documents relating to the 'Finders-Keepers' case and published a link to these on Twitter. This official FBI release included documents acknowledging the existence of the McMartin preschool tunnels, Satanic Ritual Abuse, the microchipping of child trafficking victims, plus the CIA's involvement in child sex trafficking.

AUSSIE PEDO PMs

James Rothstein told me that during his investigations he became aware of an identical child sex trafficking ring in Australia which involved our Prime Ministers. Regarding this matter, Rothstein did clarify that he had not directly investigated the Australian pedophiles himself, but that an Australian intelligence officer named Peter Osborne knew the details. Rothstein confirmed that Australian politicians and other VIPs attended international child brothels.

In 2015, I reported three former Australian Prime Ministers to the NSW state and Australian Federal Police for their participation in the international pedophile network Rothstein described. In 2019, the daughter of one pedophile PM, Paul Keating, was outed for her intimate connection to Jeffrey Epstein's child trafficking operation:

> When privilege becomes a curse: How Katherine Keating used her status as PM's daughter to befriend royals and infiltrate New York's high society – and why she has gone into hiding since being linked to Jeffrey Epstein
> Josh Hanrahan, Daily Mail, 24 Aug 2019

> … Ms Keating's involvement with Epstein came courtesy of the connections she has cultivated through her family name. In 2002, at just 20 and while studying arts at the University of New South Wales, she became a member of then NSW Premier Bob Carr's personal staff. She left that role in mid-2003, but remained an advisor to the NSW Labor government until 2005…

Bob Carr and the Australian Labor Party are heavily implicated in the global child trafficking network. In 2010, Katherine Keating was filmed waving at accused pedophile Prince Andrew while leaving Jeffrey Epstein's New York mansion. This occurred after Epstein's 2008 sex offender conviction. The 2010 video footage shows a young girl leaving the house with Jeffery Epstein, followed by Katherine Keating waving at Prince Andrew who stands behind Epstein's front door. In 2014, Katherine Keating interviewed Epstein's child trafficking partner Ghislaine Maxwell for the Huffington Post. Maxwell is the daughter of a corrupt British politician and media proprietor.

NICOLE KIDMAN – PRINCE ANDREW CONNECTION

Katherine Keating is not the only daughter of an Australian VIP pedophile linked to the CIA child sex trafficking network. In 1999, Prince Andrew and Nicole Kidman collaborated to campaign against child abuse in the UK. Here is an article documenting this:

HELLO!
THE DUKE OF YORK AND NICOLE KIDMAN
SUPPORT OUR £1 MILLION PLEDGE TO THE NSPCC
EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW WITH THE PRINCE AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE
THE 10p INCREASE ON THIS ISSUE GOES TO THE NSPCC. HELLO! WILL ALSO BE DONATING AN ADDITIONAL 10p FOR EACH COPY SOLD
THE WEDDING OF KIRSTY YOUNG AND NICK JONES

Kidman Joins Princely Effort

> LONDON (CNN) — Britain's Prince Andrew and Australian actress Nicole Kidman teamed up Wednesday in a campaign to end child abuse in Great Britain. They were pictured on the cover of celebrity magazine HELLO! to publicize the cause.
>
> Inside, Andrew — the chairman of a campaign launched by the British National Society for The Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) - is quoted as saying, "I was staggered to learn that between one and two children die as a result of abuse in Britain every week — and most during their first year of life." He has been recruiting celebrities like Kidman to help bring attention to the issue.

> Kidman, who co-stars in the late Stanley Kubrick's "Eyes Wide Shut" with her husband Tom Cruise, told the magazine, "Children should be allowed to grow up without fear of cruelty."

THE BLACK NETWORK

Dutch banker Ronald Bernard also surfaced in the wake of the Pedogate scandal to shed further light on the people and system behind the international child trafficking network. During a series of interviews with one Irma Schiffers, Bernard explained how he worked in international finance and high-end money laundering for 12 years. In that role, he discovered that political power does not reside with publicly elected representatives, but with the world's 8,000 to 8,500 wealthiest individuals who exercise power behind the scenes and who routinely manipulate the media. These elites, Bernard said, sit at the top of a power structure that resembles a pyramid:

World Banking Power Structure

8,000 - 8,500 wealthiest individuals
Bank for International Settlements (BIS)
IMF (International Monetary Fund) + World Bank
Central Banks
Multinational companies
Countries' governments

Ronald Bernard described the Central Banks as 'illegally created private banks' which oversee the commercial banking system of their respective countries. He said the wealthiest 8,000 to 8,500 people created the BIS in 1930. Since the world's richest individuals are too young to have helped establish the BIS 88 years ago, he must mean banking dynasties like the Rothschilds.

DOPE INC. (1978)

In a chapter called Banking and the World's Biggest Business, the book Dope Inc. (1978) lists nine family dynasties responsible for the modern drug industry which '…is run as a single integrated world operation, from the opium poppy to the nickel bag of heroin sold on an inner-city corner.' [18]

> The names of the families and institutions are known to the history student: Matheson, Keswick, Swire, Dent, Baring, and Rothschild; Jardine Matheson, the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, the Chartered Bank, the Peninsular and Orient Steam Navigation Company [P&O]. Britain's array of intelligence fronts ran a worldwide assassination bureau, operating through occult secret societies: The Order of Zion, Mazzini's Mafia, the 'Triads' or Societies of Heaven in China.[19]
>
> …
>
> We will then take a grand tour through the Anglo-Dutch offshore banking centres, watching money being laundered through Basel, Liechtenstein, Tel Aviv, and the

---

[18] K. Kalimtgis, D. Goldman & J. Stienberg (1978). Dope, Inc: Britain's Opium War Against the US, 63. Executive Intelligence Review.

[19] Ibid 10.

Bahamas; tracing it carefully as it changes ownership from the mob, to the Bronfmans, to British banks, to the Israeli Mossad — finally ending up in dummy corporations to finance international terrorism and a privately owned worldwide assassination bureau.[20]

The drug industry is run as a single, integrated global operation

DOPE, INC.
Britain's Opium War against the U.S.
by a U.S. Labor Party Investigating Team

DUTCH ORIGINS

Ronald Bernard said the financial hierarchy he worked for originated in Holland. The Dope Inc. (1978) authors agree. The British Crown employed the Hofjuden ('Court Jews') to financially manage their drug operation. These Royal bankers migrated from Amsterdam to Britain after the 1688 Revolution during which Holland's leader conquered England and was crowned King William III. Previously, the bankers participated in the Dutch East India Company's first opium trade expeditions, collaborated for centuries with the British Jesuits, and participated in the Jesuit Inquisition. The Royal bankers were rewarded with Royal bloodline wives. These bankers, including the Rothschilds, Warburgs, Oppenheimers and Schroeders became Hitler's main financial backers. The British Royal family are of German descent and changed their family name from the German-sounding House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha to English-sounding House of Windsor in 1917. Their Nazi sympathies were demonstrated in the 1933 film footage of future King Edward VIII teaching the 'heil Hitler' arm salute to young Queen Elizabeth, Princess Margaret, and their mother. In October 1937, abdicated Edward visited Nazi Germany where he met Hitler, dined with Hitler's deputy, Rudolf Hess, and toured a concentration camp.

---

[20] Ibid 264.

The Royal bankers coordinated the laundering of drug money via offshore unregulated banks including Britain's island colonies. Hong Kong was established as the centre of the global drug trade. The British Crown created the P&O shipping line specifically to transport the drugs, plus the HSBC bank to launder the opium proceeds. A portion of the drug money was laundered via 'legitimate' cash businesses like hotels, restaurants, gambling establishments, while some was channelled into blood diamonds, gold and art.

The Royal Family created P&O to traffic drugs, HSBC to launder drug money

The Hofjuden sponsored select families to run the criminal underworld and its front organizations. These families committed crimes of trafficking, extortion and murder. The Bronfman Rothschild finance company is a prime example of this arrangement. The Canadian heirs to the Seagram liquor company were originally known as the 'Bronfman Gang.' They made their initial fortune boot-legging alcohol and operating prostitution brothels during prohibition, followed by trafficking cocaine and heroin.

Nothing has Changed

Dope Inc. (1978) named prominent families involved in the drug trade, including the Astor, Bundy, DuPont, Freeman, Kennedy, Li, Rockefeller, Rothschild, and Russell dynasties. Fritz Springmeier added Bronfman, Cabot, Shaw, Bacon, Perkins, and Morgan to the list. He said all of these were Luciferian bloodlines. The same families are still trafficking drugs and children, as recent events indicate:

- In April 2019, Seagram heiress Clare Bronfman pleaded guilty to her role in a sex trafficking operation called NXVIM. Her sister and co-financer Sara Bronfman was implicated but avoided charges.
- In June 2019, US officials seized a cargo ship owned by J.P. Morgan Chase which was trafficking 20 tons of cocaine worth $1.3 billion.

NXIVM = MK-ULTRA

In the late 1990s, Amway salesman Keith Raniere and Nancy Salzman founded NXIVM. Raniere, who attended a Luciferian Rudolph Steiner school, modelled NXIVM on Scientology. Salzman was trained in NLP (neurolinguistic programming) by Richard Bandler (MK-ULTRA perpetrator), and in hypnosis by Herbert Spiegel (US Army hypnotist, and MK-ULTRA researcher at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, who wrote the foreword to the MK-ULTRA classic, The Control of Candy Jones).

The Bronfman sisters financed NXIVM and its subsidiaries including the non-profit Ethical Science Foundation which came under state Attorney General investigation in 2017 for performing brain-activity and other human behavioural studies. Medical doctor Brandon B. Porter conducted MK-ULTRA style 'Human Fright Experiments' in which he hooked over 100 victims to an EEG and recorded their reaction to surprise screenings of snuff films:

> …an actual video of the horrific and brutal murders and dismemberment of four women by machetes; and violent film clips, including a male African American being > viciously stomped by a Nazi; a conscious male being forced to eat a portion of his own brain matter; and a graphic gang rape.[21]

The New York State Office of Professional Medical Conduct initially determined Dr Porter's behaviour did not constitute medical misconduct. They caved to pressure following the high profile NXIVM case.

Back in 2013, Keith Raniere patented a device designed to measure victims' sensory responses to watching snuff films. He labelled this, 'Determination of whether a Luciferian can be rehabilitated.' Women who were not overtly traumatised by the images were considered suitable recruits and physically branded like cattle. Their numbness at watching snuff films indicated their passivity to, and suitability for, sex trafficking.

The mainstream media ignored the crux of the story, that NXVIM was a front for CIA child sex trafficking. NXVIM leader Raniere and his sidekick Allison Mack were originally charged with child sex trafficking. In 2019 the couple were additionally charged with child pornography. The pending counts filed on 19 April 2018 and published on the internet read:

1. Sex trafficking of children by force, fraud, or coercion.
2. Conspiracy to commit sex trafficking of children by force, fraud, or coercion.
3. Attempt to establish peonage, slavery, involuntary servitude, human trafficking.

Adding weight to NXVIM posing as a 'legitimate' front organisation for child trafficking, Clare Bronfman sponsored a NXVIM subsidiary called Rainbow Cultural Garden which operated numerous international childcare centres located in the USA, UK, Ireland, Guatemala, Spain and Mexico. Bronfman also purchased an island in Fiji, a notorious child trafficking hub. The NXVIM court case revealed the Mexican government, including their President, were involved in the operation, vindicating my five-month 2018 online campaign to expose the Arizona/Mexican border as the main human trafficking land route involving Tucson Mayor Jonathan Rothschild, his senior police staff who were previously implicated in child trafficking in California, and a minion of NSA / FBI informants with Luciferian cult connections. Isaac Kappy who helped me expose this operation subsequently died under suspicious circumstances in Arizona near an NSA base immediately after he reached out for help to the Clinton/DynCorp/CIA-linked SEAL Team 6 assassin who hid the discovery of child trafficking camps in the Tucson desert.

NXIVM bore the hallmarks of a CIA human trafficking and compromise operation. The cult sex trafficked children and adults, targeted influential people including entertainers, and owned over 60 related companies including a video department called Moving Pixels. Connections were detected between NXIVM and human trafficking mob bosses Bill and Hillary Clinton:

- Texts exist between Keith Raniere and Hillary Clinton.
- In the 1990s, Bill Clinton asked Keith Raniere for money because he was doing business in Arkansas. When Raniere refused, the state Attorney General targeted his operation for closure. Consequently, Raniere's new NXIVM operation made illegal campaign contributions to the Clintons. This information was revealed during Mark Vincente's testimony during the NXVIM trial (12 May 2019).

---

[21] Melissa Klein & Isabel Vincent (2018). Albany doctor allegedly ran sick human experiments for NXIVM, New York Post (online), 5 May.

THE OCTOPUS

Dope Inc. described the same criminal system as Ronald Bernard who said his own laundering operation dealt with governments, multinationals, terrorist organisations, and secret service agencies. Intelligence agencies like the CIA, MI6 and Mossad do not serve and protect a people or country as the public expect, he explained, but are all criminal organizations that trade in drugs, weapons, and children. The CIA functions as a private police force for the elite. According to Bernard, the wealthy elite control their employees through compromise and blackmail – just as James Rothstein described.

Ronald Bernard described how he and the other bankers employed by the wealthy elite were expected to participate in heinous sexual and murderous acts including the ritual sacrifice of children. This sounds far-fetched - until you read news articles like this:

Portfolio Manager Accused of Raping, Beating Women in Penthouse Dungeon
Rebecca Rosenberg, New York Post, 3 Nov 2017.

A former portfolio manager for an investment fund founded by financier George Soros sexually abused women at a Manhattan penthouse dungeon, according to a $27 million Brooklyn federal suit. Howie Rubin, 62, whose high-stakes dealing was featured in the best-selling books 'Liar's Poker' and 'The Big Short,' rented the lavish Metropolitan Tower pad in Midtown to indulge in brutal sex with women whom he paid between $2,000 and $5,000 per session, according to the suit filed Thursday.

The three unidentified plaintiffs in the case — including two Playboy Playmates — claim the married father raped and beat them to the point that they needed extensive medical attention, court papers say. At the $8 million penthouse, they were shown to a side room featuring ropes, chains and sex toys along with other BDSM equipment. Rubin gagged, tied up and viciously abused the women — even punching one in the head, the suit filed by civil lawyer John Balestriere said.

'I'm going to rape you like I rape my daughter,' Rubin barked during one of the alleged assaults.

In one session, he beat one of the women's 'breasts so badly that her right implant flipped,' the papers state. The former Bear Stearns trader paid her $20,000 to repair the damage. One plaintiff was tied up, gagged and shocked with a cattle prod in her groin before Rubin allegedly raped her, according to the filing.

Rubin — who collaborated with two female fixers and a lawyer — had the women sign non-disclosure agreements, the papers state. The trio sought to 'cover up Rubin's sexual misconduct and criminal abuse of women and to serve as a cover for his wide-ranging human trafficking scheme,' wrote Balestriere …

* * *

There must have been some truth to the 1978 content of Dope Inc. because after its publication the HSBC lost its licence to operate in the USA. Further, the 1978 book inspired law enforcement officials to swap their assumption that drug trafficking consisted of pockets of independent criminal activity, for understanding the drug industry as a global network coordinated by the CIA, with proceeds laundered through banks and funnelled into the CIA's covert terrorist operations.

All Intelligence agencies are privately-owned criminal organizations

Dope Inc. and Ronald Bernard's testimony are consistent with the 1972 Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI) scandal and the findings of reporter Danny Casalaro who was 'suicided' while investigating the same secret syndicate. The Manhattan District Attorney who closed BCCI's USA branch announced that 16 witnesses died while investigating the BCCI's involvement in covert CIA operations, arms smuggling to Iraq, money laundering, and child prostitution. Danny Casalaro labelled the system The Octopus and described it as follows:

> They're not government officials but their tentacles can reach into any part of the government in almost any country including legitimate and rogue spy networks. They are not notable industrialists, but they can pull the strings of the oil and banking empires at will. They are not known criminals, but they successfully penetrated all factions of organized crime including the Mafia, the Japanese Yakuza, the secret Chinese Triads, and the terrorist underground. [22]

Casalaro linked The Octopus to people, places, and activities consistent with my experience. His notes and phone records referenced drug trafficking, money laundering, Mossad, CIA, shellfish-based bioweapons, genetic engineering, Nicaragua, Watergate, Australia's Nugan-Hand Bank, Pine Gap, MJ-12, and Area 51.[23] This bizarre combination of diverse and seemingly unrelated research topics only makes sense within the context of witness testimonies like mine. I can pull together every single one of those topics and explain their solid relationship.

The best way to understand the global child trafficking industry is to trace the history of the drug trafficking industry. As you read Dope Inc. cross out the word 'drugs' and replace it with the word 'kids' to gain a picture of the child trafficking network that traded me. Like the drug trade, the child sex trafficking industry is run as a single integrated world operation. At the top sit the wealthy elite who maintain control by ensuring only blackmailed, compromised politicians, military brass and government officials occupy leadership. The secret services, including ASIO, MI6 and the CIA coordinate the child trafficking and human compromise operation, receive the victims procured via the little men, modify the behaviour of child victims until they become suitable assets, and transport the trained victims nationally and internationally to service VIP pedophiles.

---

[22] Kenn Thomas & Jim Keith (2004). The Octopus: Secret Government and the Death of Danny Casolaro. Feral House.

[23] Cheri Seymour (2010). The Last Circle. TrineDay LLC.

Child trafficking is run as a single, integrated world operation coordinated by the CIA

Operation Mockingbird: In 1977, Watergate investigative journalist Carl Bernstein said the CIA had recruited over 400 American journalists:

> Alsop is one of more than 400 American journalists who in the past twenty-five years have secretly carried out assignments for the Central Intelligence Agency, according to documents on file at CIA headquarters. Some of these journalists' relationships with the Agency were tacit; some were explicit. There was cooperation, accommodation and overlap. Journalists provided a full range of clandestine services—from simple intelligence gathering to serving as go-betweens with spies in Communist countries. Reporters shared their notebooks with the CIA. Editors shared their staffs. Some of the journalists were Pulitzer Prize winners, distinguished reporters who considered themselves ambassadors without-portfolio for their country. Most were less exalted: foreign correspondents who found that their association with the Agency helped their work; stringers and freelancers who were as interested in the derring-do of the spy business as in filing articles; and, the smallest category, full-time CIA employees masquerading as journalists abroad. In many instances, CIA documents show, journalists were engaged to perform tasks for the CIA with the consent of the managements of America's leading news organizations.[24]

This CIA operation was called Mockingbird. Australia and the UK have their own network of Mockingbird journalists which sprung to the defence of Westminster VIP pedophiles.

* * *

PIE (Pedophile Information Exchange)
I received the following correspondence in 2017:

> In 1971 an Adelaide barrister from the Communist Party of Australia created the precursor to what later became the Pedophile Information Exchange. This lawyer was the late ELLIOT JOHNSON. The Pedophile Information Exchange was formed from earlier pedophile groups such as the Lewis Carroll Collectors Guild and the (homosexual) Peter Pan Club. Another founder of this organization (from the Peter Pan Club) was FRANK HOUSTON who also founded the pseudo-church The Assembly of God. Houston was pastor of the Surrey Hills Christian Centre which later morphed into Hillsong Church. Houston was an organizer for the Peter Pan Club when he was contacted by Elliot Johnson and asked to assist in forming a 'united front' for organized pedophilia. This resulted in the formation of the Pedophile Information Exchange in February 1973. This organization was then exported to the United Kingdom…

---

[24] Carl Bernstein (1977). The CIA and the Media. Rolling Stone, 20 Oct.

Here are some shocking facts about PIE (Paedophile Information Exchange): [25] [26]

- The UK government gave PIE grants totalling at least £70,000 via the Home Office, between 1977 and 1980.
- PIE proposed reducing the age of consent to age 4 years.
- PIE's motto was: 'Sex before eight - before it's too late.'
- PIE produced a magazine, Understanding Paedophilia which contained articles written by psychologists.
- PIE was affiliated to the UK National Council for Civil Liberties and backed by the Campaign for Homosexual Equality.
- PIE campaigned for the social and legal acceptance of pedophilia:

We want to dispel the myths connected with paedophilia, and show that most pedophiles desire gentle, loving, and mutually pleasurable relationships. We believe it is inhumane to children to outlaw their sexuality and we support moves to lower the age of consent.

* * *

How did the Pro-Paedophile Group PIE Exist Openly for 10 Years?

Tom de Castella & Tom Heyden, BBC News Magazine, 27 Feb 2014

The Paedophile Information Exchange was affiliated to the National Council for Civil Liberties - now Liberty - in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

…

A gay rights conference backs a motion in favour of paedophilia. The story is written up by a national newspaper as 'Child-lovers win fight for role in Gay Lib.' It sounds like a nightmarish plotline from dystopian fiction. But this happened in the UK. The conference took place in Sheffield and the newspaper was the Guardian. The year was 1975. It's part of the story of how paedophiles tried to go mainstream in the 1970s.

…

PIE was formed in 1974. It campaigned for 'children's sexuality.' It wanted the government to axe or lower the age of consent. It offered support to adults 'in legal difficulties concerning sexual acts with consenting 'underage' partners.' The real aim was to normalise sex with children. Journalist Christian Wolmar remembers their tactics. 'They didn't emphasise that this was 50-year-old men wanting to have sex with five-year-olds. They presented it as the sexual liberation of children, that children should have the right to sex,' he says.

…

It's an ideology that seems chilling now. But PIE managed to gain support from some professional bodies and progressive groups. It received invitations from student unions, won sympathetic media coverage and found academics willing to push its message.

---

[25] K. Mudie (2014). Huge sums of TAXPAYER'S cash 'handed to vile child-sex pervert group' by Home Office officials. Daily Mirror, 1 March.

[26] Michael Parkin (1975). Child-lovers win fight for role in Gay Lib. The Guardian, 26 Aug.

> …
> One of PIE's key tactics was to try to conflate its cause with gay rights. On at least two occasions the Campaign for Homosexual Equality conference passed motions in PIE's favour.
> …
> Most gay people were horrified by any conflation of homosexuality and a sexual interest in children, says Parris. But PIE used the idea of sexual liberation to win over more radical elements. 'If there was anything with the word 'liberation' in the name you were automatically in favour of it if you were young and cool in the 1970s. It seemed like PIE had slipped through the net.'
> …
> A Guardian article in 1977 noted with dismay how the group was growing. By its second birthday in October 1976, it had 200 members. There was a London group, a Middlesex group being planned, and with regional branches to follow. The article speaks of PIE's hopes to widen the membership to include women and heterosexual men.
> …
> In August 1983 a Scottish headmaster, Charles Oxley, handed over a dossier about PIE to Scotland Yard after infiltrating the group, the Glasgow Herald wrote. He said the group had about 1,000 members.

* * *

PIE membership included judges, politicians,[27] scoutmasters, headteachers, diplomats, aristocrats, intelligence agents, and child protection experts. Notable PIE members were:

- Prime Minister Edward Heath (regularly attended PIE meetings in Westminster).[28]
- Richard Maurice Clive Bigham (son of Viscount Mersey, was convicted of raping sisters aged six and 10).[29]
- Sir Peter Hayman (Senior Diplomat, British High Commissioner to Canada, Foreign Office Minister. In 1981, MP Geoffrey Dickens used Parliamentary privilege to expose information Thatcher had suppressed: that Hayman posted pornographic material. Dickens consequently received death threats and was burgled).[30]
- Geoffrey Arthur Prime (British Intelligence Officer, Soviet spy, convicted in 1982 of raping three girls).[31] [32]
- Charles Napier (PIE treasurer, schoolteacher).

---

[27] Danny McGrory (1983). MPs on 'child sex mailing list.' Daily Express, 3 Sept.

[28] Nick Dorman (2015). Edward Heath fixed it for Kimmy Savile to receive OBE and attended Pedophile Information Exchange meetings. Mirror, 8 Aug.

[29] Daily Express (1978). Dishonoured: the shame of a viscount's son who turned from porn books to child sex, 11 July.

[30] Garth Gibbs & Stuart Greig (1981). Secret shame of Mr Perfect, Daily Mirror, 19 March.

[31] Julian Haviland (1982). Thatcher's guarded security statement. The Times (London), 21 July.

[32] Steve Bird (2014). The child sex attacker and Soviet spy who was in the vile group legitimised by Harman and chums. Daily Mail [Online], 26 Feb.

- Peter Righton (PIE founder, charged and cautioned for raping a boy in 1960, UK's most senior child social worker, VIP network scapegoat).

'MORAL PANIC'

In a 1981 publication, Perspectives on Paedophilia, Peter Righton attacked the 'moral panic' over pedophilia; he said that with 'the child's willing compliance…the sex is unlikely to do much harm.' Peter Righton was the UK's top social worker and child protection expert. He served as Director of the National Children's Bureau charity, Director of the National Institute for Social Work, and consultant for the National Children's Bureau. In 1992, Peter Righton was convicted of possessing hard-core child abuse porn obtained from Amsterdam. Police also found a diary containing 'scores of boys' whom investigators believed Righton had sexually abused. At the time of his arrest, Righton lived with his gay pedophile partner at the 2,500-acre estate of Lord John and Leslie Henniker-Major which operated as 'an educational and recreational centre for children.' London Borough of Islington sent children to the Henniker estate under a scheme called The Islington Suffolk Project. Hundreds of Islington children holidayed at the Henniker estate since the 1970s. Islington was implicated in child trafficking. Jimmy Savile raped kids on Islington where 14 investigations revealed pedophiles operated all 24 children's homes.[33] The entire island was complicit in the abuse, such that victims refused to testify to internal investigators who 'lost' all files documenting child abuse on Islington.

Operation Fairbank was established in 2012 to investigate allegations against Peter Righton and his connections. During the 1992 raids on Righton, police found 25 years of correspondence between Righton and pedophiles in Britain and around the world.[34] Police found a letter from Charles Napier to Righton boasting of his life in Cairo as a British Council teacher, how Cairo was 'full of boys, 98 per cent of them available,' and how Napier could send child pornography to Britain in diplomatic bags.[35] Charles Napier fled England for Cairo in 1972 after being banned from teaching in the UK for indecently assault pupils at a Surrey school. In 1995, Charles Napier was convicted of the historical rape of a boy. Police evidence included letters exchanged between Napier and Righton about the availability of boys in Sweden, plus a 1978 film showing Napier and Righton with boys in Sweden.

ELM GUEST HOUSE

Operation Fernbridge was an Operation Fairbank offshoot. It focused on, 'Elm Guest House, south-west London, a gay brothel where VIP pedophiles preyed on young boys supplied from local care homes.'[36] Rent boy candidates were identified from school magazine photos and forced into foster care by government social workers like Peter Righton. Multiple boy brothel victims identified VIP Elm Guest House clients including politicians, police, Royal family employees, British Intelligence, military, and pop stars. Cliff Richards obtained a high court injunction to prevent the media naming him as an Elm Guest House client codenamed 'Kitty.' The media instead named Cliff Richards for sexually assaulting a boy at Billy Graham's

---

[33] Andrew Johnston (2014). Islington child abuse victim: Why I won't talk to the Town hall Inquiry into Jimmy Savile link, Islington Tribune, 11 April.

[34] Keir Mudie (2012). Abuse scandals probe widens: The man who may hold key to UK's biggest pedophile network ever. Mirror, 11 Nov.

[35] Keir Mudie (2013). VIP child abuse ring: Cops probe paedo teacher Charles Napier. Mirror, 16 Feb.

[36] Ibid.

1985 Crusade in Sheffield, forcing him to relocate to pedophile-friendly Portugal (where Madeleine McCain disappeared).

Multiple victims named Prime Minister Edward Heath and Home Secretary Leon Brittan as Elm Guest House clients. In November 1983, Geoffrey Dickens MP gave Leon Brittan a ‘massive’ dossier on child abuse containing specific allegations about a link between PIE and Buckingham Palace staff, Foreign Office staff, and the civil service. Dickens gave Brittan a second dossier in 1984 alleging child abuse in a children’s home and naming prominent pedophiles including a BBC TV executive. Leon Brittan investigated nothing – because he was one of them.

SPARTACUS

Elm Guest House ran an advertisement in the Spartacus International Gay Guide pedophile magazine which offered a ‘10% Discount to Spartacus Club members.’ According to Australian police detectives, ‘Spartacus’ was codename for an international underground pedophile network.[37] Spartacus Club, part of the British-registered Spartacus International, was run by pedophile Catholic priest John Stamford, a PIE activist who fled the UK for Amsterdam where he published and managed the German Spartacus International Gay Guide. The magazine functioned as a shopping catalogue / tourist guidebook for international pedophiles who could arrange to meet up with the children advertised in the magazine. The Spartacus International Gay Guide was distributed to pedophiles travelling to ‘Europe, Mediterranean, America, Africa, Asia, Australasia, USSR.’

CLARENCE OSBORNE

Brisbane court stenographer Clarence Henry Howard-Osborne was Australia’s contact point for senior PIE figures including John Stamford.[38] Osborne took photos of Brisbane children that appeared in German and English pedophile magazines including Spartacus International Gay Guide. Clarence Osborne organised for international pedophile tourists to meet up with Brisbane children whose photographs he had placed in the Spartacus International Gay Guide.

In 1973, the Public Service Board conducted two secret inquiries into Clarence Osborne. Resultingly, Gough Whitlam’s ALP government transferred Clarence Osborne to the Hansard bureau at Parliament House in Canberra. (I was trafficked to a pedophile party held inside Parliament House during Clarence Osborne’s placement there.)

Clarence Osborne committed suicide in 1979 after police raided his home:

> [Police] discovered thousands of pictures of naked children, hundreds of hours of tape-recorded conversations with boys and a meticulously organised filing cabinet filled with index cards bearing the details of his victims, from their names, ages and addresses, to their physical measurements. It was later estimated that Osborne had been involved with more than 2500 under-aged males over a 20-year period… Incredibly, Osborne and his voluminous files were never thoroughly investigated by police. According to officers who viewed the Osborne material at the time, the names on the index cards, so dutifully recorded by Osborne, were not only those of the boys he had seduced, but adults – members of the judiciary, the legal profession, politicians,

---

[37] Matthew Condon (2016). Pedophile Clarence Henry Howard-Osborne’s files could have ‘brought down government.’ Courier Mail, 18 March.

[38] Ibid.

> academics, and even police officers - with sexual interests in children. One former officer said the Osborne material was enough 'to bring down the [then Queensland] government overnight.' [39]

Osborn shared his pedophile materials with Australia's leading criminologist and ABC Radio regular Paul Wilson who wrote a book defending Clarence Osborne.[40] At the University of Queensland during the 1980s, Paul Wilson organised a pro-pedophilia conference and showed a child porn snuff film to his psychology class. Bond University published Paul Wilson's pro-pedophile articles on their website, until Wilson was charged with historical child sexual assault.

> By the early 1980s the Osborne case had been all but forgotten, and many of the diminutive stenographer's secrets were presumed lost with him. Except a retired Queensland police officer with a conscience and a phenomenal memory, who wanted to pursue Osborne at the time – and was warned off by senior officers, and who received a death threat after he pushed the pedophile investigation too far – only to be drummed out of the force, never forgot the case. And in breaking his silence, he would link Osborne to an international pedophile ring, and the child abuse scandal currently rocking Westminster in the UK.[41]

JIMMY SAVILE OBE: UK's JEFFREY EPSTEIN

Jimmy Savile, who associated closely with British prime ministers Edward Heath and Margaret Thatcher, and the British Royal family, was linked to PIE. Initial allegations against Savile involved Satanic Ritual Abuse:

> JIMMY SAVILE WAS PART OF SATANIC RING
>
> James Fielding, Express.uk.co, 13 Jan 2013.
>
> JIMMY SAVILE beat and raped a 12-year-old girl during a secret satanic ritual in a hospital. The perverted star wore a hooded robe and mask as he abused the terrified victim in a candle-lit basement. He also chanted 'Hail Satan' in Latin as other paedophile devil worshippers joined in and assaulted the girl at Stoke Mandeville Hospital in Buckinghamshire. The attack, which happened in 1975, shines a sinister new light on the former DJ's 54-year reign of terror. Savile, who died aged 84 in October 2011, is now Britain's worst sex offender after police revealed he preyed on at least 450 victims aged eight to 47.
>
> The girl kept her torment hidden for nearly 20 years before finally opening up to therapist Valerie Sinason. Dr Sinason told the Sunday Express she first spoke to the victim in 1992. 'She had been a patient at Stoke Mandeville in 1975 when Savile was a regular visitor. She recalled being led into a room that was filled with candles on the lowest level of the hospital, somewhere that was not regularly used by staff. Several adults were there, including Jimmy Savile who, like the others, was wearing a robe and

---

[39] Ibid.

[40] Paul Wilson (1981). The Man They Called a Monster: Sexual Experience Between Men and Boys. Cassell.

[41] Matthew Condon (2016). Pedophile Clarence Henry Howard-Osborne's files could have 'brought down government.' Courier Mail, 18 March.

a mask. She recognised him because of his distinctive voice and the fact that his blond hair was protruding from the side of the mask. He was not the leader, but he was seen as important because of his fame. She was molested, raped and beaten and heard words that sounded like 'Ave Satanas,' a Latin-ised version of 'Hail Satan,' being chanted. There was no mention of any other child being there and she cannot remember how long the attack lasted but she was left extremely frightened and shaken.'

Savile was a volunteer porter and fundraiser at the hospital between 1965 and 1988 and had his own quarters there. Five years after the hospital attack, he abused a second victim during another black mass ceremony held at a house in a wealthy London street. The woman was 21 at the time and was made to attend an orgy, which later took on a darker twist.

Dr Sinason, director of the Clinic for Dissociative Studies in London, said: 'A second victim approached me in 1993. She said she had been 'lent out' as a supposedly consenting prostituted woman at a party in a London house in 1980. The first part of the evening started off with an orgy but half-way through some of the participants left. Along with other young women, the victim was shepherded to wait in another room before being brought back to find Savile in a master of ceremonies kind of role with a group wearing robes and masks. She too heard Latin chanting and instantly recognised Satanist regalia. Although the girl was a young adult, who was above the age of consent, she had suffered a history of sexual abuse and was extremely vulnerable.'

Both victims contacted Dr Sinason, who is president of the Institute of Psychotherapy and Disability, while she was involved in a Department of Health-funded study into sexual abuse committed during rituals and religious ceremonies. She said: 'Both these witnesses did speak to police at the time but were vulnerable witnesses and on encountering any surprise or shock did not dare to give all the details.' Dr Sinason added: 'Savile was still a huge celebrity in the early Nineties, let's not forget, and there was never any action taken against him or any of the others involved. Neither girl knew one another, they lived in different parts of the country and contacted me a year apart, yet their experiences are very similar. Whether Savile was a practising Satanist or merely enjoyed dressing up to scare his victims even more will perhaps never be known but he left those two girls mentally scarred.'

Dr Sinason has passed details of the abuse to officers from the Savile inquiry, Operation Yewtree…

* * *

SCANDAL OF JIMMY SAVILLE'S 50 YEARS OF SEX ABUSE

John Twomey & Mark Reynolds, Express.co.uk, 12 Jan 2013.

THE vast scale of Jimmy Savile's sexual abuse was revealed yesterday as the BBC star was unmasked as a monster who raped and molested children for nearly six decades.

Former Top of The Pops presenter Savile preyed on at least 450 victims at schools, hospitals and at other venues including a hospice and the BBC TV Centre. Using his celebrity status and the popularity of shows such as Jim'll Fix It, the paedophile gained access to victims and committed horrific crimes at will, a report revealed yesterday. Savile hoodwinked his bosses, hospital and school officials and millions of viewers and listeners to gain almost saint-like status. Commander Peter Spindler, who led Scotland Yard's £450,000 inquiry, said: 'He groomed the nation.'

Detectives believe Savile spent every waking moment thinking of ways to gain access to victims. He also attacked vulnerable adults but 73 per cent of his victims were under 18. The youngest was an eight-year-old boy. He also abused a dying child at Great Ormond Street Hospital. The child, aged 11 or 12, told relatives Savile had touched him or her inappropriately. The DJ committed at least 34 rapes – mostly on women. Some victims were hospital patients who had pleaded with him to visit because they had no one else. Victims were attacked in 14 different medical establishments including mental health units.

His sickening activities were exposed in a landmark joint report by the Metropolitan Police and the children's charity NSPCC. His earliest recorded offence was in 1955 and the latest in 2009, when he was 82. He died in 2011. Police recorded 214 crimes across 28 forces from Avon and Somerset to Northumbria. The peak of the offending was from 1966 to 1976.

Scarcely any victims complained. The few who did were not taken seriously by police, prosecutors, hospital and school officials – or even their own parents. At least five chances were missed to put Savile in the dock – the most recent in 2009 when four women reported assaults while in their teens or early 20s. But detectives mishandled the investigations.

Lawyers representing victims are preparing multi-million damages claims against Savile's £4.2million estate, the BBC, hospital and education authorities. Solicitors said they had not ruled out suing the police…

*   *   *

SAVILE ABUSED DYING CHILD

John Twomey & Mark Reynolds, Express.co.uk, 12 Jan 2013.

JIMMY Savile's 54-year reign of sexual abuse was revealed yesterday as it emerged the disgraced BBC star's victims included a terminally ill child and an eight-year-old boy.

… he abused a dying child at Great Ormond Street Hospital. The allegation was made by a patient aged 11 or 12 who told relatives before dying that Savile had touched him or her inappropriately. He committed at least 34 rapes, mostly of women. Some victims were desperately lonely patients who had pleaded with Savile to visit because they had no one else to comfort them…

* * *

Irish Foster Boys Trafficked to Royal Mountbatten & Jimmy Savile

Jimmy Savile was close friends with Lord Louis Mountbatten, Prince Charles' favourite uncle. Savile and Mountbatten are linked to the investigation of Kincora Boys' Home in Belfast, Northern Ireland. Joseph Mains, the Warden of Kincora Boys' Home, prostituted boys to British VIPs. He drove Kincora boys to Classiebawn Castle on Mullaghmore Harbor in County Sligo, on Ireland's West Coast, for Lord Mountbatten to rape. Mountbatten holidayed at Classiebawn Castle every summer for 30 years – until the Irish Republican Army assassinated him in 1979 by bombing his boat in Mullahgmore Harbour. Rumours persist that the IRA killed Mountbatten because he took advantage of Northern Irish boys.

Consistent with their VIP child trafficking coverup, the British press completely ignored this Saville-Mountbatten-Kincora connection when reporting on the August 2019 launch of Andrew Lownie's sensational biography, The Mountbattens: their Lives & Loves. The following article typifies the UK press' alternative focus:

> Lord Mountbatten 'was a homosexual with a lust for young boys' claims secret FBI dossier compiled by agents seeking dirt on British statesmen during World War Two and the Suez Crisis
> Connor Boyd, Daily Mail, 18 Aug 2019.
>
> Intelligence files describe Lord Mountbatten as person of 'extremely low morals'
> 75-year-old documents say he frequently had homosexual extramarital affairs
> It comes ahead of the 40th anniversary of his death at hands of the IRA in 1979
>
> Prince Charles' uncle and valued mentor Lord Mountbatten was a 'homosexual with a perversion for young boys', according to a secret dossier compiled by the FBI. The intelligence files describe the 1st Earl Mountbatten of Burma and his wife Edwina as 'persons of extremely low morals' who frequently had extramarital affairs. One source said Mountbatten's penchant for young men made him 'an unfit man to direct any sort of military operations.'
> …
> The 75-year-old FBI documents were obtained through a freedom of information request by British historian Andrew Lownie, who has written a biography of the couple. In the book, The Mountbattens: their Lives & Loves, Mountbatten's former driver Ron Perks reveals that one of his boss's favourite destinations was 'an upmarket gay brothel used by senior naval officers' called the Red House near Rabat.
>
> Agents began compiling the file, which spans more than three decades, in February 1944, shortly after Mountbatten became supreme allied commander of southeast Asia. Following his appointment, the FBI interviewed Elizabeth de la Poer Beresford, Baroness Decies, about another matter, and she brought up Mountbatten. The file reads: 'She states that in these circles Lord Louis Mountbatten and his wife are considered persons of extremely low morals. She stated that Lord Louis Mountbatten was known to be a homosexual with a perversion for young boys. In Lady Decies' opinion he is an unfit man to direct any sort of military operations because of this condition. She stated further that his wife Lady Mountbatten was considered equally > erratic.' It was signed EE Conroy, head of the New York field office, who wrote that she 'appears to have no special motive in making the above statements.'

>
> …
>
> Rumours about Mountbatten's sexuality have long swirled following his death 40 years ago… fuelled by his comment: 'Edwina and I spent all our married lives getting into other people's beds.' The royal kept a large group of gay friends, including Noël Coward, Terence Rattigan, Ivor Novello and Tom Driberg, who reportedly referred to him as 'Mountbottom'.
>
> Lownie's new book, to be published on Thursday, contains an interview with Anthony Daly, a rent boy to the rich and famous during the 1970s. Daly claims: 'Tom said Mountbatten had something of a fetish for uniforms — handsome young men in military uniforms (with high boots) and beautiful boys in school uniform.'

* * *

By contrast, Irish news sites focussed on Andrew Lownie's coverage of the Saville-Mountbatten-Kincora connection. For example:

A Kincora Boy Abused by Mountbatten Committed Suicide a few Months Later
Joseph de Burca, Village, 18 Aug 2019.

* * *

BRITISH INTELLIGENCE PRESS COVERUP

The British press downgraded Jimmy Savile's documented SRA to a 'plain vanilla' story. Pro-pedophile mouthpiece The Telegraph led the propaganda charge with quotes like: 'Satanic ritual abuse does not exist, it's like alien abduction.'[42] The quoted female barrister advocated for lowering the age of consent to 13, and not charging pedophiles with historical crimes because it was 'too late.' She employed the term 'moral panic' to dismiss victim testimony. Quoting a female pedophile defender is effective because the public do not realise how many females, including barristers, are involved in Luciferian pedophile cults.

The 'plain vanilla' account pushed by UK media involved 13 police stations which gathered reports from 589 victims, 450 of whom claimed abuse by Savile. The abuse implicated the BBC plus 32 government hospitals. A 2014 National Health Service report concluded, Savile raped public hospital patients over several decades, including children, adults, and dead bodies, with the knowledge and support of government authorities. Nurses felt so helpless to stop Savile, they warned hospitalised children to feign sleep to avoid Savile raping them during his late-night ward rounds. Savile even assaulted hospital staff and visitors. Further, politicians and civil servants appointed unqualified Jimmy Savile to run Broadmoor psychiatric unit where he boldly assaulted staff, raped patients, and invited high profile associates to watch women shower. To date, the British Government has failed to explain how one filthy grub wielded such influence and terror without the backing of Westminster pedophiles.

---

[42] Melanie Hall (2013). Jimmy Savile satanic abuse claims as unlikely as 'alien abduction', says leading barrister, The Telegraph, 8 July.

Jimmy Savile was implicated in the abuse of children at tax/pedophile haven Jersey Island[43] where residents' front yards proudly display statues of very young children performing oral sex on erect penises, plus a 12-foot statue of Satan as pedophile Pan. The entire Jersey Island population including police, judiciary, social services and journalists were complicit to the ritual rape, torture and murder of children at the island's children's home, Hart de la Garenne, where police found buried remains of multiple children, plus a kill room featuring: shackles, a blood-stained concrete tub, lime bath, and incinerator full of children's dismembered body parts. Senior police, including Scotland Yard, blocked investigations of most of the 151 perpetrators identified by 192 victims who made 1,776 witness statements. A few low-level staff were charged, while all VIPs and those accused of satanic ritual abuse, escaped police investigation. Anyone who tried to expose the Luciferian pedophile child trafficking operation were arrested or murdered, including Dyana, sister of Bill Maloney who produced the documentary Sun, Sea and Satan about the ritual abuse the siblings experienced on Jersey Island.

Prime Minister Edward Heath closely associated with Jimmy Savile. Guy Marsden, Jimmy Savile's nephew, said Heath sexually assaulted a boy at a London party. Heath was also implicated in the rape and murder of Jersey Island children aboard his yacht.

SILENT UK WITNESSES

British Intelligence and the BBC went to extreme lengths to plug any leaks regarding the VIP trafficking operation:

- In 1978, the BBC banned pop star 'Johnny Rotten' for outing Saville as a pedophile during interview.[44]
- In 1996, the British government assassinated a Dunblane teacher and her entire primary school class following disclosures the children were being sex trafficked to the elite Westminster pedophile ring. Websites exposing the truth of the Dunblane Massacre were wiped off the internet.
- In 1999, journalist Jill Dando was gunned down in a professional hit, to stop her exposing the same VIP pedophile network on the BBC Crimewatch television program she hosted.

Owing to the internet, the truth became more difficult for the UK government to suppress. Here is a summary of notable newspaper articles that documented multiple police investigations into thousands of VIP pedophile allegations in the UK.

TORY PAEDO COVER-UP

Jonathan Corke, Tony Bushby & Deborah Sherwood, Daily Star, 28 Oct 2012.

- The British Royal Air Force flew rich and powerful European VIPs, including Belgians, to attend London pedophile orgies in the 1980s (via RAF Northolt located outside London).
- Numerous boys were sex trafficked to rich and powerful men in the 1980s.

---

[43] Daily Mail (2012). Former Jersey police chief says Savile was implicated in Haut de la Garenne children's home scandal and there's 'no reason to doubt' he abused girls there, 9 Oct.

[44] The Guardian (2015). John Lydon says he was 'banned from BBC' over Jimmy Savile comments, 24 Sep.

- VIPs paid boy prostitutes to attend pedophile orgies at ‘millionaire properties’ in London and the Home Counties.
- A ‘network’ of boys, including runaways, were prostituted to the orgies.
- A teenage rent boy witness vanished just weeks after speaking to Metropolitan Police detectives.
- The boy named VIP pedophiles including a living Tory Cabinet minister, judges, and senior civil servants.
- Met detectives received multiple pedophile allegations against the Cabinet minister.
- Metropolitan Police ordered detectives to stop investigating the VIP pedophile ring.
- A retired detective who worked on the case said: ‘It wasn’t that we ran out of leads, but it reached a point where a warning to stop came. It was a case of ‘get rid of everything, never say a word to anyone. It was made very clear to me that to continue asking questions would jeopardise my career.’
- The Tory Cabinet minister was never arrested. No one was charged over the rent-boy pedophile ring.
- Labor MP Tom Watson said case files from 20 years ago link pedophile Peter Righton to a Prime Minister. Watson knows of evidence linking a second pedophile ring to Parliament and the PM. Watson said the leads were not followed up, and he was contacted by someone claiming the police ‘held a vast quantity of material suggesting Jimmy Savile was a predatory pedophile.’
- Police conducted at least 7 investigations into Savile while he was alive – yet no charges were laid.
- Scotland Yard investigated Savile in the 1980s over claims he attacked a girl in a caravan at London BBC TV Centre.
- Metropolitan Police are currently investigating Jimmy Savile’s assault of 300 victims over 60 years.

* * *

MI5 'Helped Margaret Thatcher Cover-up Pedophile Tory MPs Activities' new Document Reveals

Nick Sommerlad & Jack Blanchard, The Mirror, 22 July 2015.

- A 1985 letter from MI5 head Sir Antony Duff to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher revealed two sources accused an unnamed senior Tory MP of having ‘a penchant for small boys.’
- MI5 told Cabinet Secretary Sir Robert Armstrong, they accepted the MP’s denials of the pedophile allegations, adding: ‘At the present stage... the risks of political embarrassment to the Government is rather greater than the security danger.’
- Pedophile documents link PM Thatcher’s parliamentary secretary Sir Peter Morrison, Home Secretary Leon Brittan, diplomat Sir Peter Hayman, and minister Sir William van Straubenzee.

* * *

‘Edward Heath Abused us too’ say More Alleged Victims Coming Forward
Russell Myers, The Mirror, 4 Aug 2015.

- Metropolitan, Wiltshire, Jersey and Kent police forces investigated pedophile allegations against PM Edward Heath.
- The Met Police had been investigating Heath for almost 10 months.
- A Scotland Yard inquiry, Operation Midland, investigated Heath as part of a 1970s - 80s VIP pedophile ring.
- Wiltshire Police received ‘a number’ of fresh calls from Heath victims.
- In the 1990s, a brothel keeper threatened to reveal in court that she had evidence PM Heath was a pedophile. Charges against her were dropped.
- The Police force is being investigated by the Independent Police Complaints Commission for allegedly failing to investigate the brothel keeper’s evidence.
- The NSPCC [the child abuse charity Jimmy Savile and Margaret Thatcher supported] has also been contacted by people claiming Heath sexually assaulted them.
- A central police operation codenamed Hydrant collated all historical pedophile allegations involving VIPs.
- Heath raped a 12-year-old runaway at his flat in Mayfair, Central London, in 1961. The victim made a detailed statement to lawyers. Social workers called the victim a ‘fantasist’ when he tried to report the rape.
- Another man contacted Kent Police yesterday saying Heath raped him in the 1960s. ‘Detectives are making inquiries and will obtain a full account from the victim.’
- Jersey police said, ‘Heath is one of at least 13 “well known” politicians, celebrities and sports stars being looked at over decades of child abuse’ under Operation Whistle investigations of historical pedophilia.
- Jimmy Savile frequented Jersey care home Haut de la Garenne.
- Jersey Police’s Operation Whistle, launched in 2015, investigated 4 institutions, 45 suspects including 13 VIPs.

THE DUTROUX AFFAIR

In the 1990s, Catholic Belgium became notorious for the Dutroux Affair, a 1990s child sex trafficking scandal implicating Belgian Royals, politicians, bankers, businessmen, police and lawyers. WikiLeaks dropped a ‘Dutroux dossier’ showing clientele from European countries, plus Morocco and Saudi Arabia, paid to rape trafficked Belgian children. Belgian victim Regina Louf said VIP clientele were secretly filmed without their knowledge as part of a human compromise operation, ‘It was big business - blackmail - there was a lot of money involved.’[45] Belgian girls were kidnapped, caged, gang raped in pedophile orgies, and murdered for snuff films; they were tortured, ritually sacrificed, suffocating to death in holding cells, wrapped in plastic and buried alive, and killed for sexual pleasure.

Regina Louf was sold to the Belgian trafficking network by her wealthy grandmother, Cecile Beernaert, whose WW2 brothels serviced Nazi troops. Regina described being raped at sex orgies organised by businessman Jean Michel Nihoul who was later convicted of trafficking drugs and people into Belgium. Regina Louf and other Dutroux victims told police they were subjected to satanic ritual abuse and child hunts in which VIPs including Belgium Royalty hunted and murdered children for sport in locations including the grounds of Chimay Castle.

---

[45] Olenka Frenkiel (2002) Belgium's X-Files, BBC 2, 2 May, 7:15pm BST.

The Belgian government subsequently covered up the true nature of the Dutroux Affair. Evidence disappeared, numerous suspects were never investigated, and over 20 key witnesses were murdered.[46] [47] One witness was poisoned, and his wife incinerated in her bed.[48] No VIPs were charged, and a few low-level scapegoats were prosecuted, including Marc Dutroux and his wife who received lengthy sentences for starving two eight-year-old girls to death in their cellar. RTBF, a government-owned TV station, campaigned 'to prove that Dutroux was an isolated pervert kidnapping girls for himself, that there was no network, that Jean Michel Nihoul was innocent, and victim Regina Louf was a liar.'[49] VIP pedophile mouthpiece The Telegraph supported this angle from the UK.[50]

In 1996, a massive 350,000 Belgian citizens protest marched against the VIP child trafficking operation. Belgian fire fighters protested by turning their hoses on the Belgian Parliamentary building. One third of Belgians surnamed Dutroux legally changed their family name. Yet this all this achieved nothing.

Belgian sex trafficking victim Anneke Lucas came forward in 2017 in the wake of Pedogate. Anneke's mother sold her into sex slavery at age six years. For the next 5.5 years she was raped six hours per week by up to 200 pedophiles including Royalty. Anneke Lucas was subjected to torture, child murder, and satanic ritual abuse. From age six she attended weekly, late-night pedophile orgies held in mansions and castles during which she was 'used for an S&M show, on a low stage, chained up with an iron dog collar, and made to eat human faeces.' [51] Anneke said she and the other trafficked children were 'made to commit violence' against child victims so they felt too 'implicated' to inform police.

UK Prosecutes 'Fantasist' Victims for Whistleblowing

The UK's latest tactic to silence victims of government child trafficking is to prosecute them for reporting the crimes committed against them to the police. Their modus operandi involves the DPP charging victims with perverting the course of justice, while the government-controlled media slander the victims as a 'fantasists' who fabricates witness testimony for money. The UK government tried this on Ben Fellows, a former UK child actor and Westminster sex trafficking victim. Ben Fellows said his agent Sylvia Young solicited him at age 14 years for sexual abuse by Tom Cruise. Fellows was subsequently targeted for false arrest and slander by the media who described the victim as 'an inventive and sometimes persuasive fantasist.' In 2015, the UK government unsuccessfully prosecuted Ben Fellows for perverting the course of justice for providing a 2012 police witness statement to Operation Fairbank.[52]

---

[46] Olenka Frenkiel (2002). Belgium's silent heart of darkness, The Guardian, 5 May.

[47] Andrew Osborn (2002). Belgium still haunted by pedophile scandal. The Guardian, 25 Jan.

[48] Irish Times (2004). Dutroux trial to revive Belgium's trauma. 1 Mar.

[49] Frenkiel, above n42.

[50] Ambrose Evans-Pritchard (2004). Life for Dutroux and his wife gets 30 years. The Telegraph, 23 June.

[51] Jenny Awford (2017). 'THE BUTCHER'S BLOCK WAS BLACK WITH BLOOD' Ex-child sex slave Anneke Lucas reveals she was 'raped, tortured with a fishhook and almost stabbed to death after being sold into aristocratic paedo gang aged six.' The Sun, 19 Jan.

[52] Haroon Siddigue (2015). Court clears actor who accused Kenneth Clarke of sexual assault. The Guardian, 31 July.

Multiple victims who came forward and made police witness statements against elite UK pedophiles including Edward Heath were initially supported as 'credible and true.' In 2016, Westminster victim Darren Thornham used Twitter to warn of a coverup operation involving (a) a fake victim being planted to discredit the genuine ones, and (b) a cut-out media company (Exaro News) gathering testimonies from victims who were subsequently falsely arrested and murdered. Darren implicated Australian 60 Minutes journalist Ross Coulthart in an elaborate media rouse. According to Darren's tweets, police beat him, threatened him with false arrest (for attending a 1992 rave at age 15 years with eight fellow sex trafficking victims) and threatened to raid and charge him for terror crimes along with victim Kevin Allen (brother of missing victim Martin Allen) whose family were also threatened. The UK media branded Darren a 'fantasist' after police charged him in 2016 for making false accusations against VIP pedophiles. Police eventually dropped the charges, according to Darren's final twitter post:

Darren Press Statement – 17.11.17

> The false charge against me, which was downgraded from making hoax claims to wasting police time, has rightly been dropped. I have been subject to a terrifying ordeal of being attacked, stalked and threatened by individuals determined to get even with me for telling the truth about the sexual abuse I suffered as a child.
>
> The case has clearly shown serious misconduct by Suffolk police officers, who have ignored complex issues surrounding harassment and intimidation of myself. The case was part of an attempt by police and the wider establishment to silence me.
>
> I refute claims that I invented the allegations of child abuse committed by high profile offenders. On many occasions, the media have simply published lies as part of a campaign against me. Some media behaviour has bordered on harassment and bullying of a CSA [child sexual abuse] survivor. I was especially saddened and shocked to see certain people who claim to be CSA survivors on social media, as well as certain journalists, vilify me.
>
> The last nine months since my arrest have been very difficult for me. It has led to my being on the verge of suicide on more than one occasion. It is only the support of people very close to me that I did not ultimately kill myself…

Darren's press statement inexplicably thanked the Exaro News journalist he criticised in numerous earlier tweets. Was Darren under duress?

TAVISTOCK PSYCHOLOGICAL OPERATION

In 2019, after the UK government failed to prosecute high profile victims Ben Fellows and Darren Thornham, they made an example of a convicted pedophile who named Edward Heath plus the heads of MI5, MI6 and the Army, in a police witness statement. Nick was sentenced to 18 years prison – a disproportionate sentence compared to the lenience granted to pedophiles – for perverting the course of justice. Social media agents spread the discourse that this action against Nick was justified because he himself is a convicted pedophile. The Telegraph vilified Nick as a 'fantasist' who fabricated his witness testimony to get compensation – as though by extension ALL victims of government child trafficking are fantasists. Was this the plant Darren Thornham warned us of on Twitter?

Nick was used to discredit and bury numerous witness testimonies against PM Edward Heath, including six genuine victims who named Heath to police in SRA accusations. Nick's prosecution was an MI6-Tavistock Psychological Operation designed to sway public opinion, deter all other government child trafficking victims from making future police statements, and discredit the many Westminster VIP pedophiles that were reported to police 50 years before Nick's prosecution. This one successful prosecution does not erase the following 1969 and 1989 police investigations into the sex trafficking of government care children to Westminster pedophiles:

1. 1989 Police Investigation into Wales Boys Home Brothels

Scallywag magazine was published between 1991 and 1998. Issue 22 (1994) contained an article 'LORD MCALPINE AND THE PEDOPHILE RING' by Angus James which exposed the Bryn Alyn Community, a private company centred in Wrexham, Wales, which operated 11 children's residential homes. The Bryn Alyn organisation was a front for a massive international child sex trafficking and pornography business managed by scapegoat John Allen who was eventually convicted of 33 counts of child rape against 19 children. Allen prostituted foster children to VIPs who attended boy brothel houses located all over the UK including London, Manchester, South Shields, Gloucestershire, Wrexham, Brighton, plus Bordeaux, France. He also hired rent boys for members of the Wrexham Golf Club to rape. Allen also operated a child porn empire including a branch in Amsterdam and a Wrexham film studio where foster children were used to make pornography. John Allen's VIP clients included:

- Lord Robert Alistair McAlpine (Treasurer, PM Margaret Thatcher's Advisor. Formally cautioned in 1965 by Strathclyde police for committing a sexual offence against a child. He sued the media for outing him as a pedophile).
- Gordon Anglesea (Police superintendent and notable Freemason. He sued two national newspapers in 1994 for printing crimes he was eventually convicted for. In 2016, he died six weeks into a 12-year prison sentence for violently raping two boys in the 1980s).[53]
- Lord Kenyon (North Wales Police Authority Chair).
- Wyn Roberts (MP for Conway, minister for State at the Welsh Office).
- Adam Mar-Jones (son of film critic Justice Jones).
- Sgt. David Morgan.
- PC David Rodgers.
- PC Peter Sharman.
- DC Gary Probert.
- Michael Portillo (politician).
- Peter Lilly (politician).
- Lord David Steel (politician).

In 1989, Detective Superintendent Ackerley collected over 1,500 witness statements during an internal police inquiry, yet his findings were buried, and key witnesses and investigators were physically assaulted. Alex Siddington (Welsh Coordinator for the National Association of Young people in Care) was beaten and had chemicals sprayed into his eyes. Gordon Anglesea's rape victim and key witness Steven Messham was beaten twice. The local BBC journalist who investigated the case for 18 months was burgled in retaliation.

---

[53] BBN News (2018). Gordon Anglesea: Jailed child abuse ex-police boss died of natural causes, 2 May.

2. 1969 Police Investigation into Rochedale Boy Home Brothels

Lord David Steele MP recently admitted to burying child abuse allegations that publicly emerged against politician Sir Cyril Smith in a 1979 Private Eye magazine.[54] In 1969, Lancashire police investigated Cyril Smith's sexual assault of young boys in Rochedale care homes. The inquiry ended in 1970 when prosecutors falsely concluded they had insufficient evidence to prosecute Cyril Smith. MI5 knew the DPP lied to journalists about their decision not to charge Cyril Smith but did nothing.[55] In Smile for the Camera: The Double Life of Cyril Smith (2014) Rochdale MP Simon Danczuk claimed Cyril Smith was allowed to continue abusing children as young as eight, after 144 victims' complaints were submitted to authorities.

This is not the extent of investigations into Westminster VIPs and UK children homes being used as VIP brothels. I will mention one more high-profile case, due to its international trafficking relevance:

NAMBLA & ARTHUR C. CLARKE

British science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke co-wrote the screenplay for the 1968 predictive programming film, 2001: A Space Odyssey. In 1961, Julian Huxley's UNESCO awarded Clarke the Kalinga Prize for popularising science. Clarke is famously quoted as saying, 'Any sufficiently advanced technology is indistinguishable from magic.' More significantly, Arthur C. Clarke was a gay pedophile who pioneered the Sri Lankan child sex tourism industry. The British Royals knighted Clarke just days after Sunday Mirror journalist Graham Johnson revealed Clarke admitted to having solicited young boys for sex. When Clarke subsequently denied this admission, the Sunday Mirror produced Clarke's taped admission plus a secret document naming Clarke as a pedophile known to members of the NAMBLA (North American Boy Lovers Association) pedophile network.

> US detectives, who arrested leaders of the [NAMBLA] association 10 years ago, say Clarke was named by other pedophiles they quizzed during an FBI investigation. The perverts had set up children's homes in Thailand as fronts for their sick activities. One of its leaders was Jonathan Tampico, 48, a top nuclear scientist who worked for the American Government. He served two-and-a- half years in jail for molesting a boy of 12 and is now on the run with a million-dollar warrant on his head for further porn offences. He told detectives he had stayed at Clarke's home in Colombo and had swapped letters with the author. Another known pedophile, former church minister John Wakefield Cummings, 56, is serving a 24-years-to-life sentence after admitting molesting 17 boys in his care. He told police in Sacremento, California, that Clarke had been contacted at his Sri Lankan home by a pedophile who was on the run from the American authorities. In a sworn statement made to an investigator for Sacremento's district attorney…Wakefield Cummings told how the pervert fled to Sri Lanka where he > was able to contact the pedophile community through Clarke. He then fled from Sri Lanka to Indonesia. Detectives contacted a child welfare group to warn them about Clarke's activities.[56]

---

[54] Rajeev Syal (2019). Lord Steel says he believed Cyril Smith abuse claims but did not act. The Guardian [Online], 14 March.

[55] Frances Perraudin (2017). MI5 knew prosecutors lied to press about Cyril Smith case, inquiry told. The Guardian [Online], 10 Oct.

> Arthur C. Clarke said in the notorious interview: 'I am all in favour of efforts to stop [pedophilia]. But how do we stop it without interfering with the rights of responsible adults. I think most of the damage comes from the fuss made by hysterical parents afterwards. If the kids don't mind, fair enough.'

> In recent years Clarke's name has been linked with two notorious pedophiles, one of whom - a Swiss millionaire - was kicked out of Sri Lanka on the orders of the president for abusing impoverished beach boys. He is now awaiting trial in Zurich accused of sexually abusing up to 1,500 young boys and like Clarke was friends with a lot of Sri Lanka's top politicians, senior policemen and influential government figures. Clarke is said to have attended parties at the tycoon's home. When asked if he had, Clarke replied: 'I may well have done. I mean the very first man I met here in 1954 was a pedophile and made no bones about it. He was in Intelligence in the army, a fantastic guy.' [57]

Media mogul Rupert Murdoch stopped his UK newspaper News of the World from breaking the story that Arthur C. Clarke was a pedophile - because he was friends with the pedophile.[58]

COVERUP TACTICS

The UK government employed dirty tactics to cover-up the Westminster pedophile story. Similar tactics were implemented in Belgium, Australia and the USA:

1. Label outspoken victims as liars, fantasists, and/or insane.
2. Frame victims with false arrest for fabricated crimes.
3. Label concern about, and investigation of, pedophilia and ritual abuse crimes 'Moral Panic' or 'Satanic Panic.'
4. Label all inquiry into adult male pedophiles with a penchant for boys, 'homophobia' and an 'abuse of human rights.'

The gay community must be proactive in distancing themselves from pedophiles who long ago equated the fight for gay rights with the fight for social and legal acceptance of pedophilia. Being gay does not automatically make a person a pedophile. Yet many equate being gay with being a pedophile, thanks to PIE and NAMBLA members who aligned themselves with gay activist groups in the 1970s and '80s. NAMBLA participated in gay pride marches. USA VIP trafficking victim David Shurter provided me with insight into this issue, and I hassled him to write a book about child trafficking and his experience and understanding of the gay lifestyle he lived. Shurter's insights may help combat the trend where VIP pedophiles suddenly come out as gay in reaction to being accused of violently raping children. The tactic of masking pedophilia allegations with cries of 'Homophobia!' worked for decades in Australia, UK and the USA - until Kevin Spacey tried it mid #MeToo movement. Note that PIE and NAMBLA never disbanded, they simply dove underground and employed more subtle ways of achieving their perceived right to rape children.

---

[56] Tracey Schaverien & Roger Insall (1998). 'Smirk of a pervert and a liar; Police Probe Links Clarke to International Child Sex Ring.' Sunday Mirror, 8 Feb.

[57] Sunday Mirror (1998). 'It Doesn't Do Any Harm...Most of the Damage Comes from Fuss Made by Hysterical Parents.' 1 Feb.

[58] Graham Johnson (2012). Hack: Sex, Drugs, and Scandal from Inside the Tabloid Jungle. Simon and Schuster.

AUSSIE BANKS: CIA MONEY LAUNDERERS

Australia is in the process of two federal investigations, the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse, and the Royal Commission into Misconduct in the Banking, Superannuation and Financial Services Industry. Only one of these investigations has shed any light on the global child trafficking network. On 5 April 2018, Nicole Rose, the newly appointed head of AUSTRAC (Australian Transaction Reports and Analysis Centre) addressed the Australian media:[59]

> I thought coming from the Australian Criminal Intelligence Commission that I had a pretty good handle on serious and organised crime side. I didn't appreciate the depth and breadth of involvement with private entities and banks. I didn't appreciate how many industries it does actually touch. There's a misperception that money laundering is a victimless white-collar crime that's probably just looking at tax avoidance - and it's not. It is criminal entities using financial institutions here and nationally to move criminal funds around our country and our financial system overseas. And it has a massive impact on everyday life. Whether that's child exploitation, serious and organised crime, drug importation - it all involves money laundering.

The Commonwealth Bank of Australia (CBA) was subsequently fined $700 million for almost 54,000 breaches of anti-money laundering and counterterrorism financing laws, including the laundering of proceeds from child sex trafficking, and the channelling of these funds into overseas terrorist organisations. This massive criminal operation involved 27 different groups or cells, each of which accessed a CBA account. Each of the 27 accounts was used for money laundering by multiple, possibly hundreds, of criminals, with each individual depositing amounts of over $10,000 into the automatic tellers per sitting. Police obtained footage of people sitting at tellers at night with large bags of cash, patiently feeding notes into the IDMs (Intelligent Deposit Machines).

About 80 percent of CBA-laundered money was obtained via drug trafficking, while the remaining 20 percent came from child sex trafficking (namely by Fijian nationals operating in far north Queensland). The CBA sting operation incorporated the biggest illicit drug bust in Australian history. This massive Perth, WA drug bust went unreported in the Australian media. And that is not all the government covered up. AUSTRAC cut short their investigation and action against the CBA because if they continued, the laundering operation was so massive the CBA would have run out of money paying the appropriate fines.

The most telling cover-up regarding the CBA case is that, while the CBA as an organisation was fined, law enforcement authorities never prosecuted the individual CBA employees identified as responsible for masterminding the laundering operation. Those offenders simply left the CBA to assume senior executive positions within other organisations. Police prosecutors claimed they had insufficient evidence to prosecute the executives, when they in fact possessed ample evidence. I suggest the true reason the DPP did not pursue the individuals responsible for these crimes is because the perpetrators were CIA agents, and the CBA money laundering operation was part of the CIA-coordinated global child and drug trafficking operation.

---

[59] Peter Ryan (2018). New AUSTRAC boss Nicole Rose shocked by 'depth and breadth' of money laundering, ABC News [Online], 5 April.

As I write, Westpac and the NAB (National Australia Bank) are under AUSTRAC investigation for the very same crimes.

2020 Update

Subsequent mainstream news articles confirm the accuracy of my 2019 writings:

Westpac braces for record fine over AUSTRAC scandal
Clancy Yeates, Sydney Morning Herald, 14 April 2020

> Westpac is setting aside enough money to cover what would be the biggest fine in Australian corporate history over a money laundering scandal that saw the country's oldest bank lose its chief executive and chairman. The bank on Tuesday said it had provisioned $900 million for its "potential liability" over the lawsuit launched last year by the financial intelligence agency, AUSTRAC...
>
> In its case against Westpac last year, AUSTRAC accused the bank of 23 million breaches of anti-money laundering and counter-terrorism finance laws, including failing to properly vet thousands of transactions that could be linked to child exploitation and live child sex shows in the Philippines and other parts of south-east Asia.

One of the Westpac customers paid someone in the Philippines who was later charged with ‘live streaming of child sex shows and offering children for sex.’

* * *

ASIO, ANSTO & the REDRESS SCHEME

In 2018, the Australian government initiated a Redress Scheme where child abuse victims could apply for a maximum $150k compensation for being abused at the hands of one or more government and/or private institutions named as perpetrators to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. The Redress Scheme prevents victims from taking further action against the institutions. It is the responsibility of individual institutions to submit to the Redress Scheme. For instance, the Roman Catholic Church dioceses signed up, but the individual Catholic Orders including the Salesian Priests who operated BoysTown did not. Signing up is basically an admission of responsibility on the institution’s part and indicates that victims reported that institution to the Child Abuse Royal Commission. Scrolling through the list of institutions who signed up to the redress scheme, my therapist and I were shocked to read the names ASIO and ANSTO.

2020 Update

The CSIRO have subsequently signed up to the Redress Scheme. Further, two Redress Scheme employees (a lawyer and a counsellor) told me they each had multiple child abuse victims name ASIO, the Australian Army, and other government institutions in their claims.

So, while I am overtly labelled nuts for my testimony, the government is covertly silencing the numerous other victims of ASIO child sex trafficking with pathetic payouts.

* * *

BABYLON WILL FALL

'Babylon' is the Biblical name of the 'great city that rules over the kings of the world' (Rev. 17:18). Babylon was and is a global political, financial and religious power system that rules the world. It is the Black Network, the Octopus, the Illuminati, the Luciferian Order headed by the Rothschild dynasty, administered by pedophile government officials, and policed by the CIA, Mossad, ASIO and MI6. The Bible describes Babylon as follows:

- The kings of the world have committed adultery with Babylon. (Rev 18:3)
- The merchants of the world have grown rich because of Babylon's desire for extravagant luxury. (18:3)
- Babylon brewed a cup of terror for others. (18:6)
- Babylon bought great quantities of human slaves. (18:11)
- The merchants of the world became wealthy by selling human slaves to Babylon. (18:15)
- Babylon's merchants are the greatest in the world. (18:23)
- Babylon deceived the nations with her sorceries. (18:23)

The 'merchants' are the world's richest and most powerful merchant bankers who trade in 'human slaves' including child sex slaves. The 'kings' are the pedophile world leaders who are compromised via child prostitutes. The 'cup of terror' refers to the CIA-created terror organisations being used to force countries to submit to Babylon. Revelation guarantees that Babylon will fall. The destruction of Babylon and her Luciferian pedophile associates will be quick and complete. My existence and endurance testify to this fact.

* * *

Royal Whitewash

My views on [child abuse memories] are very similar to those expressed in Justice Wood's 1997 Royal Commission report on the NSW Police, in a chapter on paedophilia.

- Campbell W. Perry, MK-ULTRA psychologist

THE CATALYST

My private session with the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse was scheduled for 3pm, 26 June 2013 at an inner Brisbane City hotel. My husband and I sat waiting in a hotel room when a young lawyer rushed in to greet us. Her arms cradled the 22-page written complaint I electronically submitted to the Commission, and remarked:

'You're obviously highly educated!'

'No,' I corrected her. 'I'm highly intelligent. I received an abysmal education. I taught myself everything I know.'

The lawyer led us into an adjacent hotel room where two commissioners stood to greet us. Federal court judge Jennifer Coate sat opposite me at a large round table. Child psychiatrist Helen Milroy sat to my right. The young female lawyer took her seat to my left. Judge Coate presided over our meeting. She began, 'We've read your comprehensive submission. It's good that you submitted this beforehand otherwise we would be spending the entire hearing relaying its contents. We gained the impression that your submission contains a selection of what you experienced and that you know a lot more.'

'Yes,' I agreed. 'There's much more. I selected the incidents where I could best identify a time, date and place. I also compiled this -...' With two hands, I purposefully placed a fat, well-organised folder on the table.' It contains some evidence to back up my complaint. Sorry about the hand-written contents page. I would normally type and reference everything better than this, but I only had a few days' notice that I would be attending today.'

The Australian public was given the impression that private sessions were a positive, cathartic experience where victims got to share their abuse in a supportive, non-judgemental environment. My experience was different to that. The next two hours felt more akin to a cross examination. It seemed Judge Coate was looking for holes in my testimony.

'That's good!' retired Tweed Heads Detective Frank Natoli exclaimed. 'It means they took you seriously. They were seeing how you'd hold up under cross examination.' He concluded, 'This Royal Commission is giving victims a false sense of hope. They won't investigate their complaints.'

Detective Natoli was right. The first thing Judge Coate told me was, 'Fiona, we're not here to redress current victims' complaints. We're here to do something for future victims.'

But current victims ARE the future! I thought. This is nothing but a collect-and-contain operation. A wave of determination washed over my being. I asked, 'What do you plan to do differently to avoid the pitfalls of the last child abuse royal commission?'

Judge Coate was taken aback. 'We're just at the information gathering stage. We haven't yet decided what we're going to do next.'

'I imagine you're overwhelmed at the response so far.'

The three women collectively sighed. We spent the next two hours exploring three separate but related matters:

1. How the NSW Education Department and NSW Police conspired to bury a pedophile ring operating within my local Tweed Shire.
2. My experiences as a victim of an international child sex trafficking ring.
3. How dirty police, Australia's Psychology Board, and Bond University conspired to simultaneously frame me as (a) an adult perpetrator instead of a child victim of my abuse (in which case my child abuse claims were true), and (b) psychotic because I said I was abused as a child (in which case my child abuse did not occur).

'You're obviously not psychotic,' Professor Milroy observed. 'Fiona, your submission was impressive and unique. What you wrote about Elizabeth Loftus and false memory syndrome: we weren't aware of any of that beforehand.'

I reiterated the scientific invalidation of Loftus' pro-pedophile writings that formed the basis of the previous Royal Commission's dismissal of witness testimonies like mine. 'God help me if I see Elizabeth Loftus in your report!' I warned. 'You need to stop universities teaching this rubbish. You need to stop health practitioners automatically labelling child abuse victims borderline personality disordered. That condition is often just a symptom of child abuse and it's - . . .'

'Recoverable?' Milroy offered.

'Y-yes,' I stared at her like a stunned mullet. 'The symptoms dissipate as the victim recovers her memories.' I remounted my soapbox, 'You need to stop the latest tactic being used against child abuse victims. They're using a study which claims that child abuse victims are more likely to become perpetrators, as grounds for accusing victims of being perpetrators. They've already tried to frame me as a perpetrator based on being a victim – so you'd better nip that one in the bud!'

My right hemisphere rapidly scanned and analysed the words, body language, eye appearance and micro facial expressions of the three panel members, and drew its conclusion: Milroy – empathic, intelligent, genuine, eye single, trustworthy. So, when the hotel room turned a fuzzy white and voices became like a faint echo in a dark cave, I turned to Milroy, stared into her red teary eyes and confessed: 'I'm dissociating.'

Hold it together, I told myself. You are here to give the children a voice. I continued, 'Detective Bob Sullivan of the NSW child protection squad told me in 2005 that only a Royal Commission had the power to investigate the Tweed Shire pedophile ring. Well, we have a Royal Commission – so let's investigate!'

Silence.

'Are you going to investigate my complaints?' I persisted.

Judge Coate ignored me.

I seized the commissioner's eye and demanded: 'Yes or no! Do you have the power and authority to investigate my complaints?'

The commissioner squared her body to mine, smiled bemusedly and coolly responded, 'Yes.'

'Right! That's one point. Secondly, is it within your terms of reference to make recommendations based on your investigations?'

'Yes,' she responded just as smoothly.

'Right!' I ran my finger across their collective presence and warned, 'I'm holding you to that. Investigate my complaints!'

I shuffled through my folder of evidence and pulled out a document. 'I've included a newspaper article about my university lecturer who was recently charged with sexually assaulting two children. Bond University published his pro-pedophile writings on their website. It says here:

> In his book Life of Crime,[60] Professor Wilson said that in the 'sizeable majority of incidents' adolescents were sexually provocative. 'My findings were remarkably similar to studies in California and Scandinavia which suggest child victims of adult sex offenders are generally willing or active participants, and that they not infrequently initiate the sexual relationship,' he wrote.

The Commissioners gasped.

'This is what students are being taught in our universities?' I raised my voice. 'It's not acceptable!' My heart beat faster as I pulled out another document. 'This is an email sent to me from Tor Neilsen saying he witnessed sixty children raped in the very same location where I witnessed the same people committing similar crimes! Tor and I independently reported our experiences to the police!' My frustration peaked as I turned to another section of my folder and tore out an illustration of the Order of the Eagle ritual banner. 'Look!' I thrust it at them. 'Look at this! I am the first person in the world to come forward and publish this! This was erected at every major pedophile ring meeting! Other victims out there must recognise this!' I tossed the drawing on the table.

Silence…

Finally, Jon spoke, 'Let's remember that there are victims who couldn't be here today . . .' his voice broke as tears welled in his eyes, 'because they didn't make it.'

More silence.

I continued, 'I've put my neck on the line time and time again for others.' I lowered my head and fought back tears as I uttered words that caused me immense pain. 'I've never asked for anything for myself…' I struggled to continue. 'But I'm asking you now – investigate my complaints.'

Pause.

'Fiona,' Commissioner Milroy spoke softly and pointed to my folder of evidence, 'first we have to read that.'

Silence.

'Fiona, you're obviously highly intelligent - . . .'

'So what?!' I snapped. 'What's the use of having intelligence when institutions continually prevent me from using it?! My life has been destroyed! They've continually ruined my finances, my health, my reputation - and now all prospects of employment!'

Silence.

'Fiona,' Judge Coat asked, 'Do you have any final questions?'

'Yes,' I wiped my tears and straightened my posture. 'What am I allowed to share with the public regarding what I experienced here today?'

The judge shifted awkwardly in her seat, 'You can't repeat anything you heard here.'

'Show me the legislation.'

'What?'

'The legislation,' my tone strengthened. 'Get me the legislation that states what you just said.'

---

[60] Paul Wilson (1990). A Life of Crime, Scribe.

The young lawyer's eyes widened. She dove into a pile of folders. Minutes later she read out the relevant section.

'Now,' I told Judge Coate, 'interpret that for me.'

Following Coate's explanation, I sought clarification, 'So, I own anything that I stated here and can share that with whoever I choose?'

Judge Coate nodded, 'That is correct.'

'But Fiona,' Professor Milroy interjected, 'you may be tested on how much what you say you said here indicates what we said.'

'Thank you,' I smiled. 'That was my next question.' Oh sure, I thought. As if the Royal Commission will spend public funds prosecuting a victim instead of investigating her complaints. What a great national news headline that would make. 'You'll have to excuse my audacity,' I offered, 'but that is what has sustained me.'

'Oh no, that's fine,' they all agreed.

It was time to go. I shook Milroy's hand, peered deep into her brown eyes and expressed, 'Thank you. I know you're genuine.'

'Fiona,' Milroy implored, 'keep making submissions.'

I mournfully shook my head, 'What's the use?'

I met Judge Coate's handshake which was so firm I was reminded of the western ritual where men shake hands to establish dominance. I stared defiantly into her right eye and returned her grip with enough strength to make my point but without committing an offence.

As I exited the room, the panel members stretched, sighed heavily and exchanged looks which said, that was intense!

Jon and I had barely exited the room when he, grinning from ear to ear proudly exclaimed, 'Oh, Fi! Milroy would have employed you on the spot! Well done!'

We were escorted into yet another hotel room where a government appointed psychologist waited to debrief me. I engaged in half an hour of intellectual discussion before tiring of it. You must let yourself break, Fiona, my brain warned me. You need to feel the emotion before you leave.

'They're not going to do a thing,' I complained. 'This is a whitewash! And I knew it would be. I knew not to get my hopes up. But still I did. A small part of me hoped that there would be justice for me. I've never asked for much -. . .' I lowered my head as my whole being convulsed in emotional release. I wept sorely from some hidden chasm of despair. Minutes passed before I gathered myself enough to speak again. 'I just thought that maybe. . . just maybe. . . for once something might be done for me. But I was wrong. There's a part of me, buried deep within that's reserved solely for justice. That part of me opened today for the very first time, but it just got shut right back down again.'

I did not realise it at the time, but a poorly sutured invisible wound was tearing open. My session with the Royal Commission sparked a crazy chain reaction of events including going public, delivering a national press conference, re-entering intensive therapy, making police witness statements, speaking at an international conference, and writing this book.

* * *

AUSTRALIA'S 'SATANIC PANIC'

A tightly organised, mafia-style, hierarchically structured crime syndicate has infiltrated every aspect of Australian government and society including the judiciary, churches, law enforcement, military, child protection, hospitals, educational facilities, childcare centres, and Parliament. The network has numerous branches and countless members who profit from various illegal activities including drugs, arms and child sex trafficking. It is a well-oiled clandestine machine fuelled by public ignorance and distraction. Detecting members of this system and their tactics is like driving a new model of car: you suddenly notice all the other cars on the road of the same make and model.

Ritual Abuse (aka RA, Cult Abuse, Satanic Ritual Abuse, SRA) constitutes one facet of the child trafficking machine. The Australian media has reported on RA cases, although references are limited and difficult to locate. Reporting of these cases peaked in the mid-1990s during the Wood Royal Commission.

DAMAGE CONTROL PSYCHOLOGICAL OPERATION

The CIA adopted a multi-pronged approach to bury the epidemic of SRA reports and control the Australian narrative. Here is a summary of their tactics:

- Establish a bogus investigation, to gather and contain victims and their evidence.
- Assassinate all network perpetrators who risked exposing the trafficking operation.
- Focus the entire scandal on a handful of outed, now conveniently dead, scapegoats.
- Muddy the waters by labelling the pursuit of pedophile crimes ‘homophobia’ and ‘moral panic.’
- Devise a bogus disorder to label and denigrate victims and their therapists with.
- Conduct bogus research to support the bogus disorder.
- Recruit dirty doctors and hired guns to defend the bogus disorder in the media and courtrooms.
- Create derogative newspeak to mock, devalue and discredit victims and their witness testimony; e.g., ‘conspiracy theorist’ and ‘hysterical.’
- Recruit agent journalists to promote the cover-narrative in the mainstream media.
- Support subsequent findings of bogus investigation with bogus disorder and research.
- Have perpetrator academics teach the bogus research and bogus disorder in universities to perpetuate the lie, deter future therapists from understanding the truth, and forever conceal the child trafficking operation.
- Restrict therapists from working with victims of extreme abuse, via new Health Board policy preventing such, and policing, which targets dissident therapists for deregistration.

PEDOPHILIA OBJECTION is NOT HOMOPHOBIA

‘Homophobia’ is the propaganda angle the CIA chose to defend and bury allegations of government involvement in child sex trafficking. Hence the CIA-infiltrated Australian media subtly shifted reader focus from revelations of ritual abuse and VIP pedophilia – to accusations of ‘homophobia’ and minority rights violations. VIP pedophiles routinely ‘came out’ as gay to distract attention from child rape allegations.

‘METAPHOR FOR INCEST’

Early 1990s disclosures of ritual abuse and mind control were labelled a ‘metaphor for incest’ by Australia’s most recognised DID expert Warrick Middleton. ‘Metaphor for incest’ is precisely what Gold Coast Hospital head psychiatrist Dr Flanagan parroted at me in 1991. Flanagan and Middleton worked together for the Queensland Health Department. In 1995, journalist Richard Guilliatt quoted Middleton in his article which cast doubt over the validity of ritual abuse testimony:

> 'I believe it is a metaphor,' argues Dr Warwick Middleton, a Brisbane psychiatrist specialising in trauma. 'It re-creates in the present a scenario that evokes the helplessness of the past.' [61]

Warrick Middleton failed to provide any scientific research to back his opinion that victims' torturous PTSD flashbacks are merely metaphors. Metaphor is best treated by academia rather than psychiatry. Here is my critique of Guilliatt's 1995 introduction of the CIA's new narrative to discredit the wave of SRA reports:

> Therapy in Turmoil: The Memory Controversy
> Richard Guilliatt, Sydney Morning Herald, 1 February 1995.
>
> In a bizarre modern phenomenon, hundreds of women are dredging up lost memories of childhood abuse involving blood, sex and devil worship. The accusations are criminal – but investigators have never proven a case of Satanic ritual abuse.

[Persuasive, misleading reporting. WA police proved and convicted a case of SRA in 1991. Sydney investigators actively buried SRA reports.]

> By the late 1980s, this phenomenon had spread to both Europe and Australia, most notably with the 'Mr Bubbles' case in Sydney, when staff of the Seabeach Kindergarten in northern Sydney were arrested and accused of occult sexual abuse. Therapists, private investigators and police began telling the media this was a problem of great consequence, and a four-part report on Channel 10 in late 1990 prompted police to form a taskforce…
>
> In Australia, the Mr Bubbles case collapsed from lack of evidence. Although the principal defendant in the Mr Bubbles case, Anthony Deren, later confessed to fondling adolescent girls earlier in his life, the evidence of occultism amounted to a handful of anti-Satanic books in his home and the fact that children at Seabeach chanted Ram-Sam-Sam, a common children's song…

[Police sabotaged the case and omitted crucial evidence from court. The DPP prevented Professor Kim Oates (head of the Child Protection Unit at the Camperdown Children's Hospital) testifying that his hospital staff found 5 children were sexually abused at Seabeach Kindergarten. The children reported Luciferian chanting, not 'common' harmless preschool songs as the agent-journalist persuades the reader to conclude.]

> Although Satanic abuse stories are not as common in Australia as in the US, one Sydney rape counsellor estimates from her contact with therapists that about 300 women in NSW are being treated for ritual abuse. That estimate is supported by the Herald's own calls to 'survivor' groups, therapists and sexual assault workers. Phoenix Van Dyke, the [61] Richard Guilliatt (1995). Therapy in Turmoil: The Memory Controversy. Sydney Morning Herald, 1 February.

---

> organiser of the ritual abuse support group Beyond Survivors, says she has been in contact with more than 200 women who believe they are survivors. The Sydney Rape Crisis Centre has had more than 100 cases in recent years and one major Sydney hospital about 30.
>
> To believe these women, one would have to accept NSW has been permeated by brutal Satanic cults since at least the late `60s, a network of evil which has indulged in murder, prostitution, child pornography and other crimes without leaving evidence…

[‘To believe’ is persuasive language. NSW Police buried the evidence, ambushed victims’ homes, removed kids from whistle-blowers.]

> One middle-ground view of these stories is that satanic abuse ‘memories,’ although not literally true, may be a way for incest victims to symbolically represent the evil done to them. ‘I believe it is a metaphor,’ argues Dr Warwick Middleton, a Brisbane psychiatrist specialising in trauma. ‘It re-creates in the present a scenario that evokes the helplessness of the past.’

[Middleton presented subjective opinion and did not substantiate it with scientific evidence.]

> But others are beginning to view Satanic ritual abuse as simply a form of mass hysteria sparked by a confluence of events in the early 1980s – growing public alarm about child abuse, the rise of support groups and alternative counselling, the influence of Christian fundamentalism in the US and the popularity of ‘confessional’ TV chat shows such as Oprah, which have given unquestioning coverage to stories of Satanism.

[Vague inference. There is no clarification of ‘others,’ their qualifications or associations. This is CIA propaganda aimed at swaying the reader’s opinion.]

> Therapists are now grappling with the vexed question of whether Satanic abuse survivors are mentally ill people suffering delusions, vulnerable people influenced by their therapists or actual incest victims who have wildly distorted their abuse. If the latter is true, how many of their memories are reliable, and how can a therapist possibly determine what is fact and what is fantasy? Remarkably, however, this debate appears to be completely bypassing many of the therapists, child abuse workers and sexual assault counsellors who have banded together to combat ritual abuse. After years of exposure to abuse cases, these counsellors are adamant that there is nothing unbelievable about the vivid detail of the stories they are hearing, and many view the current debate as a ‘backlash’ against their cause.

[The agent-journalist does not clarify how many and which ‘therapists’ he refers to, apart from Middleton who states an unproven opinion. He then introduces CIA concept that victims are ‘deluded,’ ‘fantasists,’ their memories ‘unreliable.’ He is using the NLP equivalent of writing, by repeating the word ‘unreliable.’]

> Among some survivors and even therapists, the ‘backlash’ and the failure of police investigations are now cited as examples of the diabolical cleverness of Satanic cults, > whose influence reputedly extends to the top of our society. 'It's very deliberately instigated by people who have an enormous amount to lose,' says Janet. 'I think it's much more than a backlash … it's actually orchestrated by ritual abuse perpetrators as a way of discrediting survivors.'

[Repeatedly placing quotation marks around the word 'backlash' is designed to persuade the reader to disagree with the professional's testimony that she experienced a backlash.]

> This view has been fuelled by allegations, currently under investigation, that NSW police have been bribed by pedophiles. One therapist claims to have seen infra-red Federal Police photographs of nocturnal forest rituals. A Child Protection Services official talks about covens meeting around Australia on certain days of the year. Even the official NSW Government booklet on ritual abuse – distributed to hundreds of health workers since 1993 – dismisses the growing body of contrary evidence as an example of society's collective 'denial.'

[The agent-journalist's choice of the word 'fuelled' is subjective persuasive writing, not objective news reporting. His placing quotation marks around the word 'denial' again persuades the reader to disbelieve the therapist's witness testimony.]

Richard Guilliatt is still writing newspaper articles that subtly undermine the credibility of ritual abuse victims. His 2017 hit piece in The Australian targeted me.[62]

WOOD ROYAL COMMISSION

The 'investigation' referred to in the above article was the Royal Commission into the New South Wales Police Service (aka, Wood Royal Commission) which operated from 13 May 1994 to 30 Jun 1997. Justice James Roland Wood was appointed commissioner. The purpose of the investigation was to examine allegations of systemic and entrenched corruption within the NSW Police, namely that police were protecting pedophiles, and that some police were themselves involved in pedophile activities and ritual abuse. The Wood Royal Commission was to specifically examine multiple allegations of Satanic Ritual Abuse at Sydney's Seabeach Kindergarten.

The Wood Royal Commission was sparked by complaints from politician Diedre Grusovin regarding reports of a child trafficking network involving not just police, but politicians, churches, child welfare services, juvenile detention centres, the Education Department, media moguls, and entertainers. The trafficking operation involved the ritual abuse of children who were pimped to Kings Cross brothels. The following Legislative Council document (dated 10 October 1990, p.8046) recorded Grusovin's complaint:

> SATANISM
>
> The Hon. E.P. PICKERING: On 12th September Reverend the Hon. F.J. Nile asked a question regarding Satanism. The answer is as follows:
>
> 1. Yes.
> 2. No. The Hon. Deirdre Grusovin alluded to a network of pedophiles and said that established networks, such as Satanists, could also be involved in these practices.

---

[62] Richard Guilliatt (2017). 'Those Events Never Happened.' The Australian, 30 September.

3. I can assure the House that any allegations of child abuse or Satanism are and will continue to be thoroughly investigated by the New South Wales Police Service.

WONDERFUL WOLLONGONG

Commissioner Wood chose Wollongong as his focus case because he had a big bloody mess to cover up:

> For those whose memories do not extend back to the mid-1990s, Arena was a Labor politician in the NSW upper house, who gained national attention in 1996 when she named two people – retired judge David Yeldham and former state MP Frank Arkell – as potential pedophiles. At the time, a royal commission into the NSW Police Service headed by Justice James Wood was in full swing, but Arena and others believed it was not doing enough to look at people in high places. Along with fellow Labor MP Deirdre Grusovin, Arena promised to name at least two Sydney men in a parliamentary speech, and the next day asked why the commission had not investigated Yeldham or Arkell.[63]
>
> Ordinarily, such allegations would have been met with probably successful defamation actions, but Arena spoke with the protection of parliamentary privilege, protecting her from being sued. Her speech caused an uproar and both men denied being pedophiles. But before long, Yeldham was revealed to have lived a double life as a homosexual, and he took his own life on November 4, 1996. Arkell was horrifically murdered on June 26, 1998, a fortnight after another Illawarra man, David O'Hearn, was killed in equally brutal fashion in his Albion Park home. The perpetrator in both cases was a 19-year-old, Mark Valera, who claimed that both men had propositioned him sexually, and that he had been abused by his own father.

Frank Arkell (Wollongong mayor), David O'Hearn (Wollongong shopkeeper), and Trevor John Parkin were ritually murdered. Parkin and O'Hearn were disembowelled. O'Hearn was decapitated and his severed hand used to draw an inverted cross, pentagram, and the word 'SATAN' on his walls.[64]

> Gareth Robinson: Wollongong's daily newspaper has been having a look. The Illawarra Mercury has published a series of stories about the secret lives of some of the city fathers, stories about a child sex ring, about priests and teachers abusing trust. There have been claims of satanic abuse, none ever proven, [note the same subjective persuasive comment.] and a string of convictions in the courts…The line of inquiry into Wollongong itself runs long and deep. What was revealed at the Royal Commission goes back many years, to another Mayor. He was Tony Bevan, a pilot, property developer, and one-time owner of Bevan's Real Estate Agency… There were complaints that Tony Bevan was having sex with young boys… Tony Bevan, who was known to offer boys the thrill of a ride in the plane he flew on regular shark patrols.
> Victim: [Tony Bevan] started to take me up to the [Kings] Cross, which was during the week and every weekend.

---

[63] Ian Kirkwood (2015). Franca Arena was Right on the Mark. Newcastle Herald, 30 October.

[64] ABC Radio National (1998). Wonderful Wollongong. Sunday, 30 August.

These men were part of the Luciferian pedophile network that ritually abused and sex trafficked boys to the Kings Cross brothels. Incidentally, I witnessed children dropped by air into the shark infested waters to deter others from whistleblowing against the CIA trafficking network.

‘FALSE MEMORY SYNDROME’

> In 1993, Dr Corydon Hammond, a professor at the University of Utah’s School of Medicine, conducted a seminar on federally funded mind control experiments. Topics covered by Hammond included brainwashing, post-hypnotic programming and the induction of multiple personalities by the CIA. Hammond contended that the cult underground has roots in Nazi Germany, and that the CIA’s cult mind control techniques were based upon those of Nazi scientists recruited by the CIA for Cold Warfare. (Researcher Lenny Lapon estimates in Mass Murderers in White Coats that 5,000 Nazis resettled in the US after WWII.) Hammond was forced to drop this line of inquiry by professional ridicule, especially from the CIA’s False Memory Syndrome Foundation, and a barrage of death threats. At a recent regional conference on ritual child abuse, he regretted that he could no longer speak on the theme of government mind control.[65]

MK-ULTRA child rapist and killer Martin Orne cofounded the False Memory Syndrome Foundation. The concept of ‘false memory’ was in fact the brainchild of Lt. Col. Michael Aquino, the US Army Intelligence Officer who headed Psychological Operations. In classic PsyOp style, Aquino appeared on Oprah dressed in theatrical pop-satanism garb, to muddy the waters after multiple children identified him as a Luciferian pedophile. Aquino was implicated in every major USA case involving CIA child trafficking, ritual abuse and MK-ULTRA mind control, including the McMartin Preschool, Presidio Preschool, and Franklin scandals.

Aquino and Orne’s False Memory Syndrome Foundation (FMSF) and its Australian counterpart (AFMA) were formed specifically to counter the tidal wave of disclosure by victims of CIA child trafficking and Project MK-UKLTRA which began in the 1980s and peaked in the early 1990s before the CIA effectively shut it down. The FMSF Board comprised of former CIA and military doctors with backgrounds in behaviour modification - not ritual abuse.[66] All members were accused pedophiles and/or CIA perpetrators. Like PIE, the FMSF offered legal support to accused pedophiles. Here are some facts about key False Memory associates:

USA ‘FALSE MEMORY SYNDROME’ FOUNDATION (FMSF)

Martin T. Orne (Founder)

- Senior CIA MK-ULTRA psychiatrist.
- Raped and murdered countless MK-ULTRA child subjects.
- Co-Director, Unit for Experimental Psychiatry, University of Pennsylvania.
- Editor in chief, International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis (1961 to 1992).

---

[65] Alex Constantine (1995). Psychic Dictatorship in the USA. Feral House.

[66] Alex Constantine (1995). Psychic Dictatorship in the USA. Feral House.

- Experimented in hypnotic programming and dissolving memory.
- Defence psychiatrist (with Lois Jolyon West) for 1976 Patty Hearst trial.

Aaron T. Beck

- MK-ULTRA psychologist.
- Father of Clinical Psychology and CBT.

Elizabeth Loftus

- Conducted unethical bogus research, fabricated statistics, generalised narrow findings to population at large.
- Successfully sued twice for lying about child abuse victims.
- Avoided psychology deregistration by resigning.

Ralph Underwager

- Psychiatrist discredited in US courts.
- Told Amsterdam pedophile magazine journalist it is 'God's will' and 'responsible' for adults to rape children.
- Told British reporters in 1994 that 'scientific evidence' proved 60% of all women molested as children believed the experience was 'good for them.'

Hollida Wakefield-Underwager

- Ralph Underwager's wife.

Peter and Pamela Freyd

- Psychiatrists.
- Stepsiblings who married.
- Peter was sexually abused at age 11 and later prostituted himself.
- Accused of incest by their daughter.

Harold Lief

- Former Army Major in Medical Corps.
- Close colleague of Martin Orne.
- MK-ULTRA psychiatrist experimented with behaviour modification and hypnosis programming at the University of Pennsylvania's Unit for Experimental Psychiatry.
- Employed by the Freyds to retrospectively diagnose their adult daughter as a 'fantasist' for accusing them of incest, after he joined the FMSF, and when he was not Jennifer Freyd's doctor. He made this diagnosis after Jennifer had qualified as a PhD psychologist and university lecturer, and after she outed her parents during a 1993 conference presentation.

David Dinges

- Co-Director of University of Pennsylvania's Unit for Experimental Psychiatry with Martin Orne.

Margaret Singer

- Testified (with Louis Jolyon West and Martin Orne) in the Patty Hearst trial.
- Experts on cults and brainwashing.
- Investigated techniques used by North Koreans against American soldiers.
- Collaborated with CIA doctor Richard Ofshe.[67]

---

[67] R.J. Ofshe & M.T. Singer (1994). Recovered-memory therapy and robust repression: influence and pseudomemories. International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, October, 42:4, 391-408.

Campbell W. Perry
- Australian hypnosis expert.
- MK-ULTRA psychologist.

AUSTRALIAN FALSE MEMORY ASSOCIATION

Michael Cox (President)
- Accused by daughter of sexual abuse.
- Convicted of raping two stepsons (his conviction was typically overturned on technicality).
- President CAFSA (Citizens Against False Sexual Allegations; CAFSA knowingly employed convicted pedophile Bob Dutton; CAFSA was supported by MK-ULTRA hypnotist Peter W. Sheehan.

Robert Stanley (President)
- Member International Society of Hypnosis.
- Deregistered by Psychology Board for having sex with a client who died shortly after.[68]

Graham Dene Burrows
- Order of Australia Medal.
- Authored books on hypnosis.
- Provided reference in failed attempt to reinstate associate Robert Stanley's psychology registration.
- Photographed hosting Martin Orne at his home on 22 August 1979.
- Victorian Medical Board reluctantly 'investigated' him in 2011 after the media reported they had received 100 complaints about him in three days.[69] (Used patient as guinea pig, resulting in suicide. Destroyed patient medical file to prevent investigation into his over-prescription of drugs causing kidney failure.)
- Retrospectively diagnosed father as mentally ill and so not responsible for throwing his four-year-old off a bridge.[70] (Criticised by presiding judge. Accused of concocting the evidence by MP who demanded the University of Melbourne sack him.)

Jerome Gelb
- Co-founded the AFMA in consultation with FMSF.
- Branded 'mentally unstable' after bringing a loaded handgun to court. A subsequent police raid found a cache of illegal weapons (800 rounds, guns, knives, cattle prod) stored in his home.[71]

Edward Ogden
- Worked for the Victorian Police Force (who were outed by Dr Reina Michaelson as Luciferian pedophiles).
- Said, 'Mind-control is a fantasy of the Cold War.'
- Involved in various drug experiments.

---

[68] Psychologists Registration Board of Victoria (2003). Hearing Re: Robb Stanley, 16 June.

[69] Lucie van den Berg (2011). Heat turns on Melbourne University Professor amid allegations. Herald Sun, 23 June.

[70] Selma Milovanovic (2011). Expert witness in Freeman case should be sacked: MP. The Age, 12 May.

[71] Renee Switzer (2007). Armed shrink 'unstable mentally.' Sydney Morning Herald, 3 February.

David Millikan

- ‘Cult investigator’ who said, ‘only middle-class people join cults.’
- Worked for the ABC with Nevill Drury.
- Co-authored ABC book with Drury promoting Christianity and New Age compatibility.
- Drury was a Luciferian and Shaman who took LSD at the Esalen Institute.
- Drury promoted Michael Aquino.
- Drury wrote the only authoritative biography of Rosaleen Norton, the notorious 1950s-60s ‘Witch of Kings Cross’ who worshipped Pan, Hecate, Lilith and Lucifer, and practised Kundalini yoga, out-of-the-body trance exploration, and Aleister Crowley’s Thelemic sex magick.

Jan Groenveld

- ‘Investigated cults’ with David Millikan.
- Daughter is a Satanic Ritual Abuse victim.
- CAN (Cult Awareness Network) member with MK-ULTRA US Army doctor Col. Louis Jolyon West (my perpetrator).
- Founded Australia’s Cult Awareness Information Centre.
- Trained in MK-ULTRA developed Neuro Linguistic Programming.
- Influenced by Steven Alan Hassan (CAN member mentored by NLP creator John Grinder).

Yolande Lucire

- Demonstrated a Scientology approach to psychiatric medication.
- Agreed to not administer psychiatric treatment to a Scientologist’s daughter who consequently killed her father.
- Member Australia’s Cult Awareness Information Centre.

PETER & PAMELA FREYD

The Freyds were stepsiblings who married. They coined the term ‘false memory syndrome’ in response to being accused of sexually abusing their daughter Dr Jennifer Freyd, a University of Oregon Psychology Professor who outed them at a 1993 mental health conference in Ann Arbor, Michigan. On 17 April 1995, Peter Freyd’s brother William wrote an open letter to WGBH-Boston, criticising the TV station’s inexplicable bias in favour of the False Memory Syndrome Foundation:

> There is no doubt in my mind that there was severe abuse in the home of Peter and Pam…The False Memory Syndrome Foundation is a fraud designed to deny a reality that Peter and Pam have spent most of their lives trying to escape.[72]

Ralph Underwager was a founding FMSF member. In June 1991, Joseph Geraci, Editor-in-Chief of the pro-pedophilia publication, Paidika: The Journal of Paedophilia interviewed Ralph Underwager in Amsterdam. During this interview, Geraci asked Underwager, ‘Is choosing pedophilia for you a responsible choice for the individual?’ Underwager responded:

> Certainly, it is responsible. What I have been struck by as I have come to know more about and understand people who choose paedophilia is that they let themselves be > too much defined by other people. That is usually an essentially negative definition. Pedophiles spend a lot of time and energy defending their choice. I don't think that a pedophile needs to do that. Pedophiles can boldly and courageously affirm what they choose. They can say that what they want is to find the best way to love. I am also a theologian and as a theologian, I believe it is God's will that there be closeness and intimacy, unity of the flesh, between people. A pedophile can say: 'This closeness is possible for me within the choices that I've made.' Pedophiles are too defensive. They go around saying, 'You people out there are saying that what I choose is bad, that it's no good. You're putting me in prison, you're doing all these terrible things to me. I have to define my love as being in some way or other illicit.' What I think is that pedophiles can make the assertion that the pursuit of intimacy and love is what they choose. With boldness, they can say, 'I believe this is in fact part of God's will.' They have the right to make these statements for themselves as personal choices. Now, whether or not they can persuade other people they are right is another matter.

---

[72] Valerie Sinason (2018). Memory in Dispute. Routledge.

'MR BUBBLES' RITUAL ABUSE CASE

Ralph Underwager gave crucial evidence in Australia's notorious 'Mr Bubbles' case in which children were sexually and ritually abused while attending Sydney's Seabeach Kindergarten. Underwager was interviewed by Australia's 60 Minutes in an episode, Witness for Mr Bubbles, which aired 5 August 1990. Reporter Mike Munro stated:

> Six weeks ago (17 June 1990) we brought you a story that a number of people, including some in high places, wanted to keep secret: the case against Mr Bubbles. In that report, parents named Tony Deren as the man who had sexually assaulted their children. Deren's wife ran the kindergarten they attended. Tonight, we investigate another crucial aspect of this disturbing case. You remember, police listed seventeen young victims, and more than fifty (54) criminal charges were eventually laid. But when the Mr Bubbles case went to court, not one of the children was called to give evidence. The charges were thrown out, and Tony Deren was set free.
>
> One of the key Deren witnesses was a hired gun from the United States, a psychologist named Ralph Underwager, who says he's an expert in child sexual abuse. He testified that the children's evidence had been contaminated, and they were too young to know what the truth was… This is Ralph Underwager, psychologist. He was paid $25,000 and gave crucial evidence in favour of Tony Deren; evidence which helped Deren walk free… Always the same story: three and four-year-olds being lured into bubble baths with a man who sexually abused them.
>
> Professor Kim Oates: Having examined them, and talked with them, I'm absolutely convinced the children were sexually abused.
> Reporter: There's absolutely no doubt?
> Oates: No doubt at all
> Reporter: That's the evidence Professor Kim Oates wanted to give in court. But he was never asked. As head of the Child Protection Unit at the Camperdown Children's Hospital in Sydney, he's known around the world as an expert in detecting child sexual abuse.

Reporter: So, we have 18 children who were examined, five of whom your staff say were definitely sexually abused, and all of them from the same preschool. What's your reaction to that?
Oates: Well, I think if you look at the incidence of significant child sexual abuse in the community, significant enough to lay physical findings in the preschool age group, I think it's extraordinary.
Reporter: This is Debbie's medical report. Once again, it was positive; there was sexual abuse.
Debbie's Mother: I was entirely spun out on that because I, at that point, had been trying to tell myself that, no, this wasn't happening, it wasn't true, who would interfere with my child.
2nd Child: (wasn't identified): I put some things in his body, and he put some things in my body, but I didn't want him to.
Reporter: Cindy's medical report confirms she was abused. The doctor found signs consistent with traumatic dilatation of the anus… This is Boroko Court House, Port Moresby, New Guinea. In 1972, Deren was brought here, charged with the aggravated assault of two young girls. He'd interfered with them in a swimming pool. Something Deren admits. And both charges were proven. There's no doubt scores of questions remain unanswered in the Mr Bubbles case, and some of them relate to Ralph Underwager, the expert witness Tony Deren paid to testify on his behalf. Ralph Underwager was imperative to Tony Deren's defence. As a supposed independent expert, he testified that the evidence of the Bubbles children had become contaminated. And, they were too young to understand their duty to tell the truth. But, here in America, we've certainly discovered Underwager's reputation and credentials aren't all they're cracked up to be.
Dr Salter: Well, he is someone who makes his living going around the country and testifying against children in child sexual abuse cases. He says the same thing in essentially every case. Which is every…
Reporter: And Anna Salter knows what she's talking about. A PhD from Harvard, and a master's degree in Early Childhood. She says young children can be believed.
Dr Salter: This is consistent with the literature. If you look at what is the best legal textbook in the country today on children as witnesses, 'Child Witness: Theory and Practice,' Malcolm Meyers says clearly children as young as three can comprehend the duty to tell the truth.
Reporter: And this man is a highly respected legal scholar in America?
Dr Salter: I think he's fairly clearly the chief leading scholar on child sexual abuse in the country.
Reporter: Six American states have given Dr Salter a grant to check Underwager's methods in court. And what did she find?
Dr Salter: That he isn't accurate. That what he says in court does not necessarily fairly represent the literature.
Reporter: He distorts the facts?
Dr Salter: Uh, frequently. Sometimes he quotes specific studies, and he's frequently wrong about what the studies say.
Reporter: So, we thought we'd get Dr Salter to analyse the evidence Underwager gave under oath at the Mr Bubbles hearing, where he testified his qualifications had never > been questioned. But in an American case, the Swann case, this is what the courts said about Mr Underwager.

> Dr Salter: The court remains convinced the psychologist did not have the qualifications to testify as a doctor. The trial court ruled that the psychologist's proposed testimony was not proper because there was no indication that the results of the doctor's work had been accepted in the scientific community.
> Reporter: In the Mr Bubbles case, he said his qualifications were never in question… Now, the second incident, in the Mr Bubbles case, was where Underwager said that 90 percent of accusations against child molesters are wrong. Now, is that backed up scientifically?
> Dr Salter: No, that's gobbledegook. I don't know of any study that would support that…
> Reporter: Ralph Underwager was hired to defend Polly's father. And as usual, he testified that nothing had happened. It was all a delusion, and Polly had simply made the whole story up. But then, Underwager was cross-examined by Polly's lawyer, Eric Vaughan.
> Lawyer: He used the theory that it was a delusion of the child that she was doing a favour for the mother by saying this happened when it really didn't happen, to gain the favour and to be the apple of the eye of the mother.
> Reporter: A delusion that she was continually raped over four days.
> Lawyer: That's right.
> Reporter: The jury took only an hour to decide Polly Barnes was telling the truth, and that Ralph Underwager's testimony that nothing had happened, could be ignored. In fact, Underwager's evidence was rejected so much, the jury awarded Polly three and a quarter million dollars… So, while Underwager was being rejected here in America, he had no such trouble at the Mr Bubbles hearing in Australia where he testified that the children were too young to tell the truth… Ralph Underwager has testified for the defendants in about 400 child abuse cases.

WOOD RC COVERUP

The Royal Commission into the NSW Police Service Final Report was published on 1 May 1997. Three volumes of this report were devoted to pedophilia inquiries. Volume Four, Chapter 5 (pp.99 -116) were solely devoted to the subject of Ritual Abuse. At the end of this chapter, Commissioner James Wood concluded:

> 5.13 From a common sense perspective, while it must be recognised that apparently respectable and successful members of the community do commit child sexual abuse, a quantum leap in credibility is required to suppose that they would do so in the bizarre, ritualistic way described, which includes the infliction of serious, even fatal, injury and mutilation upon their own children.

James Wood's examination of Ritual Abuse amounted to a blatantly biased white washing. Wood devoted the entire content of Chapter 5 of his report to discrediting victims, parroting critics' unscientific reasons for why Ritual Abuse does not exist in Australia, excluding the evidence for Ritual Abuse's existence, and listing alternative possible reasons – none scientifically evidenced – for the epidemic of SRA reports in Australia. James Wood's list of alternative explanations included:

- Mental illness
- Substance abuse history
- Urban legend
- 'Metaphor for incest'
- Lying to get compensation
- Exposure to ritual themes in books, film or television.

Concerning the last point, Forensic Psychology academics told my post graduate class the media do not influence people's thinking and behaviour. Horror movies, violent video games and rock music do not influence people to commit heinous crimes. By contrast, Wood claimed film and television influence people to believe that heinous crimes have been perpetrated against them.

In his Final Report, Commissioner Wood declared that Ritual Abuse does not exist from a law enforcement perspective because:

1. Rarely, if ever, are bodies of the 'victims' or their graves found, nor do neighbours, friends or relatives report children missing in the numbers required to account for the allegations;
2. there is rarely, if ever, any evidence of the kind which can be confirmed by modern forensic technology;
3. signs of physical injury in the form of scarring, burns and the like, are not found upon medical examination of 'victims' who report torture of the most extreme and prolonged kind; more often than not the medical examination fails to confirm the abuse as alleged;
4. in cases of criminal conspiracy, inter-group jealousies or disputes inevitably develop and throw up an informant. In cases of RA, this rarely if ever occurs. Similarly, a co-conspirator who is otherwise in trouble, and prepared to supply information in return for an immunity or assistance in sentencing, rarely emerges;
5. again, contrary to experience with child sexual abuse generally, most of the offenders are reported to be females;
6. although many 'victims' claim that photographs are taken and videotapes made of the activity, visual records of the kind are rarely found, nor does the large amount of child pornography in circulation portray the bizarre and ritualistic activities described; and
7. so many people tell the same story and allege the involvement of so many others in the events that it is difficult to see how there could not be independent evidence, or knowledge of it on the part of persons outside the alleged rings.

I will address James Wood's seven points:

1a. Bodies and graves are indeed found. Police and doctors who are part of the trafficking Network write bogus reports to coverup the deaths. I witnessed Leonas Petrauskas write a fake death certificate saying a child was stung by a blue bottle, to cover Paul Keating's crime. When I made a witness statement to Terry Frost at Tweed Heads Police, he said my accounts matched numerous 'unsolved murders' in the Sydney areas I named, and he would urgently send my statement to Sutherland detectives.

b. Most bodies are disposed of. I witnessed bodies being fed to dogs, cremated in factory furnaces, dissolved in chemical pools, and thrown from a helicopter into the ocean.

Bodies are commonly fed to pigs (Paul Keating had a pig farm). I am sure you can think of a few other ways of disposing of dead bodies. Just watch TV for inspiration…

c. Most child murder victims are bred by cult members and slave breeders for the purpose of ritual sacrifice. Their births are never registered. Many children are legally stolen from parents via Child Protective Services. Thousands of babies were stolen from 'unfit' mothers and 'adopted.' Many children are trafficked by pedophile parents, and when the innocent parents find out and report the matter to police, dirty cops write bogus reports against the innocent parents who subsequently lose custody of the child victims. I later received a call from a lawyer who told me the Sutherland detective in charge of my case covered up the sex trafficking of her client's son in this manner.

d. My cult grandparents' neighbour who resided at 12 McAlister Ave was also a cult member. His obese wife 'committed suicide' after she had a nervous breakdown following the multiple 'cot deaths' of her young children. I witnessed one of these 'cot deaths' when I was five years old. The preschool boy was ritually sacrificed by the neighbour and my step-grandfather in the front room of the neighbour's house. Leonas Petrauskas wrote the death certificate.

2. Again, there certainly is evidence. Network members in positions of authority routinely fabricate circumstances surrounding victims' deaths. Doctors and police routinely falsify death certificates and police reports. Take for example the 1986 murder of Sallie-Anne Huckstepp by dirty cop Roger Rogerson who protected the Sydney child trafficking operation that James Wood investigated. Sallie-Anne was writing an article about the Sydney child trafficking network when Rogerson's contract on her was fulfilled. Sallie-Anne was found dead in Sydney's Centennial park. The usual police coroner was not on duty the day police were called to Sallie-Anne's body. The substitute officer arrived and was instructed to record the death as suicide by drowning in a pond. The honest police officer noted struggle marks on Sallie-Anne's arms and wrote the death up as suspicious. This led to an investigation during which the officer gave what he thought was a confidential testimony; however, by the time he arrived back at his station, everyone knew what he had just said. He was consequently victimised, traumatised, and transferred 1000 kilometres away to Murwillumbah police station. Yet NSW police continued to hound the man; they raided his home multiple times in search of grounds for charging him - such as a pencil taken from work. The clean cop was forced to retire from the police force. He withdrew to a farm out the back of Mount Warning and never recovered from the trauma of what the corrupt NSW cops did to him. So, if that is what accidentally emerged because a good cop happened to be on duty on the wrong day, imagine what convicted murderer Roger Rogerson's minions routinely covered up every other day?

3a. As part of their Order of the Illuminati practises, bloodline victims like me must not be physically flawed or scarred, and sacrifices must be without blemish. My abusers were experts at administering torture techniques, including electrocution, that do not leave physical evidence. It is possible to beat someone in the gut through a phone book to hide superficial evidence of the beating, a traditional police method.

b. Some victims do carry scars, but police and medical staff do not believe victim accounts of how these were acquired. DID victim Jennifer Haynes (who made history when her dissociative parts were granted permission to testify in court) appeared on 60 Minutes (26 May 2019) to discuss her horrific child abuse. Her physical scarring is so severe she wears a colostomy bag and can never have children. Yet her testimony was 'consistently faced with ridicule and disbelief.' (Note that during the initial show trailer, Jennifer mentioned being subjected to 'ritual abuse' – yet 60 Minutes subsequently edited this out of the broadcasted episode.)

c. Any leakage of physical evidence is routinely covered up. I accidentally suffocated during a ritual and was transported to Sutherland Hospital for resuscitation. To cover for the incident, my perpetrators told hospital staff one of the cult members was my mother, and duped medical staff release me into her care.

4. The notion that an informant would voluntarily step forward is the most ridiculous point on James Wood's list. Like the mafia, pedophile ring membership is a life-long commitment. As the famous Hotel California song says, 'You can check out any time you like but you can never leave.' At six years of age, deep in the National Park, I witnessed the fate of a 'traitor' who tried to leave the pedophile ring. Each of the man's four limbs was tied to a different vehicle. The four vehicles then accelerated in opposite directions. I certainly was reluctant to talk after being made to watch that.

5. I witnessed male and female ritual abuse perpetrators, and believe me, the women were as debauched as the men. However, a disproportionate number of men were involved in my abuse, and in the abuse of the numerous other ritual abuse victims who contacted me.

6. As for Wood's reference to an alleged lack of videotape and other evidence, consider the 2004 disappearance of the video evidence that Dr Reina Michaelson submitted to the Victorian Police Commissioner. The video footage featured men in Victorian Police uniform raping preschool children at a Mornington Peninsula childcare centre. The video footage 'disappeared' in police custody. Reina told me she was subsequently slapped with a 'D-Notice' on the grounds that what she knew about the government's involvement in child trafficking could undermine the public's confidence in the government.

7. When examining ritual abuse from a law enforcement perspective, James Wood ignored the following ritual abuse case which preceded his 'investigation' by three years:

> CHILD SEX ABUSE LINKED WITH SATANISM: POLICE
> David Humphries, Sydney Morning Herald, 13 March 1991
>
> PERTH: Perth police say they have proved a link between organised child sex abuse and devil worship, following the conviction on Monday of a young man on 22 charges of indecent assault and dealing and of evil intent. The head of WA's child sex abuse unit, Detective-Sergeant Roger Smart, said the conviction of Scott Brian Gozenton demonstrated the link. Satanic practices 'and the associated abuse perpetrated on children is prevalent in the United States and Britain and no-one can now doubt that the link can be made here,' Sergeant Smart said.
>
> Gozenton, 20, pleaded guilty to all charges and was remanded until April 5 for sentencing after the District Court was told that 13 witchcraft covens operated in Perth. Judge Kennedy was told that Gozenton had been a victim of sex abuse as an eight-year-old and had been recruited as a teenager into a satanic cult where adults practised bizarre sex with each other, their own children and teenage recruits. The more bizarre and perverse the orgies, the closer cult members felt to the Devil, Gozenton's barrister, Mr Mark Trowell, said. 'The real villains are those individuals who visited their perversity on this young man,' Mr Trowell said. Gozenton was a tragic result of sexual abuse perpetrated by a school caretaker against himself and six other boys for three years. Shame prevented him from revealing his 'terrible secret' and he > became introverted, rebellious and distant from his parents. 'At the age of 14, he was approached by a school chum about a new family where rebellion was encouraged and someone like this young man could get a sense of belonging,' Mr Trowell said. He said the coven was attended by about 20 adults of both sexes, their young children and the teenage recruits. Rituals were both homosexual and heterosexual, he said.

>
> His client had recognised cult members at earlier hearings but had refused to identify them for fear of reprisals, Mr Trowell said. 'These evil people kept this young man under their spell and direction for four years while these offences against him were committed. He…was instructed to establish a junior coven for the purpose of recruiting junior members from school and the Scout group with which he was associated.'
>
> Mr Trowell said the initiation rituals mostly involved touching of genitals and, apart from three charges of oral sex were 'not unduly perverse.' The evil design charges related to attempts to recruit others into the cult, where Gozenton had the code name of Death. He said Gozenton had been seeking to extricate himself from the Satanists, established a stable relationship with a woman and improved relations with his parents and did not deserve a jail sentence.
>
> Mr Chris Drew, for the Crown, said the charges against Gozenton were 'extremely serious' and that jail was the only option available.

THE DEVIL MADE ME DO IT

Royal Commissioner James Wood also ignored the Australian 60 Minutes episode that aired in the late 1980s called, The Devil Made Me Do It. It aired one year after an episode, Satan's Children, in which a 15-year-old English girl Teresa detailed her experience of Ritual Abuse. Reporter Ian Leslie presented both episodes. The Devil Made Me Do It involved a discussion panel including Senator Fred Nile plus two former coven pedophile ring members, a young man from Sydney and a young woman from Adelaide. The Adelaide woman was under police investigation for her involvement in criminal activities (including the ritual murder of babies) which, she said, were committed on campus by a coven comprised of University of Adelaide staff and students.

ELIZABETH LOFTUS: CIA PSYCHOLOGIST

Royal Commissioner James Wood used the gangrenous writings of CIA psychologist Elizabeth Loftus to dismiss multiple witness accounts of organised pedophilia and ritual abuse. Wood's Final Report referenced Loftus' 1994 book, The Myth of Repressed Memory: False Memories and Allegations of Sexual Abuse, to support his conclusions:

a. 'False memories' of Ritual Abuse can be artificially created as a result of third person suggestion,
b. A victim of Ritual Abuse can't experience dissociation and repression of traumatic memories, and
c. Ritual Abuse victims are female 'attention-seeking' hypochondriacs whose flashbacks may be attributed to overly zealous female therapists.

Loftus' 1994 book was not a scientifically conducted, peer reviewed research publication. It was just a book.

At the time of her 1994 book release, Loftus had published one study relevant to her 'false memory' theory, an experiment which examined university students' memory for films of car accidents.[73]

In 1995, Loftus co-published the notorious Lost in a Shopping Mall study.[74] [75] [76] [77] [78] Loftus' assigned University of Washington postgraduate student James Coan as chief co-investigator for her mall study. Subjects' family members were asked to provide James Coan with three true childhood stories about the subjects, and to describe a typical family shopping trip. Based on the shopping trip descriptions, a false story was created for each subject about getting lost as a child during a shopping trip. Subjects were told their family members said the events 'had happened.' The subjects were asked to repeat the stories and to try and remember more details. Finally, the subjects were told that one of the memories was false and asked to choose the false memory.

Elizabeth Loftus conducted and published this research before receiving ethical approval for the study. Loftus added a second interview plus another evaluation scale to the research protocol long after the study was approved on 10 August 1992.

James Coan reported in his 1993 honours thesis that only 6/24 subjects completed the study, and zero subjects created a false memory.[79] [80] Crook and Dean (1999) analysed Loftus' data and discovered only 2/24 subjects likely completed the study.[81] First year psychology students are taught, a minimum of n=10 subjects is required for valid statistical analysis. So, Loftus blatantly lied when she reported: 'Of the 24 total, 19 subjects correctly chose the getting-lost memory as the false one, while the remaining five incorrectly thought that one of the true events was the false one… These findings reveal that people can be led to believe that entire events happened to them after suggestions to that effect.'[82]

The raw data from the shopping mall study were subpoenaed by defence attorneys in Burgus v. Braun. Loftus successfully obtained a gag order for her fraudulent data. The case settled on 31 October 1997 and the data returned to Loftus.

Elizabeth Loftus published another lab experiment in 1996.[83] This examined, 'whether imagining events from one's past can affect memory for childhood events.' A total of 38 undergraduate psychology students (young female university students studying the same course) participated in the study for course credit. Loftus asked the students to imagine described events such as tripping over or falling through a window.

---

[73] E. Loftus & J. Palmer (1974). Reconstruction of Automobile Destruction. Journal of Verbal Learning and Verbal Behaviour, 13, 585–589.

[74] E. Loftus & J. Pickrell. (1995) The formation of False Memories, Psychiatric Annals, 25, 720-725.

[75] L.S. Crook & M. Dean (1999). 'Lost in a shopping mall' - A breach of professional ethics. Ethics & Behavior, 9:1, 39-50.

[76] L.S. Crook & M. Dean (1999). Logical fallacies and ethical breaches. Ethics & Behavior, 9:1, 61-68.

[77] James A. Coan (1993, August 18). Creating false memories. Senior paper, Psychology Honors Program, University of Washington, Seattle.

[78] James A. Coan (1997). Lost in a Shopping Mall: An Experience with Controversial Research. Ethics & Behavior. 7. 271-84.

[79] James A. Coan (1993, August 18). Creating false memories. Senior paper, Psychology Honors Program, University of Washington, Seattle, p16.

[80] James Coan (1997). Lost in a Shopping Mall: An Experience with Controversial Research. Ethics & Behavior. 7. 271-84.

[81] L.S. Crook & M. Dean (1999). Logical fallacies and ethical breaches. Ethics & Behavior, 9:1, 61-68.

[82] E. Loftus & J. Pickrell. (1995) The formation of False Memories, Psychiatric Annals, 25, 720-725.

[83] M. Garry, C. Manning, & E. Loftus (1996). Imagination Inflation: Imagining a Childhood Event Inflates Confidence that it Occurred. Psychonomic Bulletin & Review, 3:2, 208-214.

The characteristics of Elizabeth Loftus' samples made it inappropriate for her to generalise findings from her studies to the population at large. And yet Loftus drew conclusions from these severely flawed studies about the reliability of child abuse memories, and the possibility that a parent or therapist could create false memories of child abuse in a person who has experienced trauma of the most severe kind. Loftus basically equated a psychology student's experience of watching a car crash film or imagining themselves falling over – with real life accounts of being systematically raped and tortured throughout one's development. That is beyond preposterous.

Elizabeth Loftus' conclusions failed to hold up under cross examination. In 1994, Lynn Crook successfully sued Loftus. Lawyer Barbara Jo Levy asked Loftus, 'If you are asked to testify about your experiments of implanting false memories, would you use those first six?' Loftus replied, 'No, I don't think I will use the first six' (Transcript, p.61).

In December 1995, two women filed ethics complaints against Elizabeth Loftus with the American Psychological Association, claiming she had misrepresented their successful recalled-memory lawsuits to the media. Loftus resigned from the APA in January 1996, so the APA dropped their investigation.

A Washington Post article entitled, In the Sharon Case, a Grilling to Remember (27 October 2006) described a damning cross examination of Elizabeth Loftus:

> But when Fitzgerald got his chance to cross-examine Loftus about her findings, he had her stuttering to explain her own writings and back pedalling from her earlier assertions. Citing several of her publications, footnotes and the work of her peers, Fitzgerald got Loftus to acknowledge that the methodology she had used at times in her long academic career was not that scientific, that her conclusions about memory were conflicting, and that she had exaggerated a figure and a statement from her survey of D.C. jurors that favoured the defence.

In 2003, Nicole Tau successfully sued Loftus for invasion of privacy. At age six years, during a videotaped interview by a medical doctor, Tau had accused her mother of child abuse. Tau subsequently forgot her abuse but spontaneously recalled it at age 17 years. Corwin and Olafson (1997) published an article about the case, favouring the notion that repressed memory of childhood abuse can be recalled. Elizabeth Loftus set out to discredit Tau by hiring a private investigator to locate Tau. The PI lied to Tau's family by pretending to be Corwin's research assistant. Loftus subsequently published an article based on the PI's interviews with Tau's family in which she identified Tau as a victim of crime. Tau filed an ethics complaint against Loftus in 1999 with the University of Washington who upheld the complaint.

During a 2013 TED Talk about memory, Loftus intentionally misrepresented the basic facts of Nicole Tau's case by saying it was about a 'woman' who 'accused her mother of sexual abuse based on a repressed memory.' Loftus knowingly omitted crucial facts of the case: that Tau was six years old when she made the report, then forgot the memory, and then spontaneously and accurately recalled the memory 11 years later at age 17 years.

CIA INFILTRATED AUSTRALIAN THERAPY INDUSTRY

A 1994 FMS newsletter documented the influence the CIA pedophiles had on Australian therapists. The following is a letter to the FMA from Jerome Gelb (the psychiatrist who took a loaded handgun to court):

> NEWS FROM AUSTRALIA
>
> The Australian False Memory Association has now been formally organized. The links between the AFMA and Australian professionals seem strong and the fact that the Australian Psychological Society [APS] has already established guidelines for recovered memory situations indicates a positive and determined approach by professionals to deal with the problem.
>
> A letter from Dr Jerome Gelb, a psychiatrist in Australia, affirms this optimism. He states, 'I am writing to keep you up to date with events in Australia regarding FMS and Recovered Memory Therapy. Australian Psychiatrists are, apart from very few exceptions, fully aware of the iatrogenesis of so-called repressed memories, MPD and Satanic Abuse. The Royal Australian and New Zealand College of Psychiatrists has been helpful in publishing on the issue.'
>
> Dr Gelb mentioned the television and newspaper articles that have recently appeared in Australia noting that they understand the iatrogenic nature of some memories. Dr Gelb said that he had published a detailed letter to the Editor in the December 1994 RANZCP Journal of Psychiatry and that the journal of Australasian Psychiatry, Vol 2, No 4, August 1994, pp 179-180 had published his article, 'Reality Revisited.'
>
> Dr Gelb went on to write that, 'I feel that public opinion in Australia is supportive and the media is also. Most importantly, Australian Psychiatrists are almost universally wary of American therapy fads and are highly critical of poorly trained therapists and the inappropriate use of suggestion, persuasion and memory recovery techniques of all kinds. Please let your membership know of these developments.' [84]

* * *

CIA-DICTATED APS RECOVERED MEMORY GUIDELINES

The APS Guidelines Relating to Recovered Memories were introduced on 27 October 1994. According to the 1994 US FMS newsletter, the APS Guidelines Relating to Recovered Memories were adapted from a book written by MK-ULTRA hypnosis researchers Australian Peter W. Sheehan and Kevin M. McConkey which was based on their hypnosis research.[85] Kevin McConkey and Peter Sheehan then presented their views at the 28th Annual Congress of the Australian Society of Hypnosis. Their presentation paper was subsequently published.[86] Presenters at that same conference included the usual suspects:

- Graham D. Burrows (Chairman, Board of Education, Australian Society of Hypnosis)

---

[84] FMS Foundation Newsletter (1994). 1 November, 3:10.

[85] K.M. McConkey & P.W. Sheehan (1995). Hypnosis, Memory, and Behaviour in the Forensic Setting. Guildford.

[86] K.M. McConkey & P.W. Sheehan (1998). Recovered memory, hypnosis & professional issues. In B.J. Evans & G.D. Burrows (eds) Hypnosis in Australia, 263-282. Australian Society of Hypnosis.

- Wendy-Louise Walker (trained at Sydney University by MK-ULTRA Martin Orne)
- Jeffrey Zeig (Rented out Disneyland for two nights for the Psychotherapy conferences at which Milton Ericson & Carl Rogers trained attendees in their MK-ULTRA methods.)
- Barry J. Evans (MK-ULTRA trained under Martin Orne at Sydney University).
- Greg J. Coman, University of Melbourne, co-authored books with Barry J. Evans.

Note that the 2019 Annual Congress of the Australian Society of Hypnosis featured a workshop in 'Shamanic healing through altered consciousness' to 'explore the Lower, Middle and Upper worlds that a shamanic journey can take one to. Each level represents an area of consciousness…' I did that workshop too – at age six.

Peter Sheehan (Australian Catholic University) and Kevin McConkey (University of NSW) both conducted hypnosis research with MK-ULTRA psychiatrist Martin T. Orne.[87] Kevin McConkey was the current APS President, and his hypnosis book was currently in press, when the APS introduced their Guidelines Relating to Recovered Memories that he co-authored. Here are the key points from APS Guidelines Relating to Recovered Memories that stopped Australian psychologists acknowledging the existence of ritual abuse and mind control, and treating victims of extreme abuse, for the following 25 years:

- Memories can be altered, deleted, and created by events that occur during and after the time of encoding, and during the period of storage, and during any attempts at retrieval.
- Although some clinical observations support the notion of repressed memories, empirical research on memories generally does not. Moreover, the scientific evidence does not allow general statements to be made about any relationship between trauma and memory.
- The available scientific and clinical evidence does not allow accurate, inaccurate, and fabricated memories to be distinguished in the absence of independent corroboration.
- Assumptions that adult problems may or may not be associated with repressed memories from childhood can't be sustained by available scientific evidence.
- Psychologists should be alert to the role that they may play in creating or shaping false memories.
- Psychologists should seek to meet the needs of clients who report memories of abuse and should do this quite apart from the truth or falsity of those reports.
- Psychologists should explore with the client the meaning and implications of the memory for the client, rather than focus solely on the content of the reported memory.
- Psychologists should be aware that research is needed to understand more about trauma-related memory, techniques to enhance memory, and techniques to deal effectively with childhood sexual abuse.

Let me place things into perspective: The men who wrote these APS Guidelines trained under Martin Orne who, according to US Congressional witness testimony, raped, tortured and murdered children in the name of national security and psychological research. Here is my retort to the above points:

---

[87] M.T. Orne & K.M. McConkey (1981) Toward convergent inquiry into self-hypnosis, International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 29:3, 313-323.

- There is zero scientific evidence to support the claim that mainstream therapists can create false memories. Only MK-ULTRA doctors possess the knowledge and military technology to radically alter memory. Memories can only be deleted during and after encoding using unethical hypnosis, illicit drugs, torture, and cutting-edge medical procedures.
- ‘False memory syndrome’ is not a recognised mental health condition, has no clinical history or symptomology (when Repressed Memory has both) and does not feature in the DSM.
- A range of studies using various methodologies across cultures support a causal relationship between trauma and dissociation (alterations in memory and identity). One research team found, ‘strong empirical support for the hypothesis that trauma causes dissociation, and that dissociation remains related to trauma history when fantasy proneness is controlled. We find little support for the hypothesis that the dissociation-trauma relationship is due to fantasy proneness or confabulated memories of trauma.’ [88]
- The APS basically ruled that unless the therapist can find a third-party witness to the abuse, they should not work with - or even acknowledge as substantially true - the client’s abuse memories. The APS should apply the same rule for every experience a client brings to therapy, otherwise that is bias. Courts consider an individual’s witness testimony a form of evidence, yet the APS does not. Perpetrators are adept at concealing their crimes and eliminating witnesses, a fact the APS ignores.
- Genuine belief in a client’s testimony is essential for establishing rapport and eliciting client trust. Therapists can’t possibly meet the therapeutic needs of Extreme Abuse victims unless they believe and understand the abuse account. A client will trust sufficiently to disclose their abuse details, and therefore integrate, only once they perceive the therapist sincerely believes them. Empathy and belief can’t be feigned toward hypervigilant high IQ victims.
- Victims will never process and heal from extreme childhood abuse unless therapy focusses on the actual abuse memories, including the thoughts and feelings experienced during the childhood trauma incident, instead of what the adult victim presently thinks and feels about their memories of Extreme Abuse.

LOFTUS LEGACY IN AUSTRALIA

Elizabeth Loftus was discredited, professionally disciplined, and successfully sued in the USA for her blatant lack of ethical conduct and unscientific methodology. Despite this, Loftus’ unproven opinion regarding memory: (a) was the basis for Royal Commissioner James Wood’s dismissal of multiple independent reports of Ritual Abuse; (b) provides the Australian blueprint for dismissing the nature and existence of extreme child abuse within mental health, education, and forensics; and (c) underpins all psychology teaching and educational texts in Australia. Most Australian psychology textbooks are American imports. Mine were. A 2014 study examined three undergraduate psychology textbooks and found, all three concluded that child abuse memories are likely false.[89] All three textbooks referenced Loftus' writings. Owing to this unfounded and illogical embracement of Loftus' opinion:

---

[88] C.J. Dalenberg et al. (2012). Evaluation of the evidence for the trauma and fantasy models of dissociation. Psychological Bulletin, May 138:3, 550-88

- Australian universities and educational materials teach psychology students that most child abuse memories are false, and repressed trauma memories are particularly unreliable.
- Regulatory bodies deter psychologists from acknowledging the validity of repressed child abuse memories and working with implicit trauma memories.
- Australian psychology students receive no training in the Trauma Model approach.
- Australian therapists receive zero training in recognising or treating ritual abuse and mind control.
- NSW Victims of Crime counselling services forbade the use of scientifically validated, effective tools like EMDR for processing implicit abuse memories (until I publicly accused them of withholding treatment). A therapist can only use EMDR if they tape the sessions; yet this is not required for other, less effective treatment modalities.
- University criminology lecturers do not teach future Australian law enforcement officials that child trafficking is run as a single, integrated global operation.

FAILED WOOD ROYAL COMMISSION

During a 1997 parliamentary hearing, Senator Fred Nile addressed the Mr Bubbles case and the Wood Royal Commission's mishandling of it as follows:

> The Hon F Nile: I seek the indulgence of the Attorney General. I wish to ask him a question without notice. Why did the children who attended the Seabeach Kindergarten, of the Mr Bubbles case notoriety, receive more than $500,000 compensation? How is it possible that the Government of New South Wales, through the Victims Compensation Fund, is able to pay compensation to the children who were at the Seabeach Kindergarten even though the Wood Royal Commission refused to make any findings about the case and the Director of Public Prosecutions was unable to successfully prosecute the perpetrators of the alleged assaults?

Government officials subsequently deemed the Wood Royal Commission a 'failure.' In May 2002, the House of Representatives Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs conducted an inquiry into crime in the community. An excerpt from Volume 2 of their Report (published August 2004) reads:

> Almost immediately, the Committee received substantial submissions covering all aspects of the Inquiry. From New South Wales came very serious allegations of corruption in New South Wales policing, including allegations of protection of pedophiles, 'doctoring' of police statistics, corruption of the newly introduced promotions system for duty officers, the failure of the Wood Royal Commission and the systemic failure of bodies set up to investigate such issues. Instead of being applauded for seeking remedies, the whistle-blowers received punitive treatment…

---

[89] B. Brand & L. McEwen (2014). Coverage of Child Maltreatment and its Effects in Three Introductory Psychology Textbooks. Trauma Psychology, Fall, 8.

SUBSEQUENT CASES

Reports of organised pedophilia and ritual abuse continued to surface in multiple locations around Australia, following the failed Wood Royal Commission and the subsequently established Police Integrity Commission also headed by James Wood. Here are some case examples:

1. Brisbane ABC, CJC Pedophile Network

Senator Bill Heffernan stated in the Australian House of Parliament (29 May 1998):

Recently I made a speech in which I highlighted the code of silence which protects worldwide child sex networks; in particular, Australian pedophile networks. These networks include people in the judiciary, parliament, clergy and the Public Service. Many of these people live in an abhorrent culture in which is included as a 'spoils of office' the right to have sex with children.
These people put themselves at continual risk of serious compromise in their workplaces as perpetrators, as too do those people who knowingly ignore or turn a blind eye to this ultimate betrayal of our children. Honourable senators should be concerned at recent developments involving the Criminal Justice Commission, the body set up to investigate official corruption in State after the Fitzgerald inquiry. One of the senior members of this body, Mr Bob Hailstone, a former priest and manager of the ABC in Brisbane, and director of the corruption prevention division of the CJC [Criminal Justice Commission] has left the CJC in what could only be called exceptional circumstances.

In November last year a State police pedophilia task force raided Hailstone's house at 31 Dudley Street, Bardon and took possession of a great deal of obscene material. Last week Eric Goh, a man who lives with Hailstone at 31 Dudley Street, appeared in the Brisbane Magistrates Court on charges of possessing for sale indecent or obscene material. These charges raise serious issues of concern.

I have in my possession a letter which I will now read into the public record, and which records disturbing incidents alleged to have occurred at Mr Hailstone's house. The letter was written by a man, Mr Phillip Wood, shortly before he died. Hailstone recently resigned from the CJC rather than face disciplinary charges including association with an inappropriate person. It seems to me that the whole period of Hailstone's service with the CJC should be examined, particularly as this body has failed in the past to investigate pedophilia allegations. The letter written to a Brisbane solicitor reads as follows:

Dear Malcolm,

This is my account of the incident on 30th June 1996. On 30th June 1996 I attended a luncheon party at the home of Mr. Robert Hailstone, 31 Dudley Street, Rainworth. In attendance were a total of fourteen persons, including Mr. Robert Hailstone – it then mentions a second and third person – the others I either didn't know or can't remember their names. During the course of the luncheon, some of the guests and the host were talking about having sex with young Asian boys, especially during their holidays in Thailand. This conversation was somewhat disturbing to me as I regard pederasty as anathema, but I said nothing. Later on, the conversation was about the church and their involvement in it, some of the group having been to church that day.

This triggered a hostile reaction in me, and I asked them how they could be involved in an institution that so vocally condemns homosexuality. This prompted an outburst of abuse by one of their number to me, with me responding by calling them a bunch of churchgoing pedophiles and saying that they should be outed (meaning to publicly expose them).

I then left the house. As I was reversing out of the driveway (there were a number of cars parked there) I clipped the wing mirror of one of the cars. This bought the lot of them out onto the driveway, shouting abuse and kicking the driver's side of my car breaking the driver's side window. I was bleeding from the broken glass and being physically attacked by a number of persons. In an attempt to escape I reversed into a tree and drove into the side of a car parked in the driveway. In the melee that followed one of their number managed to turn off the ignition of my car and remove the key. I was then left alone in my car whilst they huddled together a few metres away. I used a spare key and drove out of the driveway. I was covered in glass and blood and very shaken up, but I drove to my home in Victoria Point without incident. I had arrived at the luncheon at approx. 12:15 pm and arrived at my home at 3:30 pm.

Mr Robert Hailstone, who is a director of the CJC had stated to me on a couple of occasions that he could have anyone in Queensland arrested on a trumped-up drug charge. With this in mind, I was afraid to report the incident to the police. I paid for the repairs to the side of my car ($920) and made two separate claims to the NRMA insurance company for the damage to the front ($2785.18) and rear ($870.89) of my car. I hope that this account is comprehensive enough.

Yours Sincerely,
Phillip J. Wood

Madam President, this letter was dated 8 November 1996. Mr Wood was found dead in his home on 10 November 1996.

* * *

2. NSW Central Coast Coven

EVIL IN THE WOODS

Miranda Wood & Martin Chulov, The Sun Herald, 8 Aug 1999, p7.

The Police Integrity Commission is probing a shocking series of allegations that pedophiles have been protected by police and officials entrusted to care for the children. Police have uncovered evidence of central coast sites used in satanic rituals, to which drawings made by children who claim to have been abused, bear an eerie resemblance. One mother's traumatised child tells of adult groups hanging him from > a cross, killing animals, performing sexual acts on cult members and watching orgies. A child from a separate family, who does not know the other child, tells an identical story.

>
> The Sun-Herald has seen evidence of the rituals.
>
> One mother, Genevieve, who has fought a four-year campaign to have authorities probe her claims said her case was similar to 33 other cases reported to the Department of Community Services. Medical evidence has proved that both Genevieve's children have been abused. 'I'm coming across more and more women who tell the same story,' she said. 'I've spent years trying to get help for my children, but there are people who don't want this to come out. As he comes to feel safer, he has given more detailed explanations of what has happened to him and his brother. They held laser lights in their eyes to disorientate them. They were locked in basements and they had to watch each other being abused. He couldn't have possibly made all of this up.'
>
> Genevieve said the boys had told her the names of those who assaulted them, and they could recall seeing at least 30 people at rituals in the bush. She said she believed the cult's rituals had been passed through generations of satanic covens. 'My son can recognise members in the street and he even knows their names,' she said. The children called the bushland site 'the woods.' They would take long walks through the bush and it was always at night. The ceremonies were held at night,' Genevieve said.
>
> The drawings by each child also show the same violent acts and symbols used by the cult. One of the symbols Genevieve's son drew was the same symbol on the ceremonial table police have taken a photo of at the bushland site.
>
> Genevieve said the children were afraid to tell of the ritualistic abuse after cult members threatened to kill them and their mothers. Cult members also told them a bomb in their stomach would explode if the truth was revealed - a trait associated with worldwide satanic covens. Genevieve said her son could also remember being drugged and hypnotised. 'He said they dressed in black robes and had eye and mouth pieces cut out,' she said. 'I know they're pretty dangerous people. I have had warnings outside the house telling me to stop investigations. We're fearful for our lives. The boys never want me out of their sight.'
>
> She is now battling to let the truth come out and protect other children from a fate similar to that of her sons. Genevieve said: 'It's an absolute nightmare. You try to get help and you have the door slammed in your face repeatedly. I'd do anything to stop this from happening again. After a while they make you feel as though you dreamed it all up. The laws and the attitudes need to change.'

Commissioner James Wood headed the organisation (Police Integrity Commission) which investigated this case, which subsequently went nowhere. Are the victims and witnesses now dead?

3. National ALP Pedophile Network

SA Parliamentary Speaker of the House, Peter Lewis, stated (1 April 2005):

> There are a large number, but not a high percentage, of people in high places and positions of trust who take it for granted that they can indulge their sexual appetites for children of both sexes so long as they arrange to cover it up and get away with it… It's a national problem and MPs involved seem to know each other.

On 4th April 2005, Peter Lewis resigned his position as Speaker of the South Australian Parliament. He resigned amidst allegations that certain ministers and journalists thwarted his attempts to expose high-end pedophilia rings by reducing his concerns about pedophilia to 'homophobia.' Lewis stated during his parting speech:

> I…was quietly, and as quickly as possible, bringing some of the people who had made the allegations to the point where they might pluck up enough courage and confidence and swear the truth of those allegations, enabling them to be more carefully investigated. But they were being 'bumped off'- that is, murdered and viciously assaulted – quicker than I or the people who were helping me could get them to write down their allegations and then swear that what they were saying was true…
>
> The most outrageous thing of all…is…what appears to be the related and organised activities of those pedophiles in high public office – that is, the judiciary, the senior ranks of human services portfolios, some police and MPs, across the nation, especially within the ranks of the Labor Party.
>
> Yet you only have to recall in recent years the investigations, charges and successful convictions against such people as Darcy, Liddy, Wright, Wells, a former senator and other current and past MPs in Queensland, New South Wales, and Victoria to understand my concern. They have not acted alone or in isolation, it seems to me…

It is not surprising that we find [pedophiles] in the jobs and roles of leadership.

* * *

4. Melbourne Priest Luciferian Pedophile Ring

In 2006, the Catholic Church's Melbourne diocese acknowledged as 'substantially true' allegations that a priest took part in ritual murders in the 1960s and paid compensation to a surviving victim.

PRIEST DID 'RITUAL KILLING'

Gary Hughes, The Courier Mail, 26 May 2006.

> A Catholic priest took part in satanic murders and rituals that included child sexual abuse. The Catholic Church's Melbourne Archdiocese has accepted claims about the rituals as 'substantially true' and paid $33,000 compensation to a man who was a victim of the rituals as a child. The archdiocese's independent sexual abuse investigator, barrister Peter O'Callaghan, QC, described the details of the ritualised murders and sexual abuse provided by the victim as 'extraordinary… but I have no reason or justification for doubting his credibility,' Mr O'Callaghan said in a letter to the victim's lawyers in 2000.

Earlier during a formal interview with the victim, Mr O'Callaghan said he was satisfied the man was telling the truth.' I see no reason why I shouldn't accept what you say,' he said. 'Amazing as it is, I accept it…'

In a sworn statement given to the archdiocese, the victim said he was first abused by the priest in Melbourne in the early 1960s, when he was serving as an altar boy at the Sacred Heart Church in Sandringham. The priest has since died. In his statement the 56-year-old victim, who wishes to remain anonymous, gave details of at least three deaths – a young woman, a young man and a child – that occurred during satanic rituals over a number of years. Two victims had their throats cut and a third was killed with an axe. Animals were also killed during the ceremonies. 'I have some gruesome memories of killings,' the victim said…

The independent compensation panel made a $33,000 ex-gratia payment to the victim in 2001 after his claims had been investigated by Mr O'Callaghan. The archdiocese is paying for counselling for the man, who has been diagnosed as suffering from complex post-traumatic stress disorder.

* * *

'EXTRAORDINARY' CLAIMS TRUE: CATHOLIC CHURCH

Gary Hughes, NEWS.com, 26 May 2006.

The most extraordinary thing about today's allegations of murders during satanic rituals involving a Melbourne priest is not that they've been made, but that the Catholic Church admitted in writing that it accepted they were substantially true. Indeed 'extraordinary' was the word used by the Melbourne Archdiocese's experienced sexual abuse investigator Peter O'Callaghan QC to describe the allegations when they were put to him in 2000…

The statement provided to the Archdiocese by the victim, who wants to remain anonymous, makes chilling reading. He details how the Catholic priest, who has since died, first began abusing him at the age of 11 in 1961 when he was serving as an altar boy at the Sacred Heart Church in the bayside suburb of Sandringham and attending a Catholic school, where the priest was chaplain. The priest got the victim alone in a room on the pretext of giving him a sex education lesson and sexually abused him. Later the priest would sexually abuse the boy in his car and at the Sacred Heart Church's presbytery, where the victim was lured on the promise of playing with toy soldiers.

But it's the accounts of satanic rituals and the victim's eyewitness reports of murders that are harrowing. In the statement he details at least three murders – a young girl, a youth and a young child. He says the victims were mostly drugged and appeared to > be in a daze before having their throats cut or being hacked with an axe. He says he was forced to take part in the rituals and was sexually abused during them by the priest and others involved in the ceremonies.

>
> While claims of satanic rituals and ritualised sexual abuse by victims are nothing new, what makes these allegations different is the Melbourne Archdiocese's acceptance of the claims as being true. To our knowledge, it is the first time the Catholic Church in Melbourne has done that in writing.
>
> Some of the rituals, which occurred over a three-year period, took place in an old house owned by the Catholic Church in Sandringham. The house was later demolished, and a new Sacred Heart Church built on the site. . . Other rituals took place at other locations around Melbourne. The victim would be driven to and from the locations by the priest. The victim said during one of the final sexual assaults by the priest he was threatened with a carving knife and told he would be killed if he ever talked to anyone about what he had seen or what had been done to him.
>
> The victim first contacted Victoria Police in 1998 and was told details would be passed to the homicide squad. He says he heard nothing more . . .
>
> In a letter to the victim dated January 5, 2001, the then head of the Melbourne Archdiocese, Cardinal George Pell, apologised for the 'wrong and hurt' he suffered at the hands of the priest.
>
> The victim's decision to speak out follows the conviction in the United States earlier this month of Catholic priest Gerald Robinson for the ritualistic murder of a nun. He said he believed there were other victims of ritualised abuse in Australia who were too afraid or embarrassed to speak out. Robinson was charged with the murder of the nun 26 years ago after a female victim of child sexual abuse went to authorities with claims that the priest had been involved in satanic rituals.

The victim in the two articles is James Shanahan. Cardinal George Pell, who signed the (5 January 2001) letter of apology to James, was one of James Shanahan's Luciferian pedophile perpetrators.

5. Bathurst, NSW Police and Clergy Pedophile Network

In 2008, a decade after the Wood Royal Commission ruled that Ritual Abuse does not exist in Australia, the greatest Ritual Abuse scandal in Australia's history broke into mainstream media. The following two newspaper articles refer to this case:

> CHANTING, SPELLS AND SEX ORGIES AT ST STANISLAUS COLLEGE
> Gemma Jones, Herald Sun, 27 Aug 2008.
>
> POLICE are investigating claims that up to 40 boys were sexually abused by a pedophile ring of priests and teachers at an exclusive NSW school… A former priest at the school has been charged with 33 counts, a former teacher has already been convicted of several offences and two other teachers are under investigation.

> In his first interview, a brave young man who used the internet to expose the abuse revealed the full extent of the horror at the school. He is one of two victims who have told The Daily Telegraph how they were herded into a prayer room by a priest chanting 'hypnotic' spells in tongues. Inside the prayer room, the boarders who attended the school in the 1980s said they were subjected to horrendous sexual abuse or forced to assault each other…
>
> A former boarder now aged 35, who can't be identified because of a court suppression order, started at St Stanislaus in the '80s because it was the only private school in the area his family could afford. He alleged the abuse began after a priest took him aside for private tutoring about the Catholic Church and God two months after he arrived at the school and the horror turned into a twice-weekly event. 'They got a group between eight and 12 of us together and they'd just start chanting and I would wake up during these sessions and see what was going on,' he said. 'It was like an orgy.'
> The second victim, who declined to give permission to be named, yesterday described the horrific night-time prayer sessions in the staff's quarters under candlelight. 'You'd pass out … they spoke in tongues … another element was called laying on hands, that was the basis on which he would engage in physical contact,' the victim said. He said the students were all small in stature and many of them emotionally troubled. 'I know of people who have been contacted, they said, 'Yes, you're right but I haven't told my wife what happened to me I'm not going to tell you guys (police),' he said. Police last night confirmed 13 alleged victims had already come forward.

* * *

Abuse at St Stanislaus College 'Involved Night Orgies'
Angus Hohenboken, The Australian, 28 Aug 2008.

> ORGIES involving up to 60 schoolboys, priests and teachers are among allegations levelled at former staff members of a NSW Catholic boarding school. The Seven Network last night reported claims that nine former teachers and priests from St Stanislaus College in Bathurst, in eastern NSW, had committed sexual abuse on students during 'hypnotic' night prayer services in the 1980s.
>
> An alleged victim, whose identity was withheld for legal reasons, said the number of victims involved in the encounters had grown over time. 'It started out on a one-on-one basis and then in small groups of between eight and 12, and then on one occasion there was a large group of at least 60...'

The victim whistle-blower was Tor Nielsen. The group of 60 Tor referred to were 60 children raped during a Luciferian ritual in Bathurst City Hall. This pedophile orgy was attended by visiting NSW police officers who boarded at St Stanislaus College during the famous Bathurst car race.

SUSPISCIOUS ST STANISLAUS DEATHS

Tor Nielsen did a letter drop in Bathurst to expose the pedophile ring. Consequently, his lawyer who failed to silence Tor 'fell' from an eighth story apartment. Another witness died under suspicious circumstances, the day before he was due to testify in the pedophile trials. The deceased was a lawyer and a former St Stanislaus College student whose son attended the school. He worked at Frederick Jordon Chambers in Sydney. One morning, the chambers clerk found the lawyer hanged to death by his tie from a bookshelf in the basement. He was not suicidal. Staff witnessed him in a normal mood and working on one of his cases, thirty minutes before his time of death. Although attending police considered the death suspicious, it was later ruled a suicide.

6. Brisbane, Queensland

Brisbane Grammar Counsellor Ritually Abused Students, Royal Commission Told

Joshua Robertson, The Guardian, 4 Nov 2015.

A counsellor at a prestigious Queensland private school ritually hypnotised students before masturbating them, slapping them in the face and putting acupuncture needles in one child's genitals, the royal commission into institutional responses to child sex abuse has heard. The scores of alleged victims of Kevin Lynch at Brisbane Grammar school included a boy who was sexually abused in a grief counselling session given after learning his father had committed suicide…

One alleged victim of Lynch, known only as BQK, told the commission that the counsellor's 'treatment [was] built around his convincing me that I could harness the power of my orgasms to gain an edge' in studies and sport. 'He would regularly masturbate me to the point of ejaculation and sometimes would make me ingest my own semen,' he said. Lynch also slapped the boy in the face to 'psyche me up about winning a metaphorical race. Other times he would use acupuncture needles and put them into my testicles or stick his thumb in my anus,' BQK said. BQK told the commission he 'assumed this was a normal treatment method' and did not appreciate he had been seriously abused until 'well into my adult life.'

He said he could not understand why Grammar staff had not questioned why Lynch operated out of a room that had two heavy, soundproof doors, red and green light signals controlling student access, and had significant stocks of tissues and towels, which he used to wipe up semen. The room was set up as a 'sick conveyer belt of victims for Lynch,' he said…

My husband worked at Brisbane Grammar School. We lived in a school-owned apartment on Gregory Terrace with my baby. I contended with the school's coven which involved an English teacher and ground staff who targeted my daughter. They posed as a new church that I was invited to. My suspicions were aroused when the English teacher's young obese daughter broke down in terror at a 'church' meeting, as though we were at a coven gathering.

JAMES WOODS' SEXIST CONCLUSION

In his Final Report, Royal Commissioner Wood concluded Ritual Abuse victims to be:

> …nearly always women, who during therapy for a variety of personal problems, reveal previously unrecalled memories of bizarre childhood victimisation at the hands of multiple offenders, and who are frequently diagnosed as suffering from multiple personality disorder.

The Australian victims documented in the above newspaper articles are male. Most of the Sydney pedophile network victims who contacted me are male. This contradicts Commissioner Wood's sexist dismissal of Ritual Abuse victims as crazy, hysterical females.

BILL HEFFERNAN REITERATES

Twenty years after the failed Wood Royal Commission, Senator Bill Heffernan raised the same concerns regarding VIP pedophiles:

> Liberal Senator Bill Heffernan says Former Prime Minister a Suspected Pedophile
> Jane Lee, Sydney Morning Herald, 21 October 2015.
>
> A former Australian prime minister is on a list of 'alleged pedophiles' that Liberal senator Bill Heffernan claims forms part of a police document. Senator Heffernan used a Senate estimates committee hearing on Tuesday to discuss the list of 28 people, which he said formed part of police documents that had been 'signed off' by Gary Crooke, QC, the former senior counsel assisting NSW's Wood royal commission into police corruption in the 1990s. Mr Crooke declined to comment when contacted by Fairfax Media on Tuesday.
>
> Many of the people on the list and otherwise named in the documents were 'prominent,' including a former prime minister, Senator Heffernan said: 'They were delivered to me by a police agency some time ago because no one seems to want to deal with them.' Every Commonwealth attorney-general since Philip Ruddock had seen the list, Senator Heffernan said…
>
> Senator Heffernan had shown the documents to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse but was told they were not part of its terms of reference.

PROOF CHILD ABUSE ROYAL COMMISSION IS CORRUPT

The federal Child Abuse Royal Commission is a farce. It was implemented to gather information, coverup any evidence of Australia's massive pedophile network, and give the public a false sense of security that something is being done to remedy the child abuse epidemic. I can prove the Royal Commission is corrupt, with a single example.

In 2015, the Royal Commission hired lawyer Gail Furness to assist them. That year, Gail Furness questioned both Gerald Ridsdale and George Pell. Gail Furness' cross examination of George Pell in Rome was so poor, Australian lawyers noted, the most basic criminal lawyer could have performed better. Owing to her abysmal effort, George Pell escaped answering vital questions about his coverup of pedophile priests including Gerard Ridsdale. Gerard Ridsdale has been convicted of raping over 60 kids so far (a fraction of his estimated victim total). One incident involved Ridsdale raping a girl on a church altar, after the child's own father delivered her naked to the altar (an act which reeks of ritual abuse).

Royal Commission Hid Pedophile Priest Network

A Melbourne newspaper identified Gerard Ridsdale and numerous other priests as members of a massive pedophile network that shared victims across Victoria.[90] The article does not name George Pell as part of this network, when he certainly was. Hardly surprising, since 300 journalists were charged for revealing Pell's conviction. The article states:

> At the centre of a number of these networks was Melbourne's seminary - Corpus Christi - which has produced about 1000 priests over almost 100 years, including jailed Cardinal George Pell and convicted child rapist Gerald Ridsdale. According to a conservative snapshot from the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse, at least 75 convicted and alleged sex offenders emerged from Corpus Christi. The true figure is not known.
>
> …
>
> In a statement of claim which lawyers plan to file in court this week, the victim, who cannot be named for legal reasons, alleges Vears took him to the seminary in October 1976 and left him to wait in a communal living room with four or five other boys. A second priest, Ryan, then allegedly picked the boy from the group, took him back to a bedroom and sexually assaulted him. 'I recall that seminarians would come out through the corridor into the sitting room and select a boy to go back with them,' said the former St Peter's altar boy.

The same thing occurring at St Alipius Presbytery, a single-story residence adjoining St Alipius parish school and St Alipius Catholic church in Ballarat, Victoria. In 1972 to '73, Gerard Ridsdale, George Pell and a third priest lived together in St Alipius Presbytery. Gerard Ridsdale served as the St Alipius parish school chaplain. Four St Alipius schoolteachers and priests were outed as pedophiles: Robert Best, Edward Dowlan, Gerald Leo Fitzgerald, and Stephen Francis Farrell. All, except Fitzgerald (who could not stand trial because he was dead) were convicted of sex crimes. One of Ridsdale's child rape victims disclosed being forced to procure more child victims from the school playground and lure them to the St Alipius presbytery to be sexually assaulted by priests.

Gail Furness actively hid the existence of a pedophile ring in St Alipius presbytery as follows. Furness questioned Gerard Ridsdale about his violent rape of a 10/11-year-old girl in the St Alipius Presbytery kitchen, an incident which George Pell witnessed. A newspaper article accurately reported the facts of the crime as follows:

> JUDGE SLAMS CHURCH OVER PAEDOPHILE PRIEST SECRETS
>
> Padraic Murphy, Herald Sun, 9 April 2014.
>
> A PRIEST [George Pell] who allegedly witnessed predatory pedophile Gerald Ridsdale raping a young girl 40 years ago has been slammed by a judge, but the clergyman's identity has been withheld from the public.

---

[90] Farrah Tomazin, Chris Vedelago & Debbie Cuthbertson (2019). Revealed: How paedophile priests in Victoria worked together to share victims, The Age, 17 Sep.

> …
> Ridsdale pleaded guilty on March 18 to the rape of the girl, then 10 or 11, at St Alipius presbytery, Ballarat, in 1972 or '73. A summary of the court plea details: 'In around 1972 or 1973 when (the victim) was aged 10 or 11 she was cutting up vegetables in the presbytery kitchen at the St Alipius Primary School. Ridsdale came in and said he had lots of shiny rocks to show her. (The victim) remembers this was around the time of the VFL football grand final.' The court heard that Ridsdale then took her into his room, and showed her adult magazines, and she ran back into the kitchen. When she ran, he chased her, grabbed her, told her to bend over and then raped her. A summary said: '(She) believes that another priest [George Pell] living at the house at the time walked through the door to the hallway and exited out the back door as this occurred. She knows that this priest [George Pell] saw what was happening…'

Gail Furness misrepresented the content of the victim's police witness statement and the facts of the case, and led the defendant, while questioning Gerald Ridsdale, by putting the following two blatant lies to Ridsdale:

1. The Presbytery was a two-story building that contained two upstairs bedrooms.
2. Gerald Ridsdale raped the victim in the privacy of his 'upstairs' bedroom.

Prior to Gail Furness' cross examination, Gerald Ridsdale had been charged, convicted and sentenced based on the following facts:

1. The presbytery is a single-story building,
2. Gerard Ridsdale raped the victim in the communal kitchen, not his private bedroom.

So, Gail Furness moved the location of a child's rape from a public to a private setting. Why? Because if the rape occurred in a public place, this suggests every priest in the presbytery was comfortable with pedophilia, and the only people comfortable with pedophilia – are pedophiles. It indicates the house was full of pedophile priests. Indeed, it later emerged that Cardinal George Pell was the priest who witnessed Ridsdale raping the girl in the kitchen, and that George Pell himself was a rampant pedophile. Hundreds of victims made police statements against Pell, yet the police only ran with one simple case.

The Australian government has consistently covered up the true nature and extent of Pell's crimes. The Australian government and the Royal Commission allowed Pell to leave the country knowing his crimes. The Australian government paid Gail Furness $5 million for her services to the Royal Commission.

WHAT THE WOOD RC CONCEALED

My contact with multiple victims over five years enabled me to piece together the sealed contents of the Wood Royal Commission files. James Wood buried evidence of a CIA child trafficking operation where children were recruited for a human compromise racket and as MK-ULTRA experiments. Subjects were obtained through MK-ULTRA institutions including Hillsong Church and Daruk government boys' home where they were subjected to ritual abuse and mind control. Daruk and Hillsong children were prostituted to venues like Club Costello boy brothel in Kellett Street, Kings Cross, frequented by prominent politicians, judges, police, entertainers and businessmen. Multiple victims of the Wood Royal Commission era pedophile network that Senator Heffernan referenced, named the following perpetrators:

- Gough Whitlam (ALP Prime Minister, my pedophile rapist).
- Bob Hawke (ALP Prime Minister, my pedophile rapist).
- Kim Beazley Snr (ALP Minister, my pedophile rapist).
- John Kerr (ALP appointed Governor General, my pedophile rapist).
- Bob Carr (ALP politician who campaigned to lower the age of consent).
- Marcus Einfeld (Federal judge. Found guilty of perverting the course of justice. Defended pedophile entertainer Don Lane on marijuana charge. Defended my pedophile rapist Lionel Murphy against corruption charges).
- David Yeldham (Judge who suicided after Franca Arena named him in Parliament as a pedophile, sparking the Wood Royal Commission).
  John Marsden (President NSW Law Society, President NSW Council for Civil Liberties, member NSW Police Board. My father's lawyer. Ivan Milat's lawyer. Named in Parliament as a pedophile).
- Roger Rogerson (Police detective who protected Sydney's underbelly including Club Costello boy brothel. Escaped drug trafficking and murder convictions on appeal, before a subsequent murder conviction stuck in 2014).
- Frank Arkell (Wollongong Mayor ritually murdered after being named in Parliament).
- Kerry Packer (Media mogul. Roger Rogerson shot 12-year-old Dean Henry, son of Kings Cross prostitute, as he fled being raped by Packer).
- Frank Houston (Hillsong Church founder, serial pedophile, child trafficker).
- Graham Kennedy (TV star).
- Don Lane (TV star).
- Bert Newton (TV star).
- Stuart Wagstaff (TV star).

In 2018 Bert Newton made a bizarre reference to the pedophile antics of his TV star buddies Graham Kennedy and Don Lane during his TV Logie Awards speech:

> Graham Kennedy was always the sort of man who nurtured young talent. He enjoyed giving young people a chance on television, he was a great mentor, he mentored a lot of young people. You knew if you went to his dressing room it was locked, he will be inside doing some mentoring. Don Lane was a mentor too. He did a hell of a lot of mentoring.

ENGADINE BOYSTOWN & DARUK

Daruk government boys' home was used to procure kids for sex trafficking to Club Costello boy brothel in Kings Cross. Tim Roy's father, who sex trafficked his own sons to members of Sydney's entertainment industry, worked at Daruk.

At age 13, Stephen Masters was thrown into Daruk government boys' home where he was subjected to ECT (electrocution). Stephen publicly declared Daruk was a CIA research facility where boys were subjected to MK-ULTRA experiments involving circumcision, biochemical exposure, drugging, and electrocution. Stephen said boys (notably a child surnamed Rogan) were murdered by hanging and their deaths recorded as 'suicide' or 'absconded.' Victims' bodies were disposed of in the coal furnace that heated Daruk.

Stephen Masters believes Medical Officer John Munger headed the MK-ULTRA research conducted on Daruk boys. The Australian government is protecting the identity and whereabouts of John Munger who is not listed with the low-level Daruk perpetrators due to be prosecuted in early 2020. Police informed Stephen Masters that John Munger served in the Australian Navy, yet no photo is available of him. Daruk staff occupied a house on the street corner directly outside the Daruk entrance; Stephen believes this was where the MK-ULTRA records were safely stored off-site.

Stephen Master's was incarcerated in Daruk with Les Murphy who, with four others including John Travers, was imprisoned for the 1986 ritual rape and murder of 26-year-old nurse Anita Coby. I say 'ritual' because I heard unpublished details of Anita's murder from two unrelated sources who viewed Les Murphy's file, the lawyer husband of my high school friend, and a prison guard I bunked with during my parole officer training in Sydney. The latter vomited when she read Murphy's file detailing how he and his accomplices had sex with deep cuts they made in Anita's body.

Serial killer Ivan Milat's victims were found chopped up and scattered over a wide area of bushland, which indicates satanic ritual. I surmise that Milat was the fall guy for a group cult effort. Stephen Masters reported two encounters with Ivan Milat to police. The first involved Milat offering 15-year-old Stephen and his inebriated teenage mate a lift. Milat detoured to Club Costello boy brothel in Kings Cross where Stephen recognised 16-year-old Les Murphy working behind the bar. Stephen deduced Ivan Milat drugged and raped his young mate in Milat's car that evening, and that that Milat had a system of scouting and collecting child victims, drugging them in preparation for rape by pedophiles at Club Costello, before disposing of their bodies afterwards.

Both Ivan Milat and John Travers (Anita Coby's killer) spent time in Engadine's BoysTown juvenile detention facility, where my father and I were subjected to years of ritual abuse. Australians question where the likes of Milat, Murphy and Travers got the idea to murder people the way they did. Such behaviour is not innate - it was taught by Luciferian pedophiles who ran Engadine BoysTown and Daruk. We will never know how many murders Milat and Murphy committed separately or together. The unsolved 1965 Wanda beach murders where two 15-year-old girls violently stabbed and slashed at Cronulla carried all the hallmarks of Ivan Milat.

MILAT, MARSDEN & MURPHY

John Marsden was Ivan Milat's lawyer. In 1971, Marsden secured Ivan Milat bail for rape and armed robbery charges and helped him flee to New Zealand. Australian authorities allowed Milat to leave the country knowing he was on bail for serious offences. I wonder how many NZ victims Milat sourced, abducted and killed for the NZ VIP pedophile network I heard about from NZ victims and witnesses. When Milat returned to Australia in 1974, John Marsden had him acquitted of the rape and armed robbery charges. Milat was never charged for breaching his bail conditions by leaving Australia. My father knew the Milat brothers who told him they were never caught for a series of bank robberies during which they routinely raped young female bank tellers.

Daruk resident Ray Leary was sex trafficked to Club Costello boy brothel where he was raped by John Marsden.[91] Ray Leary also witnessed Les Murphy working behind the bar at Club Costello, and said John Marsden used Les Murphy, whom Marsden frequently visited in prison, to threaten him. Indeed, a judge found John Marsden used Les Murphy to persuade a witness to change his position. John Marsden escaped conviction for pedophilia, yet the NSW Victims Compensation Tribunal awarded compensation to one of his victims.

John Marsden came out as gay after Deidre Grusovin used parliamentary privilege to name him as a pedophile. Pedophile Prime Minister Gough Whitlam attended John Marsden's funeral, while accused pedophile Justice Michael Kirby delivered Marsden's eulogy.

2020 Update:

Former federal Liberal MP Alasdair Webster facing historical sexual assault charges
Duncan McNab, 7NEWS, 11 March 2020 .

A former federal politician and Order of Australia recipient will face court later this month on historical sexual assault charges. Alasdair Webster, 86, has been charged with buggery, attempted buggery, assault occasioning actual bodily harm and 10 counts of indecent assault on a male. The offence of buggery carries a maximum 14 years imprisonment…

The charges result from investigations by Strike Force Eckersley into alleged abuse of boys at the Daruk Training School near Windsor, in Sydney's west, between 1978 and 1980, where Webster was Chief Superintendent…

Webster was the federal Liberal Party member for the seat of Macquarie in Sydney's west from December 1984 to March 1993. He later contested the NSW Legislative council at the 1999 and 2003 elections for Fred Nile's Christian Democratic Party. Webster was awarded an Order of Australia in 2008 for "services to the Parliament of Australia, and to the community through Indigenous, educational and service organisations."

* * *

AGE OF CONSENT BILL

James Wood did not recommend any action against the accused VIP pedophiles. instead, he recommended lowering the age of consent so men could legally have sex with teenagers. Premiere Bob Carr subsequently introduced his NSW Age of Consent Bill in 2003. The leftist media labelled any opposition to Carr's Bill 'homophobia.' When an MP who voted against the Bill used parliamentary privilege to threaten naming a senior MP accused of raping a 15-year-old boy, Premier Bob Carr referred the matter to the Police Integrity Commission headed by James Wood.[92]

---

[91] Margaret Scheikowski (2000). NSW: Man tells court John Marsden raped him as a boy. AAP, 2 Jan.
[92] Nick Grimm (2003). Carr sceptical of new pedophile claims, ABC Radio National, 28 May.

‘RITUAL ABUSE’ & PM NATIONAL APOLOGY

I campaigned for five years to undo the damage James Wood did to the credibility of Australian Ritual Abuse victims and their therapists. On 17 October 2018, I tweeted to our Prime Minister:

@ScottMorrisonMP When you issue your ‘National Apology to Victims and Survivors of institutional Child Sexual Abuse’ this Mon 22 Oct, please acknowledge victims of ‘Ritual Abuse’ by using these very words. This will gain you credibility with the many RA victims and the therapists.

If only the Prime Minister included those two words, I reasoned, then victims and therapists could reintroduce ‘Ritual Abuse’ to their vocabulary, and SRA victims would have a voice. My tweet received the most public attention on the PM’s twitter account that day. On 22 October, the PM included in his National Apology:

> The crimes of Ritual Sexual Abuse happened in schools, churches, youth groups, Scout troops, orphanages, foster homes, sporting clubs, group homes, charities, and in family homes.

My therapist exclaimed: ‘From now on I’m including the words, “ritual abuse - as acknowledged by the Australian Prime Minister” in all my medical reports!’

Pièce de résistance

On 18 June 2014, Sydney child trafficking victim Dean Thomas Chisholme Henry attended an Assessment and Inquiry Session at Silverwater Prison with Vicki Cosma and Darren Latimore (Officers with the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse). During this session, Dean Henry provided verbal testimony concerning his child abuse experiences which the Commission Officers recorded and submitted in transcript form to the Royal Commission.

In this transcript, Dean Henry listed names of some of the men his prostitute mother sold him to as a child. On page 5 of the transcript, Dean Henry named the following man as one of his pedophile perpetrators:

JUSTICE JAMES ROLAND WOOD.

* * *

Victorian Pedophile Network

In 2004, Reina Michaelson (PhD psychologist, 2005 Young Australian of the Year for Community Service) called for a Royal Commission into allegations of a Victorian pedophile network involving Rushmore state high school and the Education Department, DOCS (child protection), a Mornington Peninsula childcare centre, Liberal Party Premiere Jeff Kennett, Victorian Police, Network 10, and TV star Bert Newton. The following newspaper articles refer to this operation:

POLICE FILES ON SEX ABUSE 'VANISHED'
Gary Hughes, The Age, 19 April 2004.

Police files on a suspect in claimed sexual abuse by men dressed as police are said to have 'disappeared.' A deputy principal who reported a student's claim of the abuse says detectives later told him that Victoria Police computer files on one of the alleged pedophiles were tampered with. He was also told his initial report to the Department of Human Services under the mandatory reporting system disappeared.

The 13-year-old boy told staff at the school he had been repeatedly sexually abused by a number of men on the Mornington Peninsula. He said some of the men wore police uniforms and warned him that they would know if he reported the abuse because they were policemen. The boy had also been used to produce child pornography later published overseas.

The deputy principal said it was clear from a detailed 12-page statement made by the boy that the abuse was conducted by an organised and 'well-connected' pedophile ring.

No charges were laid because police said the boy had been 'too well groomed' by the pedophiles and it was doubtful he would testify in court.

The deputy principal contacted The Age after it revealed this month that the Ombudsman was investigating the alleged mishandling of a number of child sexual abuse cases by Victoria Police. The Age advised him to contact the Ombudsman, which he has since done.

One case being reviewed by the Ombudsman involves children at a child-care centre in Mornington. Investigators have been told that a house where the alleged abuse took place possibly belonged to a policeman and that a videotape existed of children from the centre being abused by men dressed as police.

The deputy principal from the college in Melbourne's outer east has asked that neither he nor the college be named to protect the identity of the abused boy. The deputy principal, who has since become principal of another school, lodged an initial report with what was then Community Services Victoria in July 1995. He telephoned about two weeks later and was told the report was being investigated. The deputy principal said it was clear from a statement made by the boy that the abuse was conducted by an organised pedophile ring.

After the boy made more detailed disclosures and began displaying disturbing behaviour, the school lodged a second mandatory report in December 1995 through the Education Department's regional office. The complaint was taken 'very seriously' and police were called. The deputy principal said police told him there was no record of the original report to community services or his follow-up phone call. A senior child protection manager told him it was not the first time reports had disappeared.

Detectives from a community policing unit said the main alleged offender in the ring was well known to police, the deputy principal said. But the police said a previous case against him had been abandoned after information on police files had disappeared. 'I started to pinch myself and think is this real or not? It seemed quite bizarre and I was very frustrated…' he said.

After police dropped the investigation in 1996 the boy 'totally clammed up' and staff at the school did not know whether the abuse continued. A Victoria Police spokesman said the original allegation had been investigated, including a search of the main suspect's home that found no incriminating evidence. The boy involved had refused to repeat to police the disclosures he had earlier made to school staff. The spokesman said he was not aware that files had disappeared.

* * *

CALL FOR PROBE INTO POLICE INVESTIGATION

Matt Doran, Mornington Peninsula Leader, 4 May 2004.

AT 7am on an ordinary morning in the early 1990s, police rapped on the door of a house in Mt Martha, waiting to tell a mother and a father their two toddlers were believed to have been victims of pedophilia. They did it subtly, of course, by asking the parents to see if their children had ever heard of 'red Kenny' or 'Daddy Kenny.'

A number of children from a Mornington childcare centre had earlier told the police these were nicknames used by men who had sexually abused them. 'I will never forget the look on my daughter's face when she heard those names. She immediately ran behind her mother saying, 'save me mummy, save me,' said John (not his real name). John was later told by his eldest daughter that the same men had held her underwater and bent her little finger backwards if she didn't do as she was told. John knew in his heart then that the bruises on his youngest daughters' cheek had not been caused by a 'playground accident.' His children, 'two little heroes,' were among at least 16 others abused at the Mornington Child Care Centre and Nursery School in the 1990s.

Children told police and their parents they were taken from the centre in a van to a house in Mornington where they were sexually and physically abused by a group of adults. Some described being abused by adults wearing 'funny clothes' including police uniforms, clown suits and 'black capes with tails.'

The centre was deregistered after a Department of Human Services inquiry found that the centre's owners, Norman and Alison Shulver, had 'permitted the abuse to occur or were involved in that abuse.' No police charges were laid, but in 1994 the Crimes Compensation Tribunal awarded damages of up to $20,000 to more than 30 applicants affected by the alleged abuse.

Now a decade later, Victoria's Ombudsman is due to release a report on the way police handled their investigation. But that does not comfort John or his eldest daughter, now 16, who are still traumatised. 'My eldest daughter still needs counselling and is afraid to sleep by herself. She is on antidepressants and . . . has no friends,' John said. 'She believes she was the victim of organised pedophilia and she still fears for her life. 'It is too late for justice for my family. Justice cannot repair my marriage or make up for the trauma my daughter has suffered. But there needs to be justice for the community, so that people's faith in the system can be restored.'

Psychologist Dr Reina Michaelson, who is representing survivors of abuse throughout Victoria, helped instigate the Ombudsman's investigation in 2002. She first raised concerns with Chief Commissioner Christine Nixon in 2001, about the way the original police investigation was conducted after a 'well-hidden' file containing allegations linking police to child sex offences was stolen from her home. But now Dr Michaelson has lost faith in the Ombudsman's internal investigation.

Documents obtained by the Leader show that in April last year an Ethical Standards Department officer was removed from the investigation for 'incompetence' after he failed to pass on vital information from two witnesses. One witness claimed that a house used by pedophiles in Mornington belonged to a policeman. The other witness gave information about the existence of a video tape that showed a number of men dressed in police uniforms abusing children. The investigator said he could not recall talking about a video with the witness, but a check of telephone records showed he did have such a conversation.

'These children were the victims of a highly organised and protected pedophile group that continues to operate throughout Victoria,' Dr Michaelson said. 'While this type of corruption continues, these children don't have a hope of getting justice. 'They desperately want to present their testimonies and evidence, but they need to be given a forum where they can do this in safety and where the investigative process is truly independent.

Doctor's Years of Dedication

Dr Reina Michaelson, who sparked the Ombudsman's current investigation, is a high achiever in the world of child psychology. The 33-year-old completed her PhD in psychology at Victoria University in 2001. Her thesis, which was awarded the vice-chancellor's medal for excellence in research, focused on ways to prevent child sexual abuse. Dr Michaelson was Young Australian of the Year (for community service) in 2001.

*   *   *

MPs AND POLICE 'IN CHILD SEX NETWORK'
Gosia Kaszubska, The Australian, 9 July 2004.

A SOPHISTICATED pedophile network involving former politicians and police has been operating in Victoria since the 70s, anti-child-abuse campaigners claimed yesterday. Reina Michaelson, head of the Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Program, and Bravehearts founder Hetty Johnston said victims had told them of an organised child pornography and prostitution network with links to former MPs and senior police officers.

The claims a pedophile ring was operating under the protection of police came after the Victorian Ombudsman released a damning report on the conduct of four child sex abuse investigations, leading to a review of the operations of the sexual crimes squad. Two experienced members of the squad will be investigated over their role in the abuse cases, which are being reopened.

The inquiry found the officers failed to adequately examine several child abuse allegations and concluded they may have lied under oath to investigators from the Ombudsman's office. The Ombudsman found officers from the squad told the Education Department a teacher had been cleared of abuse allegations, despite conducting no investigation into the claims.

In a separate case, a senior detective blamed a 12-year-old girl for encouraging a man who had allegedly abused her, and another officer described the victim as 'a little slut.'

The Ombudsman's inquiry followed complaints from Dr Michaelson, who gave a dossier of child abuse cases she claimed had been mishandled to police Chief Commissioner Christine Nixon in late 2001. . .

* * *

TV MAN [Bert Newton] LINKED TO SEX CASE INQUIRY
The Age, 16 Nov 2004.

A sudden decision by Victoria Police to drop a rape investigation involving a prominent television industry figure is likely to be examined as part of a special inquiry by the state Ombudsman into how authorities handle sexual assault cases.

Using his new powers, the Ombudsman will examine how government agencies and the police investigate allegations of sexual assault and how victims are treated. The wide-ranging inquiry will include the Department of Education and the Department of Human Services, which is responsible for child protection.

One of the cases likely to be examined is the recent decision by Victoria Police to drop an investigation into sexual assault allegations against the prominent Victorian television industry figure. The alleged victim told police in March that he was repeatedly raped and sexually assaulted as a teenager by the male television executive in the 1980s.

Deputy Ombudsman John Taylor told The Age a special unit began initial work on the inquiry several weeks ago and government agencies had been formally notified.
…
The alleged victim of the television figure lodged a formal complaint last week with the Ombudsman and Victoria Police Chief Commissioner Christine Nixon about the decision to drop the investigation. The Ombudsman had already decided to hold the special inquiry before the complaint was received. Ms Nixon has referred the complaint to the police Ethical Standards Department.

The Ombudsman has been told that police decided to drop the case, despite the Office of Public Prosecutions reviewing the evidence just weeks earlier and indicating the investigation should proceed and charges could be laid. In his complaint to the Ombudsman, the alleged victim said that police ignored potentially corroborative evidence, failed to interview witnesses, only spoke to some other witnesses over the telephone and pressured him into writing a letter exonerating a second offender just a week before dropping the case.

Mr Taylor said the decision to hold the special inquiry was the result of the number of complaints received over the past 12 months about the way sexual abuse allegations had been handled by government agencies and the police. 'Inevitably the focus has been as the result of some specific complaints, but we are looking more broadly than just a few complaints,' he said.
…
The new inquiry comes after an Ombudsman's investigation into police mishandling of child sexual abuse cases was scathing in its criticism of Victoria Police in July. Police reopened four cases after the Ombudsman found investigations had been bungled. The Age revealed at the time that, in one of the cases, children had remained at risk in a country town after police inadequately investigated an alleged pedophile in 1999.

The two-year investigation by the Ombudsman was also highly critical of the attitudes of investigating officers. One senior sexual crimes squad detective blamed a 12-year-old schoolgirl for leading on a 63-year-old man who allegedly abused her. Another police officer told investigators the same girl was a 'slut,' despite admitting she had most likely been sexually abused.

The sexual crimes squad was also found to have failed to investigate allegations against a teacher but told the Education Department that investigations had been carried out and the teacher cleared.

* * *

CULT FIGHTS CLAIMS OF CHILD SACRIFICE

Barney Zwarts, The Age, 22 November 2006.

> An anti-child-sex campaigner accused an occult religious group of hosting parties at which naked children acted as waiters and at which members had sex with and murdered children, a tribunal was told yesterday. The obscure group Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO) claims Dr Reina Michaelson and the Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Program described it in a website article as a satanic cult that sacrificed children and ate their organs and blood. It has complained under Victoria's religious hatred law that Dr Michaelson and her organisation vilified OTO members, causing revulsion, ridicule, hatred and contempt.
>
> According to OTO's statement of complaint, Dr Michaelson said it was not a religion but a child pornography and pedophile ring, that its members practised trauma-based mind control, sexual abuse and satanic rituals to discourage its victims from complaining to the authorities, and that it condoned kidnapping street children and babies and children from orphanages for sex and sacrifice in religious rituals.
>
> The case began at the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal yesterday but was adjourned to today to allow a last-ditch attempt to settle out of court. The article, still accessible on a website run from NSW, suggests senior politicians and television celebrities are part of a top-level pedophile ring and have been protected by some police. It says some members of the ring pretended to support Dr Michaelson's campaign and became board members of her group to subvert it from within. . .
>
> OTO members follow a religion known as Thelema, founded by occultist Aleister Crowley.

* * *

DR REINA MICHAELSON'S TESTIMONY

The following document was posted by David Icke and on various websites including Above Top Secret. The public reinserted some of the names that Reina Michaelson disguised.

Dr Michaelson's Statement:

The following is a summary of events that detail the infiltration of a high-profile, powerful group of child sex offenders into my child abuse prevention organisation. What was uncovered as a result of this infiltration was the existence of a child pornography and pedophile ring that is operating in Australia, under the protection of senior-ranking members of Victoria Police.

The members of the network include senior management and executives from a major television network, media celebrities, high-ranking politicians, police officers in charge of pedophile and child pornography investigations, senior management representatives from the Department of Education, directors of 'child-focused' service clubs, wealthy businessmen, and others.

I have tried to keep the account as brief as possible while including all relevant information. The description covers events from 1995 until the time of this writing (2005). Names have been changed.

Victorian Department of Education Protects Rushmore Pedophile Teacher

In 1995, I started running Australia's first child sexual abuse prevention program in schools (CSAPP, Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Program). This school-based program teaches children how to protect themselves from sexual abuse and what to do if someone tries to sexually abuse them. The program also teaches adults how they can best protect children under their care from sexual abuse.

My assistant and I were at Rushmore high school in the northern region working with Year 9 boys. We received a note written anonymously by one of the boys asking, ‘What do you do if you get raped by a teacher and no one will believe you? What happens if you get raped and you enjoy it?’

Later during that day, we were asked exactly the same question by a boy who was flushed red with embarrassment. I replied, ‘Talk to the Student Welfare Coordinator,’ to which he replied, ‘What if he is the one who won't believe you?’ I emphasized that it is important to keep telling until someone believes you.

During the day my assistant and I noticed the strange behaviour of a Rushmore teacher. Later that afternoon I learnt that the car I had been driving had been rammed in the school's carpark. Witnesses reported that the car had been rammed deliberately by a man who then drove off very quickly.

The local police were called and ran a licence check on the car and discovered that the numberplate was fake. They then took photos of the crime scene using the school's camera. Later, when it was revealed that a teacher was under suspicion of sexually abusing the children at the school and then organising the ramming of my car to intimidate me, the photos went ‘missing,’ and no further action was taken.

The Rushmore teacher was the only person at the school who knew my car, as he had taken it upon himself to show me to my car to give me directions to the shops during a break in classes.

It was organised that the boys in Year 9 would be interviewed in order to find the victims and give them appropriate support. Three people (including myself, my assistant and a counsellor from a sexual assault centre) were responsible for conducting the interviews. At the completion of the interviews, there were concerns for approximately 12 of the boys.

These concerns related specifically to sexual assault by a teacher at the school. However, by this stage (over a week had passed since the initial program) it was clear that the boys had been threatened. For example, when I interviewed the boy who had asked the questions about sexual abuse by a teacher and not being believed, he huddled into a foetal position, started crying, and said he could not tell me what happened. When I asked him why he couldn't tell me, he replied that he had been threatened with his life. His best friend told me he would never tell what had happened.

Sometime after this, we organised a theatre company performance for the students (on the topic of sexual abuse). While the children were seated and waiting for the play to begin, the offending teacher made an unscheduled visit to the hall. He proceeded to stand in front of each of the boys we had identified as potential victims and stare them down. The boys, who had been happy and laughing in the excitement of waiting for the play to begin, went grey with fear. Finally, I stood in front of the pedophile teacher so that he could not intimidate the boys any further.

I was then told no further action would be taken as the boys had not named the offender.

Program Infiltrated

I was the recipient of a very prestigious national award (Young Australian of the Year for Community Service). One of the judges ('RS') was a well-connected government official, and another was Robert Osmotherly, a Network 10 TV executive.

Network 10 General Manager

After winning this award, Robert Osmotherly approached me and said that he had never heard of this terrible crime (child sexual abuse) before meeting me. He said wanted to help me get my program into every school in Victoria within five years and said he had the money and the connections to do this. He said he would raise half a million dollars in 6 weeks, and have it matched within 6 months. He said that he and RS would set my program up as an independent organisation and that they would establish a Board of Management consisting of all of their powerful and influential friends. RS would become President of the organisation and Robert Osmotherly Vice-President.

I agreed to Robert Osmotherly's proposal as it sounded as if he would enable the program to receive substantial funding and therefore be able to reach many more children within Victoria, and across Australia. I did not consider for a second that Robert Osmotherly and RS could have been deceiving me in order to get control of, and ultimately, to destroy the child sexual abuse prevention program that I had developed.

The Board members and supporters that they brought to the organisation were very powerful and from the highest echelons of society. These included the Editor-in Chief of a major Australian newspaper, the former head of a child-focussed service club, the head of the largest agricultural society in Victoria, the partner from a well-known law firm, an extremely wealthy businessman and former Network 10 board member, the head of a well-known accounting firm, the head of a successful advertising company, and others.

Despite having such wealth and powerful connections, in the two-year period that they served on the Board they organised only one donation of $25,000. The board members subsequently despised the donor and ostracised him from their community (which at the time I thought was incredibly ungrateful!). This is compared with over $200,000 my family and I raised doing the fundraising ourselves in the same time period!

Furthermore, my efforts to secure funding were being actively sabotaged. For example, after an interview on the Channel 9 'Today' show (not Network 10), I was contacted by a well-known multi-national company who said that they would like to fund my program. This well-known company was located in Sydney, and as Robert Osmotherly frequently went to Sydney, I asked if he would have a meeting with them on behalf of our organisation. He agreed.

However, when he returned from the meeting, he said for me not to have much hope and not to contact them for six months while they sorted out a new tax issue. I found this very odd, as they had been so keen to fund the organisation when I had spoken to them. I phoned the woman whom I had spoken to, and she confirmed my suspicions. She had been at the meeting and Robert Osmotherly had told the company not to bother funding us, as 'the organisation won't be around in six months.' Needless to say, we did not receive the funding.

During this time period, I was without any income for four months. Many other people would have quit and sought other employment; however, I believed passionately in my cause and did not give up, much to the chagrin of Robert Osmotherly. On one occasion he said to me, 'You have given so much to this cause in your life, why don't you just give up? You have achieved more good in your short life than many do in a long lifetime. Why don't you retire down in the country (I was 28 years old)? Go on, just give up.' When I replied that I would never give up, he stormed away! I was confused by this behaviour, but as I trusted him, I did not think too much more about it at the time.

The Board members achieved one other 'in-kind' donation. It was the use of a Honda CRV vehicle. I appreciated the use of the vehicle while I had it (approximately 18 months). However, I later discovered that the head of the company that donated it, a close friend of RS, had just been convicted of child sex offences. These offences included the production of child pornography.

RS organised a meeting with TF, the CEO of a major charitable trust and personal friend of his and other members of the Board. At that meeting I was amazed when TF asked me, 'Do you ever think that by preventing children from having sexual relationships with adults that you are actually HARMING them?'

I replied by citing the research that strongly indicates adult-child sexual relationships are harmful to children, but he had switched his mind off to my argument. He then stated that in 100 years or so it will be revealed that such relationships are not harmful but that what I was doing was harmful to children. I was certainly taken aback, and RS said, 'Don't worry, TF just thinks on a very high intellectual plane. High above yours.' Needless to say, we didn't get funding from RS's very good friend after all.

Meeting with Victorian Premiere Jeff Kennett

After winning the award, I had a meeting with a very powerful state politician, Jeff Kennett. At that time, Jeff Kennett was the most powerful person in the state. As well as being politically powerful he also had key business interests, including in the media. When I was first introduced to him, he was staring at me quite sleazily. After he asked what work I do, and my response 'child abuse prevention,' he would not make eye contact at all and sought to exclude me from the meeting in a very bullying manner.

It was well-known that Jeff Kennett was a serious domestic violence offender, and that his wife was frequently being admitted to shelters in secret. However, given the power and status of Mr Kennett the issue was never raised in the mainstream media.

I was later to be informed by a very reliable and trusted source from the child welfare field that there is a file containing serious child sex offences (against boys) by Jeff Kennett, but because of his enormous power in Victoria, the police would not act on it. I also discovered from a former sex worker that Jeff Kennett frequently paid St Kilda boy sex workers for sex, and that one of these boys 'talked too much to the wrong people and ended up dead with an 'accidental' heroin overdose.'

It was also alleged that Jeff Kennett intentionally abused the boys in unusual situations (for example, in a helicopter) so that if it ever got out, the boys' testimonies would seem unbelievable. This of, course, is exactly the same strategy used by offenders in the US child-care centre cases. Interestingly, Jeff Kennett has recently commissioned a statue of himself - as a gargoyle [on St Patrick's Cathedral [93]].

Later I met with another politician (from the same Liberal Party) who told me that 'Jeff Kennett is really into that (child sex abuse).' This same politician told me that in the late 1980s and early 1990s, the police were 'getting too close to the truth, too close to people in high positions of power who are also pedophiles,' and so the sex crimes squad's child exploitation unit had been established to investigate organised pedophilia and ensure it was shut down.

---

[93] The Age, It's Kennett the gargoyle. 7 June 2002.

(Soon after Detective Senior Sergeant Chris O'Connor was put in charge of the child exploitation unit and the sexual crimes squad, to investigate these offences and ensure that the truth never got out and that this high-ranking network of offenders would never get caught).

VICTORIA POLICE CORRUPTION
PREVIOUSLY CENSORED
THE BOOK THAT THE VICTORIA POLICE DON'T WANT YOU TO READ
RAYMOND HOSER
VICTORIA POLICE CORRUPTION - 2
INCLUDING WHAT THE MEDIA DIDN'T TELL YOU!
Australia's Most Frequently Banned Author
RAYMOND HOSER

Jeff Kennett still runs the Victorian Liberal Party…

Network 10 Produces Pornography

One day I was working on a computer at Network 10. As I was working, Robert Osmotherly approached my computer and put a floppy disk in the machine. He said, 'Look at this' and proceeded to bring up images of pornography involving humans and Sesame Street characters. I was very embarrassed and did not know how to react.

I asked, 'Where did you get that?' and he replied, 'Oh, someone put it together here,' indicating that Network 10 was producing pornography. I was later to discover that Network 10 is also producing child pornography and is, in fact, a cult-owned and run television station. I was also later to discover that Robert Osmotherly is a passionate member of a cult.

Mr Television: Bert Newton

Robert Osmotherly introduces me to Mr. Television

After winning the abovementioned award, I was invited to go on one of the morning television shows on Network 10. (This was before my association with Robert Osmotherly. Ironically, after my association with Robert Osmotherly, Network 10 did not do any promotion of my work at all!) It is hosted by one of the most famous and longest serving television personalities in Australia, Bert Newton.

I was asked to prepare a number of questions that Bert Newton would ask me. I prepared very straight-forward questions that focussed on the work, so I was quite shocked when Bert Newton glared at me and said, 'Are you doing this because it happened to you?' I was also stunned when he refused to allow the phone number of my organisation to be presented on the air for donations.

When I later became closely associated with Network 10 Robert Osmotherly would often say to me ‘You know, Bert Newton really likes you. He really likes you!’ This surprised me because my experience of Bert Newton had been the exact opposite of that. (Interestingly, Robert Osmotherly also frequently said to me, ‘Jeff Kennett really likes me since I started helping you. He has me sit next to him at all of the formal functions we attend now.’ This was indeed true, Jeff Kennett, Robert Osmotherly and ‘RS’ were all the best of friends.)

After my experience with Network 10, I subsequently discovered that in the late 1980's Bert Newton was frozen out of the television industry due to allegations of his involvement in the production of child pornography. Although his alleged involvement in this activity was well-publicised at the time, he was never charged and about a year later he joined Network 10.

Since then he has continued to play a significant role in the production of child pornography in Australia. One contact who works on the set of the morning program hosted by Bert Newton finds the work to be very distressing as other on-air talent are very open about their pedophilia. This contact is disgusted, as his sister is a victim of child sex offences, however he does not want to publicly disclose the information as he will lose his job. In addition to the above, I am now in contact with a boy who was paid $2000 a night to have sex with Bert Newton, from the ages of 15 - 18 years.

Introduction to the Pedophile Police Unit

There is a specialised police unit in Victoria that, since the early 1990's, is responsible for investigating all child sex offences involving multiple-victims, offences committed by teachers, as well as child pornography offences [the Child Exploitation Unit within the Sexual Crimes Squad]. I had a meeting with the head of this unit, Detective Senior Sergeant Chris O’Connor, and was very surprised when the first thing he said to me was ‘Does Jeff Kennett know about your program? Jeff Kennett should know about your program.’ I found this a very odd thing for him to say as an opening statement, and especially so, given the information known about Jeff Kennett's alleged sexual abuse of boys. I thought it impossible for this police officer not to know of these things, given his specialist role.

Relationship between Chris O’Connor and network 10 Robert Osmotherly

I subsequently became aware of the ‘unusual’ relationship between Chris O’Connor (police) and Robert Osmotherly (Network 10). I invited Chris O’Connor to do a presentation for the board members. RS was ‘so impressed’ by Chris O’Connor that he wanted to invite him onto the Board of Management (along with all the other pedophile members). I later discovered that Chris O’Connor and Robert Osmotherly, although pretending not to know each other at the Board meeting, have a very cosy relationship indeed.

Specifically, a couple of years ago, a senior staff member at Network 10 was charged with procuring children for prostitution. At the time, the wife of a detective working in Chris O’Connor's unit (Pam Cullen) received a very sudden and significant promotion to become Robert Osmotherly 's Personal Assistant. It was a clear conflict of interest and deeply comprising to the investigation.

Pam Cullen 's husband should not have been involved in investigating Network 10 staff for their involvement in procuring children for prostitution or any other child sex offences connected to Network 10. However, with the appointment of the detective's wife to Personal Assistant of the General Manager of Network 10, it was guaranteed that no other information pertaining to Network 10's illegal activities involving sex offences against children would be pursued by Chris O'Connor or his unit. And Pam Cullen enjoyed her unexpected and incredibly well-paid, new position at Network 10.

Chris O'Connor called in to investigate the Rushmore teacher and other offences

In 1999 fresh allegations were made against the Rushmore pedophile teacher. This time, teenage girls reported the Rushmore pedophile teacher approaches students and asks them to meet him after school to meet 'Winston the Baseball Bat'. They indicated that 'Winston' was the teacher's penis. They reported that other students were very affected by this behaviour, and some had taken to writing warnings to each-other on the desks, such as 'If the teacher asks you to meet Winston, don't do it – it's his dick!!'

At last, the Rushmore pedophile teacher had been named and the victims were prepared to come forward. The teacher admitted to these offences and received 5 sessions of counselling. I then discovered the teacher had conveniently taken up a temporary position in a country school (like a priest being moved from parish to parish when things get too hot). The principal at the original school had not told the new school the circumstances surrounding his transfer and had instead said, 'Poor teacher, he's had a difficult time lately.' I later discovered that this Principal was an expert liar and had gone over and above the call of duty in protecting this pedophile teacher.

At this new country high school, it was not long before further allegations of child abuse by the Rushmore teacher came out. Incidents of verbal abuse, such as calling students 'fucking stupid' were revealed, as well as physical assaults, such as dragging students out of the classroom and throwing them on the floor. In another physical assault, the Rushmore pedophile teacher grabbed the 12-year-old boy by the neck and held him by his neck against a wall. The teacher admitted to the latter assault, wrote a letter of apology and provided financial compensation for the loss of the necklace.

With the pedophile teacher being named and various offences being admitted to, I reported his behaviour for criminal investigation to Chris O'Connor's sex crimes unit. It also provided the opportunity for the 1995 offences to be re-investigated. However, Chris O'Connor interviewed only two of the 12 boys on the list from 1995 and reported to me that as the first two boys did not disclose anything, the others would not be interviewed.

In relation to the offences against the teenage girls, Chris O'Connor said that, at 15 years of age, the girls were 'too young,' and he did not want to distress the girls' families by bringing up the topic of child sexual abuse. Therefore, these offences by the pedophile teacher would not be investigated either. I could not believe what I was hearing! Child sex offences are offences because they happen against children! And at 15, the victims were hardly at the young end of the age-spectrum! It was a completely nonsensical reason for not investigating the pedophile.

As for the physical assaults, Chris O'Connor said that he was not responsible for such investigations, so those cases would not be pursued either. He said, 'You do understand, don't you!' (it was not a question) and I replied that I did not. However, Chris O'Connor was not prepared to discuss the situation amicably and the pedophile teacher evaded investigation, by both the police in the unit established to investigate such offences, and by the Department of Education.

Further Dealings with Chris O'Connor's Child Exploitation Unit

Whilst at the country school, disclosures of child sexual abuse by other offenders were made by many children. The disclosures centred on two offenders in the town. The specialised Child Exploitation Unit arrived to 'investigate.' However, the main victim of the sexual abuse, Sammy, a 12-year-old girl, did not attend school that day.

Sammy did arrive after school that day on her bike, and her face was visibly disfigured. I was told by her best friend that she had been bashed, but her friend would not tell me who did this to Sammy. Her smashed-in face was warning enough for all of the children. The police later went to her house, where she fainted upon seeing them. She did not disclose any abuse at all. Despite the fact that her face was visibly disfigured and swollen from a recent assault, the police did not pursue the matter further.

The specialised Child Exploitation Unit totally destroyed any chance of the truth being revealed and the victims receiving the justice they deserved. For example, they left children waiting all day to be interviewed and did not end up interviewing many of them, including witnesses to attempted child-rapes.

The Child Exploitation Unit did interview one 12-year-old victim ('Lucy') and totally intimidated her. When the girl indicated that the police didn't believe her the first time, she told them what had happened to her, one police officer lent right over the top of her, pointed his finger directly in her face and hissed 'Don't say that! You don't know that!' I was shaking, and I was an adult sitting next to the girl! As she walked out of the interview room, the police officer said in voice loud enough for the girl to hear, 'We have serious concerns about the truth of what this girl is saying.'

It had the desired effect, Lucy burst into tears and said, 'The police don't believe me. I don't want to keep going.' The Welfare Co-ordinator, who was also in the room during the interview, and who is also an experienced sexual assault counsellor and child protection officer, said to me, 'That wasn't an interview. That was designed to stop a child from talking.'

The Child Exploitation Unit did not pursue the case any further on the following grounds: No-one would believe Sammy if she disclosed the abuse in the future, as she hadn't disclosed the first time. (The fact that she had been bashed would not be seen as relevant to her hesitancy to disclose?!) Lucy had led all the children on (to make up 'stories' of sexual abuse for fun, even though the children were visibly traumatised). In relation to the sexual abuse of a boy, they said, 'men try to touch other men's penises after football matches all the time' so it was not worthy of pursuing.

And finally, the Child Exploitation Unit claimed that there was not enough evidence - this is despite the fact that there were witnesses to the attempted rapes of the children, and the testimonies of many victims provided significant corroboration. Also, many adults reported having been sexually abused by the same offenders when they were children, but the police refused to interview these adults.

The Case is Stonewalled by Child Exploitation Unit head Chris O'Connor

The police recommended that the Welfare Co-ordinator make reports to DOCS (Child Protection Department) as they stated it was a 'protective issue, not a criminal one.' The Welfare Co-ordinator did this, but weeks passed, and the children were not interviewed, and she inquired as to why. She was informed that DOCS would not be taking any further action 'on the advice of the police.' So, after telling the Welfare Co-ordinator to take the case to DOCS for investigation, the Police effectively stone-walled the investigation by advising Child Protection not to investigate.

Relationship between Robert Osmotherly & Chris O'Connor

During the two-year association I had with Robert Osmotherly, 'DS' and the Board of Management that they had established, I trusted them implicitly. Although incidents occurred that often left me confused, and often baffled, and of-course, frequently without funding, I continued to trust them. DS always said to me 'I'm here to help.' It was his favourite saying.
I therefore reported all of the events that had occurred at the northern secondary school and the Rushmore school, to Robert Osmotherly. Osmotherly then told me that he knew Detective Senior Sergeant Chris O'Connor (in contrast to his earlier pretence of not knowing him at all!). He stated that Chris O'Connor is a 'really good bloke.' However, when I spelt out the stonewalling of the Rushmore case, Robert Osmotherly 's face twitched, and he became visibly uncomfortable. I had never seen Robert Osmotherly react in this way.

It was soon after this that very strange events began to occur.

On one occasion Robert Osmotherly was on the phone to his 'boss' (of Network 10). When his boss realized that I was present he began to speak aggressively, not knowing that I could hear him. He was saying, 'put her on the phone to me, I'll sort her out!' Of course, I found this all to be very strange as I had never even met this man before. However, when Robert Osmotherly apologised on behalf of his boss, I accepted it and put it out of my mind - again, because at that time I trusted him.

I had recently purchased a very cheap country property that I planned to use as a retreat for abused children. I invited the board members to view the site. None attended, however Robert Osmotherly said that he wanted to go - alone with me. He said he had set aside the whole day for it and was putting me under enormous pressure to go with him. I felt very uncomfortable about it as he had insisted on a number of details.

First, it had to be a complete secret. I wasn't even allowed to tell my parents that I was going, let alone where I was going. Second, he had to drive. I wasn't even allowed to drive my car to the station and for us to drive together from there (my car had to stay at my unit carpark). And third, Robert Osmotherly insisted on picking me up from my unit before daybreak. This was unnecessary as the trip only takes two-hours. Of course, all of these bizarre 'conditions' and the huge pressure that Robert Osmotherly was putting me under made me feel extremely wary. With my parents' help I made up an excuse at the very last minute and did not go.

However, if I had done as Robert Osmotherly had wanted and if anything had happened to me that day, I could have gone missing without a trace.

Sammy's relationship to Network 10

'Sammy,' the 12-year-old-girl from Rushmore, was a main victim of the sexual abuse being perpetrated against children in the town. She referred to the offender (a man in his 60's) as her 'boyfriend,' and her close friends knew of the sexual activities between her and the man. The offender also happened to be the best friend of her father.

I was asked to provide support to Sammy, and in one session it became apparent that Sammy's personality had been totally fragmented. In her words, she was like 'a house with mirrors everywhere, smashed into broken bits.' It was later that I learned about the use by powerful secret societies of trauma-based mind control, sexual abuse and satanic ritual to force children to create 'alter personalities.' Other information from Sammy has led me to believe that she has been subjected to all these forms of abuse.

Sammy also told me that her relative takes her to Queensland (Australia) 'whenever I want' and that she can get 'whatever I want, too.' It was only later that I learned of the immense significance of what Sammy was telling me. Sammy's relative is a Board member of Network 10, who is based in Queensland. It is my belief that Sammy was being used in Network 10's production of child pornography, both in Victoria and Queensland.

Here is another example of the police's failure to investigate a case with ominous connections to Network 10. In particular, Detective Senior Sergeant Chris O'Connor's unit that has been established specifically and exclusively to investigate such cases well and truly ensured that this case would go nowhere.

After two sessions with Sammy I was told that the school had 'received complaints' that I had 'brainwashed the children' and the support sessions were terminated.

More Connections - the Cult in Rushmore

I was to learn later that there is a Satanic cult operating in Rushmore. I learned this from two independent sources. One was from a Christian woman who was raised in the town and who since had moved elsewhere. The other was from an adult survivor of the cult, Mick. The Satanic cult is very powerful within the town and was headed up by the most powerful and influential families of the town. One of the members owned and operated the photographic studio in the town. Furthermore, Jeff Kennett, the powerful politician mentioned previously, has significant 'business operations' extremely close to Rushmore, and he was driven (by his driver) to this location every week.

Mick's Experiences

'Mick' was introduced to the satanic cult as a very young child by an extended relative. Mick informed me of many experiences he was subjected to as a child in this cult. From everything that I have been told by Mick, the cult appears to be the Illuminati operating in Australia. Mick now suffers from MPD/DID but has survived his experiences remarkably well considering the traumas he has been through.

As a child Mick was forced to attend blood-rituals, where animals and small children were sacrificed, and their blood and organs consumed. Mick was required to clean up the blood after these rituals. The children and babies were street children or were taken from orphanages, so that they could not be traced, and no-one would know, or care, if they went missing. The rituals were spoken in Latin and were clearly satanic. The rituals took place at various locations, including Rushmore. Mick and other children would be driven to the rituals in the boots of cars.

The members of the cult were extremely powerful members of society. There were numerous politicians (mainly from the Liberal Party). These people would often speak of important events before they would actually occur. Mick was also sexually abused by Graham Kennedy, the famous television personality and professional partner of Bert Newton.

Mick was one of the many children who were used to 'host' parties of the cult members. At these parties the children acted as waiters and were naked. Many of the adults, but not all, would wear masks at these parties. After the food was served the adults would have sex with the children. Children who tried to escape were killed, often in front of the other children in order to control the children through fear. Once Mick and another child had tried to escape but were caught. The other child was murdered by having her head smashed open with a rock. Her body was then dumped in a nearby mineshaft. Mick was spared the same fate, as he was told that he was the 'chosen one,' selected to carry on the traditions of the group.

Mick was forced to participate in the production of child pornography, including movies as well as still photographs. This involved sexual activity with other children as well as adults. He would get paid a small amount for his sexual ‘services,’ while the relative who brought him to the events would get paid a large amount of money. As he got older, Mick was no longer used for sexual purposes by the group but was required to recruit new younger children. When he was old enough (in his 20's), Mick was able to escape the group, but they continue to contact him with threats.

Robert Osmotherly's ‘Religion’

During my association with Robert Osmotherly I got to know him quite well. One day he informed me of his "religious" beliefs. These were the opposite of mine (as I am a Christian). I was also informed by one of his colleagues in the media industry that Bob's ‘religion’ is ‘weird shit.’ At the time I had not heard of the Illuminati and it is only now that I realise that Robert Osmotherly is an active and dedicated member of the Australian Illuminati. The symbolism used in Network 10 promotional material is totally consistent with that of the Illuminati, such as the key colours - blue and gold, and key imagery involving flames.

Telephone Interference and Intimidation Begins

It was after reporting the events at Rushmore to Robert Osmotherly that unusual events began to occur. My phone line began clicking, and the voice-mail service recorded the sounds of a tape clicking over (note that voicemail does not use tapes for recording so the tape was from another source). Two of my organisations' staff members had their cars broken into on the same night.

In one car, the book ‘The Clocks’ by Agatha Christie was on the front seat. The book is the story of a series of murders where the only evidence left at each murder scene is a clock. On the front seat of the other staff member's car was a broken clock. Nothing was stolen from either car. On one occasion I purposely said over the phone that I kept all of my files in the backyard shed (this was not true, I just wanted to test the security of the telephone line). Soon after, the back shed was broken into.

Board Members Propose a Name-Change

At one board meeting, the head of the Agricultural Society, proposed to launch the organisation, despite the fact that it had been operating for nearly two years. He had three ideas. The first was that a rodeo would be organised, and whenever a rider fell from their horse or bull, money would be donated. Thus, it would be ‘money for every bruised butt.’

The second proposal was to organise a ‘beauty pageant’ for 12-year-old girls. There would be an award given for ‘the prettiest girl on the shiniest pony.’ A photo of her on her horse would be used as a centre-page-spread in the leading newspaper (courtesy of the Editor-In-Chief contact). The third proposal was to have a photo of sexually abused children in an ‘animal birthing centre.’ This photo would also be published in the leading newspaper.

The Ag Society head also proposed a name-change. He proposed to change the name of the organisation to 'Shine.' I did not want to do this, and the members of the Board put me under incredible pressure to adopt this name-change.

It was only later that I learnt about the Illuminati connections and the significance of their symbolism and language. 'Shine' is a very significant Illuminati term.

Realisation Dawns

It was at this point that I realised that something was dreadfully wrong. I rejected all of the proposed ideas (very politely, but firmly). I also called for all outstanding Criminal Records Checks to be undertaken immediately. The Criminal Records Check had been designed only to identify whether a person had committed any sexual assaults against children or had any involvement in related offences, such as child pornography. Therefore, if a person had smoked marijuana in their university days, this would not be revealed in the Criminal Record Check.

This was a policy that I had insisted on right from the start (nearly two years ago), however Robert Osmotherly had given numerous excuses every time I had requested his. He even went so far as to suggest that he would organise it "on the sly" using his "contacts in the force". I did not pursue that option and instead gave the Board members two weeks to complete their forms and submit them. Robert Osmotherly, while initially embracing the policy at the start, ultimately refused to submit a Criminal Records Check.

The Significance of Shine

I discovered that there is an Australian Internet-based group called 'Shine'. The site includes a membership section where members are able to exchange photos etc, including ‘S&M’ and ‘hard-core Bert Newton style.’ It is a child pornography club that operates similar to the notorious Wonderland club. I noted the code-names used by the operators of the Shine site, one of which was Natas (Satan backwards). I went to the Network 10 site and entered a secret section on the site (which members of the public would never know about). It asked for the password, so I typed in Natas, which took me to another level. It then asked for the next level password, which I didn't have. The computer then went berserk and was almost impossible to turn off. I managed to do so only by pulling out all of the connections. Soon after this, the Internet site for Network 10 was shut down and remained shut down for a number of months, which is rather unusual given that Network 10 is such a large company.

After that year, the Department of Education put on a concert involving thousands of children. They chose to call it 'Shine'. This was an interesting choice of title, given my experience and other people's experiences of the Department of Education protecting pedophile teachers.

A further interesting connection was that Robert Osmotherly and RS organised a meeting between us and the senior managers of the Department of Education. When we all met, the men acted as if they did not know each other and were meeting for the first time (exchanging business cards, etc). However, when the men thought I was gone (I was in fact standing just out of their sight), it was very clear that they not only knew each other, but that they knew each other extremely well. They were saying things such as ‘Great to see you again, mate!’ and slapping each other on the back!

Escape from Robert Osmotherly and the Pedophile Board

After I discovered what was going on (at least, I started to discover what was going on) I knew I had to break away from Robert Osmotherly, RS and the people they had put on the Board of Management. The AGM was coming up and I organised for my family to attend. We did this secretly, as we knew that the phone lines were being monitored. On the night of the AGM, the board members were visibly shocked when they saw that members of my family were attending.

It transpired that, rather than undertake a Criminal Records Check, the members of the Board had planned to resign on the spot. This served two purposes; (1) they avoided having to undergo the Criminal Records Check; (2) the organisation would effectively fold as there would be no-one to take up the Board member positions. This is exactly what Robert Osmotherly had wanted from the beginning, but especially since I had begun to uncover the corrupt pedophile police activities and the crimes in Rushmore.

However, as my family had attended the meeting, they were able to take up the positions on the Board, and the organisation did not fold. On the surface, the meeting was very amicable and civilized, Robert Osmotherly tried to remain calm, but he ended up storming out of the meeting half-an-hour early.

Mother Receives Death Threat from Robert Osmotherly

My family and I all waited for half-an-hour after the meeting had closed (to recover!) before leaving. We had all come in different cars, and my mother had parked her car in a nearby car park. She walked to her car by herself. We had not learnt to be security-conscious at that stage. As she approached her car, she was surprised to see Robert Osmotherly there (he had left the meeting half an hour early). He then approached her and said, 'You had better watch yourself. If you don't, someone might just run over you.' He then drove off very suddenly and another board member followed in a different car.

My mother and father told me about this incident, which had left my mother very shaken. Soon after I received a message from Robert Osmotherly saying, 'I only want to help.'

I was infuriated at this man, so I phoned his office and left a message with his Personal Assistant, Pam Cullen (I didn't know the significance of her husband's relationship with Robert Osmotherly and Network 10 at this time) saying, 'Bob has said he just wants to help me. Could you please tell him that it would be helpful if he could undertake the Criminal Records Check that he has avoided for so long. After all, it is designed to only reveal if the person has committed sex offences against children or related offences, like the production of child pornography. Oh, could you also tell him it would be very helpful if he did not threaten members of my family. Death threats against my family really aren't helpful. If you could pass this message on, that would be great. Thanks.'

Soon after leaving this message, my mother received a letter from Robert Osmotherly. In the letter he stated that he was only joking when he told her to watch out or she'd end up being run over. Yeah, real funny joke.

Report to Department of Education - Complaints and Investigation Unit

After these experiences I made a complaint to the Complaints and Investigations Unit of the Department of Education. My complaint related to the conduct of Rushmore pedophile teacher, which amounted to repeated acts of misconduct against students, and the police investigation at Rushmore.

Interestingly, the head of the Department of Education Complaints and Investigations Unit, PG, was at the very first meeting I had to outline my complaint. It was after this meeting that the material, which I had been assured by PG would remain strictly confidential, was given to Chris O'Connor and EI (who subsequently paid a visit to the new President of the Board in an effort to pressure me to drop the complaint). PG then left that posting, but 'coincidentally' was brought back to it to finish off the case involving the pedophile teacher.

PG wrote a letter to me exonerating Rushmore teacher on all counts 'because the witnesses (which I had provided) cannot substantiate your claims.' As you know, of the eight witnesses that I had provided to corroborate the case, only one had been contacted - and she re-confirmed the concerns about the pedophile teacher. In fact, she stated that she was amazed that it had taken so long for the matter to be investigated! She was shocked to discover that Rushmore teacher had been exonerated and that the Department of Education had LIED about her testimony!

After I did the telephone round of the witnesses I had listed and learnt that only one had been contacted, I phoned PG to ask how many of the witnesses had in fact been contacted. He said that he didn't know but that he would call me back ‘within 24 hours.’ Needless to say, I did not receive a return phone call from pedophile-protecting PG.

I truly believe that if the parents of children attending Victorian schools knew the extent to which pedophile-teachers are being protected by the Department of Education, they would boycott the education system altogether. And if they knew the suffering that some children and families have had to endure as a result of the pedophile-protecting actions of the Department of Education, they would boycott the system on those grounds too.

I am convinced if the parents of children attending the northern region secondary college knew of the abhorrent behaviour of the man teaching their children, and his shocking and extensive history of abusing students, there would not be a single child enrolled in that school in the future!

Leaked Document

After numerous meetings concerning the complaint (which I was told would be kept strictly confidential, particularly from Chris O’Connor and his unit), a document was leaked to me from within the Department of Education. This document revealed that the Department planned to absolve the Rushmore teacher from all complaints. The investigation had been totally and completely corrupted in order to absolve the pedophile teacher.

The grounds for this were that ‘no complaints of a sexual nature have been made against the Rushmore teacher since 1995.’ This was unbelievable! So, the pedophile teacher's invitations for students to meet his penis after school were not considered to be sexual! Also, it was stated that as the schools had taken action in relation to each case, there was nothing more to be done. So, it was therefore acceptable for a teacher to commit repeated acts of serious misconduct, against multiple students, at different schools.

It was very clear that this teacher was being actively protected.

Theft of Department of Education Files

I left a message with the Minister for Education to inform her that I had received information to indicate that the investigation had been seriously corrupted. Soon after, the unit that I lived in was broken into and files containing information about the Department of Education's protection of pedophile teachers were stolen.

This included a letter from a mother pleading for help as her son had been sexually assaulted by a teacher and was now suicidal. She wanted my help as the Department of Education was covering up for this pedophile teacher. Nothing else was stolen from the unit.

Visit to the New President of the Board

A new President was appointed to the Board, along with other new members. One day, the new President of the Board received a visit from one of the workers in the child protection field. This woman, EI, approached the new President and told him that Detective Senior Sergeant Chris O’Connor knew about the complaint I had made to the Department of Education (indicating a significant breach of confidentiality). She told the new President to cease any association with me and my organisation 'for the sake of your professional reputation.' The incident spooked the new President enough for him to telephone me in an effort to get me to drop my complaint against Chris O'Connor and his unit, which I refused to do. Thankfully, the new President had the integrity and courage to stick with our organisation despite the pressure he was being put under.

Anonymous reports to Crime Stoppers

Approximately 12 months had passed when I decided I would make an anonymous call to Crime Stoppers, a phone-in service where people can give anonymous tips to police about crimes. I telephoned Crime Stoppers from a public phone and informed the woman, Katie, of the pedophile network that was operating in Melbourne. She asked me to call back again with further information and I did so.

I told Katie that the network was operating under police protection and at that stage had not given her the police officers' names who were implicated. She then asked me to provide the names of the police officers who were involved. I told her that I was very nervous to do this, as my family and I had suffered very negative repercussions as a result of this group, and I didn't want us to have to go through any more traumas.

She spoke to her boss and he promised me that the information I provided would not go to the police officers of concern, and that the information would go straight to the Ethical Standards Division (ESD), which is the same as Internal Investigations. As she and her boss had promised that the information would go straight to ESD, I gave her the names of the officers.

When I called back again to find out how the case was proceeding, I was shocked when Katie told me that her boss had forced her to send the information to Chris O'Connor 's unit! The information had gone directly to Chris O'Connor!! Katie apologised and appeared to be genuinely distressed at what had happened.

I asked to speak to her boss, and I told him that he had promised that the material would go to ESD, and he exclaimed: 'Do you realise how serious your allegations are?' I replied that of-course I did - that's why I wanted the information to go to ESD, and not to the police officers of concern! He said, 'We don't pass on information to ESD.' Katie then got back on the phone and was clearly very upset. She implored me to contact ESD and give them the information myself.

Intimidation and Harassment Begins Again

Soon after this, my family and I were subjected to harassment and surveillance. For example, nearly every day there would be a car out the front of my parent's home (where I had now moved to, for safety reasons), with two men just sitting there. The men often had large walkie-talkies. The cars often had large, thick aerials. Whenever a member of the family walked out of the house the people in the cars would speed off. However, sometimes we were followed by the people in the cars.

The cars were usually very flashy, like large four-wheel-drives or dark shiny sedans. I was often followed by men in white shiny cars with the number plates beginning with VHA and was to later learn that these cars were often used as government vehicles.

Sometimes I would come out of a location, say a friend's house, and there would be a man in one of the flashy vehicles just waiting there. It was very menacing and very stressful for my family and me. We also received unusual phone-calls at that time, clicking noises over the phone and sometimes the phone-calls were actively intercepted with heavy breathing or laughter or shuddering screams. My incoming mail was very clearly being interfered with.

Visits from the Mormons

One day my mother and I came out from my parent's house and there was a group of men waiting in a car out the front of our house again. They sped off when we came out, but this time I got in my car and followed them. As I drove towards them (they had turned their car around and were facing me) they flashed their lights at me.

I drove around the cul-de-sac and was shocked when I got to my parent's house again. The men were talking to my mother from in their car. I called for her to get away from the men and she replied, ‘It’s OK dear, they're Mormons.’ I did not believe they were Mormons and I held my hand on the car horn and chased them out of the street. A licence check on their car however, seemed to indicate that they really were Mormons, or were using a Mormon-registered car.

I did not think they would ever return (especially if they really were Mormons!). However, two weeks later I was getting into my car and saying goodbye to my mother. The same men approached my mother, not realising I was in the car. They asked if they could ask her a few questions about me.

I then stuck my head out of the car window and said, ‘If you've got any questions you can ask me!’ They were very surprised that I was there and asked, ‘Why did you chase us out of the street that day. We are just Mormons.’ I replied, ‘Because some of your behaviour is most un-Mormon-like!’ The man then said, ‘Like what?’ and I replied, ‘Like flashing your lights at me.’ He then said, ‘Oh, you mean when we were taking photos of you? You didn't like us taking photos of you?’ The 'Mormons' had just admitted to taking photos of me, without my knowledge or consent. I told them to stay away from me and my family.

Soon after this I saw the same men in a different car. It was a dark, flashy sedan, similar to those that were often sitting in our street. I got the licence plate of this car and gave it to a trusted police office. He told me that the car was owned by a debt-collecting agency, or more likely, a surveillance company as they often used debt-collecting as a front. The owner of the car, however not one of the men who had been seen in the car, was a Mormon. The Mormons were very clearly conducting surveillance on my family and me.

Reports to Deputy Ombudsman

After the problems with Crime Stoppers, I decided to call the Ombudsman's office and pass on the information I had to them, including the incident with Crime Stoppers. The Deputy Ombudsman put me under a great deal of pressure to meet with him and hand over all of my information to him for investigation. I said that I wanted to meet with the new Chief Commissioner of Police, Christine Nixon, as she was dedicated to flushing out bent police. Deputy Ombudsman told me that he would try to arrange this. However, he reported that it was not possible and again put me under great pressure to give all of my information to him for investigation.

I finally did succeed in getting an appointment with the Chief Commissioner. Contrary to the Deputy Ombudsman's claim that she could not meet with me, she had never been informed that I had tried to get a meeting with her through him. She was extremely annoyed when she had been left out of the loop in this way, and the incident just added to my suspicions about the motives of the Deputy Ombudsman.

Thefts of Evidence

While I was reporting information to the Deputy Ombudsman over the phone anonymously, two thefts of evidence occurred. On the first occasion, the file was stolen from the boot of the car. I had left it there for two hours while I attended to a matter at a school. When I returned, I discovered that it had been taken. I rushed home to check that the copy left at my parent's house was still there. I discovered that my parent's house had been broken into, the dogs drugged, and the file stolen from a hiding place. Much was taken, including the letter of admission from Robert Osmotherly (of the threat to my mother). Luckily, I had kept a third copy with somebody else.

Fires at Network 10 Studio, Melbourne GPO and Celebrity’s Home

At this time a number of significant fires occurred. One was at a studio used by Network 10. Interestingly, the copy of the network's recent multi-million-dollar production had ‘coincidentally' been removed from the studio two days before the fire. All that survived the fire was a Sesame Street character, which took centre place in a photo of the scene in the leading newspaper's report.

Within a week there was another fire, this time at the Melbourne General Post Office. All of the post offices boxes (and their contents) were destroyed, though little else was affected. Finally, again within a week, a suspicious house fire occurred in the home of a well-known television celebrity. This celebrity is a member of the same secret society as RS. All that was destroyed in the fire was a collection of videos and photographs. Interestingly, the comment of the celebrity was, ‘It can all be put to bed now.’ A strange thing to say after your house has just gone up in smoke.

A further interesting incident occurred at Melbourne's largest brothel. An armed intruder stole a relatively small amount of cash from the brothel but was led to the safe where videotapes of clients engaging in sexual activities were kept. Video tapes of clients were ‘stolen,’ including those of Jeff Kennett, a frequent client of this establishment. A reliable contact informed me that the theft was actually an ‘inside job.’

Within a two-week period, thousands of videos had gone up in smoke or destroyed.

These events occurred at the time of the reports being made to Ian Snow. It is also very interesting to note that at that time, the British section of Interpol was in Victoria conducting a ‘secret’ investigation into child pornography.

Children Tortured or Die in Mysterious Circumstances

It was also around this time that a number of children connected to the child pornography industry were either killed in suspicious circumstances, or tortured. I was working with a young girl and was very concerned for her safety at this time. I told a trusted police officer of my concerns for this girl. A week later she had been rushed to hospital. An unregistered ‘tank’ (her word, meaning a very solidly built car) had come out of nowhere and slammed into the car in which she was a passenger. Thankfully, she survived.

Fears for My Life

I had managed to arrange a meeting with the Chief Commissioner of Police (this was no small feat, as there had been many stumbling blocks, and it appeared that there were people actively trying to prevent such a meeting). In the weeks leading up to the meeting I was in real fear for my life.

On one occasion I came home late at night and saw two men sitting in a car just up from my parent's house. As no-one was home at my parent's house, I drove to the top of the hill to stay with my friends. They did not hear the doorbell, and while I was standing in the street wondering where I would go, the men in the car drove up the hill very slowly, looking for me.

I had all of the evidence with me (since the thefts I did not let it out of my sight) and had to quickly hide in the bushes. The men drove up and down the street no less than five times looking for me. I had to cut through the backs of homes in order to get to another friend's house, where I stayed the night. They also witnessed the men driving up and down the street looking for me.

The next evening, I heard and saw the same car drive up the hill. As no-one was going to be home that evening, I quickly got in my car and drove to another friend's house where I stayed the night. The next morning the friends discovered that their front light had been smashed in. No other houses in the street had been affected. However, the neighbours did report hearing strange cars driving up and down the quiet street late that night. It was after this that I wondered if I would live to be able to hand over all the information I had to the Chief Commissioner.

Meeting with Christine Nixon, Chief Commissioner of Victoria Police

I attended the meeting with Christine Nixon, Chief Commissioner of Victorian Police, along with the trusted police officer who had investigated the house break in and thefts of the files. The Chief Commissioner believed me and was very concerned. She organised for the matter to be thoroughly investigated. The Chief Commissioner asked me if I wanted police protection for my family, which I declined (sometimes that results in more trouble). She told me I could contact her office whenever necessary.

Soon after this my unit was broken into and one of my collectable dolls had the eyes painted over. I phoned the Chief Commissioner's Personal Assistant and let her know that I would be sending the Chief a letter via registered mail. At the start of the conversation the line was clearly intercepted, which the Personal Assistant heard. She told me to call her back from a public phone.

Interestingly, after letting her know that a letter was coming to her via registered mail, the Chief Commissioner did not receive it. I called some weeks later after having received no response and was told that the letter had somehow been intercepted! All letters to the Chief are signed for, and the person who had signed for the registered letter I had sent was not known in the police force.

However, after two days of the Chief Commissioner demanding to know where the letter went, it turned up with a post-it note attached, 'Sorry, didn't know where to send this.' Well, to the person it is addressed to might be a start!

Ethical Standards Department (ESD) Investigation Gets off to a Questionable Start

I had a meeting to begin my statement to the Ethical Standards Department. It was clear that the officer appointed to the case did not believe what I had to report. While he went to have a smoke, he (accidentally) left me with the report that had been written by another police officer in response to my own report (that had been submitted to the Chief).

I could see why the police officer I was dealing with was so dismissive of what I had to say. The report discredited everything that I had reported. It made a mockery of my claim that Bert Newton and other high-profile individuals were involved in pedophilia and stated that there was nothing to support my claims of intimidation and harassment. This was despite the fact that there were numerous witnesses to these events.

The author went on to say that an investigation must be seen to be conducted, however, because if the information was to be made public there would be a public outcry. That is, make it look like it is being investigated, but don't do anything!

Even more disturbing was the specific recommendation that a Detective be appointed to conduct the investigation. The detective was a close friend and colleague of Chris O'Connor's and had in fact worked with him in his unit for many years. Indeed, he had only left Chris O'Connor 's unit three months ago to be transferred to ESD. It was very interesting timing. At the same time Chris O'Connor receives information that someone is dobbing him in for misconduct, his close friend and colleague gets a transfer to ESD and ends up with the job of investigating his best mate! How very convenient.

The Deputy Ombudsman Gets the Investigation

After this turn of events (I reported it all to the Chief Commissioner), the Deputy Ombudsman was given the investigation.

Child Care Centre, Pedophile Network, Police Pedophiles and Network 10

The Deputy Ombudsman informed me briefly about a case in the early 1990's. I did my own research into this case and discovered that it involved a creche in the Mornington Peninsula region. A high-profile group of men were sexually abusing, torturing and hypnotising the children. The owner and his wife took the children out of the centre during the day to the homes of the rich and powerful, where the children would be sexually abused, tortured and filmed. The children were also subjected to satanic ritual abuse. This case was almost identical to those in the USA (Little Rascals, McMartin and others).

The offenders were wealthy and powerful men in the community and included police officers.

Video copies of the children being abused were obtained by Network 10 (how interesting it is that Network 10 should be involved). However, when the story went public, the video tapes went 'missing' and the police claimed that they never received them.

Ultimately, the police did not take any action against the owner of the creche, on the grounds that the children were too young to be viewed as credible witnesses. While there was conclusive evidence that four of the children had been raped or sexually abused while at the day care centre, the owner was never charged.

A concerned parent with links to the underworld offered the head of a bikie group $10,000 to inflict enough damage so as to ensure that the owner of the creche could never sexually abuse another child again. The head of the bikie group said that they knew about the owner of the creche, and what he was up to, however, they could not do the job. Much as they would like to, the owner had protection from the very highest levels. He was untouchable.

When the Mornington Peninsula child-care-centre case broke, an investigative journalist infiltrated an elite child-pornography and pedophile club based in Melbourne. Its members were all wealthy and elite members of Melbourne society. It was chaired by the CEO of a major Melbourne Charitable Trust. This article included information on their use of telephone monitoring, courtesy of the group's contacts within Telecom.

The children from the Mornington Peninsula child-care-centre reported being taken to a 'pink' room with a spa and other significant decor. It was in a house where the children were sexually abused, tortured and filmed (amongst other locations). Three children independently identified to the investigators the house that they had been taken to.

Sure enough, the room had been painted a dusty-pink colour, and it had a spa and the other decor items described by the children. However, as you now know, no further action was taken against the owner of the child-care-centre, nor others suspected of being involved in the ring. What is most significant however, is that the pink house WAS REGISTERED TO THE VICTORIA POLICE!!

I am now working with some of the young survivors of the child-care centre and their families. It is clear that a cover-up of the highest order occurred in 1992, and the children and their families are still suffering from it.

Present Days

All of this material is currently being investigated by the Deputy Ombudsman. However, the investigation has been marred by suspicious activity. Perhaps the most significant example is the conduct of the police officer Ian Soft appointed to head the investigation: Detective Jock Westland.

My colleague, a counsellor who worked on the 1992 Mornington Peninsula Creche case, provided Jock Westland with information pertaining to a video tape that depicted police actively involved in the satanic-ritual-sexual abuse of children from the creche. This is highly significant information. However, I discovered from one of the other investigators that Jock Westland had decided not to pass this information on for further investigation. In fact, his notes read, ‘This witness (my colleague) has no information of significance.’

In addition to this, Jock Westland refused to investigate my claims of intimidation and harassment on the grounds that I was ‘paranoid.’ This is despite the fact that there are many witnesses to certain events who can corroborate my claims, and indeed, several have provided Statutory Declarations to do so.

Jock Westland has been under ‘investigation’ for these actions for two months now, and I am yet to find out whether he will continue to be involved in this investigation. If he remains on the case, we can be sure that this so-called investigation is just another example of high-level white-wash and cover-up of organised pedophilia and child pornography in Australia.

A final note on the Department of Education investigation. I received a letter stating that the Rushmore teacher had been cleared of all charges, as the witnesses could not substantiate my claims. However, of the pool of eight witnesses I had provided ONLY ONE HAD BEEN CONTACTED and she clearly re-affirmed the concerns about the Rushmore teacher. Another cover-up of the highest order and complete protection given to one of the untouchable pedophile elite.

* * *

OMBUDSMAN BASHED & OTHER ANOMOLIES

- Norman and Alison Shulver ran the Mornington Child Care Centre and Nursery School, in Parwan Crescent, Mornington, a bayside suburb of Victoria.
- The Police Child Exploitation Unit investigated and determined that 24 children alleged abuse while attending the Centre. The State Government Office of Preschool and Child Care inquiry heard evidence that in 1992 while attending the centre, a number of children were taken in a car to a nearby house, undressed by adults, photographed and videotaped while naked, forced to play sexual games, and urinated and defecated upon by adults. The adults wore masks and 'funny clothes' including police uniforms.

- Ann Sherry, who chaired the 1992 inquiry by the Office of Preschool and Child Care found that the Shulvers were not appropriate people to be running a childcare centre, having at least allowed the abuse to take place. She further found, 'There is a substantial amount of evidence that the person or persons who actually committed the acts of abuse may have included Norman Shulver.'
- In 2002, Victorian Police Chief Commissioner Christine Nixon referred complaints to the Victorian Ombudsman Dr Barry Perry. Shortly before he was due to report his findings, Ombudsman Barry Perry was bashed and left for dead.
- His successor's 2004 report alleged serious misconduct on the part of Chris O'Connor and his mate, the ESD investigator, including failure to obtain witness statements and evidence, and mishandling evidence. Police denied speaking to witnesses or receiving evidence, until telephone records proved this was a lie. Police denied receiving a videotape of men in police uniforms raping the preschool children in a Mornington house registered to a member of the Victorian Police, and the videotape subsequently went missing from the police evidence locker.
- Chris O'Connor (head of the Child Exploitation Unit and the Sexual Crimes Squad) and the other detective who threatened and intimidated child victim-witnesses, were destined for transfer until the Victorian Police union threatened industrial action. In 2005, Simon Overland, Assistant Commissioner for Victorian Police, said the findings against the two detectives were 'minor failings' and he took no further action against them.
- The Ombudsman's report was never published, on the grounds it 'would identify the child victims.'

VICTORIAN LAW CHANGED TO SILENCE DR REINA MICHAELSON

Dyson Devine and Vivienne Legg ran a website called gaiaguys in which they typically covered topics including environmental issues and government corruption. In 2005, the Melbourne OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis) used an interstate ACT judge to sue the website owners for publishing Reina Michaelson's aforementioned experiences on their site. On 28 June 2005, the ACT Magistrate's Court ordered Devine and Legg to remove the article and pay the OTO $30,000. The OTO subsequently repeated this tactic of using ACT judges to silence anyone from any state who posted anything negative about them on the internet, until a defendant won their case.

In 2006, Victoria's Labor government amended the Religious and Racial Tolerance Act of 2001 specifically to target Dr Reina Michaelson. The Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal tested the amendment by hearing a case the OTO brought against Reina Michaelson. The VCAT (Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal) wrongly determined the OTO met the Act's definition of a religion. Thelema, which the OTO practised, technically met the definition, but the OTO did not. Reina Michaelson's lawyer ignored this fact and ruined her case. Consequently, the VCAT decided Dr Michaelson's account of the Victorian pedophile network religiously vilified OTO members and ordered her to remove the document from the internet. Reina had been set up for this court case because she did not have control over the websites that published the document and never gave her permission for the document to be posted. On 28 November 2007, VCAT Judge Harbison sentenced Devine and Legg to 9 months prison for contempt of court for not removing the document from their gaiaguys website.

The alleged pedophile network was never investigated, the alleged perpetrators were never charged, and the alleged victims were silenced via threats, torture or murder. Norman and Alison Shulver, who ran the Mornington Child Care Centre and Nursery School, resettled in Brisbane. Dr Reina Michaelson fled for her life to the Northern Territory.

* * *

NSW Pedophile Network

While Reina Michaelson was battling pedophiles in Victoria, I was confronting an identical pedophile network in New South Wales. The following articles that I wrote for Independent Australia online news journal capture my experiences:

> NSW Education Department Covers up Teacher's Alleged 18-Year Child Sex Abuse Spree
>
> Fiona Barnett, Independent Australia, 25 June 2013.
>
> The Royal Commission into Child Sexual Abuse, which has commenced private hearings in Brisbane this month, is expected to shed light on one of Tweed Shire's darkest secrets — horrifying abuse, systematic cover-ups and institutional failure and corruption in NSW schools and the police service. Parent and whistle-blower Fiona Barnett fronts the Commission tomorrow — here she tells part of this story

ON 14 MARCH 2006, Jill Carlon, Chief Investigator for Employee Performance & Conduct of the Department of Education and Training, sent concerned Tweed Shire parents a letter:

> I am writing to advise you of the finalisation of the investigation and follow up action taken in respect to allegations that a teacher at Centaur Primary School, acted in a manner that could amount to improper conduct against students... In reviewing the investigation, all the available information has been carefully considered and, as a result, steps have been taken to ensure that the person will no longer be employed or involved in school, TAFE or student-related activities.

The letter brought to an end, at least for the parents involved, an 18-year nightmare and an alleged reign of terror by that teacher — of physical, emotional and sexual assault and abuse. However, many questions still remain, including how this man was allowed to be exposed to vulnerable children over such a long period? How has this matter been covered up for so long? How was he able to continue teaching in NSW independent schools, and in public schools just a few miles away across the border in Queensland? Why have NSW police consistently refused to properly investigate his activities? And why has he never faced criminal prosecution?

The teacher in question was Gary Willis, a middle-aged man who transferred to Northern NSW in the late 1980s. Despite allegedly having no prior experience in special needs, Willis received a 3-year position at East Murwillumbah Primary School's Special Education Unit. Almost immediately Willis began working at the School, allegations of inappropriate behaviour emerged — even directly in front of parents. For instance, one outraged mother related, in a written statement, that Gary Willis had allegedly exposed his penis and urinated directly in front of children, parents, and teachers during a school excursion:

> Gary Willis made no attempt to be discrete [sic] or hide his penis from any of us and grinned the whole time he was urinating. I was horrified that a teacher would conduct himself in this manner in front of young children, so I reported the incident to the principal, Al Gudgeon.

Principal Gudgeon asked the parent to tell him specific times and dates of the incidents, apparently so that he could report them. The mother provided the requested information, but said the principal never followed through with the complaint:

> I became very frustrated and angry with Al Gudgeon because I believed he was not taking any of these matters seriously and trying to cover up all complaints. I felt so strongly about the lack of protection and moral obligation to all children attending East Murwillumbah Primary School because of Al Gudgeon and Gary Willis, I transferred my children to another school.

In the classroom, Gary Willis was responsible for the most vulnerable children imaginable — children who were intellectually disabled, autistic, unable to walk and unable to speak. Former students, parents, and teachers allege that Gary Willis sexually and physically assaulted these disabled children. Witnesses, including other teachers, also say they witnessed Gary Willis being violent toward students, including allegedly ramming a wheelchair bound child into a wall and thrusting another disabled boy’s head into a sink. Two teachers stated that Gary Willis constantly refused to allow female aids to toilet the female students and that he insisted on doing this delicate task himself. Arguably even more shocking, witnesses allege that Gary Willis taught mainstream schoolboys to sexually assault the disabled girls. Medical evidence, police interviews and local DOCS intervention appear to support this claim. Police, DOCS, and a paediatrician concluded that two girls had been sexually assaulted at East Murwillumbah Primary School; Gary Willis was named in both cases. Parents subsequently watched him being seized by police from the school for questioning.

How was he allowed to allegedly perform these heinous acts almost entirely unchecked? To begin with, it seems his line manager, East Murwillumbah’s Special Needs Unit head Steve Tyler (now deceased), at best turned a blind eye to his alleged activities and, at worst, according to some reports, may have even been an active participant in the abuse.

Numerous witnesses complained to East Murwillumbah Principal Al Gudgeon about these and other abuse allegations. But Al Gudgeon apparently delayed notifying the Education Department and DOCS of the allegations and instead tried to cover the matter up — including by making late night phone calls to parents, where he allegedly threatened them with legal and departmental action if they continued their complaints, amongst other repercussions. To keep the staff quiet, Gudgeon allegedly threatened teachers with dismissal if they spoke to parents about what they had witnessed at the school. What is more, teachers also complained about Al Gudgeon’s own inappropriate behaviour. One described an incident when the principal allegedly used a child to deliver a picture of a penis to a 22-year-old female teachers’ aide, and then complained when his gift was returned.

Parents and staff complained about the child abuse allegations at East Murwillumbah School – verbally, personally, and in writing – to the Education Department’s Head Office in Sydney, to the Lismore Regional Office and to the Cluster Director at the Murwillumbah District Office.

A special needs teacher aide, Debra Edwards, submitted a hand-written complaint (dated 25 July 1991) to Cluster Director John Quill. Mrs Edwards reported catching Gary Willis with a naked, disabled, female student ("AA") on an excursion. In her complaint, Mrs Edwards alleged that she witnessed Gary Willis take the child AA to the men’s toilet during another excursion and doing something to her that made her laugh uncharacteristically while toileting.

On another excursion, she said she witnessed Gary Willis take AA for a lone motorbike ride into the bush and then admit to having toileted her. Mrs Edwards also says she witnessed Willis physically assault children. Debra Edwards never heard from the Education Department regarding her written complaint to the Cluster Director. To her knowledge, neither Principal Al Gudgeon nor the Department ever informed the girl's parents that formal complaints had been made concerning the alleged abuse of their daughter whilst in the care of the East Murwillumbah Primary School. The Department did, however, subsequently ban Gary Willis from approaching the child.

When parents further complained to Cluster Director John Quill that Gary Willis was allegedly sexually abusing their children, Quill concluded that the best outcome parents could hope for was to have the perpetrator transferred to another school.

In response to multiple child abuse complaints, witnesses say the NSW Education Department sent three investigators to East Murwillumbah Primary School to monitor the behaviour of Gary Willis for three weeks. Unfortunately, Gary Willis was allegedly warned that these investigators were coming and so behaved impeccably during the observation period. After concluding their watching brief, the investigators reported that they perceived no problem with Gary Willis. They reached these conclusions despite not having interviewed any parents or staff witnesses.

Parent ‘DM’ stated that she received a phone call from a Sydney solicitor acting on behalf of Gary Willis. The solicitor stated that she was representing Willis in some matter involving ‘AA.’ The solicitor sent a document for DM to sign, which asked her to attest that Gary Willis never hurt her intellectually disabled daughter. But Gary Willis did, allegedly, hurt her daughter — as the former student’s statement reveals:

> Mr Tyler was watching when Mr Willis put the stick between my legs… Mr Willis put stick in other girls – L… Mr Willis pulls pants down all the time, and Mr Tyler, before he died, he watched him. Mr Willis showed everyone what he’s got. He played with it…

Teacher Jeff Fallon stated that around 1994 (the same time DM received the phone call from a Sydney solicitor), he received a visit from a frantic Al Gudgeon, who stated that a complaint concerning DM's daughter had ‘gone up a notch’ and was now with the Minister for Education. The principal allegedly asked Fallon whether he possessed a copy of the minutes from meetings he and Gudgeon attended concerning the abuse allegations at the school. Jeff Fallon said the Education Department suspended Gary Willis from teaching in the early 1990s and placed him at Murwillumbah District Office for 12 months while he was being investigated for misconduct.

South Tweed Primary School

In 1991, the NSW Education Department transferred Gary Willis to South Tweed Primary School, where he was assigned to teach infants. Parents and teachers soon complained to the principal about how Gary Willis presented himself and acted around students. For example, one teacher described in a statement his work attire:

> He wore short ‘ruggers’ with no underpants, and often you could see the cheeks of his bum, his testicles, and his penis hanging out the bottom. He wore thongs and old, > faded stretched round-neck t-shirts. I can't remember ever seeing him dressed differently.

Parents at the new school soon began complaining about Gary Willis' mistreatment of their children. For instance, a Grade One boy ('E'), told his mother that Gary Willis constantly locked himself with little girls in the class storeroom. Other former students recalled similar incidents:

> I remember Mr Willis took one or two girls into the classroom storeroom alone and shut the door. He would stay in there for a while. The girls would go into the storeroom with neat hair but would come out with messed up hair. Sometimes the girls would look upset and as though they were about to cry. Mr Willis chose the pretty girls to take into the storeroom.

'E' also complained that he was being constantly harassed and physically assaulted by Gary Willis. E's mother appealed for help to a friend of hers, Dawn Mitchell. Mrs Mitchell happened to know about Gary Willis from East Murwillumbah Primary School, where she had accompanied DM to meetings with Al Gudgeon. Mrs Mitchell also happened to know the family of an Indigenous boy in Gary Willis's class ('T'). In a signed statement, T recalled being physically and emotionally abused by Gary Willis, who – he alleged – regularly called him 'coon,' 'nigger and 'the black snake.' Two former classmates and one former teacher corroborated T's testimony in writing.

Mrs Mitchell consulted South Tweed Primary School's Aboriginal Liaison Officer / School Counsellor, Joan Sheriff, and relayed the child abuse allegations against Gary Willis that had arisen at Murwillumbah East Primary School. Ms Sheriff apparently reprimanded Mrs Mitchell for making the accusations, but then allegedly said: 'I never did like his short shorts.' The Principal then contacted Mrs Mitchell and arranged a meeting with her, during which Mrs Mitchell reported Gary Willis' extensive history of child abuse allegations.

But just days following the two meetings, Gary Willis supervised a school sleepover attended by infant children. During the sleepover, Gary Willis allegedly sexually assaulted six young girls. The following day, parents, teachers, and students witnessed the girls in a distressed state at school assembly.

Three Tweed South parents complained to the school principal, counsellor and teachers regarding Gary Willis' abuse of children. According to them, their complaints were mishandled and denied. One of the parent's daughter wrote a statement when she was 20:

> I recall that Gary Willis came to my house out of the blue one night and insisted on getting some takeaway and having dinner with my mother and me. My mother looked shocked at this, and she couldn't get rid of him. In an effort to get him away from our house, my mother suggested we go somewhere else for dinner. We went to Club Banora and had the buffet. All night during this meal, Mr Willis sat me on his lap, played with my hair, and told me how beautiful I was.

Despite parents' ongoing protest, Gary Willis was allowed to supervise a second school camp at Hastings Point. Again, teachers, parents and students allegedly witnessed Gary Willis visit young girls' tents late into the night.

Parents and teachers complained that Gary Willis allegedly made young female school children change into their sports uniforms in the back of his panel van while he watched. Witnesses also recall Gary Willis taught girls dancing at Tweed Heads South Public School and an occasion in which he supervised these dancers at a combined schools' concert at a local club. During the concert, Gary Willis was allegedly seen refusing to allow parents to change his young dancers backstage, so that he alone changed them.

A Tweed Heads South Public School teacher witnessed complaints about Gary Willis allegedly flood into the school, particularly from Grade 5 and 6 students. When she consulted the principal about these complaints, she was told that 'photographic evidence' was needed before the allegations could be acted on. The teacher stated that Gary Willis was subsequently banned from associating with the older students at the school but was still placed in charge of infants.

In 1992-93, the parents of an 8-year-old child girl in Gary Willis' class phoned their friend, South Tweed teacher 'Ms X' and reported that Willis had just sexually assaulted their daughter 'BB.' Ms X immediately attended the family home and spoke with the victim. Gary Willis had allegedly asked BB and another little girl to stay behind after school that afternoon. He then allegedly took the girls into his classroom storeroom, fondled them, and digitally penetrated them. Consequently, BB suffered bed-wetting and screaming in her sleep. Despite Ms X's pleading, the parents declined to have Gary Willis charged because they did not want to put their daughter through the police and legal system.

Ms X reported the assault to the Principal Genevieve (Geni) Coughlin. The principal allegedly told Ms X to remain silent about the assaults. She also allegedly bullied her, yelled abuse at Ms X through her classroom window. She also subsequently allegedly criticised Ms X's teaching to parents, though many of the same parents responded by supporting Ms X — at least one calling her 'the best teacher ever.' Ms X was pregnant during the worst of this abuse and says she began to experience stress and high blood pressure after these highly stressful experiences.

Ms X complained to the District Inspector at Murwillumbah about Gary Willis and the principal's bullying. The Director allegedly advised Ms X to: 'Tell the people at South Tweed to have enough intestinal fortitude to stand up to her and come to me with their grievances, so I can do something about it.' Ms X's work colleagues shied from following the Inspector's second-hand advice, allegedly out of fear of reprisal.

The NSW Department of Education sent a counsellor to speak with South Tweed teaching staff. Without interviewing either the victim or her parents, the counsellor dismissed Ms X's allegations of child sexual abuse against Gary Willis as being unfounded. The counsellor allegedly told Ms X that she was being irrational, to think of her unborn baby, and she advised the whistle-blower to 'punch a pillow' to relieve her frustration and anger regarding Gary Willis and the principal. Ms X subsequently suffered a nervous breakdown and resigned from the NSW Department of Education altogether. She could not cope with entering a school again for 20 years. The once-passionate teacher concluded:

> I was the one who the Department said needed counselling, and I was the one who ultimately resigned in frustration, and yet a suspected child sex abuser was left alone in his classroom, teaching.

Following multiple complaints against Gary Willis at South Tweed Primary School, the NSW Education Department eventually transferred him to the neighbouring Centaur Primary School.

Centaur Primary School

In 1998, when Ms X's youngest child started school at Centaur Primary School, she was appalled to see Gary Willis at the school, still teaching. She immediately consulted the principal Mary-Anne Judge. Ms X told Ms Judge about Gary Willis' history of abusing children and warned that he was not to approach her child. The principal allegedly responded: 'I absolutely understand. I wouldn't have him here if I had any other option. I'm stuck with him.' Dawn Mitchell's own daughter attended Centaur Primary School. In 1998, upon discovering that her child had been placed in Gary Willis' English class, Mrs Mitchell (accompanied by parents Eric and Jeanette Ackerman) met with principal Mary-Anne Judge. Mrs Mitchell raised concerns about Gary Willis teaching her children and his history of alleged abuse at his two previous schools. Principal Judge allegedly told the three parents that she was unaware of any abuse allegations and she challenged Mrs Mitchell to either prove them or stay silent.

That evening, Principal Judge phoned Mrs Mitchell and allegedly stated that what the mother had said regarding Gary Willis's abuse allegations was true, but that she would not confirm it in front of other parents. Mary-Anne Judge said that she had been trying unsuccessfully to get rid of Gary Willis for quite a while but that the Education Department had resisted her efforts. Mary-Anne Judge indicated that, with this mother's help, she might successfully 'get rid of' Gary Willis.

During their next encounter, Principal Judge allegedly told Mrs Mitchell that she had contacted the Education Department's Regional Director, and that she was waiting to hear back from him. Mrs Mitchell next saw Principal Judge at a Grade 6 break-up dinner. Principal Judge is said to have asked this mother: 'Have you noticed someone's been conspicuous by their absence?' She was apparently referring to Gary Willis, who had been absent from the school for some time. Mrs Mitchell said Principal Judge then stated: 'Expect a visit by the NSW Education Department over the holidays.' The mother was never contacted by the NSW Education Department. Feeling threatened, Mrs Mitchell pulled her daughter out of Centaur Primary School.

Following a stint in administration at the Murwillumbah District Office, Gary Willis was reinstated at Centaur Primary School. Upon his return, multiple allegations of inappropriate behaviour and sexual abuse were subsequently reported to Principal Mary-Anne Judge.

A former Centaur teacher, Sandy McGrady, alleged that every single Centaur teacher was aware of Gary Willis' history of paedophilia allegations. She added that a Centaur parent confided in her that Willis sexually abused her daughter. Another teacher, Alison Howells, alleged that a cleaner caught Gary Willis sexually assaulting a girl in a Centaur Primary School storeroom. Another parent stated that Gary Willis sexually assaulted a Grade 5 student ('CC') in 2003.

In 2004, Centaur parent Sharon O'Grady allegedly confronted Principal Mary-Anne Judge about Gary Willis and she asked whether her daughter was at risk in the teacher's care. Sharon O'Grady says Principal Judge replied 'no' and she denied any knowledge of Gary Willis' history.

At a Centaur Primary School disco to celebrate Harmony Day in 2004, parents Steven and Victoria Boyce reportedly saw Gary Willis dancing with young girls in an inappropriate fashion. They said he was dressed in a toga and 'dirty dancing' with the girls, including pelvic thrusting towards them from behind. When Mrs Boyce complained to a teacher supervising the disco, the teacher apparently responded: ‘It’s all part of the fun.’ Teachers were seen taking photos of Gary Willis dancing at the disco. During the disco, Gary Willis allegedly entered the girls’ toilet and peered underneath a locked door at Mrs Boyce’s daughter. Mrs Boyce said she witnessed the deputy principal chastise Gary Willis for being in the girls’ toilet. Mrs Boyce alleged that Gary Willis made the girls in his class sit immodestly on the classroom floor. Instead of sitting with their legs crossed, he made them sit with their legs apart and knees bent up. Mrs Boyce said that she complained to the school about Gary Willis’ behaviour at the disco. When she mentioned other abuse allegations regarding Gary Willis, the deputy principal, Mr Burgess, allegedly stated: ‘I’ve heard that before, but it’s a load of bullshit.’

In 2006, the NSW Department of Education finally determined that the rumours were not bullshit — and they banned Gary Willis from teaching in the NSW public education system. However, because he had never been charged with a crime, Gary Willis was free to seek child-related employment in the NSW private education sector and interstate. After leaving the NSW Education Department, Gary Willis found two years of employment as a bus driver at a private Tweed Shire school, Lakeside Christian College (renamed Pacific Coast Christian School). Gary Willis was last seen living and working in Queensland.

* * *

NSW PROTECTS ALLEGED TWEED HEADS PEDOPHILE RING

Fiona Barnett, Independent Australia, 26 June 2013.

In 2004, concerned parent and whistle-blower Fiona Barnett became determined to end teacher Gary Willis’ (then) 15-year alleged child abuse spree — but the NSW Education Department and police had decidedly different ideas. Here, Fiona tells the second part of this story

In 2004, when I was six months pregnant, my lawn mowing lady raised the alarm. She began complaining about a male teacher at her children’s primary school who was reportedly abusing students. When the woman described the man’s extremely tight and brief shorts, I instantly recognised him as Gary Willis.

I first heard about Gary Willis when I was attending a local high school in the late 1980s. I grew up hearing horrifying stories of this teacher allegedly abusing young disabled children at three local primary schools. Indeed, Gary Willis allegedly sexually, physically and psychologically abused children from the homes of four different family friends.

I reasoned that the previous campaign against Gary Willis failed because parents complained from the bottom up. This approach allowed the perpetrators and their allies to intercept and quash any action. So, I lodged a complaint against Gary Willis, who was then teaching at Centaur Primary School. I alleged that Gary Willis had exhibited inappropriate behaviour toward students at three schools, raising concerns about the protection of Centaur children. I also named other teachers whom parents and staff had also alleged were pedophiles.

I requested an investigation into the NSW Education Department’s mishandling of abuse allegations concerning Gary Willis over a 14-year period. I was aware that each time abuse allegations began pouring in at a school Gary Willis worked at, the Education Department simply transferred the man to another local school.

The complaint letters were signed by a large group of concerned parents, and they were accompanied by copies of numerous witness statements. A former teacher aide and I collected signed letters from witnesses, including letters of complaint written up to 14 years prior. Former child victims, now in their 20s, themselves wrote some of these letters. Other victims, including disabled and illiterate witnesses, dictated and signed letters.

Approximately 30 concerned parents signed various letters of complaint that were posted to Prime Minister John Howard, Bob Carr (NSW premier), Brendan Nelson (Federal education minister), Jenny Macklin (Federal Opposition education spokesperson), Andrew Refshauge (NSW minister for education), Jillian Skinner (NSW Opposition education spokesperson), and the NSW Ombudsman.

I approached Tweed Heads Police detectives Josh Burton and Murray Baker, who told me that Gary Willis was known by the justice system with regards to child abuse allegations, and that DOCS involvement was mentioned onscreen. Detective Baker said that he put an Intel report into crime manager regarding the information I had gathered, and he expressed concern over possible corruption within the Education Department. He stated that Willis had never been charged with anything. He told me that one complaint had been in the system from about 8 to 9 years ago, that it had not been substantiated. He told me that certain complaints I knew had been made to police did not appear on the screen under Gary Willis' name.

An EPAC Child Protection Investigator, Sandra Cameron, informed me that the NSW Education Department held a considerable number of files containing abuse allegations against teacher Gary Willis, including numerous written complaints by teachers. Ms Cameron said that much of the information was horrendous and allegedly of a criminal nature and that it had subsequently been turned over to the police.

Our complaint was assigned to Chief Inspector Bob Sullivan of the NSW Child Protection and Sex Crimes Squad. On 27 October 2004, Bob Sullivan phoned witness DM (refer to Part 1), whose daughter ('Y') had recently alleged that teachers Gary Willis and Steve Tyler (now deceased) had sexually assaulted her while she was a student at the East Murwillumbah Primary School. Y told her mother (DM) that she would like to pursue charging Gary Willis for his alleged crime.

As a result of Bob Sullivan's phone call, DM complained to the NSW Ombudsman. DM complained that Bob Sullivan had said our efforts were a waste of time and we wouldn't get anywhere. He allegedly also said DM should think hard about pursuing a complaint against Gary Willis because it would go nowhere, since Y was disabled. Bob Sullivan also allegedly insisted that Y be interviewed at the Tweed Heads police station instead of at her local Brisbane sex crimes unit. Bob Sullivan did not, according to DM, ask for further information or clarification of existing information. DM also complained that Bob Sullivan left her with an overall feeling that there was no point to pursuing Y's complaint against Gary Willis and that the policeman had been trying to talk her out of pursuing the matter.

On 3 November 2004, I received a phone call from Inspector Bob Sullivan. During this call, Inspector Sullivan made what I allege are some startling and disturbing statements:

- He criticised victims, parents and witnesses for expecting me to help them.
- He described alleged serial pedophile Gary Willis as a 'poor bloke' and the victim of a 'witch hunt.'
- He said there was no such thing as justice, and that achieving justice in this matter was not the aim of the police;

- He accused me of fabricating witness letters, including a hand-written complaint personally submitted to the Education Department by a teacher aide some 14 years previous.
- He said that NSW police have no record of any complaints against Gary Willis made by victims. When I challenged this by saying that two Tweed Heads detectives had told me the opposite, Inspector Sullivan contradicted himself by saying that police had investigated a number of complaints against Gary Willis, but that none of these had been substantiated. Then, he contradicted himself again, saying: ‘action was taken in 1993.’
- He said there was no evidence of child abuse — just ‘innuendo and rumour.’
- He said he was not prepared to launch a proactive investigation into Gary Willis, as the victims probably would prefer to forget the past and get on with their lives. When I suggested he was pre-empting their reaction and added that many witnesses had been threatened and bribed into silence, and maybe they would feel safe and relieved talking to the police in such a way, Bob Sullivan asked: ‘Mrs Barnett, have you ever been the victim of a sexual assault?’
- He said police were certainly not interested in the ‘minor assaults’ listed.
- He said that if Y's case went to court, witnesses certainly could not be subpoenaed to testify and that only a Royal Commission had the power to interview reluctant witnesses.
- He stated that Y had the best chance of charging Gary Willis, but that if her letter was the extent of her language ability, she would get nowhere and therefore there’s no point in her pursuing the matter.
- He concentrated on just one of the alleged pedophiles, Gary Willis, and refused to acknowledge allegations against other named teachers and DOCS workers.
- He stated that it was not a crime for Gary Willis to constantly call an Aboriginal child ‘coon,’ ‘nigger’ and ‘the black snake.’
- He stated that he was immediately returning the file to the Education Department and closing the investigation, without contacting any other people or witnesses named in the file.

I complained about Bob Sullivan in writing to the Prime Minister, the Police Integrity Commission, and the NSW Ombudsman. On 7 February 2005, I received a phone call from Kim McKay, Commander of the Child Protection and Sex Crimes Squad. Commander McKay stated that Bob Sullivan was currently on sick leave and that stress accounted for his inappropriate behaviour toward me and DM.

Commander McKay stated that the Sex Crimes Squad would not be conducting an investigation into the Education Department’s allegations of criminal misconduct on the part of Gary Willis and other teaching staff. She stated that this was because Bob Sullivan had assessed the file and determined the case did not meet their criteria for investigation. Commander McKay added that the Sex Crimes Squad was already investigating 600 other cases. Commander McKay stated that Bob Sullivan alone made this decision and that she had not read the file herself.

I suggested that if Bob Sullivan’s functioning was impaired at the time he assessed the Gary Willis case, then perhaps the case should be reassessed by a medically fit, stress-free, police officer. Commander McKay denied this request. She neglected to explain why the Gary Willis case did not meet the Sex Crime Squad's criteria for investigation.

Commander McKay told me that I must report everything else I knew about the alleged Tweed Heads pedophile ring, or else I could be charged with an offence called 'Concealing a Crime'. This seemed an odd statement, given Bob Sullivan had refused to accept any further information about the case and McKay had just told me that NSW police were not prepared to investigate the information they had already received. But, as instructed, I handed over the following information:

- I reported a female teacher who allegedly regularly took two female high school students for the weekend. (One of these students later died from complications following an operation which she underwent soon after her breasts suddenly became engorged.)
- I reported that one set of parents had tried to have a female special needs teacher charged for allegedly sexually assaulting their son.
- I reported that a male Murwillumbah High School special needs teacher's aide allegedly regularly took a male student home for lunchtime sex. The teacher's aide also allegedly provided the student with pornography, that he would bring home.
- I reported a male Murwillumbah High School careers teacher who allegedly drugged a 17-year-old male at an adult party. The student allegedly awoke in his teacher's bed, naked, with no memory of how he got there. He allegedly saw the teacher standing naked in his bedroom doorway, saying: 'It's okay, sweetie.'
- I reported a Murwillumbah high School English teacher who allegedly had an affair with his Grade 11 student.
- I reported a female Murwillumbah High School English teacher who allegedly had an orgy with a group of her surfing students.
- I reported my own Murwillumbah High School teacher, who continually photographed female students, including naked arty shots of my friend.
- And, while I was at it, I also reported my Grade 3 teacher from Budgewoi Primary School on the NSW Central Coast, who allegedly sexually abused a classmate during a sleepover at his Wyong farmhouse.

In a letter (dated 9 February 2005) Commander Kim McKay wrote to me:

> As a result of my inquiries I have established that there is a disparity between yourself and Detective Bob Sullivan on a number of the issues you have raised and are unable to determine where the truth lies. However I acknowledge that if Detective Bob Sullivan did ask you if you were a victim of sexual assault, then this was inappropriate and should not have been said. In relation to the manner in which he addressed you I have found that this also was not always appropriate in the circumstances. On behalf of the New South Wales Police Force I apologise for this occurrence.

Parents complained to the NSW Ombudsman concerning the NSW police's refusal to investigate the alleged Tweed Shire pedophile ring. Consequently, in a letter dated 18 November 2004, a Detective Sergeant M.N. Robinson of Byron Bay informed us that Detective Sergeant Brett Greentree of Tweed Heads Police station had been assigned to investigate Gary Willis and that witnesses were to contact him and make formal statements at the Tweed Heads police station.

Five of Gary Willis' former students were prepared to make statements to the Tweed Heads police. Three of these witnesses were intellectually disabled (ID). I had already contacted the Intellectual Disability Rights Service (IDRS) for legal advice and asked them to supply a support person to attend the Tweed Heads police interviews with three ID witnesses, including Y. The IDRS lawyer, named Tamara, informed me that their service had trained Joint Investigation Response Teams (JIRT) police officers to interview ID witnesses, including adults. The lawyer also said that the current police policy and procedures stated that Tweed Heads police must initiate contact with JIRT regarding the three ID witnesses.

However, when we contacted Ballina JIRT, an officer called Melissa Williams told me that no JIRT police officer was trained to interview intellectually disabled people. She also stated that JIRT refused to interview the three disabled witnesses because they were now adults. One of my initial contacts, Detective Murray Baker at Tweed Heads, said he could not understand why Ballina JIRT would not touch the historical material, because they do 'all the time.'

When I complained to Commander Kim McKay about JIRT refusing to interview ID adults, she stated to me that not one police officer in the whole of NSW had been specifically trained to interview intellectually disabled victims of sexual assault. This, of course, flew right in the face of the statements by IDRS lawyer Tamara. Commander McKay, however, attempted to placate me by saying that Brett Greentree could be trusted to interview the three disabled victims because he was ex-JIRT (with two years' experience) and because he was 'a nice bloke with good intentions.'

NSW Education Department employee Sandra Cameron arranged with Brett Greentree to be present at the witnesses' formal police interviews. Ms Cameron allegedly told a parent that she must attend her daughter's interview with police because she represented the Department and so had to be sure the police questioning was fair to the Department. Ms Cameron subsequently insisted on attending the police interview, even after the parent told her not to. Ms Cameron told another parent that she planned to attend the police interviews so that she did not have to conduct independent interviews.

The IDRS lawyer responded that it was ludicrous for a NSW Education Department representative to attend a police interview where a victim was making a statement and an allegation against the NSW Education Department. Tamara explained that if Sandra Cameron spoke during the interview, it could render the interview inadmissible in court.

I arranged for an IDRS support person to attend the police interviews with the three disabled witnesses, but Detective Sergeant Greentree refused to allow this. I also specifically requested that Brett Greentree video the interviews, but he refused to do this.

To the knowledge of victims and concerned parents, NSW police never investigated our complaints, Gary Willis was never charged with any of the reported crimes and victims were never given the chance to claim compensation for their child abuse experiences.

Gun to the Head

Following my whistle blowing efforts against what I allege was a pedophile ring in the Tweed Shire, I came under increasing threat from parents, the local police force and various government authorities. The threat began subtly with offers of free 'counselling' from the NSW Department of Education. Owing to the increasing number of telephone threats, my mother answered my phone. 'This must be very stressful for Fiona,' the Education Department counsellor spoke consolingly. But after my mother politely declined the woman's invitation, her manner changed. The counsellor called repeatedly, each time sounding increasingly frustrated and angry at my refusing her 'services.'

At the same time, my telephone provider informed me that my phone was tapped. Two other whistleblowing parents complained that their phones had been bugged also.

Certain parents who had previously been helpful and collaborative with the whistle-blowing process suddenly began threatening other whistleblowing parents and me. 'ZZ,' the mother of East Murwillumbah victim L, phoned me in a hysterical state. She demanded that I give her the numbers and addresses of all the witnesses to Gary Willis' abuse of children, particularly her daughter. She swore at me and told me she'd sue my 'fucking arse' if I did not stop pursuing the Gary Willis matter. She said she would hire a private detective and track everyone down.

When I said it was too late and that the evidence had been forwarded on to the Education Department, she accused me of not having given her the opportunity to view the evidence and discuss her views on the whole matter.

'I phoned you weeks ago and gave you that chance,' I reminded her.

ZZ screamed at me: 'I don't want to be dragged through no fucking kangaroo court again! My daughter was examined under a general anaesthetic and they found she was still a virgin!'

I explained that someone can be sexually assaulted without damaging the hymen, but ZZ concluded with a tirade of abuse.

I was advised to phone a parent 'FF' for information about the alleged abuse of her daughter 'GG.' FF had worked at South Tweed Primary School for 18 years.

She told me: 'I've been waiting for your call … It would be best if you handed all those statements back to the parents and don't implicate yourself further, as this could get bad for your stress levels.'

One whistleblowing parent ('AF') began receiving phone calls from ZZ who would phone and say, 'Fucking bitch!' and then hang up. ZZ told AF to retract her statement. She referred to AF's poor state of health and to the fact that I was pregnant. When AF said she was not going to retract her statement, ZZ became aggressive, illogical, and spewed profanity at AF. ZZ added: 'You're disturbing Al Gudgeon's retirement. How could you do this, as he has done so much for the community and for children? What happened all those years ago has nothing to do with what is happening today.'

My own daughter attended Banora Point Public School. I attended a P&C meeting at the school and raised the alarm about Gary Willis. I warned parents and teachers not to employ Gary Willis at our school — the only place he had not worked at in our area. Attendees, including the treasurer David DeClosey and his police officer friend, became visibly angry at me and verbally attacked me in the meeting. Following that, DeClosey and the police officer attended the P&C Federation's Annual Conference. Upon their return, DeClosey passed on a threat to me. A NSW Education Department representative at the conference, he said, had told him to warn me to stop talking about Gary Willis — or else the NSW Education Department would sue me for defamation.

After this, the threats became more tangible. To begin with, the P&C police officer issued me a hefty parking fine for something which, as my daughter's teacher testified in writing, I simply did not do.

The threats became physical. The RSPCA turned up at my house following a false report of pet neglect. When my fat, happy dog greeted him, the inspector remarked: 'He's fine.' Next, a health and safety officer turned up at my house following a false report that my builder was using a ramset gun while unlicensed. Then police turned up at my house following a false report that there was a stolen vehicle parked in my garage. On several occasions, Tweed Heads police drove slowly by my house, glaring menacingly at me.

Heartbreakingly, my 'neglected' dog was dragged beneath our fence and killed, and my pet chickens and ducks were also found slaughtered.

On one occasion, I reported to police that the 13-year-old child of my neighbour had been driving his father's car at excessive speeds on the highway and had near backed into my car. The petite blonde officer who responded to my complaint failed to identify herself. She verbally abused me for making the complaint, called me a 'shit-stirrer,' and slapped me with an AVO from the juvenile's father. In the end, I paid $14,000 to successfully challenge the spurious AVO.

My husband and mother subsequently attended a meeting with Superintendent Tim J. Tarlinton to discuss our concerns regarding the increasing threats against our family. Tarlinton treated my family with hostility and contempt.

I began to feel so threatened by Tweed Heads police that I took my 10-month-old baby and six-year-old child into hiding for the next six weeks. My suspicions were justified days later when Tweed Heads police dispatched five squad cars to ambush my home at 5 Anthony Avenue and two relatives' homes in Laura Street, Banora Point. My accountant husband, due to fly interstate for a work conference, pre-booked a taxi to the Gold Coast airport. Three squad cars followed the taxi, which pulled up on the highway just south of the Queensland/NSW border. The taxi driver told my husband to exit his vehicle. Police, dressed in vests, thrust three loaded semi-automatic weapons at my husband's head, ordered him face down on the side of the highway and handcuffed him.

Five months later, I received the letter from the NSW Education Department informing me that they had banned Gary Willis from teaching in the NSW public system. I then discovered that Superintendent Tarlinton had retired from his position as Local Area Commander and Brett Greentree had been transferred to Bourke on a promotion to Detective Inspector.

Yet my victimisation at the hands of Tweed Heads police did not end there.

The petite blonde female officer returned in 2012, unidentified and armed with handcuffs and a weapon, to arrest me. Some stranger had illegally parked a trailer on my front lawn and reported that it was damaged while left there unattended. Instead of issuing a $180 fine for the illegal park, the police officer sought to arrest me. Hand clasped on her gun the officer rang my front doorbell. My mother answered. 'Where is she?!' the officer hissed. But I had already fled with my family for the third time since blowing the whistle on the alleged Tweed Shire pedophile ring.

It then struck me: the NSW police force displayed more concern for an illegally parked trailer, rather than an unfathomed number of young, disabled children who were assaulted and mentally scarred by a violent sexual predator.

So many questions remain. Where is Gary Willis today? Does he have contact with children? Why were the whistle-blowers, including me, being ostracised and victimised, while the alleged perpetrators were seemingly being protected by the NSW Police? Why did the NSW Police seem so disinterested in investigating an alleged pedophile network, in which there was numerous witnesses and a wealth of documentary evidence? Does this suggest that network extends beyond the Education Department and into the police? And does it extend even further than that?

* * *

After being banned from employment in NSW, Gary Willis was hired by the Queensland Education Department to work at Tallebudgera Primary School on the Gold Coast. A Tallebudgera neighbour of Gary Willis told me he tutored her children and assisted with children’s Nippers lessons at Tallebudgera Surf life Saving Club.

* * *

2020 Update: NSW Police Commissioner Mick Fuller promoted Brett Greentree to Acting Assistant Commissioner.

Bond University Pedophile Network

BOND UNIVERSITY EXPOSED

Fiona Barnett, Independent Australia, 20 July 2014.

Bond Uni has been in the news recently with criminologist lecturer Professor Paul Wilson facing court on child abuse charges. Former student Fiona Barnett says the rot at the University goes deep.

Bond University was founded by Australia's most notorious corporate criminal, Alan Bond. As disgruntled students have discovered, Alan Bond structured the private organisation, so it evades public accountability — despite the fact the university accesses public funds in the form of student loans. Bond University's lack of public accountability stems in part from the fact that it is not actually a university but rather a corporation legally permitted to borrow the title 'university.'

I undertook postgraduate psychology studies at Bond University from 2006 to 2007, and again from 2009 to 2010. In 2013, I reported Bond University to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. My complaint contained a long list of offences in relation to the cover-up of pedophile activities, pro-paedophilia course content, the misuse of students' personal child abuse histories, and the sexual harassment and assault of students by certain lecturers.

High-profile psychologist damns Bond University

I provided the Royal Commission with the transcript of legally obtained recordings of Bob Montgomery, previous president of the APS (Australian Psychological Society) and former Head of Psychology at Bond University. Dr Montgomery described Bond as follows:

> It is one of the worst run universities I've ever seen. It's dishonest. It's been dishonest all the time I've known it... Bond University will do all the skullduggerous things they can to deny any mis-practice... While I was there, they had a lunatic professor of psychology.... He was caught screwing his secretary on the desk. The outcome was he sacked the secretary and the vice-chancellor backed him up... So, you might have a realistic concern if you enrol for an externship that they may try to manipulate the situation in some way to try and put you in a bad light. And you've got to put that in your decision-making mix... If you decide to plough ahead with Bond University. you will be dealing with people who are out to get you, nasty, willing to do dishonest things, and getting increasingly desperate because not only have they not knocked you down, but you're coming back even stronger.

Bond University covers-up child sexual abuse

While working in the Bond University Psychology Clinic, a 10-year-old DOCS client and her foster mother disclosed to me that a former foster carer and convicted pedophile had sexually assaulted my client, along with other children. In direct contravention of Queensland legislation regarding the concealment of child abuse, Bond University forbade me from reporting these crimes to the police. I persuaded one lecturer to let me inform the Queensland Children's Commissioner of the allegations. Bond University, however, subsequently withdrew my complaint to the Commissioner without my knowledge and then lied to the Commissioner by saying they had done so in consultation with me. While the Commissioner upheld my complaint and proceeded with an investigation, Bond University chastised me and said my complaint jeopardised their relationship with the DOCS office, upon which they relied for clients to keep the Bond Psychology Clinic running.

Bond University's pro-paedophilia teachings

In 2013, I asked the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse to investigate Bond University with respect to its pro-paedophilia teachings. These teachings include the writings of a psychology and criminology lecturer, and Order of Australia medal recipient, Professor Paul Wilson, who served as Dean of Humanities at Bond University for 10 years. In one of his books, subtitled Sexual Experiences between Men and Boys, the professor promoted the benefits of paedophilia and renaming this crime 'Greek love.' The professor also published articles on Bond University's website, which stated that children are often willing participants in child sexual abuse. (The Royal Commission gasped when I read that fact out.)

In late 2012, Paul Wilson was charged with six counts of indecent dealings with two girls — one of whom was under 12 years old. In May 2014, he was committed to stand trial. The same professor taught me at Bond University. He and other Bond lecturers, in my view, encouraged a strong anti-victim/pro-perpetrator stance in their classes. For example, one lecturer endorsed the notion that technically there is no such thing as a victim of crime because a criminal case involves the defendant versus the crown instead of the defendant versus a victim. On another occasion, I had marks deducted for briefly mentioning a victim's perspective in an essay.

Bond University lecturers strongly endorsed the flawed 'false memory syndrome' writings of USA psychologist Elizabeth Loftus. The Royal Commission commended my submission against Loftus' writings and my condemnation of her association with the False Memory Syndrome Foundation (FMSF). The FMSF was founded by Peter Freyd and his wife (and stepsister) Pamela after their daughter, Professor Jennifer Freyd, accused Peter of child sexual abuse. Apart from founding the FMSF, Peter has publicly endorsed paedophilia as a responsible lifestyle choice and allowing siblings to marry. The effect of the FMSF has been to discredit child abuse witness testimony and the existence of well organised pedophile rings.

Bond University sexually harasses students

Bond University has a history of sexually harassing students. During my 2009-10 enrolment, the following incidents occurred: a postgraduate student handed out pamphlets on campus alleging that a senior staff member had sexually harassed him and that the university had engaged in cult-like practises; a female lecturer offered a teenage girl who was on scholarship, sex in exchange for good grades; and a male lecturer offered a legal minor, also on scholarship, sex in exchange for good grades. The girl's father, a lawyer, threatened to lodge a complaint with the AHRC (Australian Human Rights Commission). In an effort to placate the family, Bond University offered the girl a transfer to her preferred Sydney University. I witnessed a Bond University lecturer regularly throw parties at her house, during which students were supplied copious amounts of alcohol. I also saw the lecturer instigate a game of 'sexual disclosure' spin-the-bottle with her students.

Bond University pressures students to disclose child abuse histories

Bond University psychology staff exhibited a pattern of obtaining students' personal information, which they would then use to hold students to ransom if they complained about their Bond experience. I witnessed lecturers' concerted efforts to bait a fellow student into disclosing her child abuse history to them. 'She came so close to disclosing!' one lecturer told me on one occasion, in a state of high excitement.

I was pressured to disclose my personal history of child sexual abuse to Bond University lecturers during psychological supervision and while socialising with lecturers in their homes and also at my home. According to my understanding, the lecturers' abuse of their authority, and their pressuring of me to disclose personal information, constituted a breach of the APS Code of Ethics and Guidelines.

During my studies, I was sexually harassed by a Bond University staff member My experience of sexual harassment occurred in response to the disclosure of my child sexual abuse. The same lecturer tricked me into sleeping in her bed at a student party, described my breasts as 'magnificent,' before grabbing one and massaging it in a sexual manner.

From: Katarina Fritzon [mailto:kfritzon@bond.edu.au]
Sent: Thursday, 12 June 2008 8:44 AM to
To: Fiona Barnett.
Subject: RE: Seen this revolting page?

Fter
Ahhh it was you!!
Ben said someone called and he'd forgotten who it was… by the time he wandered from the kitchen into the bedroom. Yeah I had a sty brought on by stress and so I went to bed very early that night… now I have another one in my other eye. I am trying to finish off a million things before I go on holidays next week.
I keep thinking about you. I know that sounds unbelievable as I never act on it, but I honestly do – every couple of days a little Fiona thought pops into my head.
Yeah – ONE day we shall meet again!
Love the photos by the way

Jackie Yoxall is looking for rooms nearer Tweed cause she has moved down near Lennox and doesn't want to keep having to come back to Broadbeach. Do you know of any rooms that you could recommend?
If you are still looking for a supervisor my friend Bek is still available.
Let me know
I get back on the 9th of July so let's get together after that. I'd like you to meet Mr Ben

Love, x

Best wishes

Katarina Fritzon
Associate Professor
Psychology Department

Telephone: +61 7 5595 2681
Facsimile: +61 7 5595 2540
Bond University | Gold Coast, Queensland, 4229, Australia

From: Fiona Barnett [mailto:fbarnett@bigpond.com]
Sent: Wednesday, 11 June 2008 3:55 PM
To: Katarina Fritzon
Subject: Seen this revolting page?

Hi,

Thought I'd turn you off your tea.

I rang the other night but you were ill with an eye infection or something. I'm still flat out. Kasia's 2nd semester of work due in 2.5 weeks. Electrician currently here and making big mess. Jon and I spent long weekend jack-hammering up tiles and tossing bits in skip bin (yay).

Speak to you ONE day…

f

Bond University Lecturer Katarina Fritzon's inappropriate email showing her grooming behaviour.

Formal Complaints against Bond University

I rejected a Bond University lecturer's unwanted sexual advances and complained to Bond University and to the Psychology Board. I also lodged a complaint of sexual harassment and disability discrimination with the Australian Human Rights Commission, which upheld my entire complaint.

The disability discrimination section of my complaint related to a visual cortex stroke I suffered during the fifth week of my Masters program. Lecturers used my subsequent disability as a means of harassing me. Staff refused to adhere to the conditions set out by my Bond University disability support officer — consequently, I suffered further damage to my vision.

Bond staff subjected me to extreme bullying and harassment, including exclusion and placing me under excessive scrutiny. For example, a staff member verbally abused a student peer and reduced her to tears for inviting me to her private engagement party. This victimisation intensified following my initial complaint to the Psychology Board and following my attempts to adhere to mandatory reporting legislation in relation to child abuse disclosure in the university's psychology clinic.

Bond University's Corruption

In October 2010, to subdue an adversary process I had in place against staff at the time, Bond University staff lodged a vexatious and unsubstantiated notification against me to the Psychology Board, which is administered by AHPRA (Australian Health Practitioner Regulation Agency). Bond University staff simultaneously pooled the information they had gleaned about my own childhood sexual abuse. They removed the age I was during the time of my child abuse and reported me as an adult perpetrator instead of a child victim of the same crimes to AHPRA and to the NSW police. An (11/11/2010) email from AHPRA to a senior Queensland police detective who lectures at Bond University stated:

> It has come to my attention that Ms Barnett is under investigation by police following serious allegations of a criminal nature… if you have any information which may be imperative to the assessment of Ms Barnett's health, please do not hesitate to contact me.

The police officer then (26/11/2010) sent the following email to AHPRA from his Bond University email account:

> The last briefing I had was that contact had been made with NSWPOL and they could not identify any outstanding jobs that would match the claims made. They also informed us that the suspect had previously made outlandish claims of a similar nature. The investigation is ongoing but given the above I would suspect it will not be a police matter.

A second (27/11/10) email from police to AHPRA said:

> At this stage we are unable to find any evidence to what MS BARNETT is saying. MS BARNETT has previously made similar admissions to NSW police in 2008, this investigation was finalised as no evidence could be located to substantiate what MS BARNETT has stated.

AHPRA used the above correspondence as evidence I was a criminal, as detailed in their 29 March 2011 letter to me:

> …confirmation of similar reported events by the NSW Police Service regarding past criminal activities of a serious nature is a matter that the Board will need to address.

I sent written complaints about these emails to the NSW and Queensland police ministers. Both ministers denied that NSW police provided any information to AHPRA in support of Bond University's accusation that I was a perpetrator of crimes. So, either police lied to their ministers about providing emails to AHPRA, or AHPRA fabricated evidence against me.

Bond University staff lied to AHPRA by alleging that I had suddenly became psychotic at an unspecified time, somewhere between the second and third field placements I did as part of my Masters program. They simultaneously treated my child abuse history as both: (a) real (i.e., evidence of my alleged criminality), and (b) fictitious (i.e., the product of my alleged sudden psychosis).

Bond University accused me of 'decompensating into psychosis' — despite me having no history or symptoms of psychosis whatsoever. They made this claim without consulting the only Bond employees who had regular contact with me during the time that this 'mental illness' was supposedly manifesting — my two external supervisors.

Dr Gavan Palk (barrister and chair of the APS Forensic College) supervised my second practicum, during which he saw me four hours per week for three months. Dr Norm Barling, who was Bond University's Clinical Director for 20 years, supervised my third practicum. Both supervisors wrote me glowing references that made a mockery of Bond's notification. For instance, Dr Palk wrote:

> Ms Barnett impressed as an extremely intelligent person with excellent written and oral skills. She has exceptional writing skills and her psychological reports were very thorough and well written. She demonstrated that she could integrate her clinical experience of clients with objective test results. Her opinions were sound and followed logically from the evidence she gathered through testing and interviews.
>
> In regards to interactions with clients, Ms Barnett demonstrated that she was able to develop and maintain a therapeutic alliance with clients. She also demonstrated a solid command of micro counselling skills and sensitivity to client's needs. Her approach towards clients was very professional and she had no difficulty in analysing problems, undertaking appropriate research background forming hypotheses, planning and carrying out psychological interventions...
>
> In conclusion, it was a pleasure to provide supervision to Ms Barnett. She is a passionate and intelligent person who has persevered in spite of her health difficulties. The writer is very confident that Fiona has the makings of a very fine psychologist and she should be encouraged to undertake a PhD in the area of sensory processing and intellectual giftedness.

All of Bond University's vague accusations were easily and completely disproved by written evidence, including emails, and letters from witnesses and health professionals that I submitted to AHPRA. Most telling, Bond University had already passed me, over one year prior to the false and vexatious notification in the very subjects during which the alleged ethical breaches were said to have occurred. Further, Dr Barling pointed out that if Bond staff had any concerns about my mental health prior to my commencing the third practicum, then ethically and legally they were not permitted to allow me to commence a third work placement — which, of course, they had done.

Bond University submitted to AHPRA and the AHRC a written confession that a Bond lecturer had students attend a sleepover at her house in 2007 — an act which, alone, constituted an alleged breach of the APS Ethical Code and Guidelines. In this same document, the lecturer lied by alleging I was not enrolled in Bond University at the time of her 2007 party, when academic transcripts clearly show I was, indeed, enrolled.

Despite my excellent academic history – including a grade of 89% in my final theory subject, Psychopharmacology – and with only two subjects to complete before obtaining my Master of Psychology degree. Bond University wrote 'withdrawn' on my academic transcript. They then failed to grant me a right of reply to their action and forbade me from accessing their appeals system. As a consequence, I was robbed of six years of study and close to $100,000 I paid in student loans. And since I was no longer enrolled in a psychology course, AHPRA immediately cancelled my student psychology registration.

Bond University's double standards

In 2013, Bond University staff allegedly severely breached privacy legislation and ethical standards in the execution of a research project into autism (Project Number RO-1516). The project's approved recruitment protocol was for parents to be invited to participate in the study via emails sent from Gold Coast Autism Inc. Instead, the Queensland Education Department provided Bond University with the names, medical history and contact details of state school students who are registered with the department as having autism — without the parents' knowledge or consent. One parent told me that Bond University contacted her on a Saturday via her private mobile. When the mother confronted her school principal, he said he knew nothing about the research project. If true, this ethical breach is monumental and far surpasses the petty ethical breaches that they falsely accused me of committing.

For instance, Bond reported me to AHPRA for 'upsetting a student' by appropriately borrowing a psychology test from the library. Unbeknownst to me, the student (whom I had never met) wanted the test I had borrowed. The student, who had a history of aggressive behaviour and who had allegedly attracted formal student complaints, stormed in on my client session in the Psychology Clinic and demanded I immediately cease working with my client and give him the test. Despite the fact my supervisor informed me, via email, that he reported the student to the Psychology Board, one year later Bond staff reported me to AHPRA for the very same incident.

Bond University audited

Because of Bond University's private status, they proved unaccountable to every government body to which a similarly offended student at a public university might be able to appeal. Bond is supposedly answerable to the Australian Psychology Accreditation Council (APAC), the national body that accredits psychology courses. In March 2011, APAC commenced an audit of Bond University in response to alleged multiple breaches of APAC Standards. Bond had previously lost accreditation for similar breaches in 2007/2008. In response to this audit, Bond employed yet another organisational psychologist to conduct student interviews. However, aggrieved students were actively denied access to this investigation.

APAC intervened and virtually begged a fellow offended student and me to attend the interviews. APAC assured us that multiple students had supported and validated our complaints against Bond. In the end, APAC and the APS did nothing to assist me in my fight for justice and vindication. In a letter to the AHRC, Bond University documented and criticised my attendance at the APAC interviews. In this letter, they stated that APAC did not take my testimony seriously. Immediately following the APAC audit, two Bond Psychology Clinic administrators lodged internal complaints against one offending psychology lecturer for her misconduct and her mistreatment of me and other psychology students. Bond University then pressured that lecturer to resign.

The main offending lecturers remain employed at Bond University.

* * *

AHPRA PROTECTS ALLEGED SEX OFFENDERS

Fiona Barnett, Independent Australia, 3 November 2014.

After Fiona Barnett was bullied out of her Bond University psychology course, health regulator AHPRA treated her case with a curious mixture of incredible incompetence and callous contempt.

In theory, the role of the Australian Health Practitioner Regulation Agency (AHPRA) is to oversee the administration of our medical, psychology and other health profession boards. They are supposed to protect the public from malpractice, while simultaneously offering a level of protection for innocent health professionals against vexatious and unsubstantiated complaints.

In 2011, a Senate Committee Inquiry was conducted into AHPRA. The Inquiry's findings were damning. The resultant report stated:

> 6.19 In relation to complaints about health practitioners, the committee identified a number of areas where improvements are required including inconsistencies in application of complaint processes … and the way in which vexatious complaints are handled.
> 6.32 … the mistakes, omissions and poor processes that were clearly evident from the evidence received during the inquiry calls into question the ability of AHPRA to carry out its primary purpose. For AHPRA itself to be responsible for a breakdown of the entire system of registration of health practitioners in Australia is a dismal example of policy implementation and public administration.

The Senate Inquiry identified the Queensland AHPRA office as Australia's most incompetent state office. You might expect, following such a finding, that the Queensland AHPRA office may have addressed the Inquiry's criticisms and implemented some changes. Unfortunately, if you did, you would be wrong.

AHPRA exploits student's child abuse history

My personal child abuse experiences formed the basis for Bond University's notification against me. My abuse constituted grounds for Bond's allegation that I was 'impaired' and posed a risk to the public. This was despite no explained link between my having experienced child abuse 30+ years ago and my alleged impairment. AHPRA cited my personal child abuse history as evidence that I was psychotic and a criminal. The obvious anomaly in their argument was that they used my personal testimony as being a symptom of psychosis, then they simultaneously employed my testimony as a basis for contacting the police and accusing me of criminal activity. It is difficult to understand how my testimony could simultaneously be both a product of my imagination and a physical reality.

After making a FOI (Freedom of Information) application, I obtained the following emails showing that AHPRA communicated with police in both NSW and Queensland. Two email exchanges identified a senior detective who worked for the Gold Coast CIB and who also lectured at Bond University. The first email (dated 11/11/2010) from AHPRA to the Queensland police officer was addressed to his Bond University email:

> 'It has come to my attention that Ms Barnett is under investigation by police following serious allegations of a criminal nature … if you have any information which may be imperative to the assessment of Ms Barnett's health, please do not hesitate to contact me.'

The second email (dated 26/11/10) from the Bond University lecturer to AHPRA stated:

> The last briefing I had was that contact had been made with NSWPOL and they could not identify any outstanding jobs that would match the claims made. They also informed us that the suspect had previously made outlandish claims of a similar nature. The investigation is ongoing but given the above I would suspect it will not be a police matter.

This letter documents that police dismissed my testimony as 'outlandish,' despite:

- Possessing Tor Nielsen's collaborative witness testimony prior to my contacting them.
- Never having collected a comprehensive statement from me.
- Having assigned a task force to investigate a pedophile ring at the institution where I had been abused (Engadine BoysTown).

Another email (dated 27/11/10) from police to AHPRA stated:

> At this stage we are unable to find any evidence to what MS BARNETT is saying. MS BARNETT has previously made similar admissions to NSW police in 2008, this investigation was finalised as no evidence could be located to substantiate what MS BARNETT has stated.

I was never interviewed with regard to the allegations I made to police. AHPRA used the above correspondence as evidence I was a criminal, as recorded in their letter (dated 29/3/11) and addressed to me, which said:

> …confirmation of similar reported events by the NSW Police Service regarding past criminal activities of a serious nature is a matter that the Board will need to address.

I sent written complaints about these emails to the NSW and Queensland police commissioners. Both police commissioners denied that NSW police provided any information to AHPRA in support of Bond University's accusation that I was a perpetrator of crimes. So, either police lied to their ministers about providing emails to AHPRA or AHPRA fabricated evidence against me. I submitted the two police ministers' response letters, plus comprehensive evidence which clearly disproved Bond University's allegations against me. I submitted these to Queensland AHPRA's state manager.

AHPRA use health assessment to 'stitch up' student

On the basis of Bond University's vexatious and unsubstantiated notification, AHPRA ordered me to attend a health assessment. Several professional sources warned me not to attend this assessment. These sources included a high-profile psychiatrist who warned me that AHPRA had employed a notorious 'creep' psychiatrist to 'stitch [me] up.' Patient feedback on a social media site described the 'hired gun' as 'likes to humiliate patients.' My own GP also warned me not to attend AHPRA's health assessment.

One close personal contact, who drafts legislation for the Queensland Government, warned me that archaic Queensland legislation permitted AHPRA's 'hired gun' health assessor to decide I was psychotic even if I was not, call police without my family's knowledge, drug me and admit me to a psychiatric hospital. She said AHPRA had far reaching powers, including the authority to enter my home and remove my personal belongings. She studied the new Health Practitioner Regulation National Law (Qld) 2009 (referred to hereafter as the Health Act) and concluded that it had been poorly written, failing to include penalties for my refusing to attend an AHPRA health assessment. She then advised me not to attend the assessment.
The multiple warnings not to attend AHPRA's health assessment seemed valid considering:

- What happened to Tor Nielsen when he attended a similar assessment in Sydney.
- The damning findings of the 2011 Senate Committee Inquiry into AHPRA.
- AHPRA's multiple breaches of legislation in their administration of Bond University's vexatious notification against me.

AHPRA Breach Health Act 2009

AHPRA breached the Health Act by, for example, demanding I pay the costs associated with their health assessment. They sent me multiple 'Authority' forms to sign, which said:

> I, Fiona Barnett hereby authorise the following practitioner to provide information as requested by the Psychology Board regarding my current and past medical condition. I agree to accept responsibility for any costs associated with the production of this information.

Notably, AHPRA omitted their 'Authority' form from my released FOI file. This direction from AHPRA overrode a general provision made in Section 171(4) of the Health Act which states: 'The assessor's fee for carrying out the assessment is to be paid out of the National Board's budget.'

AHPRA violates APS Code of Ethics

On 29 November 2010, a fellow Bond University student and I submitted a joint notification to AHPRA against several Bond University lecturers. The other student had an unblemished 10-year career as a psychologist and a supervisor. AHPRA refused to action our joint notification. The health regulator stated its reasons for refusing to act were that the other student and I were not classified as clients in receipt of psychological services; and since AHPRA was less than a year old, it had not had time to adopt the APS Code of Ethics and Guidelines. AHPRA's failure to recognise Bond psychology students as recipients of psychological services seems to breach section 5 of the Act, which clearly classifies health education as a health service of which psychology students are recipients. Back in 2009, the Psychologists Board of Queensland had already sent me a letter saying:

> …the Board endorses the Australian Psychological Society's APS Code of Ethics and the APS Ethical Guidelines. The Board is guided by, though not limited to, these documents when assessing the professional conduct of registrants.

The letter shows that the definition of students as clients preceded AHPRA. This definition should have been implemented regardless of whether the administration of the Psychology Board had problems transitioning from a state to a national scheme. In any case, AHPRA's failure to apply the APS Code of Ethics breaches s40 of the Health Act, which deems AHPRA to have adopted the APS Code of Ethics when it first appeared on the AHPRA website in 2010.

Meanwhile, AHPRA stated they had employed the very same APS Ethical Code and Guidelines in their administration of Bond's vexatious and unsubstantiated notification against me. On 29/3/11, they wrote:

> The Board has adopted the Australian Psychological Society's Code of Ethics for the profession and should an investigation be commenced into the conduct and professional standards of Ms Barnett, the Code will be the standard against which the concerns will be assessed.

Since Bond University's notification arrived prior to my joint student notification against Bond, this order of events makes a mockery of AHPRA's argument — that they were too new and disorganised to apply the APS Code of Ethics to a joint student notification against Bond University.

AHPRA condones unprofessional conduct

Bond University psychology lecturers should be held accountable according to the APS Code of Ethics and Guidelines regardless of whether psychology students are labelled 'clients' or 'colleagues.'

AHPRA's lack of action against Bond University psychology lecturers would appear to be inconsistent with the Health Act's definition of 'unprofessional conduct', which is stated to mean: '… professional conduct that is of a lesser standard than that which might reasonably be expected of the health practitioner by the public or the practitioner's professional peers.' It is difficult to imagine that the public would approve of psychologists and lecturers having parties with students, supplying students with alcohol, and then sexually assaulting students while they are under its influence of alcohol and asleep. It is also difficult to imagine that professional peers would condone Bond University's lack of adherence to mandatory reporting requirements.

AHPRA deny due process and natural justice

In a letter (dated 4/1/11) AHPRA admitted that it operates in accordance with principles of natural justice. Natural justice dictates that an individual (where allegations are to be made against that individual) is entitled to know precisely what those allegations are and the facts upon which it is said those allegations arise. However, AHPRA failed to tell me the basis for the allegations of unsatisfactory conduct and professional standards, criminal behaviour, being impaired and of posing a risk to the public. Consequently, AHPRA failed to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

AHPRA deprived me of my right to due process and my right to be heard. I was denied correct information and legal consultation. AHPRA denied me the opportunity to respond to Bond University's allegation I was 'psychotic' and a 'criminal.' They consistently denied me the chance to submit an initial right of reply to Bond's notification. Despite multiple requests, AHPRA failed to provide me with sufficient information concerning the content of Bond's notification against me so that I could actually compose a right of reply. To access any information, I had to struggle to obtain my AHPRA file under FOI provisions.

AHPRA directed me to attend substance abuse testing (including urinalysis) when I have no history of substance abuse and when no reference to an alleged substance abuse problem was made in the Bond University notification. Nor were there any reference to substance abuse in any of the 200 pages of my AHPRA file released via FOI.

AHPRA tried to bully, threaten and railroad me into quickly complying with their unlawful and unfair administration of a vexatious notification. AHPRA demonstrated bias, provided me with confusing and contradictory instructions, withheld crucial information and misrepresented me to the Queensland Psychology Board. AHPRA set me impossible deadlines, carrying negative consequences and threatened me with action that could result in financial loss, loss of professional registration, loss of reputation and deprivation of liberty.

AHPRA reneges on agreement

AHPRA eventually said that I could substitute their psychiatric assessment with a private medical report. My GP referred me to a high-profile psychiatrist for a specialist report. I paid thousands of dollars for a comprehensive medical report, in which the psychiatrist concluded that I had no mental health disorder. He reported that the only thing I needed counselling for was the mistreatment and subsequent stress to which Bond University had subjected me. AHPRA rejected the privately acquired medical report.

AHPRA then mysteriously gave me back my registration. Then they took it away again. This yo-yo approach was typical of Queensland AHPRA.

Several staff displayed a sarcastic and abusive phone manner. Written communication suggested that certain AHPRA staff enjoyed overstepping professional boundaries at my expense.

Complaint Tampering by Federal Agency

AHPRA's administration is answerable to the National Health Practitioner Ombudsman. I submitted a complaint against AHPRA, plus a request for an administrative review, to the National Ombudsman. I sent my comprehensive complaint and evidence via registered post. Despite my receiving a signed delivery confirmation slip, the ombudsman's administrator told me that their office never received my complaint. The office ignored my follow-up emails, emailed complaint submission, phone calls and recorded messages. I then formally complained about my missing parcel to Australia Post, who concluded that it 'must have been lost.'

Conclusion

Queensland AHPRA's actions against me – an innocent student and victim of crime – indicate that nothing has changed to improve their professional operation since the damning findings of the 2011 Senate Committee Inquiry. As other Independent Australia contributors have long campaigned for, a Royal Commission is required to get to the bottom of the shonky – perhaps criminal – administration of health in Australia.

* * *

SECOND BOND PSYCHOLOGY LECTURER CHARGED WITH PEDOPHILIA

Two Bond University Psychology professors were charged with historical pedophilia crimes after Bond's Psychology faculty destroyed my Psychology career – Paul Wilson and Bob Montgomery. Bob Montgomery established the Bond Psychology program while Paul Wilson was the Head of the Humanities Department. The two accused pedophile psychologists worked at Bond at the same time.

Paul Wilson was prominent in Australia's 1980s academic movement to legalise pedophilia. While lecturing at the University of Queensland, Wilson organised a pro-pedophilia conference which the university cancelled following public outcry, and he 'accidentally' showed a psychology class the end of a child porn snuff film. One student witness was the daughter of a Queensland police commissioner. Other students are now practising psychologists. Paul Wilson was friends with Queensland Police Commissioner Terry Lewis who kept a dirt file on him which surfaced during the Kimmin's Report and found its way into the Fitzgerald Inquiry of the late 1980s. The Fitzgerald Inquiry was Queensland's version of the NSW Wood Royal Commission into government child sex trafficking, and similarly buried its crucial findings.

PAUL WILSON
THE MAN THEY CALLED A MONSTER
Sexual experiences between men and boys

In 1981, Paul Wilson wrote a book subtitled, The Man They Called a Monster: Sexual Experiences Between Men and Boys[94] which advocated for pedophilia to be renamed 'Greek love' and be socially accepted like in Ancient Greece. The book defended Wilson's pedophile associate Clarence Henry Osborne, who maintained records of his 2,500 victims plus VIP pedophiles including academics like Paul Wilson.

In 2016, Paul Wilson was sentenced to 6 months prison for the historical sexual assault of two young girls. A journalist, to whom I provided information for a Courier Mail feature story about the case, told me Paul Wilson had such a long list of victims waiting to prosecute him, he will spend the rest of his days either in court or prison.

Bob Montgomery

In 2019, Bob Montgomery was charged with sexually abusing and anally raping three young boys at Byron Bay in the 1970s. Montgomery established psychology courses at two other universities besides Bond, including Alfred Conlon's ANU in Canberra. Montgomery authored 13 books, regularly appeared on television and radio, and was the consultant psychologist on the Big Brother TV show. Montgomery was 2009 to 2010 President of the APS who describe themselves as: '…the peak body for psychologists in Australia and represent over 24,000 members. We advocate for the profession of psychology, support high standards, promote community well-being, and are dedicated to providing benefits to support members.' The APS certainly supported Bob Montgomery who received a 'slap on the wrist' for having sex with his client.

Bob Montgomery headed unethical MK-ULTRA research conducted by LaTrobe University's psychology department in 1973 to 1974. The Milgram replica experiments which tested a human's willingness to fatally electrocute others left Montgomery's subjects traumatised. LaTrobe University is home to Psychology lecturer Gary Dowsett who was part of academia's 1980s push to legalise pedophilia. Until recently, Dowsett's LaTrobe University resume page featured a link to an article he wrote in Gay Information Quarterly Journal (Spring 1982). Titled, Boiled Lollies and Band-Aids: Gay men and Kids, it stated:

> And a new political position is needed... First, we have three legal/social questions to win: custody rights for gay men and lesbians; the legal right of pedophiles and their young lovers; and finally, the sexual rights of children as a whole.... How different then is that gentle, tentative sexuality between parent and child from the love of a pedophile and his/her lover?'

Gary Dowsett developed the Victorian Government's Safe Schools sex education curriculum which, I heard from multiple sources, contained explicit pornography and resulted in boys gangraping girls at school. As stated in response to PIE's 1976 campaign to lower the age of consent: '…what is called sex education differs from other subjects in that it may determine the immediate and future behaviour of children and change the whole climate of society.' [95]

The timing of Bob Montgomery's 1970s Milgram experiments coincides with Kidman's CIA-funded Learned Helplessness research that he conducted under Seligman's guidance. During the 1970s, Bob Montgomery was a visiting professor at the Universities of Hawaii and

---

[94] Paul R. Wilson (1981). The Man They Called A Monster: Sexual Experiences between Men and Boys. Cassell.

[95] Ronald Butt (1976). Who really wants a change in the age of consent? The Times, 22 Jan.

Oregon, MK-ULTRA research hubs. Kidman undertook a PhD in biochemistry at the University of Hawaii.

Antony Kidman and Bob Montgomery both promoted CBT (cognitive behavioural therapy) and Health Psychology in Australia. 'Health Psychology' was invented by Joseph Matarazzo who designed the 2001 torture program that Seligman was second in charge of. An excerpt from a self-help book illustrates the perceived relationship between these men, and their denial teachings:[96]

> Unreal Beliefs and Conflicts
> The final group of conflicts are caused by unrealistic beliefs, sometimes called the irrational beliefs which are found in everybody. The only thing that varies is the intensity and the number of them we have. These unrealistic expectations we have form pictures in our mind that place us in inevitable conflict and cause, not just conflict but also cause sadness, even despair. Albert Ellis, Anthony Kidman and Bob Montgomery as well as several other authors have one thing in common, they refer in their books to these as the 'irrational' beliefs we have about ourselves. What follows is, in fact, the ten irrational beliefs so often quoted: . . .
>
> - Irrational Belief 3*: Some people are bad, wicked or evil, and they should be punished for this. . .*
> - Irrational Belief 5*: My bad feelings are caused by something out of my control, so I can't do anything about them. . .*
> - Irrational Belief 9*: My problems were caused by some events in my past, so that's why I have my problems now.*
>
> Here is my rebuttal to these points:
>
> - Rational Belief 3: Psychologists who rape and torture children are evil criminals who deserve to be brought to justice and punished to the full extent of the law.
> - Rational Belief 5: My feelings stem from implicit memories of being hypnotised, drugged, raped, and brainwashed. My feelings are outside of my conscious control because they are a symptom of repressed abuse memories. My feelings will dissipate when I remember and process my abuse.
> - Rational Belief 9: My current physical and psychological problems were certainly caused by my child abuse.

Antony Kidman, Bob Montgomery, and Paul Wilson were three of Australia's most prominent psychologists. Authors, university lecturers, and ABC media consultants, they used their positions to promote child abuse denial, stop victims processing their trauma memories, and mislead the public concerning the truth about organized child abuse in Australia. Not surprising if all three men were pedophiles.

Another Bond University lecturer, Richard Hicks, was involved with MK-ULTRA research in the 1960s also.[97]

---

[96] Roger F. Peters (2004). A Wish before Dying. HEAS Publishing.

[97] R.E. Hicks & P.J. Fink (Eds.) (1969*). Psychedelic drugs: Proceedings of a Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital symposium sponsored by the Department of Psychiatry*. Grune & Stratton.

2020 Update

On 2 June 2020, ABC News reported that Bob Montgomery pleaded guilty to anally raping three 12-year-old boys while working as a Scout master during the 1960s. He faces up to 14 years in prison. Once again, Australia's mainstream newspapers failed to mention that Montgomery was a former President of the Australian Psychological Society (APS).

On 2 June 2020, the current APS President issued the following statement to its 24,000+ member psychologists regarding Bob Montgomery:

A statement from the President regarding Bob Montgomery

Dear [Member Psychologist]

Many of you may be aware of today's media coverage regarding psychologist Bob Montgomery, who has plead guilty to child sex offences while he was a scoutmaster in Sydney in the 1960s.

Bob Montgomery has formally resigned his membership with the APS.

The APS Board wishes to acknowledge the courage displayed by the victims and their families. We hope the legal process brings some resolution.

This news may be triggering both for APS members, and for those within our communities who have a trauma history. We urge you to reach out and seek support if you are experiencing these triggers and to remember that self-care is incredibly important during such times.

We acknowledge that some APS members may be long term friends and supporters of Bob Montgomery and his family, prior to this case emerging. Whilst the APS does not condone in any way Mr Montgomery's behaviours, we wish to acknowledge the impact of current proceedings on him and his family's mental health and hope they are seeking support from these friends through this process.

Yours sincerely
Ros Knight FAPS
President

It is abhorrent for an APS President to acknowledge the impact on both the victims and their rapist in the same breath. Expressing sympathy for the rapist in this way makes any acknowledgment of the victim hollow.

The following day (3 June 2020), the current APS President issued a follow-up statement regarding Bob Montgomery. Obviously, this was in response to a national backlash of criticism from its member psychologists, many of whom work with child sex abuse victims.

Follow up statement from the President regarding Bob Montgomery

Dear [Member Psychologist]

Yesterday I issued a statement to APS members about psychologist Bob Montgomery. I have received and appreciated your heartfelt feedback to this communiqué.

The APS takes your views very seriously. Your feedback ensures we remain accountable to you, our members.

Allow me to be absolutely clear: the APS holds a position of absolute condemnation of all forms of abuse in our society. Our position remains that all forms of child sexual abuse are a profound violation of the human rights of the child, and a crime under Australian law. It is never, ever OK.

This official position, and acknowledgement of the life-long harm and suffering that can ensue, has underpinned the APS's active campaigning for better justice and interventions for survivors.

We extend our deepest acknowledgement of the pain and suffering experienced to the survivors of these traumas and their families. Psychologists should be the providers of comfort, support and healing, not the cause of pain. We hope that the survivors are receiving the assistance they need and deserve.

I also wish to acknowledge and commend all of you who work with and support survivors in these difficult and complex areas.

Finally, I take this opportunity to remind all psychologists of our mandatory reporting obligations under the law to report sexual offences (or any abuse) against children to the relevant child protection authorities, and to report peers to the relevant authorities if we suspect the public is at risk.

Yours faithfully
Ros Knight FAPS
President

This statement by the APS President is consistent with that institution's long history of child abuse denial and double speak.

* * *

ABC GET THEIR SHIT TOGETHER

Four days after I broke the above story, the ABC interviewed some pissed-off psychologists. Here are some choice extracts from the ABC article:

Australian Psychological Society under fire for 'disturbing' response to Bob Montgomery child sex prosecution

ABC News, 10 June 2020

A peak psychologist's body, once led by paedophile Bob Montgomery, has come under fire for noting the "impact" of criminal prosecution on him and urging he seek support from "long term friends" in its ranks...

The ABC has been told the Australian Psychological Society (APS) was flooded with hundreds of complaints from its own members over its response to Montgomery's guilty plea to child sex offences...

Heidi Smith, a psychologist in Western Australia, said the APS response made her feel "ill for several hours. I cried with frustration for all the child sexual abuse victims and the struggles they face with institutions supporting child sex offenders," she said. "At no point during this email does the APS mention that this man was the president of their prestigious society [or] that you cannot be a psychologist if you are convicted of a crime such as child sex abuse," she said. "It says he resigned, like it was his choice. At no point [did] they make any statement in relation to ethics or his role as a psychologist."

Montgomery was president of the APS from 2008 to 2010.

A senior psychologist, who asked not to be named, said the response was "disturbing" and members were "disgusted".

Ms Knight in her email also indicated the APS had not expelled Montgomery, who was awarded life membership in 2016, but that he had "formally resigned". The psychologist said the APS response highlighted "the impact on his mental health and that of his family — yet no mention about the mental health of Montgomery's victims for which he plead[ed] guilty to, nor for mental health of other victims. Members are so disgusted that reputations of psychologists will be tarnished by association, and that importantly, the current president of the APS, as a clinical psychologist, has ignored the impacts of the abuse on the immediate victims of her former colleague," the psychologist said.

A well-placed source told the ABC that "many hundreds of members contacted the APS," prompting Ms Knight to respond...

The senior psychologist said [the 2nd APS President statement] was "still a horrendous reaction. Alarmingly, even in her second statement the day after, she did not address the mental health impact of Montgomery's victims, but just in general about all victims," he said. "It seems in these statements the victims of Montgomery have been ignored, and just lumped into general victims of sexual abuse – whereas Montgomery was specifically mentioned and considered in relation to the impact on his mental health, it seems above the interests of his victims."

In 2014, the APS made Montgomery a "new honorary fellow" to recognise his "extraordinary and distinguished contribution." He was president the same year the professional regulator, the Psychology Board of Australia, adopted its code of ethics from the APS.

In a statement, the APS said "on reflection, the original email from the APS could have been worded differently in two areas". It said the email was an attempt to convey a "neutral, or non-biased judgment towards the matter" which was done with "the best intention". The APS said this was in line with the fact that "psychologists frequently find themselves dealing with complex matters [and] often psychologists work with both survivors and perpetrators of crimes." The APS said it had received a "small number of complaints" from its 25,000 members and took those concerns seriously... It said that "to the best of the APS's knowledge, Mr Montgomery did not contribute" to the code of ethics adopted by the professional regulator.

Far more psychologists were outraged by the APS President than the 'small number' who complained in writing. My therapist called them evil pricks, my friend’s psychologist threw things around the room and was too angry to complain in writing.

The APS president's statement revealed her true colours. Like I've been saying for many years, Australia’s psychology industry is run by dirty filthy perpetrators. They run the universities psychology courses, they run the APS, and they run the Psychology Board.

* * *

Seems there’s more to this story of coverup:

Dr Thea Vanags (Dr T)
@DrTheaVanags

Hope the sentence is a long one, Bob.

Hope @AustPsych is proud of its ex president.

Hope @UniCanberra is proud of its failure to act on student complaints about Montgomery in 2003

My heart goes out to the victims

@abcnews

Jun-02,2020 15:00
Likes : 1 Retweets : 0
Tweet URL

Satan's Seat

I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is…

Several people independently described Bundaberg to me as 'Satan's throne.' There is no denying the isolated country town is a microcosm of national coven activity, but why the Prince of Darkness would choose such a shithole for his throne room is beyond me.

Several variables lend credibility to the rumour. Bundaberg sits smack atop one of the major Ley-lines occultists prize. Another clue was the enormous road sign that confronted visitors at the town's entrance. The blood red sign contained the black silhouette of a huge bull with tall erect horns. Superficially, the bull poster advertised the El Toro restaurant located in the nearby coastal suburb of Bargara. On a sinister level it represented the horned bull of Mithraism and it indicated that Bundaberg was a coven capital.

Another of Bundaberg's dark features is the legendary Hummock. The Hummock is a hollow, extinct volcano that dominates the area's otherwise flat landscape. The cavern inside the Hummock is accessed via a number of the homes that sit on the hill, homes which are only ever sold on to approved coven members. Local Indigenous people said the Hummock features a natural tunnel system which joins the main enormous hollow to surrounding landmarks including the local Catholic school and cemetery. Luciferian rituals are said to take place beneath the impenetrable Hummock.

Bundaberg is characterised by a lack of aesthetics, absence of culture and an obsession with sport. Its main street was once lined with iron laced heritage buildings and enormous trees that created a long cool green arch; but someone clad the buildings, and cut down every tree, creating a repulsive heat.

In the early 1990s, a Bundaberg courthouse employee informed me that he processed one suicide per week. That statistic struck me as high, considering the town served a population of approximately 40,000.

Bundaberg's air of suicidal futility was well captured in the school war-cry that local children shared with me:

'Sex! Drugs! Rock-n-roll! Bundy High's a fuckin' hole!'

If ever you want to know what is really happening in a community – ask the kids. The local children told me about the 26 primary school students being treated at the hospital's psychiatric unit for the sexual and physical abuse they experienced at Bundaberg West State School, and which was eventually reported in the local paper. The kids informed me about the Bundaberg East State School principal who liked to watch children do cartwheels in their skirts, and who would force himself upon mothers in the school classrooms while they attended teacher interviews. The school cleaner complained to my Aunty Beryl that she would find semen all over the desks and floor. I attended this school for a while in Grade 6.

The most telling testimony came to me in 1998 from Samantha, a Grade 7 student at Woongarra State School. Samantha was an attractive 12-year-old with the body of a 16-year-old and the mouth of a 22-year-old. I met Samantha during a local cricket game. She was staying with my friend who was providing respite to the girl's mother. The 'tween-ager' was reportedly out of control and dating a man in his early twenties.

For some reason, Samantha decided to tell me all about her life, including her involvement in 'witchcraft.' The child said that she was introduced to witchcraft by her classmate whose house she often stayed at. In fact, her entire primary school class had been converted to witchcraft the previous year. ‘It was a really positive thing,’ Samantha explained, ‘because before that there was a lot of fighting and bitchiness, but after we all became involved in witchcraft it united us, and we all got on really well.’ Samantha told me about how the class would cast spells on their teacher. One of these caused her teacher’s chair to break, while another caused the teacher’s car tyre to go flat. Apparently, it was really funny, and it gave the students a means of revenge against their ‘mean’ teacher.

Samantha then revealed what she benefited from witchcraft – a sense of control over her out-of-control life. The child was angry. Two years ago, police found her grandmother dead, mysteriously slain with a fork – the common eating utensil kind. Samantha wanted revenge against an unknown entity.

I listened patiently to Samantha for about two hours, quietly prompting. Once satisfied that the girl had shared everything, I made my stand. I looked the child dead in the eye and affirmed: ‘Now listen here and you listen well. You are playing with fire, missy! Right now, this whole witchcraft thing feels fun, but come your thirteenth birthday you will be initiated into the next step – which is not fun! Once you take that next step, you will reach a point of no return. The next level is human sacrifice where they murder little babies and children. Believe me, because I’ve seen it. I know it’s real, just as you know that magic really works. Take it from someone who has seen where all of this goes – stop now before it’s too late! This is your chance, right here, right now, to get out!’

Terror seized the girl’s being and she morphed back into a 12-year-old child. ‘What do I do?’ she pleaded.

‘There’s only one way out of this mess. When I was your age, I noticed that these people were extremely rich, extremely powerful and afraid of no one or thing. But then I noticed that there was a source of power greater than theirs and that when they came up against that power, they lost. That power source was Jesus Christ. So, I figured that I would rather side with the God that held the greater source of power. The name of Jesus Christ is the only one that is able to free you from what you’ve got yourself into. Right now, Satan is lord over your life. You need to ask Jesus Christ to be Lord. You need to pray to God and ask Him to undo every curse, hex and spell that you are subject to.’

‘I want that! I want that right now!’

That afternoon, Samantha gave her heart to Jesus Christ and accepted a King James Bible. The last I heard, Samantha’s rebellious behaviour had quelled, and she was reading her Bible daily. Ideally, I would have recommended some church for Samantha to attend, but by that stage, I could think of none.

My mother originally moved to Bundaberg to be near her sisters. One sister, Beryl Jenkins, had lived in her beloved ‘Bundy’ the longest. My cousin David Mitchell rightly labelled Beryl ‘an evil bitch’ after holidaying with her as a child. When she wasn’t pretending to be a Christian elder at the local Wesleyan Methodist Church, Aunty Beryl was heavily involved in her family’s true god – basketball.

Beryl was particularly spiteful toward two members of the human race: me and my younger brother Peter. Perhaps this was because Peter and I naturally excelled at everything - including basketball. I joined a basketball team in Beryl’s Across the Waves club after shooting a three pointer over Will, Bundaberg’s star African American import, during a social game. I have never in my life witnessed anything as dirty and dangerous as Bundaberg women’s basketball. The saddest moment came when a 15-year-old child on the opposing team broke her ankle. As the girl lay on the bitumen crying in agony, one of my teammates - the town's only paediatrician - snarled, 'Get her up!' This same doctor ran the Bundaberg Rainbow Girls, a Freemasonic youth group for girls.

At the end of my first basketball season, all of Bundaberg's opposing clubs nominated me for the overall Association trophy. However, Aunty Beryl and my own club gave me nothing. Peter also won a trophy that season, but he was struck down with an illness and bedridden, weeks prior to presentation night. Consequently, Aunty Beryl stripped Peter's name off the trophy and was about to give it to another child when the only club member with integrity intervened, chided them all, snatched the trophy and marched it to my mother's house.

But Aunty Beryl's full capacity for evil manifested at her church which my family and I initially attended. Beryl's daughter-in-law, Marcie, attended the same Wesleyan Methodist church. Marcie was my age and so we quickly became acquainted. She invited me to join the church youth group. When Marcie introduced a fellow youth group member who worked as a meter reader to me as being 'like a spy for us,' I realised she was consciously involved in a coven and had mistakenly assumed that I was too. It's a common assumption because Satanists can't fathom the concept of escaping.

Marcie warned me not to associate with a warm, pretty and musically talented youth group member named Lynette.

'Why not?' I puzzled.

'She's trouble,' Marcie asserted. 'She flirts with all the boys.'

'What do you mean? What boys?'

'It doesn't matter,' she rolled her eyes. 'She's just caused a lot of trouble.'

Aunty Beryl also warned me against associating with Lynette. Then Pastor Peter Breen's daughter repeated derogative things that her mother, Mavis Breen, had uttered against Lynette. The whole church seemed to be gossiping about Lynette behind her back. Their comments were inconsistent with the modest sweet girl that I was observing; so, I did what a Christian is supposed to do – I decided to talk with Lynette and make up my own mind about her. To everyone's horror, I invited the social outcast to a big Christmas party at Aunty Beryl's house, and I spent the entire evening getting to know Lynette. Eventually, I told Lynette bluntly what people had been saying to me about her, and I asked her what was going on.

Lynette told me about an incident that had occurred when she was 16 years old. Her older sister Diane was about to be married but was killed in a car accident just south of Bundaberg, the week before her wedding. On the day of her wedding, the guests who had travelled for the wedding attended her funeral instead. Her bridesmaids, dressed alike in their formal wedding-day dresses, stood by the bride's coffin instead.

During the chaotic week following her sister's death, Lynette fell ill. So, her sister's best friend, a nurse named Wendy, invited Lynette to stay at her house. Wendy's husband, Adrian, was the son of a church deacon and a notorious philanderer. One morning, Wendy gave Lynette a large dose of codeine medication (Mersyndol) which left the child extremely drowsy and asleep in the spare bedroom. Soon after Wendy left for work, Adrian entered Lynette's room, picked her up, carried her to his bed, and sexually assaulted her.

I met with Lynette the day after her disclosure, placed some crayons and paper in front of her, and said, 'Draw it for me. Show me what Adrian did to you.'

Lynette drew the assault.

'Now,' I continued, 'draw a thought bubble above your head. Inside the thought bubble, write words that you were thinking.'

She wrote, NO!

'Did you tell your parents about this?'

'Yes.'

'What did they do?'

'They could have had him charged but that would have broken up the church.'

'So instead, everyone doesn't know the truth, and someone started the rumour that you flirted with him.'

'Yes.'

'And let me guess – your parents have been too preoccupied with your sister's death to notice how you felt about being assaulted straight after your sister's death?'

'Yes.'

'And just how do you feel?'

'Like no-one would notice if I was gone.'

'Do you wish you were gone?'

'Yes.'

'Have you thought about killing yourself?'

'Yes.'

'Have you thought of how you'd do it?'

'Yes - overdose on pills…'

I was myself young and inexperienced yet aware that the last time I kept silent about someone's suicidal ideation they gassed themselves to death in Amsterdam. So, I had a go: 'Lynette, this is a perfectly normal reaction to something bad that happened to you. Your sister was killed and while you were still in shock from that, and ill, and drugged, an adult sexually assaulted you. You were a child. None of this is your fault. You did nothing wrong.' I paused. 'I think you need to tell your parents about how you really feel. And I think someone needs to put a stop to all the church gossip.'

Lynette agreed. In fact, now she felt like standing up and telling the whole church.

'How about we start with Pastor Breen? How would you feel about showing him these drawings?'

'Yes, I'd like that.'

'We could go right now if you like?'

'Yes.'

We went looking for the pastor at the church, but no-one was there. Then an idea dawned on me. I led Lynette into the empty church. 'I'm going to sit in the pews,' I suggested. 'You stand at the front behind the pulpit. Pretend that the church is full. Tell the church what you would like them to know.'

Lynette addressed the invisible congregation and expressed what had been tearing her up inside since her sister's death.

Peter Breen arrived, and I told him, 'Lynette has something to show you. Show him the drawings Lynette and tell him what you told me.'

Lynette showed the pastor her drawings, carefully explaining each one.

Pastor: 'I feel sick.'

'Did you know any of this?' I asked him.

'No, Lynette, I'm sorry, I didn't realise.'

'Well,' I continued, 'practically the whole church is gossiping about a wrong version of it, including my family and yours. Lynette here would like to get up in front of the whole congregation and tell everyone the truth. Instead, I think it's only fair that you locate every single person who has been told the wrong story and tell them the truth.

He nodded. 'And please don't tell Mavis [his wife] about this. It'll ruin her Christmas.'

That evening, Lynette and I met with her parents and filled them in on recent events, including the malicious gossip. I prompted Lynette to express to her parents how she felt.

'I want to commit suicide,' Lynette announced.

Her parents became still like stunned mullets.

I softly asked Lynette's Dad, 'Where is your daughter right now?

'Huh?'

'Where is Diane right now?'

He thought for a moment. 'In heaven.'

'What do you think she thinks about that?'

'Well…she'd be very happy.'

'And what do you think God thinks of where she is right now?'

'Well, he would be pleased to have her there.'

'Okay, so your daughter's in heaven, she is happy with that arrangement and so is God. God is sovereign, He loves us, but He decided to take her anyhow. I don't know why God allows such horrible things to happen to us, I just know that we have to trust Him with the situation. While you have been grieving for your eldest daughter, you haven't noticed that you're about to lose your youngest.'

The full impact of my intervention with Lynette became apparent many months later. It all began one Sunday morning during church service. The pastor had introduced a new age doctrine to the church which involved having parishioners sit in a circle for service and inviting people to voice their opinion mid-service. One morning, the pastor gave a sermon on God's image, and he asked people in the service to verbalise their impressions of God.

Troy, a nice young man who had been a Christian for about a week, raised his hand and excitedly offered his opinion: 'I-I-I think of the song, He's got the whole world in His hands. I'm-I'm into body building, and that's just my thing. So, I see God like a big Arnie Schwarzenegger holding up the world in his arms!'

The congregation applauded.

Just then, a self-appointed church leader named Spencer Gere shot to his feet and pompously tore Troy's opinion apart: 'God is immaterial. He cannot be compared to mortal being, to some Hollywood actor …'

As Spencer Gere raved on like a Shakespearean soliloquy, I turned to notice Troy behind me, deflating like a pool floaty. I arose and spoke, 'The Bible clearly states that we are made in God's image. We have arms – so does God. Troy may not have been a Christian for very long, he may not have been to Bible College and he may not have read a lot of books yet, but his understanding of God is just as valid. And now I'll give you all something more important to focus on – someone in this congregation is involved in Satanism.'

The congregation applauded.

Following the service, people approached me and stated: 'Thanks for standing up for me...' 'You said what we've all been thinking but didn't have the guts to say…' 'That guy has been putting us down for months.'

I was immediately summoned to an emergency meeting attended by Pastor Breen, Spencer Gere, Aunty Beryl, Lynette's Dad (Kevin) and the pastor's brother-in-law. Instead of opening the meeting in prayer, Spencer Gere launched into a criticism of me. Yet, every time he went to address me, I was overcome with a deep spiritual repulsion, as though an evil spirit was daring to converse - I promptly cut him off: ‘Don’t you dare speak to me!’

Pastor: ‘You can’t talk to Spencer like that!’

‘He’s not a man of God!’ I snapped.

Pastor: ‘What you are doing is not of God.’

‘How would you know?’

‘Because you’re causing division in the church!’

‘Jesus said he came to separate the sheep from the goats.’

Pastor Breen was dumb.

Aunty Beryl sat quietly with a smug look on her face.

Tears welled in my eyes.

Lynette’s father interjected: ‘No, no, no. This is all wrong. This is wrong. Fiona has done a lot to help our family. She saved our daughter’s life!’

But the wolf pack were not interested in words of reason, righteousness or support.

Their criticism faded into background noise as I focussed on Lynette’s father:

‘Fiona, Fiona, ‘he implored. ‘Do you remember what you said to me?’

‘No,’ I sobbed.

‘You told me three things that helped me get over my daughter’s death.’ He counted the list off his fingers. ‘Where is my daughter now, what does she think about that, and what does God think about that.’

‘Thank you,’ I managed a small smile. Then I left.

The following Sunday I began attending the local Baptist church which had two ministers. One of the ministers reminded me of a stout Roman Caesar, especially when, mid-sermon, he patted his fat gut and irreverently boasted, ‘And you all know how much I like my food.’ After my third Sunday of attendance, this pastor asked to meet with me. During this meeting he said that Pastor Breen had phoned him and warned him not to let me attend this church because I liked to ‘lure vulnerable young women into questionable counselling situations.’ Pastor Glutton concluded, ‘We do not want you to be a vessel through which the Holy Spirit works in this church.’ Months later, Pastor Glutton caused a split in the church and eventually started up a new church in Bargara with half of the congregation.

At about this time, Aunty Beryl rallied Mum’s siblings plus my father into making a joint complaint to DOCS. Beryl alleged that my mother medically neglected my brother Peter who was not recovering from one of the numerous mystery illnesses that seemed to constantly plague Bundaberg in Biblical proportions. My mother had indeed sought medical attention. She had taken Peter to Bundaberg Base Hospital (notorious for Dr Patel’s killing spree) only to be told that there were no vacant beds and to go home and consult her GP in the morning. Mum took my brother back to his GP who wrote a medical certificate stating that there was nothing wrong with Peter. We later discovered that Peter had a rare virus that ate away the cartilage between two of his vertebrae and his hip. Peter’s GP was later struck of the medical registrar for multiple complaints of malpractice.

My sister-in-law thrust Peter’s medical certificate in Aunty Beryl’s grimacing face while I asserted: ‘Oh you care so much about Peter’s illness. You cared so much that you ripped his name off his basketball trophy!’

Beryl screamed hysterically, ‘Have you spoken to James Kraak yet? Well you should!’ and she left.

James Kraak was the pastor of the new church that my mother and siblings had been attending called the People’s Church. At that stage, I was unaware that Kraak and his wife

Helen had ritually abused my siblings at a church holiday camp held at Harvey Bay. I was aware that Kraak's son had been suspended while under investigation for pedophilia at the remote primary school he taught at. In fact, I barely knew Pastor Kraak when I promptly drove to his house and said, 'Beryl told me that I should speak with you. Why?'

Kraak turned red and snapped, 'She shouldn't have!'

'What did you say to her?'

'I'm not telling you!'

One year, there was a knock at my front door. It was Lynette's father Kevin - and Peter Breen. Pastor Breen began, 'Spencer Gere wanted to come, but I didn't think that would be a good idea.'

Me: 'Correct.'

'We've had some experiences in the church which have led us to reconsider what you said about someone in the church being involved in Satanism.'

'What experiences?'

'One of the ladies was sewing and the sewing machine just picked itself off the table and smashed itself to pieces on the floor.'

Pastor Breen: 'What can you tell us about Libby Margots?'

I snapped, 'You went and told that other minister that I liked to lure vulnerable young women into questionable counselling situations! Did you ask Kevin here what he thought of that conclusion before making that phone call? You have more than one Satanist at your church, Peter. For starters there's that warlock that you've placed on a pedestal and who is picking on new Christians! And what the hell are you doing attending secret prayer meetings with the local Catholic priest at the Catholic Church?! Your every move is dictated by a coven. Here you are asking about Libby when she manipulated you into ordering me not to speak with her again. What the hell was that?!'

Pastor Breen left the building.

Later, sources told me that Peter Breen and his family had come under severe spiritual attack. One person who was dining with the Breens witnessed the whole family suddenly jump to their feet and rush into another room to pray. Pastor Breen left the ministry soon after, and his son Harley Breen whom my brothers befriended and was fond of, became a foul-mouthed comedian who joked about the hypocrisy of his father's Bundaberg church.

The Libby referred to was Aunty Beryl's friend. Libby Margots strategically drained the church's financial and human resources via counselling for her homosexual husband plus financial assistance for her six home-schooled children. Libby's constant companion was a young woman who introduced herself to me as: 'I'm Libby's slave.' Coven members call new initiates whom they are mentoring 'slaves.' My friend who regularly babysat for Libby (another Libby surnamed Fenner) told me about the goats and many other animals that Libby bred in large numbers, all of which would suddenly and mysteriously disappear. It was James Kraak who informed my mother that Libby was secretly in a relationship with a coven member named Robyn Brown.

My family and I quickly caught on to Libby's game – and she knew it. That's why Libby ordered Pastor Breen to tell my mother and me to stay away from her. However, Libby couldn't have felt as threatened as she made out. At a church luncheon she casually walked up to me and asked, 'Fiona, I saw you at the hospital the other day. What were you doing there?'

'I was visiting Marcie.' My cousin had recently suffered a miscarriage.

'No, it wasn't that. It was something else. What was it?'

I was volunteering at the hospital but had not told anyone about it. Such is the boldness that coven members exhibit when they seek information.

Libby was connected with the owner of one of Bundaberg's landmarks – the Purple Castle. This was a private dwelling which was built in the shape of a witches' castle and painted in tell-tale purple. A bricklayer who laboured on the purple castle told my mother that he built a large round altar at its centre. The purple castle was owned and occupied by a woman who took in numerous young single mothers. Baby diapers constantly filled her clothesline. This was a blatant coven breeding centre.

Bundaberg featured a large coven which comprised entirely of members with Scottish heritage. One member of this was a woman we called 'the hat lady' because she sold handmade hats at the local market. My family were thrice confronted by this hat lady, once at a highland dancing event, once at a market and most memorably in Bonnie Jean's fabric shop. During the latter incident, I stood at a large table glancing through pattern catalogues. My mother and sister-in-law Janine stood on the other side, doing the same. My baby sister Emma wandered nearby.

Suddenly we were surrounded by several people including the hat lady, a man in a full rainbow clown outfit and an obese, dark haired woman.

I snapped to attention. 'Don't let them form a triangle around us!' I ordered my family. 'Get Emma away from that clown!'

My mother fetched Emma. The hat lady came and stood very close to my right and began turning the pages of a catalogue. The clown stood close to my left, pretending to browse lingerie patterns. The fat lady stood at the counter, purchasing black and purple satin. I turned to the hat lady and affirmed, 'I rebuke you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.'

The clown gasped, ran off to an obese woman who stood at the counter measuring yards of black and purple satin, and whispered something to her. The woman boasted aggressively, 'She wouldn't dare say that to me!' Yes, I would.

The hat lady thrust her gargoyle face in mine and hissed, 'Who do you think you are?' I looked her dead in the eye and affirmed: 'I-will-be-your-downfall.'

The hat lady flew into a rage, knocked me out of her way and snatched my catalogue. She slammed the book down on the table and began thumbing through the pages. 'Rachel!' she shrieked.

A thin, young store assistant nervously approached the table.

'Rachel! Did you hear what this lady said? She rebuked me in Jesus' name!'

Rachel's eyes darted about nervously as she scanned my family for clues as to what she should do.

'We're just looking at patterns,' my mother shrugged.

I gave Rachel a look of 'who's the crazy' while twirling my finger around my ear.

'Well?!' the hat wench demanded: 'What are you going to do about it?!'

Rachel stammered, 'I-I-I don't know what to do.'

The coven members congregated at the counter while my family and I stood in a small circle and began to pray aloud. Then the group disbanded and returned to normal behaviour, completely ignoring the fact that a group of people were praying aloud in the middle of a fabric shop.

I encountered another Scottish identity while participating in a local production of the musical Les Miserables. John Harbison was an optometrist whose friendship seemed harmless until he began criticising my absent English boyfriend, and saying, 'He only thinks he loves you, but he doesn't.'

I agreed to accompany John Harbison to a restaurant for dinner. Afterwards, we went back to his house for tea. We sat on the back deck of his Queenslander home, glancing through art books. I commented on one of the artworks when suddenly, coffee in hand, John Harbison leaned forward, stared at my eyes and declared:

'Beezlebub, Lord of the Flies!'

'Huh?' I shot him a puzzled look. 'Beezlebub lord of the flies?! What does that have to do with the price of fish?'

Harbison frantically scanned my face for signs of an impending expected reaction – but it wasn't forthcoming. He had uttered a trigger phrase, not realising that because I had processed the ritual abuse incidents, the trigger was deactivated. That was Harbison's first blunder.

His second mistake came after I told him I was visiting England. What I had failed to tell him was that I would only be in England a few short months before travelling to Western Australia. I was interstate when my mother received a letter that John Harbison addressed to me. In his letter he stated that he was in a Scottish pub and had scoured the UK searching for me. 'WHERE ARE YOU?!' he screamed in erratic font that consumed half a page.

'But he knew where you were,' my mother deduced. 'You told him you were in England. Why would he think anything else?'

John's letter ended with a one page of list of grotesque and seemingly unrelated words including 'vomit' and 'rhinoceros' that resembled a curse.

The next time I spied John Harbison was during the early hours of the morning, under a full moon. My mother and I recognised him with three men standing together in the next-door driveway. They were dressed in brown robes and pointed hats. The men stood out the front of 46 George St, near the front unit occupied by a South African man named Tony and his four-year-old-son. The little boy often entered our house uninvited and started talking to us. One day we caught him perfectly forming his hands into a satanic sign. We asked him what the sign meant. The child answered and then proceeded to talk us through and demonstrate his enormous repertoire of satanic hand signals.

On another day, the little boy walked into Mum's bedroom, eating an ice block. When he finished, he showed my mother the stick and asked, 'What does that say?'

'Heaven,' Mum read.

'Do you know where that is?' he pointed to the ground. 'Down there.'

'Oh, no it isn't. That's where Satan lives.' Mum pointed to the sky. 'Heaven is up there. God lives up there.'

The boy then pointed at my brother Peter and blurted, 'We shot Peter last night!'

The previous night, Peter had awoken screaming in agony and saying he felt something like electricity shoot up his arm.

That was the last time we saw the little boy. He and his father suddenly disappeared. A while later we spied a cleaning lady at their rented unit. Under the guise of being a potential tenant, my sister-in-law Janine approached the cleaner and inquired about the unit. The cleaning lady began complaining about the job. She described a strange brownish substance that was stuck to the bathroom floor and walls, and she invited Janine in to look. Janine returned to us looking a shade paler. 'It's everywhere! There's a great pool of it all over the floor, and it's splattered all over the walls and ceiling. It looks like someone was butchered in there!'

Following this incident, Bundaberg Centrelink social security office sent my mother a letter informing her that my brother Peter was dead. Then Mum found a little white note that a postal worker had taped to the inside of her Australia Post box which read, ‘Watch mail coming into this box.’ Then we found dried, dead chopped up animals scattered all over our front footpath. Then, on several occasions, taxis continually circled our block and drove past our house from midnight until 3am.

During our final year in Bundaberg, one of my brother’s began dating his classmate Anne Gillespie. Anne was of Scottish heritage and she lived in a Bargara house that was passed from coven family to coven family. Anne showed me a satanic altar that was erected in her back yard. She told my family that babies had been sacrificed in her home and that there was an enormous blood stain on the wooden floor of her upstairs bedroom, beneath the carpet. My brother clearly recalls a time that Anne’s parents drugged him and Anne during a party attended by local coven members.

Anne was 17 years old when she told my mother that she was frightened of her parents and she begged my mother to help her escape Bundaberg. When my husband and I left Bundaberg, we gave Anne a ride. As soon as we were gone, police Sergeant Greg Maloney phoned my mother’s house and hissed to my eight-year-old brother Michael: ‘Your mother has thirty minutes to tell me where Anne is, or else I’ll come and get you all in my squad car!’ This was the same Sergeant who bullied a 16-year-old girl out of pursuing legal recourse for being gang raped by 10 young Bundaberg men. The girl assumed that her boyfriend was dropping her at work when he drove her to a warehouse where the perpetrators awaited. These men are now all prominent Bundaberg businessmen. The men proceeded to rape the girl all day and night. The girl attended Bundaberg hospital which reported the rape to local police. Sergeant Greg Maloney subsequently interrogated the girl severely, including verbally abusing and accusing her in a manner inconsistent with police policy and procedures. When the girl broke down under this pressure, Sergeant Maloney concluded she would not withstand cross-examination, and so he dropped the matter.

My mother returned Sergeant Maloney’s call and informed him that Anne had already town left with me. Sergeant Maloney threatened, ‘We have the power to block every single road in the state, and we’ll do it! We’ll find them!’

They didn’t find us.

Later, I lodged complaints regarding the sergeant with several bodies including the CJC (criminal justice commission) which was supposedly independent. The young woman from the anti-corruption commission whom I spoke with immediately contacted the Bundaberg’s Sergeant Maloney and informed him of my complaint. I correctly anticipated this and confronted her on the phone: ‘You just called Bundaberg – didn’t you!’

‘I-ah-er-…’

‘Yeah, I know exactly how you lot work.’

Anne’s parents placed a mental health warrant out for her despite no history or symptoms of mental illness. In an attempt to secure Anne’s rights, I consulted legal aid, paid a lawyer and studied relevant legislation. The police recorded an interview with Anne at my home. During this, Anne told the police all about the murders and child abuse that she had witnessed in her home.

Anne repeated this information to the Department of Children’s Services (DOCS). In response, DOCS demanded an interview with my mother. DOCS acted more interested in what my mother might have said to influence Anne, rather than Anne’s allegations against her parents of involvement in child abuse and murder. When DOCS interviewed me, the first thing they asked was whether my brother, who was slightly older than Anne, was in a sexual relationship with his girlfriend.

‘No,’ I responded. ‘So, you’re more interested in pinning a statutory rape case on my brother rather than investigating Anne’s testimony of child abuse and murder in her parents’ home?’

Despite their best efforts, DOCS found nothing against my family – because there was nothing to find. Anne moved interstate with my family where she enrolled in her final year of high school. When she turned 18 years old, she left us to meet her former best friend from Bundaberg at a nearby hotel. We never saw Anne Gillespie again.

* * *

Witches in the Workplace

I completed my psychology undergraduate degree two weeks before the birth of my first child. My eldest baby was 18 months old when I underwent a rigorous selection process for becoming a parole officer. I was placed on a waitlist for a position in my local NSW area. Meanwhile, I was advised to take a casual position with an interstate parole office which was suddenly desperate for applicants. I took a casual position at Burleigh Heads. Most Queensland parole officer positions were casual. I met one employee who had been casual for 11 years and could not get a house loan because his job was not permanent.

At Burleigh, I unwittingly entered an industrial nightmare, 'the systematic destruction of a fully functioning office,' as Robyn Farris described it. Regional Manager Rod had seconded Burleigh Heads boss of 20 years, John, against his will to Beenleigh office located 100km north of his workplace and home. Rod then gave the freshly vacated managerial position to his friend Catherine Hand who held no parole officer experience or relevant tertiary qualifications. Catherine had a visual arts diploma from the Queensland College of Art where I obtained my first degree. Upon assuming the management position, Catherine bullied out the experienced officers who had worked harmoniously together at Burleigh for 14 years. Catherine replaced these with young, inexperienced females, including dumb blonde looking me.

I excelled at the job tasks and thoroughly enjoyed working with offenders. I had a knack for court report writing, understanding legislation, and court work. My first court performance was the talk of the office, and my fast brain coped easily with a caseload of 100 offenders. It was the office politics that concerned me. For three months I quietly observed Catherine Hand bully the experienced staff, place them under excessive scrutiny, label them 'dead wood,' and slash their caseloads. On one occasion, Catherine pinned an outstanding teenage parole officer named Chris to the wall, placed her fat red lips inches from his face, and screamed at the top of her voice in front of reporting offenders: 'YOU'RE A FUCKING IDIOT!' The Federal Police subsequently snatched Chris up for employment.

Catherine Hand presented her offer to me one Friday afternoon following a training conference at Tugun Life Saving Club. I found myself sitting alone with at a café table with Catherine who fiddled with the ring on her finger. It was gold and bore an Order of the Easter Star encircled pentagram. The pentagram centre contained a black stone, while each point featured a different coloured gemstone: blue, green, red, white and yellow.

'Fiona, have you seen my ring?' Catherine asked.

'No,' I lied.

'This is my coven ring. Each gemstone represents one of the women in our coven. I'm the diamond. This one is Megan [a Queensland College of Art pottery teacher]. Every two years, no matter where we are in the world, the five of us meet up. Fiona, if you play your cards right, you'll go far in management.'

I eyeballed Catherine and sternly affirmed: 'I'm not management material.'

The following Monday, I submitted detailed complaint against Catherine Hand's bullying behaviour to upper management. Upon discovering this, Catherine called me into her office where Southport Area Manager Peter Smales sat smirking. Catherine Hand pinned me against the wall like a white-collared psychopath and shoved her face in mine. She smiled like a Cheshire cat and spat, 'You have ten minutes to vacate your office!'

The Corrective Services Regional Manager subsequently sent me a letter which notified me I had been temporarily filling in for some woman named Helen who had been on maternity leave (news to me) and that I was being let go. Rod stipulated in writing that I had done 'nothing wrong.'

Three Burleigh parole officers and I lodged successful WorkCover compensation claims against Catherine Hand. The Industrial Relations commissioner also upheld my complaint against Catherine, openly called her a bully during the first round of hearings. With disgust he declined Catherine Hand's ridiculous settlement offer and he decided for me that I would be pursuing the matter further. Yet I decided to leave Catherine behind me and concentrate on my new job offer, because I am not that litigious.

However, Catherine Hand pursued me, with the full blessing of the Queensland Department of Corrective Services. Catherine Hand used government expenditure to hire a private detective who sat in a car outside my house photographing me. Then she went through my resume and phoned previous employers looking for dirt on me. Then she phoned my next two bosses and told them to get rid of me. Finally, I hired a barrister who phoned the Queensland Department of Corrective Service State Manager and requested the Department cease harassing me.

State Manager: 'We can do whatever the fuck we like!'

My barrister: 'No, you fucking can't!'

Meanwhile, the Department hired a professional mediator to investigate and mediate Burleigh Heads office. The man interviewed each employee separately and then coordinated a group confrontation where the office had the opportunity to vent their experiences. Catherine Hand subsequently broke down crying and apologised to young Chris who told me, 'I almost felt sorry for her.'

I was not invited to that healing opportunity, which is a shame because that is the point at which I developed noticeable PTSD symptoms (separate from those attached to my child abuse flashbacks). This bullying experience marked a permanent personality change.

Catherine Hand and her co-conspirators were subsequently promoted, and the Burleigh office was eventually cleared of all its 'dead wood.'

A decade later, the bullied senior staff vouched for my character to Gavan Palk who supervised my psychology registration. I reeled in horror the day Gavan informed me he was the Corrective Services boss who first hired Catherine Hand.

'YOU hired her?!'

'I know,' he lamented. 'I'm sorry. I had no idea.'

* * *

Conspiracy Fact

Anyone who challenges the prevailing orthodoxy finds himself silenced with surprising effectiveness.

- George Orwell

9-11

In October 2002, I was in New York City, peering out a massive window of the World Finance Centre at the construction scene below. Next to me stood Eddie, the once-jolly janitor who now suffered PTSD.

'Were you here that day?' I asked.

'Ma'am, I was standing right here. Something made me stop and look out this here window. I never done that before. But something made me do it. I saw a black van pull up on that, there road. And no vehicles ever stop there: you can see how busy it is. Two guys dressed in black suits and white shirts got out, fiddled with a black box in their hands. Then they got back into the van and drove off. Minutes later - BOOM! - them bombs went off. It was like watching a movie. I didn't believe it was real. I could see people up there deciding whether, or not to jump. I been telling everyone what happened. Then the managers came to me and said, "Eddie, you gotta stop talking about this to people. People gonna think you're crazy. You should just worry about your job." But I said, "Why should I shut up? Why do you care about what I say?! Why don't you care about those people that died? You should care about the people that died!" There was a childcare in that building. Full of little children! Trains full of people starved to death!'

'Who do you think did it?' I asked.

'The government did it!' Eddie punched the air, his eyes widened like a wild animal. 'Man, our own government did it!'

'I believe you, Eddie. I believe you…'

* * *

GLADIO & the NWO

An examination of Operation Gladio and its key players explains the Nazi origins of the CIA plus the false flag methods they developed to target dissident groups who threaten the Illuminati agenda. The CIA originally targeted Communists, then Muslim 'terrorists', now 'far-right Christian extremists' and anyone who opposes the emerging New World Order.

Propaganda tool Wikipedia defines Gladio as follows:

> Operation Gladio is the codename for clandestine "stay-behind" operations of armed resistance that was planned by the Western Union (WU), and subsequently by NATO, for a potential Warsaw Pact invasion and conquest in Europe. Although Gladio specifically refers to the Italian branch of the NATO stay-behind organizations, "Operation Gladio" is used as an informal name for all of them. Stay-behind operations were prepared in many NATO member countries, and some neutral countries. The role of the CIA in Gladio—the extent of its activities during the Cold War era and any responsibility for terrorist attacks perpetrated in Italy during the 'Years of Lead' (late 1960s to early 1980s)—are the subject of debate. Switzerland and Belgium have had parliamentary inquiries into the matter.

Allan Francovich's 1992 documentary GLADIO, which screened on BBC2's Timewatch, ends all debate regarding the CIA's involvement in 'false flag' terror activities. The series proves Operation Gladio gave rise to the CIA's current modus operandi. In it, Francovich interviewed numerous Operation Gladio primary witnesses and perpetrators, including the following individuals:

- CIA director William Colby
- An Italian Gladio commander
- A Belgian Gendarme (military force with civilian police duties)
- An OSS officer
- The Head of Propaganda Due (P2 'Grand Orient of Italy' Masonic Lodge)
- An Italian neofascist and terrorist
- A Venetian judge
- A Belgian Senator.

Operation Gladio was financed by both the USA and the UK. Gladio NATO bases were located in London, UK and near Boston, USA, and comprised of special USA, English, French and Belgian units. Gladio officers were trained by MI6 in Hartford, England. Under the auspices of British Intelligence, the CIA, Mossad and other secret service organisations combined to create an international clandestine security force – an 'invisible army' – so secret that governments knew nothing of their existence. Only leaders sympathetic to the CIA were informed of Gladio. Hence Gladio points to the existence of a global shadow government being a terrifying reality and not some vague 'conspiracy theory.'

Gladio demonstrates the existence of a global shadow government

Operation Gladio commenced in Italy in 1951, and expanded to Denmark, Norway, Holland, Spain, Turkey, and Greece. In a nutshell, Operation Gladio recruited Nazi war criminals to the OSS (the CIA's predecessor) to track down key communists and commit terror attacks which they then blamed on the communists, as a means of quelling rising communist influence. For example, Licio Gelli was an original key Nazi recruit. Gelli had served as a Blackshirt (Italian fascist) and liaison officer between the Italian government and the Nazi SS before the OSS/CIA employed him to instigate terrorist activities in Italy including the Bologna Massacre which killed 85 and injured 200. Gelli headed and reformed Italy's secret P2 Masonic Lodge whose members included members of Italy's three secret services, royalty, top military officers, senior police, senior politicians (notably future Prime Minister Berlusconi), journalists, broadcasters, bankers, judges, civil servants, businessmen, and mafia. Today 1000 x P2 member names remain secret. Like most elite perpetrators, Gelli escaped multiple charges, and retired in beautiful Tuscany until his death at age 96. Child trafficker Mother Teresa supported Gelli's Nobel prize nomination in 1996.

FREEMASON CONNECTION

Reformed Freemason Michael Witcoff explains the tight relationship between the Freemasons and the secret services. Basically, Masonic lodges offer an ideal recruitment ground for CIA agents, since members of secret lodges have already proven their ability to keep a secret. Freemasonry also serves as a means of information gathering and dispersion.

PATCON [98]

Since 1976, the FBI has trained heads of Australian law enforcement organisations at their national academy in Quantico, Virginia. An expressed goal of the training is to create collaboration between international law enforcement agencies and governments. In 2006, the FBI launched a Counter-Terrorism program for Australian law enforcement officials. One graduate described the program as follows:

> 'This place is like the temple where leaders of law enforcement > come to receive their mission - don't ever lose the magic.'

NSW Police Commissioner Anthony ('Tony') Raymond Lauer trained at the FBI Academy. Lauer became Commissioner in 1991 but resigned prematurely in 1996 due to the Wood Royal Commission into NSW police corruption. Lauer had succeeded Commissioner John Avery (my perpetrator). Lauer previously trained with the Australian Army at Holsworthy in 1957 and headed the Freemason Grand Lodge of NSW and ACT.

Commissioner Lauer attended the FBI Academy at a time when the FBI instigated an infiltration program code-named PATCON (short for 'Patriot Conspiracy'). 'Patriot' loosely defines antigovernment, racist, antisemitic, and/or Christian 'extremists.' PATCON officially ran from 1991 to 1993 and consisted of FBI undercover agent provocateurs posing as members of a fictional extremist group, to infiltrate target Patriot groups, and gather intelligence related to past, present, or future crimes. PATCON's 1991 prosecution goals included: conspiracy to commit murder, illegal possession of weapons, and money laundering. However, no criminal convictions resulted. Instead, PATCON proved to be a training exercise for Ruby Ridge, Waco, Oklahoma bombing, 9-11, and Australia's Port Arthur massacre. The operation also provided preparation for the myriad of anti-terror laws introduced to Australia post-9-11, and the subsequent establishment of 'Fixated Persons' police-psychiatric detainment facilities in both Australia and the UK.

SOCIAL MEDIA PSYCHOLOGICAL OPERATIONS

The internet is a psychological war zone. The secret services, military, Vatican, cults, and various police organisations employ thousands upon thousands of social media agents. The role of these agents is to monitor, identify, target, and infiltrate individuals and activist groups opposed to the Luciferian global agenda. Social media agents target those who speak out against such controversial issues as the global child sex trafficking operation, 5G, vaccination, immigration, and the 'Safe Schools' program. After six years of battling it out on the internet, the agents' behavioural patterns have become obvious to me. I conclude that approximately 90 percent of the higher profile alternative media identities are in fact agents, paid to control the narrative regarding controversial topics, with the primary goal of swaying public opinion and subduing the masses from revolting. These agents employ Hegelian

---

[98] Jim Berger (21 May 2012). PATCON, International Security Policy Paper. New America Foundation. [archive.org]

Dialectic methods and pretend to argue a topic, when in fact they are all working toward the same goal. They muddy the waters with endless rhetoric until the public is confused and dissuaded from investigating the truth of a matter.

The following three news articles provide insight to this type of psychological operation. The authorities typically claim these operations exist to target extremists, when in fact they target government dissidents. The terms 'Russia' and 'Isis' are employed, to justify the existence of such Orwellian measures.

BRITISH ARMY CREATES TEAM OF FACEBOOK WARRIORS

Ewen MacAskill, The Guardian, 31 Jan 2015.

The British army is creating a special force of Facebook warriors, skilled in psychological operations and use of social media to engage in unconventional warfare in the information age. The 77th Brigade, to be based in Hermitage, near Newbury, in Berkshire, will be about 1,500-strong and formed of units drawn from across the army. It will formally come into being in April.

The brigade will be responsible for what is described as non-lethal warfare. Both the Israeli and US army already engage heavily in psychological operations. Against a background of 24-hour news, smartphones and social media, such as Facebook and Twitter, the force will attempt to control the narrative. The 77th will include regulars and reservists and recruitment will begin in the spring. Soldiers with journalism skills and familiarity with social media are among those being sought.

…

The Israel Defence Forces have pioneered state military engagement with social media, with dedicated teams operating since Operation Cast Lead, its war in Gaza in 2008-9. The IDF is active on 30 platforms – including Twitter, Facebook, YouTube and Instagram – in six languages… It has been approached by several western countries, keen to learn from its expertise.

…

The creation of 77th Brigade comes as the commander of NATO special operations headquarters, Lt Gen Marshall Webb, speaking in Washington this week, expressed concern about Russia and about Isis. 'Special operations headquarters is uniquely placed to address this," he said…

* * *

CYBER WARFARE: ARMY CREATES 'TWITTER TROOPS'

Alistair Bunkall, Defence Correspondent, Sky News, 31 Jan 2015.

The British Army is setting up a brigade of soldiers - tasked with tackling groups like Islamic State - using social media. Members of 77 Brigade have been trained to use guerrilla tactics and will be experts in psychological warfare operations. The Army hopes the brigade will impact the traditional battlefield using non-lethal techniques including social media to reflect the digital age. Using creative thinking it is hoped that 77 Brigade will influence the minds and shape the behaviour of the enemy and local populations. This has led to the early nickname "Twitter troops" for the Brigade, which will be formally created on 1 April.

…

Its members will support mainstream military tactics.

…

It will draw its members from the regular and reserve forces across the Army, Navy and RAF - with 42% reservists - and will also seek civilians with specialist skills to work alongside their military colleagues…

NON-EXECS NEEDED - NED Transition Programme I Exclusive High Paid Jobs I Network Connect Message
More...
Show less

Gordon MacMillan • 2nd
Head of Editorial, EMEA, Twitter
London, United Kingdom

...
Bournemouth University
See contact info
500+ connections

I'm a journalist working at Twitter, which I joined in 2013. I was previously the editor of the advertising, digital and media website Brand Republic, which I also launched. I am very interested in all things social media and digital.

I have a strong interest in politics and international affairs and am a reserve officer in the British Army serving in 77th Brigade, which specialises in non-lethal engagement

TWITTER EXECUTIVE FOR MIDDLE EAST IS BRITISH ARMY ‘PSYOPS’ SOLDIER

Ian Cobain, Middle East Eye, 30 Sept 2019.

Head of editorial for MENA is part-time officer in the 77th Brigade, an 'information warfare' unit which has worked on 'behavioural change' projects in the region.

The senior Twitter executive with editorial responsibility for the Middle East is also a part-time officer in the British Army’s psychological warfare unit, Middle East Eye has established. Gordon MacMillan, who joined the social media company's UK office six years ago, has for several years also served with the 77th Brigade, a unit formed in 2015 in order to develop ‘non-lethal’ ways of waging war. The 77th Brigade uses social media platforms such as Twitter, Instagram and Facebook, as well as podcasts, data analysis and audience research to wage what the head of the UK military, General Nick Carter, describes as ‘information warfare’.

Carter says the 77th Brigade is giving the British military ‘the capability to compete in the war of narratives at the tactical level’; to shape perceptions of conflict. Some soldiers who have served with the unit say they have been engaged in operations intended to change the behaviour of target audiences.

> What exactly MacMillan is doing with the unit is difficult to determine, however: he has declined to answer any questions about his role, as has Twitter and the UK's Ministry of Defence (MoD)… While clearly engaged in propaganda, the MoD is reluctant to use that word to describe the unit's operations. His involvement with the 77th Brigade was made public when he disclosed it on his page at LinkedIn, the online professional networking site. As well as outlining his responsibilities at Twitter, MacMillan wrote that he had an interest in politics and international affairs, had trained at Sandhurst, the British military academy, 'and am a reserve officer in the British Army serving in 77th Brigade, which specialises in non-lethal engagement'. His page has recently been edited to remove all references to his service with 77th Brigade.

FIXATED PERSONS

Victims of government child trafficking who seek justice are being labelled 'Fixated Persons' and finding themselves targeted for detainment. NSW, Queensland, and Victoria recently constructed Fixated Threat Assessment Centres (FTAC) which are attached to Australian state police forces. These Orwellian facilities are staffed by specialist police, forensic psychiatrists, forensic psychologists, and Special Intelligence Officers (SOI). Detainees are referred to FTACs by 'family, neighbours, counter-terrorism authorities, or local police' and held for 14 days without legal representation or family knowledge.

The FTACs detain people for crimes they may commit in the future,[99] thereby violating a fundamental tenet of Western law which determines citizens are innocent until proven guilty. The perpetrators circumvent this law by never formally charging the detained citizen with a crime. Holding an individual for mental health or terror reasons is apparently legal. As in Nazi Germany, laws are not broken, merely adjusted to accommodate an underlying agenda. The people behind this Totalitarian regime define 'Fixated Persons' as:

- Victims of crime,
- Typically aggrieved at being wrongly done by,
- Seeking justice,
- Litigious and chronic complainers,
- Exposing government corruption or treason,
- Posting too much on social media about government officials and other public identities,
- Making too many FOI (freedom of information) and document requests,
- Repeatedly lodging complaints to politicians or local council,
- Having strong religious beliefs or ideology.

The above definition is broad and vague. It fails to specify what constitutes 'too much' of a particular action or 'too strong' a belief. The concept of 'Fixated Person' has not been legally formalised but left for government agents to interpret, adapt, arbitrarily apply to whatever target they choose. As such, the above definition can be loosely interpreted to describe victims of government child trafficking who speak publicly about, and actively seek justice and redress for, the heinous crimes committed against us. The definition is being misused to profile victims and whistle-blowers like me.

---

[99] Patrick Wright (2018). New Melbourne anti-terrorist centre criticised for being 'loopy,' 'illogical.' ABC News [Online], 28 February

The British-based trafficking network's primary objective is to discredit victims of their global child trafficking operation. Their agents achieve this by labelling targets psychotic, criminal, or even better – criminally insane. Their traditional modus operandi was to lure targets into a 'health assessment' where dirty doctors labelled them non-compliant psychotics (as when Bond University psychology and criminology lecturers conspired with dirty NSW and Queensland cops in their failed attempt to frame me). This method is now superseded by a formalised kidnapping and detainment operation in three Australian states. FTACs promise to re-victimise child trafficking survivors via the same abuse methods the CIA perpetrators originally used on us.

The expressed purpose of Australia's anti-terror laws introduced by Freemason and Satanist John Howard in 2002 was to stop Islamic terrorism. Instead, the laws are being used against citizens seeking to expose political party corruption. Let us examine who has been genuinely targeted by these FTAS teams:

- Phil Galea was kidnapped by Victorian police in August 2016, falsely charged under anti-terror laws, and is still detained in solitary confinement without trial. Politicians and police are preventing Phil from appearing before a judge and jury, which would expose the 'Fixated Persons' wrought.
- Fiona Wilson, a former Origin Energy executive, was involuntarily detained and injected with drugs in Brisbane's FTAC for blowing the whistle on the coal-seam gas industry. Wilson's detainment left her with PSTD.
- A grandmother who complained to authorities that her 12-year-old granddaughter was being raped and sex trafficked by her father was declared a 'Fixated Person' by a judge who referred her to the FTAC where she was placed under perpetual surveillance and her passport stamped to prevent her leaving Australia.

Australia's Family Courts, child social services (renamed DOCS, FACS, etc) and foster care system have facilitated government child trafficking since their inception. The same occurs in the UK and USA. Every day for five years, desperate parents contacted me and shared the same story: the government fabricated grounds to steal, prostitute, disappear, and kill their kids. The FTACs make the Australian leg of the global child trafficking operation far easier and simpler to implement and maintain.

Some advice: if you discover your child is being sexually abused by your partner – take the child and disappear. Some mothers have had success by inducing the husband to physically assault them and using their resultant injuries as evidence for a domestic violence order and reason for fleeing with the child. If Child Protective Services start sniffing around your family – run! Leave at the first hint. Forfeit all material goods, pack your kids into a loaned car, with documents, cash, and some clothes, and just disappear. Tell no-one where you go. Find fake IDs and wait it out in some remote location until the kids are grown.

Australia's foster care system is a massive child sex trafficking operation

It is concerning that neighbours can refer victims to the FTAC, considering a common tactic is to have agents move in next door to victims and threaten and harass them. It is also concerning when the Centres are staffed by perpetrators. For example, Queensland's Fixated Threat Assessment Centre is staffed by clinicians from the Queensland Forensic Mental Health Service, who employ Bond University forensic psychologists.

SECRET INTELLIGENCE OPERATIVES (SIO)

The FTACs plant police informants called Secret Intelligence Operatives (SIO) to entrap victims for detainment in their tax-funded MK-ULTRA facilities. SOI agents employ the following methods:

- Pretend to be right-wing extremists.
- Stage and film fake arrests for fake terror breaches.
- Befriend and physically access targets.
- Set the target up for arrest for associating with 'terrorists' and engaging in 'terror activities.'

Their modus operandi was demonstrated in a 2008 Melbourne case where a police agent called 'SIO39' was cross-examined regarding his entrapment of an Islamic terrorist cell.[100] SIO39 'told the court he was a Victorian Police officer working undercover with the covert unit of the security intelligence group.' The SIO agent inserted himself into a terror cell where he taught the leader how to make a bomb. The prosecution asked SIO39:

> 'You were making a very deliberate effort to befriend him, weren't you?… Consistent with the directions you had been given?'
> 'Yes, that's right,' said the agent.

The FTAC's entrapment methods are classic PATCON tactics where agent provocateurs lure victims into engaging in behaviour which constitutes a breach of legislation and subjects them to search and seizure laws.

In 2018, I was simultaneously targeted by six agents connected to Fixated Threat Assessment Centres in Brisbane, Sydney and Melbourne. They were notably connected to NSW Police Commissioner Mick Fuller who held locational jurisdiction. All secret intelligence type agents base their 'grooming' conversation on real life events, to appear more convincing. Hence one SOI agent told me he trafficked drugs in Sydney for the Australian Federal Police. The agents tried to trick me into breaching Australia's strict anti-terror laws and provide justification for police to raid my property and arrest me. Their entrapment methods included unsuccessfully encouraging me to:

- Hand them administrative control of my websites and social media pages, under the guise of improving my sites.
- Become a board member and so assume legal responsibility for an agent-created and controlled child abuse advocacy group.
- Excessively post about certain politicians on social media.
- Publicly incite social discord by joining the agents' call for an 'uprising.'
- Endorse vigilante behaviour including t-shirts labelled 'Pedo Hunters' which were decorated with images of a hangman noose / gun sight target.

---

[100] Karen Kissane (2008). Planted Agent Showed How to Make Bomb. The Age, 1 May.

- Provide a list of known perpetrators to be targeted for vigilante style justice (i.e., premeditated murder).
- Physically associate with agent provocateurs posing as extreme right terrorists.
- Accept money and trafficked commodities from 'terrorists' and 'terror activities.'
- Accept unregistered guns under the guise of protecting myself from the pedophile network.
- Provide a list of all fellow government trafficking victims I knew, including their locations and testimonies, under the guise of making a documentary.

Having studied Australian anti-terror legislation and statutory interpretation, I quickly recognised how and why the above activities list might be interpreted as breaching our vague counter-terrorism laws. Associating with known terrorists, wearing uniform outfits, accepting money from terrorists, possessing illegal weapons, and conspiring to commit murder – all constitute grounds for immediate arrest and detainment.

PAUL MULLEN: MK-ULTRA PSYCHIATRIST

The Australian and UK definition of 'Fixated Person' and the associated Fixated Research Groups and Fixated Threat Assessment Centres are the brainchild of CIA/MI6 forensic psychiatrist Paul Mullen. Here are some of Mullen's secret service career highlights:

- Worked with MK-ULTRA Subproject 84 hypnosis doctors including Peter W. Sheehan.
- Court-appointed expert in the MK-ULTRA Chelmsford Hospital medical negligence case (involving which Ewan Cameron's trainee Harry Bailey).
- First non-military defence expert to enter the Guantanamo Bay detention centre, site of Martin Seligman's CIA torture program.
- Heads the Fixated Person Research Groups linked to the FBI, MI6, and Tavistock (UK's mind control hub).
- Contracted by the British Royal Family.
- Interviewed Melbourne Hoddle Street shooter, Julian Knight.
- Assessed alleged Port Arthur shooter, Martin Bryant.
- Publicly presented the Christchurch NZ massacre script and shooter profile two weeks before the event.
- Supports false memory writings of CIA psychologist Elizabeth Loftus.

The book Dope Inc. (1978) was meticulously researched and proved beyond all doubt that the British Royal Family are the ultimate benefactors of the CIA coordinated, global drug trafficking operation. The royals are also the financial benefactors of the global child sex trafficking operation. Prince Andrew was accused of raping minors trafficked by convicted pedophile billionaire Jeffrey Epstein. One of Prince Andrew's victims, Virginia Roberts Giuffre, had her photo taken with him. Recall the Royal Family were caught on film teaching princesses Elizabeth and Margaret to Nazi salute. Recall pop star Mick Jagger referred to Queen Elizabeth as 'Chief Witch.' [101] I witnessed the queen preside over the ritual murder of 11 kids at St James Anglican Church in Sydney City when I was 11 years old.

---

[101] The Telegraph (2012). Why the Queen 'refused to hand Mick Jagger a knighthood,' 11 July.

Port Arthur

Paul Mullen was the court-appointed psychiatrist who assessed Martin Bryant, the young man forced to change his plea to guilty and so receive 35 life sentences for the Port Arthur massacre. After a 3.5-hour interview, Mullen claimed Martin Bryant possessed an IQ of 60. It is neurologically impossible for someone whose intelligence level sits at the bottom 2% of the population to kill 19 people in 20 seconds. That head shot rate is not achievable by the world's most elite snipers, whose intelligence level must sit in the top 1% of the population because high visual-spatial IQ is essential for accurate shooting ability.

Christchurch Shooting

Paul Mullen 'coincidentally' popped up at four mass shootings in Australia and New Zealand. He was working in Melbourne in 1987 where he interviewed the Hoddle Street shooter, Julian Knight. Then he moved to Aramoana in New Zealand in time for David Gray's 1990 shooting massacre. Then he returned to Melbourne in time for the Tasmanian Government to request he interview Martin Bryant in 1996. And he just happened to be visiting New Zealand for the 2019 mass shooting in Christchurch. Two weeks prior to the Christchurch massacre, Mullens spoke at Melbourne's Sofitel hotel where he released an exact script for what unfolded in NZ, and profiled the white, right-wing extremist type who poses the new terror threat, and which fit the alleged shooter.

False Memory Fan

Paul Mullen's research interests include: Litigious and Chronic Complainers, and the Long-Term Impact of Childhood Sexual Abuse - the ideal combination for silencing outspoken victims of CIA child trafficking. Paul Mullen was quoted in a 1994 False Memory Syndrome Foundation newsletter as saying:[102]

> The precedence accorded child sexual abuse has also had negative consequences, socially and scientifically, particularly in distracting attention away from physical and emotional abuse and from the whole context of disadvantage and neglect in which the sexual abuse often occurs.

Not surprisingly, Paul Mullen is a child abuse denier and an advocate of Elizabeth Loftus' discredited false memory opinion. Mullen claimed, 'the basis of the recovered-memory theory was flawed … there were no specific symptoms that came from childhood abuse.'[103] In his book Childhood Sexual Abuse: An Evidence-Based Perspective,[104] Mullen denies the phenomenon of repressed trauma memories being stored in the right implicit brain and accessible via appropriate therapy:

> On the other side of the debate have been equally powerful defences of the capacity of therapists to bring to consciousness repressed memories that on occasion, it is asserted, provide detailed and veridical narratives of actual abuse… However, contrary to these claims, the main problem following trauma is an inability to forget rather than

---

[102] FMS Foundation Newsletter (2004). Jan/Feb, 13:1.

[103] The Age (2004). Memory therapy: state launches probe, November 23.

[104] P. Mullen & D. Fergusson (1999). Childhood Sexual Abuse: An Evidence-Based Perspective. Sage Publications, 100-101.

> a complete loss of the memory of the event… Psychogenic amnesia following trauma may occur, but usually the individuals are well-aware of the gap in their memory.
>
> There are claims that memories of CSA are laid down in the brain through a unique process that does not apply to other forms of trauma and that can be recovered via the sensorimotor system... This remains an unproven hypothesis…
>
> Current theories of memory emphasize that memories are not replicas of the events themselves but imperfect and subjectively modified records of how we have experienced those events…
>
> That it is possible to influence the memories of others by suggestion is established (Loftus, 1993) . . . Both client and therapist may believe they are overcoming the forces of repression and revealing the true narrative of the abuse, but how much the expectations, assumptions, and theoretical commitments of both participants are producing a new construction remains in question.

When a repressed memory contains a detailed image of a location the victim never visited apart from during her child abuse, and when the victim physically visits that place as an adult and discovers everything in that abuse location is exactly as the victim recalled it during a flashback or therapy – that constitutes evidence of reliable repressed child abuse memories. I experienced this in 1993 when I visited Sutherland Hospital. There is no record of my ever having been admitted or treated at Sutherland Hospital. My parents never took me there during my Sydney childhood. Yet I knew the layout of an internal ER room at Sutherland Hospital. I visited the hospital at age 23 in search of the room I awoke in after suffocating in a grave at age eight years. A triage nurse kindly led me to a room out of public bounds which looked exactly as I remembered and drew it. The walls were clad in pale blue tiles, the door and furniture were positioned exactly like in my therapy drawing, and the original oxygen bottle sat at the head of the very stainless-steel table I was laid on. 'This is where you would have come if you had suffocated,' the nurse told me.

DIRTY DOCTORS

Corydon Hammond said in his legendary Greenbaum Speech:

> When you start to find the same highly esoteric information in different states and different countries, from Florida to California, you start to get an idea that there's something going on that is very large, very well coordinated, with a great deal of communication and systematic-ness to what's happening. So, I have gone from someone kind of neutral and not knowing what to think about it all, to someone who clearly believes ritual abuse is real, and that the people who say it isn't are either naive like people who didn't want to believe the Holocaust - or they're dirty.

Paul Mullen, who denies the true nature of child abuse induced trauma, who embraces the pro-pedophile writings of discredited Elizabeth Loftus, who hangs around CIA MK-ULTRA torture and mind control facilities, who leaps the Tasman sea in time for every Australasian mass shooting, and who, despite being a 'world renown expert' excluded irrefutable evidence that it was neurologically impossible for a mentally disabled man with an

IQ of 60 to have committed the crime (thereby condemning an innocent man to life in prison) - is the main driving force behind new Orwellian legislation and protocols which are being used to effectively target and silence vocal victims and witnesses to government organised child sex trafficking.

* * *

Soviet-Fascist Agenda

Communist world aggression is a total war against humanity and human civilization.
- Yuri Bezmenov

During the 1960s, KGB officer Yuri Bezmenov worked for the Communist equivalent of Orwell's Ministry of Truth, the Novosti Press Agency. Novosti produced disinformation – i.e., slanted and false stories to plant in the foreign media. Bezmenov specialised in aiding the infiltration and overthrow of foreign governments by deceiving (hand-picked) visiting international journalists and academics into falsely reporting in the West that life in communist Russia was healthy, even desirable and romantic. This was a means of spreading propaganda to the West and increasing the spread of Marxist-Lenin doctrine by Communist subverters in academia, journalism, Hollywood and politics.

Bezmenov attested to the truly hellish existence under 'Soviet fascism' where the government arranged marriages and sent independent thinkers to labour camps and firing squads. More than two people standing on a Soviet street corner constituted grounds for arrest and internment (just like today). Painting horses galloping against a tumultuous stormy background was grounds for arrest, since this symbolised uprising against the State.

In 1970, Bezmenov defected to the USA and changed his name to Tomas Schuman. There he spent his remaining life warning America to rid itself of the Marxist-Lenin doctrine infiltrating Western culture. In 1984, he wrote: [105]

My dear friends, I think you are in big trouble. Whether you believe it or not, YOU ARE AT WAR. And you may lose this war very soon, together with all your affluence and freedoms, unless you start defending yourselves. I hope you have noticed on your colour televisions that there is in fact war going on right now all over this planet. This war has many faces, but it's all the same — it's war. Some call it "national liberation", some title it "class struggle" or "political terrorism". Others call it "anticolonialism" or "struggle for majority rule". Some even come up with such fancy names as "war of patriotic forces" or "peace movement". I call it World Communist Aggression…

The final stage of Communist aggression — military confrontation — has very little to do with rivalry for territorial or geopolitical gains in order to free and liberate. Communist world aggression is a total war against humanity and human civilization. In Communist propaganda terms, this is 'the final struggle for the victory of Communism.'

No matter how many problems you think the US may have, believe me when I say that they are nothing in comparison to the troubles you will experience if the US continues to agree and sympathize with communist/socialist doctrines…

IDEOLOGICAL SUBVERSION

The KGB's main (85%) activity was subversion. In Soviet terms, 'subversion' means a destructive, aggressive activity aimed to destroy the country of your enemy. Subversion activities are overt and legal. A typical subverter is an exchange student, diplomat, actor, artist, or a journalist. You can't subvert an enemy who doesn't want to be subverted. Bezmenov wrote:

An integral part of this war of ideology is IDEOLOGICAL SUBVERSION — the process of changing the perception of reality in the minds of millions of peoples all over the world. The late comrade Andropov, the former head of the Soviet KGB called this war of Communist aggression, 'the final struggle for the MINDS and hearts of the people.'

---

[105] Tomas Schuman (1984). Love Letter to America.

The art of duping the masses into doing things to their own disadvantage and making them believe it is "the will of people" is as ancient as mankind itself. The essence of subversion is best expressed in the famous Marxist slogan, (if you substitute "proletarians" for a more appropriate word): Useful idiots of the world - UNITE!

To achieve the desired effect, the subverter must first - make idiots out of normal people, and DIVIDE them, before turning the people into a homogenized mass of useful and united idiots. Tanks and missiles may or may not be needed at final stage. For the time being they are simply the means of terrorising people into inaction and submission. (The dumbing down of school children using Marxist indoctrinated curriculum achieved this.)

The Chinese military strategist Sun Tzu first formulated the principle of subversion as follows:

1. Cover with ridicule all of the valid traditions in your opponent's country.
2. Implicate their leaders in criminal affairs and turn them over to the scorn of their populace at the right time;
3. Disrupt the work of their government by every means;
4. Do not shun the aid of the lowest and most despicable individuals of your enemy's country.
5. Spread disunity and dispute among the citizens.
6. Turn the young against the old.
7. Be generous with promises and rewards to collaborators and accomplices.

Sound familiar? About 2500 years later we can read this very same instruction in a secret document, allegedly authored by the Communist International for their "young revolutionaries." The document is titled "Rules of Revolution":

RULES OF REVOLUTION

1. Corrupt the young, get them interested in sex, take them away from religion. Make them superficial and enfeebled.
2. Divide the people into hostile groups by constantly harping on controversial issues of no importance.
3. Destroy people's faith in their national leaders by holding the latter up for contempt, ridicule and disgrace.
4. Always preach democracy but seize power as fast and as ruthlessly as possible.
5. By encouraging government extravagances, destroy its credit, produce years of inflation with rising prices and general discontent.
6. Incite unnecessary strikes in vital industries, encourage civil disorders and foster a lenient and soft attitude on the part of the government towards such disorders.
7. Cause breakdown of the old moral virtues: honesty, sobriety, self-restraint, faith in the pledged word.

4 STAGES OF SUBVERSION

Bezmenov detailed the four stages of Soviet Ideological Subversion:

1. Demoralisation
2. Destabilisation

3. Crisis (Global Pandemic)
4. Normalisation (Marshall Law)

Stage 1: DEMORALISATION

This is also called psychological warfare, ideological aggression, or propaganda warfare. This stage takes 15 to 20 years to achieve, because this is the minimum number of years needed to 're-educate' a single of generation of students via Marxist ideology. There are three levels of demoralisation:

1. Ideas (consciousness)
2. Structures
3. Life.

Demoralisation of Ideas involves the subversion of vital areas including religion, education, media and culture. Communism (and its Marxist-Leninist dogma) is a distorted form of faith. Subversion of ideas involves substituting the traditional values of the Judeo-Christian heritage with "Marxist-Satanic faith." To achieve this, subverters politicise and commercialise the dominant religions and turn them into forms of entertainment. Bezmenov said this included:

Development and spreading of various religious cults, including Satanic and Death cults; preaching moral relativity and removing religion (and prayer, ANY prayer) from schools; creating 'personality cults' in religion whereby the preacher becomes the centre and object of divine worship, not God (often your religious charlatans claims to be 'incarnations' of God, or even God Himself)…

Let's start with the most 'innocent' method of destroying religion, namely, making it ENTERTAINING. To attract people and MONEY to 'established' religious organizations some churches have literally become theatres conducting variety shows featuring celebrities from the entertainment 'industry' who perform for 'fees'. The KGB Agents of Influence may or may not have to physically manipulate these entertainment arrangements. The indiscriminate choice of the 'celebrities' for these church 'performances' is usually quite pleasing to the KGB. A group of rock or pop-musicians with a message of 'social-justice' sugar-coated in popular 'spiritual' tunes can be actually more helpful to the KGB than someone standing in the pulpit preaching Marxist-Leninist doctrine.

COMMERCIALISATION of religion does the same thing. If the church has to SOLICIT your money and remind you over and over again in every TV show to contribute (with telephone numbers to pledge donations), that only means and infers that there is something basically wrong with your faith. Faithful people do not have to be ASKED for money, they tithe to their churches voluntarily and eagerly. Unhealthy competition for donations between various 'electronic churches' does two things beneficial to the subverter:

1. Makes religion dependent on the most successful 'salesmen' of God (not necessarily of the highest moral standards). Thus, truly moral and God-centred people are turned off by organized religion.
2. EMPTIES regular churches, where you have to practice your religion by personal physical presence and participation and involvement.

Politicising religion is the most efficient method of demoralizing a target nation. The subverter uses moral values for dissemination and enforcement of amoral ideas and policies.

Churches become involved in such things as 'social justice' and partisan political squabbles and loses focus on mercy and the grace of God. The most powerful instrument of this process is the KGB-infiltrated World Council of Churches.

Dr. Shafarevich in analysing the 'dead' civilizations of Egypt, Maya, Mohenjo-Dara, Babylon, etc, comes to an ominous conclusion: EVERY ONE OF THESE CIVILIZATIONS DIED WHEN PEOPLE REJECTED RELIGION AND GOD, AND TRIED TO CREATE 'SOCIAL JUSTICE' ALONG THE SOCIALIST PRINCIPLES.

The Marxist-Leninist concept of education emphasizes 'environment' and 'mass' character of education over individual abilities and quality… The American romance with State-run education as encouraged by KGB subverters has already produced generations of graduates who cannot spell, cannot find Nicaragua on a world map, cannot THINK creatively and independently. The main methods of Soviet DEMORALISATION of American education include:

- Flooding of campus bookstores with Marxist and Socialist literature.
- Infiltration of schools and universities by radicals, leftists, and simply 'disturbers', often functioning unknowingly under the direct guidance of KGB Agents of Influence.
- Establishing numerous 'student' newspapers and magazines, staffed with Communists and sympathizers.

NON-ISSUES

Introducing non-issues is another means of demoralising at the level of Ideas. A ‘non-issue’ is defined as follows:

An issue, the solution of which creates more and bigger problems for the majority of a nation, even though it may benefit a few, is a non-issue (civil rights of homosexuals is not an issue; defending sexual morality is the larger, real issue). The main purpose of non-issues and the devastating result of their introduction is the SIDE-TRACKING of public opinion, energy (both mental and physical), money and TIME from the constructive solutions.

Non-issues include immigration, minorities, LGBT, and the environment. These are the same issues pushed by the communist left. Minority rights of artificially created divisions (women, gays, Muslims, or black, Indigenous, or Asian people) are an intentional distraction of ‘no importance’ considering the overall loss of human rights being experienced by all. Gay rights are of no importance compared to the rights of child sex trafficking victims – a vital issue that large crowds have never protested in Australia or the USA.

Cultural subversion includes the promotion of garbage culture – i.e., anything that prompts teenage insubordination, confuses and frustrates parents, breaks down discipline, and encourages relaxation of authority. A main focus is developing obscure, talentless, immoral musicians and actors into teenage role models. Another focus is the embracement of Eastern spiritual practices, like meditation and marijuana, that encourage one to sit and do nothing. Similarly, Eastern practises in psychology encourage the individual to do nothing.

Demoralisation is aimed at the following socio/ political/ economical structures:

- Judicial and law enforcement system. Promoting legalism instead of justice. Treating criminals as ‘underprivileged’ victims creates mistrust of the police and courts, and makes people demand harsher punishments and stricter controls for fighting crime. This in turn justifies replacing the police force with the military, as is happening in the USA right now.

- Public organizations and institutions dealing with relations between individuals, groups, and social classes.
- Security and defence organisations.
- Internal political parties and groups.
- Foreign policy formulating bodies (academia, think-tanks, Sovietology advisors).

Similarly, in the area of social life, by encouraging you to put your individual RIGHTS over your OBLIGATIONS (any obligations - private, financial, moral, patriotic, etc.) the subverter achieves the desired effect: a society composed of IRRESPONSIBLE INDIVIDUALS, each one "doing his own thing," and acting according to the "law of jungle." Such subversion of society is the first step to tyranny.

To demoralise law enforcement, police were called ‘pigs’ and ‘fascists,’ police agencies watching over subverters and radicals were called ‘spies’ (by the American Union of Civil Liberties) and disbanded, criminals were recruited as police which destroyed police integrity and reputation. Consequently, within 20 years the public lacked civil laws or protection from criminals. This constituted grounds for calling in the army to do the police force’s work. Right now, ‘Black Lives Matter’ protestors are calling for the US government to pull funding of police, and police are resigning due to the violence. This only paves the way for the military, Marshall Law, and a Nazi-Communist totalitarian regime. ALL lives matter. All lives are at risk.

Demoralisation in areas of family life, health services, food consumption, inter-racial relations, population control, and distribution and labour relations. Marxist-Leninist ideology disguised as "social theories" have greatly contributed to family break-ups, to create children disloyal to families but loyal to the State.

Racial and ethnic interrelations is one of the most vulnerable areas for demoralization… [American] society is the least discriminatory. The Communist 'solution' for racial problem is 'final': they simply murder those who are different and stubbornly insist on remaining different. Stalin played with whole populations of 'ethnics' — 'resettling' Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians in Siberia, relocating Crimean Tartars from the tropics to permafrost, and Koreans from the Far East to the Kazakhstan deserts…

The present day 'solution' to racial inequality is borrowed from Communist mythology: EQUALITY of all racial and ethnic groups LEGISLATED by the government and ENFORCED by state bureaucracies. We know perfectly well that neither races nor INDIVIDUALS are equal, in every respect. We know that every nation and race have its peculiar character, abilities, traditions, mentality, and ability to learn and its individual PACE OF DEVELOPMENT. By mimicking the Soviet 'national policy' of equality America simply erases the distinct racial characteristics that have made this country great.

The removal of private land is an important method of demoralisation because: …the poor farmer often is a greater PATRIOT than an affluent dweller of a large congested American city. Communists know this very well… the farmer will fight an invader until last bullet ON HIS LAND. "Underprivileged" or urbanized masses on the other hand, may feel like meeting an invader with flowers and red banners.

Concerning labour relations, the ideological infiltration of labour is well documented. Teachers are the best examples of whinging Marxists. Since Gough Whitlam’s communist cabinet in the 1970s, Australian State schoolteachers have spent more time striking for more pay, less work, and more holidays, than producing kids that can actually read and write.

Stage 2: DESTABILISATION

Destabilisation takes 2 to 5 years to achieve. The focus here is on the country's internal power structures, foreign relations, and economy. The first symptom of instability is expressed as the desire of the population to bring to power those politicians and parties who are charismatic, act like good "caretakers" and promise job "security" and "free" social services rather than protection from external and foreign enemies.

This global lockdown has just destroyed the economy. In Australia, those who suddenly lost their jobs qualified for $750 per week social welfare payments. No matter what your job, you get the same wage – just like in Soviet Russia.

THE SUBVERSION PROCESS

AREAS	METHODS	RESULTS
	DEMORALIZATION (15 TO 20 YEARS)
IDEAS
1. RELIGION	POLITICIZE, COMMERCIALIZE, ENTERTAINMENT	DEATH WISH
2. EDUCATION	PERMISSIVENESS, RELATIVITY	IGNORANCE
3. MEDIA	MONOPOLIZE, MANIPULATE, DISCREDIT, NON-ISSUES	UNINFORMED MYOPIA
4. CULTURE	FALSE HEROES AND ROLE MODELS	ADDICTIVE FADS, 'MASS'
STRUCTURE
1. LAW AND ORDER	LEGISLATIVE, NOT MORAL	MISTRUST 'JUSTICE'
2. SOCIAL RELATIONS	RIGHTS VS. OBLIGATIONS	LESS INDIVIDUAL RESPONS.
3. SECURITY	INTELLIGENCE, POLICE, MILITARY	DEFENSELESSNESS
4. INTERNAL POLITICS	PARTY, ANTAGONISMS	DISUNITY
5. FOREIGN	SALT . . . FRIENDS	ISOLATION
LIFE
1. FAMILY, SOCIETY	BREAK UP	NO LOYALTY (STATE)
2. HEALTH	SPORTS, MEDICARE, JUNK FOOD	ENFEEBLED MASSES
3. RACE	LOWER THE UPPERS, BIBLE? GENETICS VS. ENVIRONMENT	HATRED, DIVISION
4. POPULATION	DE-LAND, URBANIZE	ALIENATION
5. LABOR	UNIONS VS. SOCIETY	VICTIMIZATION
	↓
	DESTABILIZATION (2 TO 5 YEARS)
1. POWER STRUGGLE	POPULISM, IRRESPONSIBLE POWER STRUGGLE	BIG BROTHER
2. ECONOMY	DESTRUCTION OF BARGAINING PROCESS	YIELD TO BIG BROTHER
3. SOCIETY FIBER, LAW	GRASS ROOTS PARTICIPATION	MOBOCRACY
4. FOREIGN	ISOLATION, MULTI-NATIONS, AND CENTRAL COMM.	PRESTIGE, BELLIGERENT ENCIRCLEMENT
	↓
	CRISIS (2 TO 6 MONTHS)
	↓
	NORMALIZATION

BY TOMAS SCHUMAN

Stage 3: CRISIS

This stage takes 2 to 6 months to achieve. This is the stage we are globally now at.

At this third stage of subversion you will have all your American 'radicals' and Soviet 'sleeper' agents springing into action, trying to 'seize power as quickly and ruthlessly as possible… If all the previous stages of Soviet subversion have been successfully completed by that time, the majority of Americans will be so totally confused that they may even WELCOME some ‘strong' leaders… The crisis was Covid-19. The radicals are whipping the people into a protesting frenzy. The result is what Yuri predicted: The leaders will be given almost unlimited 'emergency powers.'

A forceful change of the US system may or may not be accomplished through a civil war or internal revolution… But change it will be, and rather a drastic one, with all the familiar attributes of Soviet 'progress' being instituted such as NATIONALIZATION of vital industries, the reduction of the 'private sector' of the economy to the bare minimum, the redistribution of wealth and a massive propaganda campaign by the newly 'elected' government to 'explain' and justify the reforms.

No, no concentration camps and executions. Not yet. That will come later at:

Stage 4: NORMALISATION

To avoid bloodshed, the subverter moves to normalisation. Normalisation is where a country is brought by force into the normal state of socialism. This is where dissidents are placed in camps and publicly or privately executed.

The New Order will need STABILITY and NEW MORALITY. No more 'grass roots' movements. No more criticism of the State. The Press will obediently censor itself.

So, Bezmenov predicted the systematic destruction of America’s Judeo-Christian democracy that would culminate in the violent riots occurring in America now, followed by Marshall Law and the instalment of a ‘Communist-fascist’ regime under which everyone will achieve the equality y’all were deceived into protesting for: equal oppression.

HISTORY ALWAYS REPEATS

The problem is that no one studies history anymore, which explains why we fail to notice history repeating itself. To illustrate, Bezmenov read the following information in KGB files:

The South Vietnamese city of Hue had been captured by the Hanoi Communists. When it was re-captured by the US Army and allied forces, only two days later, the CIA discovered to their horror that several thousand Vietnamese - teachers, priests, Buddhists, businessmen, and educated citizens - everyone who was ‘pro-American’ had been rounded up by the invaders and IN ONE NIGHT, taken out of the city limits and executed collectively. Some were shot. Others, with their hands tied by electric wire, were found with their skulls crushed-in by shovels and iron bars. ‘How could they possibly have located all of these people within only a few hours in a large city?’ - the Americans wondered. I thought I knew the answer.

Long before the invasion, there was an extensive network of Communist informers working under the guidance of the Soviet embassy in Hanoi — that is under the KGB. The Communists filed every bit of information: addresses, personal habits, political affiliations, expressed ideas, unexpressed thoughts revealed in informal and private conversations, even the names and addresses of relatives, friends, even lovers and mistresses of the future victims of ‘liberation.’

Everyone today is under similar surveillance, except that now the 'Communist-Fascist' regime use Facebook and Twitter to identify dissidents and whistle-blowers. Those who press ‘Like’ on too many anti-establishment social media posts are tagged for the coming collective execution.

* * *

Justice Denied

No one calls for justice; no one pleads a case with integrity. They rely on empty arguments, they utter lies; they conceive trouble and give birth to evil.

(Isaiah 59:4)

ANDERSONIAN LEGACY

We stand at the precipice of Aldous Huxley's promised Final Revolution. Australian law prevents freedom of speech, permits whistleblowers to be charged with defamation, and allows outspoken victims of CIA child trafficking to be labelled 'terrorists' and subsequently seized, detained and subjected to the same abuse we experienced as children by the same perpetrator network. Erosion of Australia's civil liberties and Judeo-Christian culture traces back to the University of Sydney Philosophy lecturer John Anderson who (from 1927 to 1958) applied Cultural Marxism to create an enduring legacy of indoctrination which influenced future generations of Australian politicians, journalists, and law reformers. John Anderson taught my key perpetrators, three of whom were discovered to be Soviet spies who were seemingly assassinated by the British Crown.

Cultural Marxism is a non-violent but revolutionary collectivist ideology that seeks the gradual gain of power via infiltration and the modification of laws, institutions and social organisations. Western educational institutions, particularly government schools and universities, are a hub of left-brain Cultural Marxist indoctrination. Communism dominates Australia's education system thanks to Soviet spy Alfred Conlon who created a system of standardisation and control via the Commonwealth Education Department.

I encountered militant pro-Marxist teaching in six universities, in three states, over a 30-year span. I know from experience that Marxist teachings saturate the fields of Education, Science, Psychology, Law, Philosophy, and the Visual Arts. I attended the top Art Colleges in three Australian states and found them all intolerant of independent creative thinking. Australian educators saturate developing brains with Luciferian Marxist culture - sexual promiscuity, globalisation, lawlessness, anti-nationalism, occultism, pro-abortion, pro-pedophilia, and a mocking hatred of the Biblical God.

John Anderson founded Australian Realism, the Empirical brand of philosophy which spread to the University of Adelaide and Alfred Conlon's brainchild, the Australian National University. All three universities became infiltrated with Anderson's Communist legacy. All three became MK-ULTRA research facilities. Anderson was aligned with the Trotsky movement and the Communist Party of Australia (renamed The Australian Greens) and he contributed to their journals. Anderson pushed the Marxist agenda including sexual revolution and abolition of religion in schools. He argued that God does not exist, traditional Christian concepts of good and evil were only meant for slaves, and the notion of morality is empty. His converts (labelled 'Andersonians') included members of the Sydney Push, a leftist intellectual subculture who rejected conventional morality and placed Sydney at the forefront of the sexual revolution. Promiscuous feminist Germaine Greer is a fine example.

ALP LAW REFORM

My ears pricked up when our law lecturer said the Australian Labor Party (ALP) were the first political group to appoint Catholic judges in our predominantly Protestant country. The ALP also appointed the two reformers most cited in Australian law schools, Lionel Murphy (my pedophile rapist) and Michael Kirby (publicly accused of pedophilia by Senator Bill Heffernan). Catholic Murphy attended Sydney Boys High selective school and commenced at the University of Sydney in 1949. Murphy was nominated as Chief Justice by Gough Whitlam (my pedophile rapist) and appointed by John Kerr (my pedophile rapist). Known for his radicalism and judicial activism, Murphy's reforms included establishing the Law Reform Commission, and no-fault divorce which led to an epidemic of broken homes and displaced youth ripe for recruitment into child trafficking and Luciferian cults. Murphy notably authorised the 1973 raids on ASIO. Corruption allegations plagued Lionel Murphy until his death, after his 1985 conviction for perverting the course of justice.

Michael Kirby is a Fort Street Boys High graduate who commenced law at the University of Sydney in 1959. Kirby served as Vice Chancellor of Macquarie University, plus as an executive with CSIRO and the Law Reform Commission. Kirby was nominated Chief Justice by ALP Prime Minister Paul Keating (whose rape and murder of a young boy I witnessed). In 2002, Senator Heffernan used Parliamentary privilege to announce, Michael Kirby used a government car to solicit underage male prostitutes at the Army Barracks 'Wall' in Darlinghurst, which victims confirmed to me. In response, Kirby announced he was gay, and leftist politicians and journalists accused Bill Heffernan of 'homophobia.' The truth of the matter remains sealed in the Wood Royal Commission case files.

WHY STUDY PHILOSOPHY

Philosophy is the study of how people think. An introductory knowledge of philosophy is crucial for understanding the origins of the eugenics program we know as MK-ULTRA, and the perpetrator mind-set. Let us quickly review the historical erosion of traditional values and insertion of Marxist doctrine via a subject every Australian law student undertakes, Philosophy and the Law. Here is my essay in that subject, which addressed the question of whether a relationship still exists between justice and the law. My essay provides an extremely simple introduction to Philosophy and its relationship to legislative and social change.

JUSTICE DENIED

The first edition of the Oxford English Dictionary[106] defined justice as a quality or principle meaning morality, equity, righteousness, truth, integrity, and restitution. By contrast, the modern law student's prescribed legal dictionary considers justice, A concept defined according to the particular philosophical school of the inquirer.[107]

Western concepts of justice combine Greco-Roman philosophical traditions with Scripture.[108] From Plato to postmodernists, philosophers have debated the existence of a relationship between law and justice. The resultant theories are generally divided into two camps.[109] One camp associates justice with Biblical principles and absolute moral standards, emphasises individualism and equality, and produced classic common law under which Western society had a moral obligation to uphold clear rules of conduct.

The opposing camp considers justice to be human-made and evolving with society's changing mores.[110] Their theories are soaked in Darwinist eugenics, ethical relativism, secular humanism, and collectivism, which successively distorted the interpretation of the word

---

[106] Oxford English Dictionary (Oxford University Press, 1928).

[107] R. Finkelstein & D. Hamer (eds), Concise Australian Legal Dictionary (LexisNexis Butterworths 5th ed, 2015).

[108] Alvin Schmidt, How Christianity Changed the World, (Zondervan, 2004)

[109] R. Finkelstein & D. Hamer, above n69.

[110] Ibid.

'justice' until it lost its original meaning. Justice went from a tangible principle to a subjective concept shaped by political agenda, religious affiliation, and previous experience of the legal system.

Australia was dominated by positivist and liberalist theories[111] until feminism, post-structuralism, and ecological approaches took influence.[112] Traditional liberalist concepts of individuality, formal equality, and property ownership were devalued. Now, fluctuating cultural conventions determine what values inform the legal system in our increasingly permissive society.

Research indicates six-month-old babies possess an innate sense of justice.[113] While the average citizen might hope and trust that our legal system is synonymous with what they innately sense justice to be – it is not. Practical examples of this confront us daily, from anti-terror laws that breach international human rights standards,[114] to unfathomably lenient sentencing for men who rape young children.[115]

Personal experience drives home the reality that justice is nothing more than the excrement of Orwellian newspeak, a mythical, abstract ideal that law students write essays about, and promise to preserve in the forefront of their minds while earning $500+ per hour at their inner-city law firms. Only those who have yet to experience injustice can afford to pontificate about an actual relationship between law and a concept that can no longer even be defined, let alone exacted.

Ancient Concepts of Justice

Plato (428-348 BC) believed justice stems from social order.[116] He proposed private citizens forgo individuality and personal rights for a state controlled by a gifted minority who regulate everything from sex to moral thinking.[117] Plato's ideal society was modeled on Sparta,[118] aligns with modern totalitarianism, and inspired Hitler's Third Reich.[119]

By contrast, Aristotle (384-322 BC) believed in natural justice.[120] He saw justice as: transcending local customs and conventions, determined by divine reason, and inherently connected to law.[121] Aristotle believed a just society stems from allowing citizens to enjoy the private property they worked for, and that property redistribution is unjust. Yet the Greeks ignored Aristotle's notion of natural rights for citizens,[122] and women, children, slaves, and non-citizens possessed no rights at all.[123]

---

[111] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[112] Legal Process Study Guide (2015).

[113] Paulo Bloom, Just Babies: The Origins of Good and Evil (Crown, 2013).

[114] George Williams, 'A Decade of Australian Anti-terror Laws' (2011) Melbourne University Law Review 35.

[115] AAP, 'Racing legend Sir Jack Brabham's son jailed for child rape', Brisbane Times (online), 15 April 2016.

[116] Cecil Bowra, Classical Greece (Time, 1965).

[117] William McGovern, From Luther to Hitler; The History of Fascist-Nazi Political Philosophy. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 1941).

[118] Will Durrant, The Story of Civilization, Part II: The Life of Greece (Simon & Schuster, 1966)

[119] Leonard Peikoff, The Ominous Parallels (Plume, 1983).

[120] Michelle Sanson & Thalia Antony, Connecting with Law (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2014).

[121] Raymond Wacks, Understanding Jurisprudence (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2012).

[122] William McGovern, 'Collectivism and Individualism,' in Felix Morley (ed), Essays on Individuality, (Stratford Press, 1958) 339.

[123] Larry Siedentop, Inventing the Individual: The Origins of Western Liberalism (Belknap Press, 2014).

The Ancient Romans viewed justice as protecting citizen rights only.[124] They preserved equality of rights between citizens via commutative justice.[125] Commutative justice is precise and accurate, since the offending action, perpetrator, and victim are easily identifiable to all. Their concept of justice, which encouraged freedom and responsibility, passed to English law.

Christian

Siedentop[126] argues that a moral revolution occurred in the 1st Century after the New Testament writings introduced the notion that everyone has God-given rights. This revolution inspired Medieval Christian philosophers and canon lawyers to promote individual freedom and moral equality. These men, and not the secular humanist philosophers of the Renaissance or Enlightenment, formed the foundations of Western liberal democracy.[127] Biblical Christianity considers justice, freedom and law inseparable. Hayes[128] observed:

> Wherever Christian ideals have been generally accepted and their practice sincerely attempted, there is a dynamic liberty; and wherever Christianity has been ignored or rejected, persecuted or chained to the state, there is tyranny.

This statement makes no sense if 1st Century Christianity, an individual belief system with no formal organization, is equated with tyrannical collectivist religious organizations like the Roman Catholic Church. Roman Catholicism started with Emperor Constantine I (306-337) who retained his title of pontifex maximus pope, and rebranded Roman paganism as 'Christianity' and superimposed Christian motifs over Roman cult practices and festivals (Christmas and Easter) in honor of sun worship and the goddess Ishtar.[129] Dog excrement by any other name still stinks, and the same organization that fed Christians to lions continued persecuting Christians via a series of Crusades and Inquisitions.[130] The Protestant Reformation was a protest of orthodox Bible-reading Christians against the satanic Roman Catholic papal system. The uninformed confuse Protestantism with Catholicism and wrongly group them under the one label of 'Christian.' Because organizations like the Catholic Church committed heinous acts of injustice, people used this to justify condemning the orthodox Christian values that informed our Western legal system.

Medieval

Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274) introduced distributive justice theory,[131] a vague and indeterminate form of justice which, if violated, leaves no identifiable offence or perpetrator. Aquinas was an Italian priest and apologist for the Catholic Church. Accordingly, he viewed the pope as supreme law giver and laws inconsistent with Catholic doctrine as invalid. Aquinas replaced Augustine's (354-430) idea that unjust laws are not laws, with the notion that unjust laws should be tolerated for practical reasons[132] (i.e., submission to the Roman Catholic pope.

---

[124] Will Durrant, The Story of Civilization, Part III: Caesar and Christ (Simon & Schuster, 2011).

[125] Ibid.

[126] Larry Siedentop, above n19.

[127] Ibid.

[128] Carlton Hayes, Christianity and Western Civilization (Stanford University Press, 1954) 21.

[129] Ibid.

[130] Edward Clarke, Commentary on the Bible (1831).

[131] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[132] M. Sanson & T. Antony, Connecting with Law (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2014).

Common Law

The common law system is based on Judeo-Christian principles.[133] Edward Coke (1552–1634) believed God gave humans an innate understanding of the law. Therefore, justice manifested in a judge's ability to correctly discover and apply Biblical law. Just laws were based on, and did not contradict, individual rights and free choice. When Coke said, 'The King himself should be under no man, but under God and the Law,'[134] he referred to the Rule of Law whereby everyone is bound by fixed and predictable rules. Without objective law, individuals are at the government's mercy. The alternative is the rule of man, which results in tyranny.[135] Common law offers basic protective measures including the right to silence and presumption of innocence.

William Blackstone's (1723-1780) Commentary on the Laws of England influenced common law adoption by English speaking countries, plus the USA Declaration of Independence and Constitution.[136] Blackstone traced English common law to King Alfred's Scripture-based legal system.[137] While the 10 Commandments formed a moral premise that was easy for the public to know, Blackstone made the common law further accessible to lay people.[138] He also promoted inalienable rights.[139] Blackstone said England's Bill of Rights declared three immunities: private property, personal security and individual freedom,[140] and that the common law '…gives liberty, rightly understood, that is protection to a Jew, a Turk, or a heathen, as well as those that profess the true religion of Christ'.[141]

Atheistic

Atheism undermines the notion of a higher moral law. It encourages relativism - the denial of absolute truth and moral code. Without absolutes, morality is determined by social norms and individual discretion, and people have no sense of moral obligation or duty. Atheist Claude Helvetius (1715-1771) heavily influenced Bentham and Marx.[142] He believed humans are a product of their environment and culture. Helvetius said the meaning of life is attaining earthly happiness for the greatest number, not salvation. Helvetius advocated self-love, and valued actions by their public utilitarian use.[143]

Darwinian

The notion of a higher moral law dominated Western society until Charles Galton Darwin (1809–1882) introduced, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life in 1859. Darwinism was a pro-eugenics political movement that assumed God does not exist and humans are evolving animals. The Darwinian concept of law and justice stems from man's will that evolves over time with changing social values and conventions. Darwinism influenced Marxism and Nazism.[144] It also influenced secular humanism which similarly assumes only nature and the material world exist, and humans are evolving toward perfection (i.e., 'mechanised'). These theories dismiss natural law and an absolute moral code. They base morality on the changing nature of human interaction.

---

[133] Robert Stacey, Sir William Blackstone and the Common Law: Blackstone's Legacy to America (American Vision, 2008).

[134] N.D. Arora, Political Science (McGraw-Hills, 2011) 6.2.

[135] Robert Stacey, Sir William Blackstone and the Common Law: Blackstone's Legacy to America (American Vision, 2008).

[136] Ibid.

[137] Ibid.

[138] Ibid.

[139] Ibid.

[140] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[141] William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England: In Four Books; with an Analysis of the Work, Volume 1 (S. Sweet, 1829).

[142] David Smith, Helvetius: A Study in Persecution (Clarendon Press, 1965).

[143] Ibid.

Positivist

Darwinism influenced positivism. In Pure Theory of Law (1939) Hans Kelsen (1881-1973) said, 'The changeover of legal science from natural law to positivism went hand in hand with the progress of empirical natural sciences and with a critical analysis of religious ideology'.[145] Positivist Jeremy Bentham (1748-1832) rejected God and natural law, and declared law a product of human will and reason, force and social struggle.[146] These theorists believed laws are logically formulated by the state to suit society's evolving needs. That Positivists consider law manmade,[147] separates law and morality. Positivists consider law just if it benefits the population majority.[148] So, jjustice fluctuates according to the whims and preferences of the state. Its arbitrary nature renders a Positivist legal system susceptible to tyranny.

Positivist John Austin (1790-1859) aimed to transform law into a science by purging it of all moralistic notions. He asserted that law is the command of 'a sovereign who requires full obedience' [149] - which sounds pretty much like a tyrant. Hart (1907-1992) concluded that Austin's theory in effect posed a sovereign threat.[150]

Positivism ignores individual rights, natural justice, and outcome fairness.[151] Owing to Positivism, our courts are more concerned with rules and exacting procedural justice, rather than the law's ethical implications.[152] Positivism fails to make the common law distinction between natural wrongs that everyone wants criminalised (like murder) and behaviours that the government prohibits but which the public generally accept, such as defending one's family against a violent intruder; a prime example being the Batterham case [153] which also contradicted the common law allowance of proportionate use of force against a perpetrator.

Social Contract

Social contract theorists tried to reconcile Christianity with Darwinism. They defined a 'social contract' as an agreement people made in the state of nature before society existed. According to this philosophy, the public sacrifice freedom for social order and state-administered justice. Philosophers have different ideas about the state's role in this social contract. Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679) advocated for absolutism - the absolute right of the state to control the individual.[154] Hobbes' collectivism was a precursor of modern totalitarianism.[155] Hobbes diverted focus from natural law which encouraged altruism, to a sense of entitlement. Unlike Blackstone and Locke, Hobbes was not considered influential in his day, and he made no significant contribution to the legal system. He was rejected by both major parties of his day[156] and Oxford University burnt his writings.[157] [144] Conway Zirkle, Evolution, Marxian Biology, and the Social Sciences (University of Pennsylvania, 1959).

---

[145] Augusto Zimmermann, 'Evolutionary Legal Theories: The Impact of Darwinism on Western Conceptions of Law' (2010) 24(2) Journal of Creation 103.

[146] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[147] Ibid.

[148] Ibid.

[149] Ibid.

[150] Legal Process Study Guide (2015).

[151] Ibid.

[152] Legal Process Study Guide (2015).

[153] Belinda Geary and Brianne Tolj, 'Father is charged with murder after a man who he caught 'rummaging through his daughter's bedroom' dies during attempted citizen's arrest,' Daily Mail (online), 28 March 2016.

Liberalist

As a social contract theorist, John Locke (1632–1704) considered the consequences of when a government fails to uphold their contractual obligation.[158] He believed people had rights to life, health, liberty, and property in the state of nature.[159] Locke believed these rights stemmed from God-given natural laws that people could easily recognise using their God-given reason. As the father of liberalism, Locke's support for inalienable, individual rights inspired the 1776 American Declaration of Independence, 1789 Bill of Rights, and 1793 French Declaration on Human and Citizens' Rights.[160] Locke's ideals are reflected in the legal system via notions of presumption of innocence, procedural fairness, a fair trial, and non-discrimination.[161]

Enlightenment

Unlike Hobbes and Locke, Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-1778) claimed life in the state of nature was good.[162] He inspired Romanticism, an emotive philosophy that promoted a return to the alleged 'bliss' of a pre-civil society. Leftist collectivist ideology originated with Rousseau who claimed rights which existed in the state of nature are relinquished to the state-created general will.[163] Rousseau damned civil society for permitting private interest which, he claimed, exploits others and detracts from the general will.

Charles Darwin's philosophy was previously suggested by others including Immanuel Kant (1724–1804).[164] Kant agreed with Hobbes and Rousseau that humans chose to surrender their rights to the state when they created the state.[165] He said a government has no duty to its citizens, but that: 'It is the duty of the people to bear any abuse of the supreme power, even though it should be considered unbearable.' [166] Kant based his deontological (duty-based) approach to morality on human reason.[167] He claimed that although humans are intrinsically altruistic,[168] a society containing no moral absolutes produces people motivated by selfishness instead of altruism.

---

[154] William McGovern, From Luther to Hitler; The History of Fascist-Nazi Political Philosophy. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 1941).

[155] Ibid.

[156] Lee Ward, The Politics of Liberty in England and Revolutionary America, (Cambridge University Press, 2010).

[157] Raymond Wacks, Understanding Jurisprudence (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2012).

[158] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[159] Lee Ward, The Politics of Liberty in England and Revolutionary America, (Cambridge University Press, 2010).

[160] Ibid.

[161] Michelle Sanson and Thalia Antony, Connecting with Law (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2014).

[162] N.D. Arora, Political Science (McGraw-Hills, 2011).

[163] William McGovern, 'Collectivism and Individualism,' in Felix Morley (ed), Essays on Individuality, (Stratford Press, 1958) 339.

[164] Abram L. Sachar, A History of the Jews (McGraw-Hill, 5th ed, 1964).

[165] William McGovern, From Luther to Hitler; The History of Fascist-Nazi Political Philosophy (Houghton Mifflin Company, 1941).

[166] Emmanuel Kant, The Philosophy of Law: An Exposition of the Fundamental Principles of Jurisprudence as the Science of Right (T & T Clarke, 1887).

[167] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

Marxist

Darwin, Rousseau, and Kant inspired Carl Marx (1818-1883).[169] Marx rejected Christianity, natural law, private property, individual rights, separation of powers, and the Rule of Law.[170] He viewed law as a tool for political power and based it on the working class' collective will. Marxism promotes lawlessness via contempt for existing social order and encouraging the working class to violently revolt against government.[171] Marx believed the need for law dissolves once communism is established.

Marx was anti-Semitic.[172] Not surprisingly, every application of Marxism has resulted in totalitarianism, deification of a dictator, human rights violations, inequality before the law, and the equal distribution of poverty.[173] This is reflected in mass killings of over 100 million people by Hitler, Lenin, Stalin, and Mao. Thus, Marxist law has proven to be the antithesis of justice.

Radical Multiculturalism

Marxism influenced contemporary theories including radical feminism, critical legal studies, and race legal theory. These theories agree that reality is socially constructed to create and maintain power.[174] They consider talk of justice, universal truth, and objective knowledge as white patriarchal attempts to gain political power over minority groups.[175] Such theories view law as a socially constructed tool for political gain.[176] They are pro-social justice for leftist political purposes. Their goal is not to create an overall fair legal system or an efficient government but encourage minority groups to pursue radical political change.[177] Ironically, these theories promote anti-Semitism.[178]

Collectivist Ideology.

Fascism, feminism, race legal theory, dialectical materialism, critical legal theory, socialism, deconstruction, post-modernism, ecological jurisprudence, and all other theories that advocate for government ownership and wealth redistribution are forms of collectivist ideology. Collectivism purports that individuality is a socially constructed phenomenon, since individuals did not exist in the state of nature.[179] Collectivism is a political-economic movement that subjugates individuals to a group, and forces interdependence.[180] People are grouped (by gender, race, class, etc.) and this group identity determines whether individual behaviour is right or wrong. Consequently, morality is determined by our common humanity.[181]

---

[168] Ibid.

[169] George Knupffer, The Struggle for World Power (Noontide, 4th Ed, 1986).

[170] Karl Marx, Early Writings (Penguin, 2005)

[171] Daniel Farber and Suzanna Sherry, Beyond All Reason: The Radical Assault on Truth in American Law (Oxford University Press, 1997).

[172] Karl Marx, On the Jewish Question (1844).

[173] David Koyzis, Political Visions & Illusions (InterVarsity Press, 2009).

[174] Daniel Farber and Suzanna Sherry, Beyond All Reason: The Radical Assault on Truth in American Law (Oxford University Press, 1997).

[175] Ibid.

[176] Ibid.

[177] Ibid.

[178] Ibid.

[179] William McGovern, 'Collectivism and Individualism', in Felix Morley (ed), Essays on Individuality (Stratford Press, 1958) 339.

[180] Ibid.

Individual Rights Erosion

The meaning of rights has changed to suit collectivist bias. Inalienable individual rights have been reinterpreted as minority group rights. Owing to the disregard for individual rights, and because law is not fixed, individual rights are overridden by an arbitrary government equally capable of violating, as implementing, rights.[182] An example is the myriad of Australian anti-terror laws introduced since 2002. Most were expedited without the usual parliamentary and civil considerations.[183] This lack of procedure undermined the democratic values and rights found in our Constitution, common law, and other legislation. Australia has no federal human rights legislation to ensure anti-terrorism laws comply with international human rights standards.[184] Consequently, anti-terror legislation infringes upon basic rights including a fair trial, privacy, freedom from arbitrary detention and arrest, non-discrimination, freedom of association and expression, retrospective law, and recognition under law. Historically, such denial of individual rights has preceded totalitarianism.[185]

Tyrannical Consequences

Legal system change begins with the education of student lawyers.[186] Our law texts cherry pick history to support leftist bias. Law professors highlight Marxism but omit its link to holocaust;[187] elevate fascist Hobbes above the father of Common Law;[188] [189] [190] criticise liberalist notions of individualism, formal equality, and property ownership;[191] favour abandonment of objective truth, moral absolutism, and a universally accepted standard of justice in preference for moral relativism;[192] and encourage students to care more for the rights of trees rather than humans.[193] The pro-Marxist university lecturers who undermine the foundations of our Western legal system simultaneously enjoy the freedom and rights this same system affords them.[194] It comes as no surprise then, that there is no longer an identifiable relationship between justice and the law.

* * *

---

[181] Philosophy of Law Study Guide (2014).

[182] Simon Bronitt and Bernadette McSherry, Principles of Criminal Law (Thomson Reuters Australia, 3rd ed, 2010).

[183] George Williams, 'A Decade of Australian Anti-terror Laws' (2011) Melbourne University Law Review 35.

[184] Australian Human Rights Commission, how are Human Rights Protected in Australian Law? (2006)

[185] Leonard Peikoff, The Ominous Parallels (Plume, 1983).

[186] Ibid.

[187] Michelle Sanson & Thalia Antony, Connecting with Law (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2014).

[188] Ibid.

[189] Raymond Wacks, Understanding Jurisprudence (Oxford University Press, 3rd ed, 2012).

[190] Margaret Davies, Asking the Law Question (Thomas Lawbook, 3rd ed, 2008).

[191] Legal Process Study Guide (2015).

[192] Ibid.

[193] Ibid.

[194] Alvin Schmidt, How Christianity Changed the World (Zondervan, 2004).

Justice is Crucial

Justice is precious to victims of crime. Justice is a fundamental Biblical principle. Justice is supposed to be the objective of our Justice system. Yet now a desire for justice has seemingly been criminalised and pathologized in Australia. If victims of ritual abuse and mind control can’t depend on our government for justice, what hope do we have? Where do we turn? How do we cope?

* * *

MK-ULTRA & the Occult

Scientology and all the other cults are one-dimensional, and we live in a three-dimensional world. Cults are as dangerous as drugs. They commit the highest crime: the rape of the soul.

- L. Ron Hubbard Jr. (Penthouse, June 1983)

PROJECT OFTEN

John Marks authored his CIA-approved book, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, based on 139 boxes of MK-ULTRA documents. While none of the FOI-released documents exposed the truth that children were the ultimate Manchurian Candidates, 40 percent of the documents pertained to the CIA's interest in the occult, a fact useful to this chapter.

Sidney Gottlieb initiated Project OFTEN-CHICKWIT to study parapsychology and the occult, to 'explore the world of black magic' and 'harness the forces of darkness and challenge the concept that the inner reaches of the mind are beyond reach.' Under OFTEN, the CIA visited with and recruited fortune-tellers, palm-readers, clairvoyants, astrologists, mediums, psychics, specialists in demonology, witches and warlocks, Satanists, and other occult practitioners. They established a research laboratory at the University of South Carolina and recruited student guinea pigs via a college class in black witchcraft, demonology and voodoo. Project OFTEN built on the library of knowledge the Nazi's acquired by scouring the globe collecting occult practices including trauma-based mind control techniques. During their height of power, the Nazis conducted Luciferian rituals in the streets of Germany in broad daylight. Winston Churchill fittingly wrote of Hitler:

> He had conjured up the fearful idol of an all-devouring Moloch of which he was the priest and incarnation.[195]

DARWIN-GALTON-HUXLEY-WEDGEWOOD DYNASTY

MK-ULTRA and the occult are inseparable. MK-ULTRA was founded on occultic practises by occultists. To understand this, we must examine the spiritual and philosophical beliefs and practises of the people behind MK-ULTRA, the covert Rothschilds and their overt operatives, the Darwin-Galton-Huxley-Wedgewood dynasty.

Aldous Huxley was the evil revolutionary who conceived and facilitated MK-ULTRA in the USA. His brother Julian Huxley coined the term 'transhumanism' and founded the eugenicist UNESCO to achieve their transhumanist end goal. Julian and his Australian relative Leonard Huxley coordinated MK-ULTRA in Australia. Aldous and Julian Huxley were the grandsons of biologist, anthropologist and philosopher Thomas Huxley (1825-1895) who co-founded the occultic Imperialist British Round Table Society.

LORD ROTHSCHILD

Reformed elite Luciferian John Todd-Collins was the informant behind the 1970s Jack Chick comics responsible for my childhood conversion from satanism to Christianity. According to John Todd-Collins, the HOGD (Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn) is the Rothschilds' organisation of witchcraft. The Rothschilds have been the world's wealthiest family for the past 200 years and are the pinnacle dynasty within the Luciferian power hierarchy. According to the Jewish Encyclopedia (1906, Vol.2, p.497) the Rothschilds 'are the guardians of the papal treasure.'

---

[195] Winston Churchill (1948). The Gathering Storm, 64. Houghton Mifflin / Thomas Allen.

The Cult taught me to revere the Rothschilds as demigods (Nephilim). Based on my programming structure, I deduce that Joseph Mengele was a Rothschild. I also suspect my perpetrators Michael Aquino, Leonas Petrauskas, and Leo's business partner John Melov were Rothschilds.

Global Power Hierarchy

Lucifer (All-Seeing Eye of Horus)
Rothschilds
Council of 13 (Grande Druid Council)
Council of 33 (33 highest ranked Freemasons)
Council of 500 (500 richest individuals)
HOGD (Rothschilds' international organisation of witchcraft)

SYNAGOGUE OF SATAN

The Rothschilds are Hofjuden. The close ties between the London-based Hofjuden families and the British oligarchy trace back to the founding of the Bank of England, and before that to an alliance with the pirates who financed post-Renaissance Genoa in North-West Italy. The three Jewish authors of Dope Inc. (1978) explain this history:

> Several of the Hofjuden families who converged on London during the 17th and 18th centuries had served the Genoese bankers in their takeover of Holland, had participated in the Dutch East India Company's first expeditions in opium trade, and had collaborated over the centuries with the British Jesuits against European humanist forces…
>
> The Montefiores trace their origin as 'special operations' experts for the European oligarchy to the 13th century in Spain, when they ran errands as tax farmers and Inquisitors for their masters, the Genoese. The Montefiores later moved to Holland to help found the Dutch East India Company and the Bank of Holland. After the Stuart Restoration of the mid-17th century, the Montefiores moved to England where they helped establish the Bank of England and the British East India Company. Under Sir Moses Montefiore, the family collaborated with Lord Palmerston and Prime Minister Disraeli in the founding of the present-day Zionist 'movement…'
>
> Rothschilds, Warburgs, Oppenheimers, Schroeders, and other Hofjuden became the leading financial backers of Adolf Hitler.

The Rothschilds and other Hofjuden call themselves Jews yet worship Lucifer instead of the 'I AM' Creator God of the Torah and New Testament. Their loathing of fundamentalist Jews and Christians was demonstrated by their financing the extermination of these groups via Hitler, Lenin, Marx, Papal Inquisition, and the CIA. The three Jewish authors of Dope Inc. (1978) asserted the Hofjuden are not true Jews. The Bible says:

> I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan. (Rev. 2:9)

The Synagogue of Satan created the Zionist movement and stamped the Luciferian hexagram on Israel's flag which they named the 'Star of David.' The hexagram had nothing to do with King David, and David had nothing to do with witchcraft or Luciferianism. The hexagram represents the pagan god Astarte. Hence the Rothschilds adopted a red hexagram (Red Shield) as their family crest and on their subsidiaries including the Salvation Army. The Luciferians call the hexagram the 'Seal of Solomon.' Fritz Springmeier explains:

> Throughout the Middle Ages the Seal of Solomon had been used by Arab Magicians, Cabalist Magicians, Druid witches and Satanists. One of the few ancient uses of the symbol was on the floor of a 1,200-year-old Moslem Mosque found where Tel Aviv is today. In the twelve century an Ashkenazic Jew Menahem Ben Duji, who thought he was the Messiah, used the magical symbol. Because the Rothschilds were Satanists they adopted this powerful magic symbol in 1822 for their coat-of-arms.

David's son Solomon defied God's law by substituting Jewish brides with a thousand pagan whores who seduced him into satanism. Consequently, Israel permanently split into two kingdoms. Ten tribes rejected Solomon's son by a pagan wife as their king, split off and formed the northern kingdom called Israel. Two southern tribes formed the kingdom of Judah under Solomon's pagan offspring. Consider the following 1836 quote:

> The Rothschilds are the wonders of modern banking. Sprung from that poetic, that ancient, that mysterious race, from whom we derive all our religion and half of our civilization, we see the descendants of Judah, after a persecution of two thousand years, peering above kings, rising higher than emperors, and holding a whole continent in the hollow of their hands. The Rothschilds govern a Christian world. Not a cabinet moves without their advice. They stretch their hand, with equal ease, from Petersburg to Vienna, from Vienna to Paris, from Paris to London, from London to Washington. Baron Rothschild, the head of the house, is the true king of Judah, the prince of the captivity, the Messiah so long looked for by this extraordinary people. He holds the keys of peace or war, blessing or cursing. To what will all this lead? If the holy city to be rebuilt? – the third temple to rear its urrets to heaven? No. The lion of the tribe of Judah, baron Rothschild, possesses more real force than David – more wisdom than Solomon. What do they care for the barren seacoast of Palestine? They are the brokers and counsellors of the kings of Europe and of the republican chiefs of America. What more can they desire? [196]

The Synagogue of Satan intend to build a Third Temple. They are responsible for the growing antisemitism brewing another holocaust, because people think the Zionist bankers who push for the state of Israel (which was almost named 'Zion') and the construction of a Third Temple, are Jewish. The Rothschild's financed the Nazi holocaust to justify the need for a Jewish homeland, with the Templar end goal of building a replacement temple in Jerusalem to house their coming fake Messiah, the Antichrist. The Rothschilds flooded Palestine with people whose Jewishness is determined via the maternal line. This contradicts the Torah which clearly says the male bloodline establishes Jewish heritage. The Old Testament lists pages and pages of male birth lines, not female. King David specifically addressed this issue. Women may convert to Judaism via marriage while men certainly can't.

---

[196] H. Niles (Ed.) (1835). Niles' Weekly Register. Baltimore, 19 September, 49, 41.

I doubt the dome of the rock is the original site of Solomon's temple, but of an ancient Roman fort. Former biology professor Walter Veith produced an excellent Total Onslaught series on the secret history of Freemasonry and Catholicism, in which he proves the gold-topped Mosque is a renovated Roman Temple of Diana. Jesus clearly said 'not one stone' would be left of the Temple site, including the foundation stones. I visited Jerusalem and saw numerous stones constitute the ancient Roman fort site. I agree the real Temple site was completely razed down to below its foundations, even the hill and soil it sat on were removed. Let the Communist cult of Islam created by the Roman Catholic church keep their pagan temple. The Bible is clear, God will ultimately make the Synagogue of Satan bow at the feet of His genuine Jewish people. He will restore the Jewish people to their homeland in His time:

> Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before your feet, and to know that I have loved you. (Rev. 3:9)

SCOTTISH RITE OF FREEMASONS

The Rothschilds control global Freemasonry. Fritz Springmeier wrote:

> The Masonic reference book '10,000 Famous Freemasons,' Vol. 4, p.74, indicates two other sons of Amschel were Masons, James Meyer Rothschild, and his brother Nathan Meyer Rothschild. James Rothschild in Paris was a 33-degree Scottish Rite Mason, and his brother Nathan in London was a member of the Lodge of Emulation. And Jewish Freemason Katz indicates Solomon Meir Rothschild, a third member of the five brothers, was initiated into Freemasonry on June 14, 1809. The Rothschilds became powerful within Freemasonry.

Freemasonry has links to the Ancient Greek and Egyptian mystery religions:

> The Dionysiacs of Asia Minor were undoubtedly an association of architects and engineers, who had the exclusive privilege of building temples, stadia, and theatres, under the mysterious tutelage of Bacchus…[197]

Freemason Lodges (temples) are decorated with Ancient Egyptian paraphernalia, indicating its connection to the Cult of Isis and Thoth/Hermes. Freemasons call themselves 'architects' meaning designers of alchemic transhumanism.

PROJECT INTERNATIONAL ARCHITECTS

An interesting couple lived near my childhood farm. Radovan von Winterberg was an engineer and architect who claimed to be the rightful owner of Winterberg Castle which sits on the Czechoslovakian border. Radovan drove a red 260z sports car that featured UNESCO diplomatic plates. He once told me 'Australia needs a mini-Hitler' and he showed me drafts of Pauline Hanson's early speeches which he claimed to have written. Radovan said he was still on the payroll of a secret service agency that retained him as a consultant for $50k per year. His wife Michelle worked as a biochemist for the CSIRO. At one stage Michelle headed the biological section of the Sydney Water Board's Scientific Services.

---

[197] John Robison (1797), Proofs of a Conspiracy against all the Religions and Governments of Europe, Carried on in the Secret Meetings of Free Masons, Illuminati, and Reading Societies.

The mysterious von Winterberg couple built an underground house at Terranora and installed tight security and cameras in an '80s era when neighbours typically left their front doors unlocked. A sign at their entrance read 'Project International Architects' and featured a Freemason square and compass logo. While the average person might dismiss the sign as a reference to his house design business, I immediately took it as a reference to her human design business. Our family always speculated that Michelle was conducting illegal genetic engineering projects in their underground lair which my high IQ blue-eyed blonde father often visited.

When Radovan's house came up for sale one owner later, I challenged my sister-in-law to inspect the place with me and see whether it could have accommodated a cloning lab. She dismissed my lunatic ravings – until we saw the house. Radovan's underground home resembled a 1960s James Bond movie set complete with space-style shower pods, built-in fish tank, and velvet and silver wallpaper. But it was the room at the end of the house that rendered my sister-in-law speechless. There we found the creepy science lab I knew existed. The room was so haunted, I had difficulty breathing. My sister-in-law freaked out, fled the property, and refused to discuss what we felt and saw.

ORDER OF KAPPA SIGMA

A clue to Freemasonry's origins is found in the Order of Kappa Sigma secret handbook published by Wikileaks. Kappa Sigma is a Freemason fraternity founded in Bologna University, Italy during the 1400s. Michelangelo was a member. The Order spread to the other four great European universities (Florence, Paris, Orleans, and Montpellier) and was preserved by French and Italian nobility. The Kappa Sigma Order of America was founded at Virginia University in 1869 and became the largest fraternity in the USA. Head CIA psychologist (my perpetrator) John W. Gittinger was initiated into Kappa-Sigma at Oklahoma University.

Kappa Sigma is Greek for 'Kirjath Sepher' the name of an ancient city in southern Canaan. Esau was the brother of Jacob (renamed Israel) who sold God's blessing for a bowl of stew and killed (and stole the enchanted clothes of) Nimrod who founded the ancient Babylonian mystery religion. Esau married two Canaanite women plus a daughter of Ishmael, the father of Islam. The Canaanites worshipped Baal, Echmoun (Asclepius), Dagon, and Astarte/Ishtar/Oester (Greek Aphrodite and Roman Venus) the goddess of child prostitution to whom babies were sacrificed and Ishtar eggs coloured red with their blood to celebrate spring. Some believe the Hofjuden stem from the bloodline of Esau.

The Kappa Sigma symbols include the Luciferian encircled pentagram, Islamic crescent moon, and caduceus of Mercury. Kappa Sigma founder Stephen Alonzo Jackson (aka, Grand Master, or 'Architect of Ritual') stated: 'Let us not rest contently until the Star [Astarte pentagram] and Crescent [moon] is the pride of every college and university throughout the land.' [198] The fraternity is a means by which our youth are initiated into Luciferian Freemasonry and indoctrinated, like 'Comrade Gittinger,' with their agenda.

The human skull and crossed thigh bones is another Kappa-Sigma symbol, used to remind members of their sworn oath and the punishment that awaits should they violate it

---

[198] Ritual of Kappa Sigma (1995).

(i.e., beheading and amputation). The initiation ritual involves the use of a genuine human skull and crossed thigh bones placed on an altar. John Ward, University of Sydney Vice Chancellor, created a human skull and cross bones during a Halloween ritual by skinning a child alive. The skull and crossbones symbol is a feature of the Freemasons, Jesuits, Knights Templars, knights of Malta, and Shiners. Freemasons traditionally bury human femur bones on their Lodge grounds during rituals.

The Knights Templar had the world's biggest fleet in the 13th century, and they were notorious for committing acts of 'piracy'. The Knights of Malta replaced them, and they too were pirates. Pirates financed post-Renaissance Genoa in North-West Italy. The skull and crossbones trace back to ancient Canaan/Sidon/Zidon, a rendezvous for pirates (aka, 'merchants'). Sidon was a wealthy and powerful city of merchants who first produced the Royal Purple dye worn by Emperors, popes, and Luciferian priests.

ILLUMINATI BLOODLINES

> In mockery and imitation of God's 12 tribes, Satan blessed 12 bloodlines. One of these bloodlines was the Ishmaeli bloodline from which a special elite line developed alchemy, assassination techniques, and other occult practices. One bloodline was Egyptian/Celtic/Druidic from which Druidism was developed. One bloodline was in the orient and developed oriental magic. One lineage was from Canaan and the Canaanites. It had the name Astarte, then Astorga, then Ashdor, and then Astor. The tribe of Dan was used as a Judas Iscariot type seed. The royalty of the tribe of Dan have descended down through history as a powerful Satanic bloodline. The 13th or final blood line was copied after God's royal lineage of Jesus. This was the Satanic House of David with their blood which they believe is not only from the House of David but also from the lineage of Jesus, who they claim had a wife and children. The 13th Satanic bloodline was instilled with the direct seed of Satan so that they would not only carry Christ's blood--but also the blood of his 'brother' Lucifer. One of the bloodlines goes back to Babylon and are descended from Nimrod.[199]

BRITISH ROUND TABLE & THE RIIA

Cecil Rhodes, who was initiated into Freemasonry at Oxford University, formed a eugenicist secret society to reclaim the British Empire and recapture the USA, the British Round Table Society. Rhodes recruited fellow Freemasons Thomas Huxley, Rudyard Kipling, and Alfred Milner, plus a group of Oxford College graduates known as 'Milner's Kindergarten.' This group were trained as an occult priesthood devoted to the eugenicist principles of Imperial rule.

In 1919, the same group founded the Royal Institute of International Affairs (RIIA) to serve as the central planning and recruitment agency for Britain's 'One World Empire.' Arnold Toynbee, who sat on the RIIA for nearly 50 years, headed British Intelligence's Research Division during WW2. Toynbee served as wartime briefing officer to Prime Minister Winston Churchill, a Freemason and Druid. Toynbee stated in 1953:

> By forcing on mankind more and more lethal weapons and at the same time making the whole world more and more interdependent economically, technology has brought

---

[199] Fritz Springmeier (2005). Bloodlines of the Illuminati. Pentracks.

> mankind to such a degree of distress that we are ripe for deifying any new Caesar who might succeed in giving the world unity and peace.[200]

The RIIA were responsible for charting Britain's global drug trafficking trade. Their means of reclaiming British Empire included political infiltration, and instigation of the 1920s Prohibition to facilitate their introduction of drugs, traffickers, and large-scale organized crime to the USA.

> Illegal alcohol and illegal narcotics made up two different product lines of the same multinational firm. The British, through their distilleries in Scotland and Canada, and the British, from their opium refineries in Shanghai and Hong Kong, were the suppliers. The British, through their banks in Canada and the Caribbean, were the financiers. Through their political conduits in the United States, the British created the set of political conditions under which the United States might be won back by means other than the failed Balkanization plan of the Civil War period.[201]

INTERNATIONAL ASSASSINATION BUREAU

British PM Henry Palmerston, Patriarch of the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, conducted the opium business. Palmerston and his successors employed the following groups to perform assassinations, traffic illegal drugs, and follow a chain of command through the Freemasons:[202]

1. Triad Society (aka Societies of Heaven) a suppressed religious cult who violently revolted against the Chinese government. Jesuit and Anglican (Church of England) missionaries recruited Cantonese Triads into the East India Company opium trade.
2. Klu-Klux-Klan stemmed from Freemason Knights of the Golden Circle. Co-founded by Confederate General Albert Pike, Jesuit priest, Freemason Grand Commander who promoted Luciferian worship within the Scottish Rite.
3. Young Italy became the Mafia. Originally Sicily's law enforcement arm, they were organized and commanded by Freemason Communist founder Giuseppe Mazzini. Their uniform was a white cape bearing a Maltese Cross (the insignia of the Order of Saint John of Jerusalem) on the left shoulder. During the American Civil War, they paraded in uniform through New Orleans, gunning down African Americans.
4. Anarchist bomb-throwing gangs of Russian Mikhail Bakunin (member of the Grand Orient de France Freemason lodge) organised by Alexander Herzen (Freemason and Rothschild agent).
5. B'nai B'rith, (aka, Constitutional Grand Lodge of the Order of the Sons of the Covenant) a branch of the Freemasonry for American Hofjuden, and US covert intelligence front. Merged operations with the KKK.
6. Order of Zion (aka, B'nai B'rith in the USA) Hofjuden division of the British Royal Family Order of Saint John of Jerusalem. Secret society whose members swear and act on a

---

[200] J. Vernon McGee (1991). Thru the Bible, 59: The Prophecy (Rev. 6-13). Thomas Nelson.

[201] K. Kalimtgis, D. Goldman & J. Stienberg (1978). Dope, Inc: Britain's Opium War Against the US Executive Intelligence Review.

[202] Ibid.

blood oath. A Freemasonic Order specialising in dirty tricks operations. Founded by London-based Hofjuden Montefiore and Rothschild families. Trained the Confederate leadership, assassinated Abraham Lincoln. Descendants of Confederates migrated to Brazil after the Civil War, namely São Paulo, which became home to the largest Nazi population.

7. Jesuit Order (based in Hapsburg Austria). Military and banking arm of the Roman Catholic church.

The Jesuits formed in 1540 after Henry VIII ousted the pope and declared himself intercessor between man and God after the pope refused to annul Henry's first marriage. His daughter Elizabeth replaced the Roman Catholic church with the Anglican Church (Catholicism light). (Orthodox Anglicans do not consider themselves protestant, hence the pope offered membership to disgruntled parishioners opposed to the ordination of gay priests). Queen Elizabeth received a complete occult education from John Dee who published books on alchemy, ancient languages, hermeticism, Kabbalah, math, and sacred geometry.

The pope created the Vatican Intelligence Service (aka, Santa Alleanza or L'Entità) in 1566 to infiltrate the court of, and overthrow, Elizabeth I. Today, Santa Alleanza is considered the most discreet and greatest intelligence service on the planet. Simon Wiesenthal described it as the world's 'best and most effective espionage service.' In 2008, the Vatican joined INTERPOL to access resources and databases in 192 countries, which expanded Santa Alleanza's reach. Santa Alleanza was infiltrated by Freemasons. Like Church Militant stated: 'It is not generally known to Catholics just how well inserted ideological Freemasons are into the intelligence services of the military apparatus of Italy and other European nations.'[203] The Italian government disbanded a Freemason group Propaganda Due (P2) after they infiltrated the Vatican bank, but the group simply reformed as different entities.

JESUIT INQUISITORS

The Hofjuden and Jesuits combined forces to torture and murder innocent children and adults during the 1542 Papal Inquisition. The aim of the Inquisition was to instigate spiritual revolution. The Inquisitors targeted Jews, Protestants (fundamental Christians) and heretics. 'Heretic' is defined as a person holding an opinion at odds with what is generally accepted, and is synonymous with dissident, nonconformist, and freethinker. The Inquisition torture methods described in the following secret oath, formed the basis of CIA trauma-based mind control.

Jesuit Oath

I do further promise and declare that I will, when opportunity presents, make and wage relentless war, secretly and openly, against all heretics, Protestants and Masons, as I am directed to do, to extirpate them from the face of the whole earth; and that I will spare neither age, sex nor condition, and that will hang, burn, waste, boil, flay, strangle, and bury alive these infamous heretics; rip up the stomachs and wombs of their women, and crush their infants' heads against the walls in order to annihilate their execrable race. That when the same can't be done openly I will secretly use the poisonous cup, the strangulation cord, the steel of the poniard, or the leaden bullet, regardless of the honour, rank, dignity or authority of the persons, whatever may be [203] The Church Militant (2018). Santa Alleanza: The Vatican Intelligence Service, 14 Sept.

---

> their condition in life, either public or private, as I at any time may be directed so to do by any agents of the Pope or Superior of the Brotherhood of the Holy Father of the Society of Jesus.[204]

I witnessed my Jesuit perpetrators commit the crimes described in the above oath. Everything damning and true that was written about the Jesuits back in the 17th Century was, hundreds of years later, declared a 'forgery' by Catholic priests or Jesuit Institute publications.

JESUIT PERPETRATORS

The Jesuits are prominent in Australia and amongst my perpetrators. Roman Emperor Ratzinger, a former Nazi, is the first Jesuit pope. Ex-PM Tony Abbott is a Jesuit. Former Labour Party leader Bill Shorten, who escaped a rape conviction because his victim lubricated during penetration and therefore 'wanted it' - is a Jesuit.

Leonas Petrauskas was schooled by Jesuits in Lithuania and associated with Jesuits in PNG. Antony Kidman had strong Jesuit ties. Kidman attended a Sydney Jesuit school, Saint Aloysius College, with his brother who commenced Jesuit training but abandoned this due to his schizophrenia. The Kidman family attended Star of The Sea Jesuit Church in North Sydney. The Kidman's family priest was Jesuit Father Paul Coleman who officiated Nicole Kidman and Keith Urban's 2006 marriage, and Antony Kidman's 2014 funeral, at St Mary's North Sydney. This is the same church where the fake funeral of my Jesuit trained perpetrator (and Sydney Grande Dame) Patricia Anne Conlon was held.

MITHRAISM IS ROMAN CATHOLICISM

For those who think the Vatican runs the world and the pope is the antichrist, note the Vatican are not a bloodline, just a male-dominated order which relies upon recruitment and initiation. The Roman Catholic priestly order stems from the ancient Roman Cult of Mithraism which my British husband and his father, of the Gardiner Illuminati bloodline, were initiated into. Mithraism is so secretive you will find no records of their beliefs and practises. Mithraism rank initiates based on IQ level, and conduct ceremonies in which priests 'marry' boy brides - which might explain the epidemic of Catholic priests raping altar boys. I also know from experience that the Roman Catholic high mass is a watered-down version of the Luciferian black mass.

ORDER OF THE ILLUMINATI

In 1527, Ignatius of Loyola was let off with a warning by a Christian court for sympathising with the Alumbrados of Spain (aka, Spanish Illuminati). In 1534, Loyola founded the Jesuit Order. In 1773, the Pope ordered the suppression of the Jesuits, and Adam Weishaupt became professor of Canon Law at a Jesuit University. In 1776, Weishaupt founded the Order of the Illuminati. Illuminati is synonymous with Luciferianism. Illuminated means 'to make luminous' while Lucifer means 'light-bringer.' My perpetrators referred to the entire Luciferian network as 'The Order.'

In his 1797 book 'Proofs of a Conspiracy Against all the Religions and Governments of Europe Carried on in the Secret Meetings of Freemasons, Illuminati, and Reading Societies,' John Robison showed how the Jesuit Order and Scottish Rite of Freemasonry colluded to fulfil Adam Weishaupt's goal of revolution.

---

[204] Carlos Didier (1843). Subterranean Rome. New York. Jesuit Extreme Oath of Induction, In Journals of the 62D Congress, 3d Session of the US, 15 Feb. 1913, 3215-16.

LUCIFERIAN EUGENICIST AGENDA

The Galton-Huxley-Darwin-Wedgewood families were eugenicists who, in Luciferian bloodline tradition, intermarried to preserve their bloodlines and maintain their wealth and influence. Their relationship is demonstrated by a January 1874 séance conducted at Erasmu Alvey Darwin's house which was arranged by spiritualist Francis Galton and attended by Charles Galton Darwin, Hensleigh Wedgwood, and Thomas Henry Huxley.

Charles Galton Darwin's great-grandson married Thomas Huxley's great-granddaughter. Charles Darwin shared a grandfather with Francis Galton, who coined the word 'eugenics' in 1883 and founded the international eugenics movement. Thomas Huxley coined the term 'Darwinism' and was responsible for promoting his relative Charles Galton Darwin's philosophy of evolution, which was originally titled:

On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the PRESERVATION of FAVOURED RACES in the Struggle for Life

Marxist educators typically omit the second half of Darwin's title which indicates Darwin was a eugenicist. The Darwin-Galton-Huxley-Wedgewood eugenicist agenda was survival of the Luciferian elite and annihilation of the masses. Communism, the universal symbol of which is a red Luciferian pentagram, has the same goal.

> Darwin's proof of evolutionary changes in species – an evolution which proceeds by mathematical laws, not by the conscious design of a Creator – was soon incorporated in mechanistic theories of man and society. Social Darwinism fitted equally well into the arguments of apologists for capitalism like Herbert Spencer and William Graham Sumner, precursors of fascism like the Austrian sociologist Ludwig Gumplowicz, and the influential Communist theorists Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels.[205]

All Darwinism is Social Darwinism, the application of 'natural selection and preservation of favoured races' to human society. Darwin was influenced by Thomas Robert Malthus, whose theory of population control advocated for reducing population numbers via deliberate neglect and passive annihilation. Darwinism combined with Malthusianism produced three arms of the same dialectic:

1. National Socialism in Nazi Germany,
2. International Socialism in Marxist Russia,
3. Corporate Capitalism headed by the USA.

Charles Galton Darwin's son Leonard was an Army Major, MP, and 1912 president of London's First International Congress of Eugenics. Leonard Darwin associated with Harry Hamilton Laughlin, Expert Eugenics Agent of the US House of Representatives. As superintendent of the Eugenics Record Office, Laughlin oversaw the collection of prominent family pedigrees including the Galton-Darwin-Huxley-Wedgewood dynasty. High profile American eugenicists included Alexander Graham Bell (the fraud who stole Antonio Meucci's telephone invention[206]) and David Starr Jordan (Stanford University's first President). David Star Jordan coined the term dysgenics, referring to defective or disadvantageous genes and traits in offspring of a population. Aldous Huxley adopted the term as follows:

---

[205] Alan Scheflin & Edward Opton (1978). The Mind Manipulators. Paddington Press.

> Among the Brave New Worlders, the control of human nature was achieved by eugenic and dysgenic breeding, by systematic conditioning during infancy [which] is as old as Pavlov.[207]

H.H. Laughlin's publications promoted racial segregation and sterilisation of 'hereditary defectives.' In 1922, Laughlin published the Model Sterilization Law mandating the involuntary sterilization of 'useless' people. Thirty USA states passed laws allowing sterilization of mentally ill, diseased, blind, orphaned, homeless, disabled people, and criminals. Laughlin's Model Sterilization Law provided the model for, and was virtually identical to, the Nazi sterilisation laws resulting in 2 million sterilizations.[208] In 1936, the Nazi-run Heidelberg University awarded Laughlin an honorary MD degree 'in recognition of studies made on human heredity and population analysis and control.' The USA sent a large delegation to the university in honour of its 150th anniversary, to witness the Heidelberg University student body parade in Nazi Stormtrooper uniforms.

COMMUNIST REVOLUTION

The Soviet Union caused tens of millions of deaths, far more than Nazi Germany. Like Nazism, Communism stemmed from occultism and is violently anti-Biblical.[209] Russian author and historian Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1918 - 2008) wrote:

> Within the philosophical system of Marx and Lenin, and at the heart of their psychology, hatred of God is the principal driving force, more fundamental than all their political and economic pretensions.

Russian Communist Party leader Leon Trotsky wrote:

> In the 18th century, Freemasonry became expressive of a militant policy of enlightenment, as in the case of the Illuminati, who were the forerunners of revolution.[210]

Trotsky said leftist Illuminati members became the Italian 'Carbonari' secret revolutionary societies that spread socialist ideas and achieved prominence during the Napoleonic French revolution. (Napoleon named himself New Apollyon after the god Apollo.)

> Illuminism was among the many occult philosophies of the time, with influences from the ancient belief systems of Gnosticism and Hermeticism. It was based on a loose idea

---

[206] Rory Carroll (2002). Bell Did Not Invent Telephone, US Rules. The Guardian, 17 Jun.

[207] Michael Horowitz & Cynthia Palmer (eds) (1977). Moksha: Aldous Huxley's Classic Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience, 95. Stonehill.

[208] Lenny Lapon (1986). Mass Murderers in White Coats: Psychiatric Genocide in Nazi Germany and the United States. Psychiatric Genocide Research Institute.

[209] Joshua Philip (2017). The Dark Origins of Communism: How communist ideology was formed by the dark occult, atheism, and societies of violent revolution. Epoch Times, 7 June.

[210] Leon Trotsky (1930). My Life.

> of personal enlightenment through reason, with a heavy focus on materialism and the nature of man - and often with strong anti-religious and anti-government overtones.

Destruction of moral restraint and the deification of human nature over suppression of divine aspirations, is fundamental to Communist ideology. Communism basically amounts to rebellion against God and a hatred and destruction of humanity. Hence the Luciferian end goal is to oppose and destroy everything God stated and created and replace these with genetically engineered and mechanised replicas. Our youth, indoctrinated with the philosophy of evolution and the religion of scientism, are ready to embrace the final evolutionary phase of transhumanism.

> Man-as-Machine
> The man-as machine idea appealed to men's desire to control themselves and others, to replace disorder with order, to get on the bandwagon of Science (which was revolutionizing society), and to replace the theological explanations of man's nature which were coming to seem more and more achronistic. From Thomas Hobbes to B.F. Skinner, the list of man-as-machine philosophers could serve as the greater part of a reading list for a course on modern intellectual history: Spinoza, Julian Offray, de la Mettrie, Hartley, Jeremy Bentham, Joseph Townsend, Thomas Huxley, James Mill, John Locke, Auguste Compte, Saint-Simon, Eramus Darwin, Hegel, Herbert Spencer, William Graham Sumner, Haeckel, Hume, Pierre Simon de LaPlace, and Rene Descartes. The list would also include such pro-fascists as Gumplowicz, and the founders of Communism, Marx and Engels… The cost of this controlled happiness was to be the extinction of human liberty…[211]

THE FINAL REVOLUTION

Throughout history, the Rothschilds and their predecessors orchestrated and financed every major revolution (Industrial, French, Communist, etc). There is coming a Final Revolution to end all revolutions. This final revolution, psychological in nature, inspired Project MK-ULTRA, and will be expedited by nuclear war. Out of the ashes of chaos a dystopian new world order will arise like the Luciferian phoenix, complete with tyrannical dictator. The Bible predicts this, and so did Aldous Huxley, the evil revolutionary who founded and coordinated Project MK-ULTRA in the USA. The coming social order will combine Aldous Huxley's Brave New World with George Orwell's 1984. Both 1930s novels are proving to be more blueprint than fiction. Aldous Huxley compared the two books in a letter he wrote George Orwell from California, 21 October 1949:[212]

> The first hints of a philosophy of the ultimate revolution — the revolution which lies beyond politics and economics, and which aims at total subversion of the individual's psychology and physiology — are to be found in the Marquis de Sade, who regarded himself as the continuator, the consummator, of Robespierre and Babeuf…

---

[211] Alan Scheflin & Edward Opton (1978). The Mind Manipulators. Paddington Press.

[212] Rob King (2012). In the future, I'm right: Letter from Aldous Huxley to George Orwell over 1984 novel sheds light on their different ideas, Daily Mail, 7 March.

> My own belief is that the ruling oligarchy will find less arduous and wasteful ways of governing and of satisfying its lust for power, and these ways will resemble those which I described in Brave New World…
>
> I have had occasion recently to look into the history of animal magnetism and hypnotism, and have been greatly struck by the way in which, for a hundred and fifty years, the world has refused to take serious cognizance of the discoveries of Mesmer, Braid, Esdaile, and the rest…
>
> But now psychoanalysis is being combined with hypnosis; and hypnosis has been made easy and indefinitely extensible through the use of barbiturates, which induce a hypnoidal and suggestible state in even the most recalcitrant subjects.
> Within the next generation I believe that the world's rulers will discover that infant conditioning and narco-hypnosis are more efficient, as instruments of government, than clubs and prisons, and that the lust for power can be just as completely satisfied by suggesting people into loving their servitude as by flogging and kicking them into obedience…

Aldous Huxley repeated his goal of 'Final Revolution' as follows:

> We have had religious revolutions, we have had political, industrial, economic and nationalistic revolutions. All of them, as our descendants will discover, were but ripples in an ocean of conservatism – trivial by comparison with the psychological revolution toward which we are so rapidly moving. That will really be a revolution. When it is over, the human race will give no further trouble.[213]
>
> There will be, in the next generation or so, a pharmacological method of making people love their servitude, and producing dictatorship without tears, so to speak, producing a kind of painless concentration camp for entire societies, so that people will in fact have their liberties taken away from them, but will rather enjoy it, because they will be distracted from any desire to rebel by propaganda or brainwashing, or brainwashing enhanced by pharmacological methods. And this seems to be the final revolution. [214]

Aldous Huxley recruited to MK-ULTRA the famous behavioural psychologist, B.F. Skinner, who wrote a novel in the dystopian tradition. In Walden Two, Skinner echoed Aldous Huxley writings concerning a psychological revolution:

> Now that we know how positive reinforcement works, and why negative doesn't, we can be more deliberate and hence more successful, in our cultural design. We can achieve a sort of control under which the controlled…nevertheless feel free. They are doing what they want to do, not what they are forced to do. That's the source of the

---

[213] Aldous Huxley quoted in Lewis M. Andrews & Marvin Karlins (1971). Requiem for Democracy? An Inquiry into the Limits of Behavioural Control, 1. New York.

[214] Aldous Huxley (1959). Speech to Tavistock Group, University of California Medical School. In Michael Horowitz & Cynthia Palmer (eds) (1977). Moksha: Aldous Huxley's Classic Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience, 171. Stonehill.

> tremendous power of positive reinforcement—there's no restraint and no revolt. By a careful design, we control not the final behaviour, but the inclination to behave - the motives, the desires, the wishes. The curious thing is that in that case the question of freedom never arises.[215]

DYSTOPIAN PREDICTIVE PROGRAMMING

Before Hollywood, literature and reading groups provided the vehicle for cultural change. Hence the introduction of the dystopian genre by Wells, Huxley and Orwell. Thomas Huxley taught biology to H.G. Wells at the Royal College of Science. Wells became head of British Intelligence and the author of 'science fiction' classics that reflect the New World Order technology and agenda. War of the Worlds, Time Machine, The Island of Doctor Moreau anticipated the invention of aircraft, tanks, space travel, nuclear weapons, satellite television, the internet, the sexual revolution, motorised transport, suburban growth, time travel, genetic engineering, invisibility, and 'alien' invasion. H.G. Wells in turn educated George Orwell who wrote 1984 and Animal Farm. Wells also educated Thomas Huxley's grandsons Julian and Aldous Huxley at Oxford. Aldous Huxley taught high school French to George Orwell.

BRAVE NEW WORLD

Aldous Huxley wrote his 1932 classic Brave New World in H.G. Well's dystopian style. Huxley's novel plus 1984 were essential cult reading prescribed by the Grande Dame who trained me. Brave New World portrays a Fabian Socialist state built on eugenics, where genetically and socially engineered babies are behaviour modified via mind control methods including drugs, electric shock, verbal repetition, and pedophilia. The resultant artificially created caste system possess the same labels (Alpha, Beta, Delta, Gamma, Epsilon) correspond with MK-ULTRA's program classifications. Alpha are the high IQ ruling class, while the mass-cloned Epsilon slave class possess a mental age of 10 years. The lower classes are sterilised, while the upper-class women take birth control pills stored on their 'Malthusian' belts (a reference to Social Darwinism). Everyone is in a drug-induced state of happiness, and the water is drugged. Everyone is sexually promiscuous, young children are forced to engage in sexual activity with each other, while love, relationships, and displays of emotion are forbidden. For entertainment, people listen to synthetic music and watch shallow, sensory-based films featuring action and soft porn. No one learns history, and there is no religion. A form of spiritual ritual involves Isis Cult-like drug fuelled orgies. The characters are named after communists Lenin, Marx and Trotsky, and industrialist Ford, representing two arms of the same dialectic (Communism and Capitalism) that led to the Final Revolution that this book describes.[216] Brave New World also notably references Napoleon, Darwin, and the Rothschilds. The citizens are regenerated by drugs, voluntarily euthanised in mass crematoriums with the aid of drugs, and their dead bodies are turned into fertiliser as their final act of servitude to the collective.

UNITED NATIONS: CHILD SEX TRAFFICKING FRONT

The UN is a front for child sex trafficking. To illustrate:

---

[215] Burrhus Frederic Skinner (1948). Walden Two. Hackett Publishing.

[216] Jan Dyer (2018). Shocking Reality Behind Huxley's Brave New World, 11 Aug. [jayanalysis.com]

- I attended a 1992 lecture on Child Abuse and Neglect at Perth's Princess Margaret Hospital where speaker Freda Briggs stated that police had recently raided United Nation's headquarters in Geneva due to its operating as a child prostitution brothel.
- A 1996 UN study revealed, 'In six out of 12 country studies on sexual exploitation of children in situations of armed conflict prepared for the present report, the arrival of peacekeeping troops has been associated with a rapid rise in child prostitution.'[217]
- In 2001, UN Peacekeeper Kathryn Bolkovac publicly exposed an elite underage sex trafficking operation in Bosnia involving the UN, US State Department, US Military, and DynCorp International (a global private military contractor funded by the US federal government).[218]
- In 2017, investigative journalists revealed, 114 UN Peacekeepers ran a child sex ring in Haiti for a decade but were never imprisoned.[219]

HUXLEY'S UNESCO: its PURPOSE & PHILOSOPHY

Julian Huxley was an evolutionary biologist and president of the British Eugenics Society. He founded, and was first Director General of, UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation) the UN's propaganda arm for implementing cultural revolution. Julian Huxley coined the term 'transhumanism' to describe a philosophical movement that advocates for using technology to enhance human physiology and intellect. Huxley said:

> I believe in transhumanism: once there are enough people who can truly say that, the human species will be on the threshold of a new kind of existence, as different from ours as ours is from that of Peking man. It will at last be consciously fulfilling its real destiny.[220]

Huxley's transhumanism is synonymous with Huxley's eugenics:

> Critics have likened transhumanism to a modern-day version of eugenics, the discredited field of improving the human race through controlled breeding.[221]

In his 1947 book, UNESCO: Its Purpose and its Philosophy, Julian Huxley described his plans for achieving global cultural control.[222] He proposed combating the 'inequality of man and races' with 'the democratic principles of the dignity, equality and mutual respect of men.' (This echoes the Freemasonic creed of the French Revolution, 'Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, Solidarity.') Eugenics was his primary tool for achieving equality:

> …the other primary aim of eugenics should be the raising of the mean of all desirable qualities. While there may be dispute over certain qualities, there can be none over a

---

[217] United Nations (26 August 1996). The Impact of Armed Conflict on Children. UNICEF.

[218] Kathryn Bolkovac & Cari Lynn (2011). The Whistleblower: Sex Trafficking, Military Contractors, and One Woman's Fight for Justice. Palgrave Macmillan.

[219] Associated Press (April 13, 2017). UN child sex ring left victims but no arrests, Paisley Dodds.

[220] Julian Huxley (1957) Transhumanism. In New Bottles for New Wine, 13-17. Chattos & Windus.

[221] J.B. Stewart, M. Goldstein & J. Silver-Greenberg (2019). Jeffrey Epstein Hoped to Seed Human Race With His DNA. The New York Times, 31 July.

[222] Julian Huxley (1947). UNESCO: Its Purpose and its Philosophy, Public Affairs Press.

> number of the most important, such as a healthy constitution, a high innate general intelligence, or a special aptitude such as that for mathematics or music.

Julian Huxley alluded to the Luciferian end goal of radical population reduction by proposing the existence of an optimal population number: '…there is an optimum range of human population density, and of total population in the world.' (p.15). Huxley dared not disclose his optimal population figure, which would have exposed the Luciferian plan to (a) preserve a minority of wealthy, healthy, high IQ cult initiates who serve, and are useful to the collective, and (b) annihilation of the 'dead weight.'

> …the dead weight of genetic stupidity, physical weakness, mental inability, and disease proneness, which already exists in the human species, will prove too great a burden for real progress to be achieved. Thus even though it is quite true that any radical eugenic policy will be for many years politically and psychologically impossible, it will be important for UNESCO to see that the eugenic problem is examined with the greatest care, and that the public mind is informed of the issues at stake so that much that now is unthinkable may at least become thinkable. (p.21)

Julian Huxley proposed using Communist propaganda to force cultural change upon a reluctant Judeo-Christian society:

> Taking the techniques of persuasion and information and true propaganda that we have learnt to apply nationally in war, and deliberately bending them to the international tasks of peace, if necessary, utilising them, as Lenin envisaged, to 'overcome the resistance of millions' to desirable change. (p.60)

On page 12, Huxley emphasised the need for 'provision of birth control facilities.' The term 'birth control' was coined by one of H.G. Well's many mistresses. Besides birth control, Luciferian eugenicist methods of population control include famine, war, unequal distribution of planetary resources, biological warfare, fluoride (an aluminium waste product), GMO and other food contaminates, fracking and other environmental poisoning, vaccination, pharmaceuticals, radiation, crime, sexual promiscuity and sexually transmitted diseases, euthanasia, destruction of heterosexual marriage, divorce, abortion and suicide. Like Julian Huxley said, he would use propaganda to overcome our resistance and make the unthinkable thinkable. The unthinkable slaughter of newborn babies is now thinkable, as the US currently debate the legalisation of 'post-birth' abortion. My childhood abusers called this ritual child sacrifice.

Julian Huxley suggested recruiting artists, critics, historians, anthropologists, divines, theologians, archaeologists, poets, and academics to help introduce a focus on Eastern and primitive indigenous culture to the West. He said, 'the development of culture in the various regions of the Orient must receive equal attention to that paid to its Western growth.' This cultural embracement would include Eastern and primitive pagan, shamanic, witchcraft, occultic, spiritual, and sexual practices.

On page 13, Julian Huxley blatantly revealed the end goal of 'evolutionary progress' is a 'one world sovereignty' that opposes Christianity:

> …two opposing philosophies of life confront each other from the West and from the East… You may categorise the two philosophies…as individualism versus collectivism; or as the American versus the Russian way of life; or as capitalism versus communism; or as Christianity versus Marxism.[223]

Julian Huxley's UNESCO document proposed the same totalitarian regime led by the 'Lawless One' described in Revelation. Communism opposes the Rule of Law. The Lawless One beheads dissenters who refuse to comply with the Luciferian New World Order. The coming regime will mandate child sacrifice and mandated DNA-altering vaccinations which switch off the death gene and qualify recipients for eternal hellfire. Huxley insinuates what the Bible clearly states, that people will be forced to choose between two ways of life: Christian versus atheistic, Luciferian communism.

JULIAN HUXLEY: WHO

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is the UN's public health branch. Julian Huxley, Margaret Mead (anthropologist), and three pioneers in development psychology - John Bowlby, Erick Erikson, and Jean Piaget - attended monthly WHO meetings in Geneva (1953-56) to discuss child psychobiology. The proceedings were published by Tavistock, the UK's mind control research centre. John Bowlby also attended similar weekly meetings at the Tavistock Clinic. Four Tavistock Study Groups (held in 1959, 1961, 1963 and 1965) were called 'Ciba-symposia' because they were funded and arranged by the Swiss 'Ciba' foundation (renamed 'Novartis'). Ciba published a journal called Ciba Symposia. The 1947 edition of the journal tellingly featured three articles about 'Early Psychotherapy' - Psychotherapeutic aspects of Shamanism, Egyptian Psychotherapy, and Psychotherapy in the Greek and Roman World.[224]

Aldous Huxley's role as US MK-ULTRA coordinator is indicated by his correspondence with MK-ULTRA doctors. For instance, Colgate University Library possesses George Estabrooks' unpublished documents pertaining to his MK-ULTRA research. A '1962' file contains correspondence between Estabrooks and Milton, Erickson, Martin Orne, and Aldous Huxley.

John Bowlby (Attachment Theory pioneer) and Aldous Huxley exposed their intentions for humankind during correspondence regarding Bowlby's ape attachment experiments. Bowlby modified the relationship between the mother ape and her baby which resulted in a retarded baby chimp. Huxley praised this result as an example of the ability to destroy the human genetic code.

Aldous Huxley revealed his association with Louis Jolyon West in a letter to Timothy Leary:

> I also spoke briefly to Dr Joly West (prof. of psychiatry at U. of Oklahoma medical School), who told me that he had done a lot of work in sensory deprivation, using improved versions of John Lilly's techniques. Interesting visionary results – but I didn't have time to hear the details.[225]

---

[223] Julian Huxley (1947). UNESCO: Its Purpose and its Philosophy, 61. Public Affairs Press.

[224] Ciba Symposia (1947). Early Psychotherapy. 9:1-2, April-May, 609-632.

[225] Michael Horowitz & Cynthia Palmer (eds) (1977). Moksha: Aldous Huxley's Classic Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience, 186. Stonehill.

SEEMINGLY CONTENDING CULTS

Aldous Huxley directed society toward revolution against both man and God via his introduction of the 1960s counterculture based on the Isis and Dionysian Cults. The ancient Egyptian oligarchies organized themselves into priesthoods and created numerous seemingly contending pagan cults. This Hegelian-Dialectic approach was emulated by the Huxley-Wedgewood family in Britain, the USA and Australia. Hence the emergence of many interrelated occultic groups which my Sydney perpetrators belonged to.

All secret societies stem from the ancient mystery religions. Greco-Roman mystery religions were cults that required secret initiation and ritual practice. It was strictly forbidden to reveal the practises to outsiders. All mystery religions in turn stem from Babylonian Luciferianism, hence all secret societies practice Luciferianism at their top levels. Luciferianism, the religion of the world's wealthiest families, includes pedophilia and child murder as religious ritual. The secret services (including the CIA, Mossad, MI6 and ASIO) operate as their private police force, and most secret service members are themselves Luciferian pedophiles. Thus, Omaha Nebraska child trafficking victims were dropped at Offutt Airforce Base to be raped by CIA pedophile staff.

CHILDREN OF THE SUN

Edward Bulwer-Lytton developed the secret Dionysian cult Children of the Sun into which the children of the British Round Table Society were initiated. Dionysus (Roman Bacchus) was the Ancient Greek god of wine, fertility, ritual madness, religious ecstasy, and theatre. Cult members engaged in perverted, drug-fuelled sexual orgies involving bestiality. Initiates included Aldous Huxley, his gay lover D.H. Lawrence, Aleister Crowley, T.S. Elliott, and Oswald Mosley (a fascist photographed while given the 'heil Hitler' salute, who had sex with his stepmother plus sister-in-law).

HERMETIC ORDER OF THE GOLDEN DAWN

Opium addict Aleister Crowley was a British Intelligence agent and 33° Freemason. Crowley founded the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn (HOGD) in 1886. An Isis-Urania cult, HOGD was based on the 1877 manuscript 'Isis Unveiled' in which Russian Luciferian Helena P. Blavatsky called for the British aristocracy to organize themselves into an Isis Priesthood resembling the Ancient Egyptians. Blavatsky wrote:

> And now it stands proven that Satan, or the Red Fiery Dragon… Lucifer, or 'Light-Bearer,' is in us: it is our Mind—our tempter and Redeemer, our intelligent liberator and Saviour from pure animalism.
>
> [One] of the most hidden secrets…involves the so-called fall of Angels. Satan and his rebellious host…will thus prove to have…become the direct Saviours and Creators of divine man… Thus Satan, once he ceases to be viewed in the superstitious spirit of the church, grows into the grandiose image… It is Satan who is the God of our planet and the only God. Satan (or Lucifer) represents…the Centrifugal Energy of the Universe… this ever-living symbol of self-sacrifice for the intellectual independence of humanity.[226]

---

[226] Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1988). The Secret Doctrine, 2, 513, Theosophical University Press.

The 'fall of Angels' Blavatsky referred to were documented in the Book of Enoch, which was found among the Dead Sea Scrolls, included within the Ethiopian Bible, and referenced in the Biblical book of Jude:

> 8:1. And Azâzêl taught men to make swords, and knives, and shields, and breastplates, and made known to them the metals of the earth and the art of working them, and bracelets, and ornaments, and the use of antimony, and the beautifying of the eyelids, and all kinds of costly stones, and all colouring tinctures.
>
> 2. And there arose much godlessness, and they committed fornication, and they were led astray, and became corrupt in all their ways. Semjâzâ taught enchantments, and root-cuttings, Armârôs the resolving of enchantments, Barâqîjâl, taught astrology, Kôkabêl the constellations, Ezêqêêl the knowledge of the clouds, Araqiêl the signs of the earth, Shamsiêl the signs of the sun, and Sariêl the course of the moon. And as men perished, they cried, and their cry went up to heaven…

…

> 9:1. And then Michael, Uriel, Raphael, and Gabriel looked down from heaven and saw much blood being shed upon the earth, and all lawlessness being wrought upon the earth… 6. Thou sees what Azâzêl hath done, who hath taught all unrighteousness on earth and revealed the eternal secrets which were preserved in heaven, which men were striving to learn… 8. And they have gone to the daughters of men upon the earth, and have slept with the women, and have defiled themselves, and revealed to them all kinds of sins. 9. And the women have borne giants, and the whole earth has thereby been filled with blood and unrighteousness.

…

> 10:8. And the whole earth has been corrupted through the works that were taught by Azâzêl: to him ascribe all sin.

According to a key Hermetic text, 'The legends of the Fallen Angels have a basis in actual fact, as all advanced occultists know.'[227] The HOGD passed on the 'eternal secrets' revealed by Azazel. 'Hermetic' refers to Hermes/Thoth. Egyptian Thoth was the god of law, magic, philosophy, religion, science, and writing. Thoth taught humans geometry, architecture, the calendar, and the concepts of space and time. The HODG teach esoteric philosophy based on the Hermetic Qabalah, astrology, tarot divination, geomancy, astral travel, magic/science classical elements (Earth, Water, Air, Fire, Ether) and alchemy (aka, transhumanism, genetic engineering, cloning, gene splicing, chimera manufacturing). The same subject areas were explored and developed by scientists tied to Nazism, NASA, JASON, DARPA, DoD, CERN, Dulce, Area 51, Pine Gap, and ANSTO.

HOGD co-founders William Butler Yeats, William Westcott, and several other Bulwer-Lytton protégés were Freemasons. Westcott was also Chief of England's Rosicrucian Society and a Theosophist. Notable HOGD initiates included Aldous Huxley, Charles Henry Allan Bennett (who introduced Buddhism to the West), plus occult-fantasy authors J.R.R. Tolkein and C.S. Lewis. H.G. Wells introduced Aldous Huxley to Aleister Crowley, who introduced Aldous to psychedelic drugs in 1929. The HOGD and its offshoots were involved with the Nazis and the British Royal family. The 'heil Hitler' salute, which the British Royals were filmed teaching to young princesses Elizabeth and Margaret, was a HOGD ritual sign.

---

[227] The Kybalion (1908). Yogi Publication Society, Chicago, p.133.

Hermetic Principle of Vibration[228]

According to the Hermetic Principle of Vibration, 'differences between different manifestations of Matter, Energy, Mind, and even Spirit, result largely from varying rates of Vibration,' and 'Every thought, emotion or mental state has its corresponding rate and mode of vibration.' This Principle 'was enunciated thousands of years ago, by the Masters of Ancient Egypt.' 'An understanding of this Principle, with the appropriate formulas, enables Hermetic students to control their own mental vibrations as well as those of others.' This principle of vibration was researched under Project MK-ULTRA and applied under MK-DELTA, by Hermetic psychologists and scientists:

> The Hermetists were the original alchemists, astrologists and psychologists, Hermes having been the founder of these schools of thought. From astrology has grown modern astronomy; from alchemy has grown modern chemistry; from the mystic psychology has grown the modern psychology of the schools.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Emma Hardinge Britten (1823 - 1899) was a member of the more senior Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor and one of 17 occultists who attended the Theosophical Society's founding meeting at Blavatsky's New York home on 7 September 1875. Britten wrote:

> The persons I came into contact with were representatives of many other countries than Great Britain. They formed one of a number of secret societies…They claimed that alchemy, medieval Rosicrucianism, and modern Freemasonry were offshoots of the original Cabala, and during the last 150 years new associations had been formed, and the parties who had introduced me into their arcanum were a society in affiliation with many others then in existence in many countries… The arts necessary for study to the practical occultist are…a knowledge of the qualities of drugs, vapours, minerals, electricity, perfumes, fumigations, and all kinds of anaesthetics.[229]

Blavatsky, Britten and their secret society colleagues practised Ancient Egyptian magic arts in which priests evoke and employ 'the spirits of the elements.' Hence Freemason lodges are decorated in Ancient Egyptian paraphernalia. In Art Magic, Britten wrote of using initiation rituals and drug/meditation-induced altered states of consciousness to channel, summon and control spirits.

> Among the emblems most commonly seen in this connection are the following: the phallus, the lingam, the triangle, all the different methods of exhibiting the cross, the serpent with its tail in its mouth, and a vast number of such geometrical signs as include the triangle, cross and circle.[230]

---

[228] Ibid, pp.30, 146.

[229] Emma Hardinge Britten (1887). The Two Worlds, 18 November, 3-5

[230] Emma Hardinge Britten (1876). Art Magic, 57, section 5, New York.

The lingam is used to worship Shiva (aka Isis, Ishtar, Easter, Queen of Heaven, Roman Catholic Mary). The 'Ishtar-lingam' is an egg-shaped stone. The cross is an occultic symbol, since the Bible states Jesus Christ was in fact nailed to a living tree. Luciferians recognise the cross, Christmas, Easter, Christmas cakes, panettone, hot-cross buns, Sunday pagan temple worship, as pagan concepts. The serpent with its tail in its mouth is the Ouroboros, which represents eternal rebirth, or transhumanist resurrection, a reference to the Luciferian pursuit of eternal life via an alternative means rather than bodily transformation through belief in Jesus Christ.

ANTHROPOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

L. Frank Baum (Wonderful Wizard of Oz author) was in the Theosophical Society. Close friends J.R.R. Tolkein (Lord of the Rings) and C.S. Lewis (The Lion, Witch and the Wardrobe) were HOGD members. In his autobiography, C.S. Lewis credited his enduring 'passion for the occult' to a school mistress who introduced him to the 'Anglo-American Occultist tradition' based on 'Theosophy, Rosicrucianism, Spiritualism.' Lewis and Tolkien were in the Oxford reading group 'The Inklings' with HOGD member Charles Williams.

The Oxford Inklings, including C.S. Lewis and J.R.R Tolkien, were influenced by German Luciferian Rudolf Steiner who created a Theosophical Society offshoot which he called the Anthroposophical Society. Senior Nazi Rudolph Hess strongly supported Rudolf Steiner whose writings reflect his eugenicist philosophy:

> If the blondes and blue-eyed people die out, the human race will become increasingly dense… Blonde hair actually bestows intelligence.[231]

The Anthroposophical Society became the fastest growing cult in post-war Germany.[232] Anthroposophy means 'human wisdom.' Rudolph Steiner created counter-cultural movements within architecture, farming (biodynamics) and education. His 'Waldorf' schools are located internationally including in Australia. The Steiner school curriculum features sacred geometry, clairvoyance, alchemy, necromancy, reincarnation, karma, and 'Ahriman' of Mithraism. Steiner schools teach:

- 'Christ' is the sun god,
- Lucifer has good qualities,
- The actual existence of pagan gods including Thor and Zeus,
- The origins of Atlantis
- The Aryans 'Root Race' of fallen angels, as aspired to by Blavatsky and Hitler, and described in Edward Bulwer Lyon's Vril: The Power of the Coming Race (1871).

ORDO TEMPLI ORIENTIS [233]

Emma Hardinge Britten and Aleister Crowley helped found Thelema and the Ordo Templi Orientis (aka, OTO, Hermetic Brotherhood of Light, Order of the Temple of the East, or Order of Oriental Templars).

---

[231] Rudolf Steiner 91981). Health and Illness, Vol.1. Anthroposophic Press, pp.85-6.

[232] Martin Gardner (1957). Fads and Fallacies in the name of Science. Dover, pp.168-9.

[233] Gregory Tillett, History of the OTO, Wentworth Building, University of Sydney.

> The Ordo Templi Orientis was established in 1895, in part as a Western interpretation of certain Oriental occult teachings, and in part as a restoration of a tradition which had been largely forgotten in the West. Its original members were Freemasons, and in 1902 the authority of a Masonic Rite was conferred upon them for the establishment of a Grand Lodge in Berlin within which the Grades of the O.T.O. would be worked.
>
> The Founders of that Grand Lodge were Carl Kellner, Franz Hartmann and Heinrich Klein. The Grand Lodge was formally constituted on January 22nd, 1906, and this constitution was revised on January 22nd, 1917. National Grand Lodges were established for Germany (including Germany, Austria and Switzerland), and later for France (1908), the Slavonic Countries (1912) and Great Britain (1912).
>
> Amongst the eminent figures who were, at one time, associated with the work of the Order were Gerard Encausse ('Papus'), Dr Rudolf Steiner, and Dr R.W. Felkin. Following the death of the first Outer Head of the Order, Carl Kellner, in 1905, Theodor Reuss became the second Outer Head. During his period in office there was a rapid, and not altogether properly administered, expansion in the Order. It was Reuss who, in 1911, admitted Aleister Crowley to the Order and, in 1912, appointed him head of the Order for Great Britain. Crowley effectively took over the pre-existing traditions of the Order and shaped them to suit his own interests...
>
> Crowley revised and rewrote the rituals of the Order, and his work attracted considerable notoriety. It is from the Crowleyan version of the Order that virtually all modern claimants to the title, tradition or working of the Order come, and to which virtually all who write about the Order refer.

HUXLEY'S 1960s COUNTERCULTURE

Via the Hofjuden, the British Royals assassinated or deposed every world leader who threatened their agenda:

- President Lincoln ruined Britain's slave cotton trade, which was pivotal to their opium trade,
- President Kennedy threatened to destroy the Hofjuden-owned CIA and Federal Reserve,
- President Nixon directed his 'War on Drugs' at the Hofjuden banks, and
- PM Gough Whitlam established the investigation into Australia's intelligence agencies (First Hope Commission, 1974 to 1977), threatened to out the CIA agents in Australia, and refused to renew the CIA's lease on Pine Gap.

The Rothschild family and their New York Jewish banking cousins, the Lehmans, established themselves in the USA via the pre-Civil War cotton and slave trade. These families supported Britain's successful efforts to recapture the USA which they lost during the Confederate War, via the drug/rock counterculture. Counterculture literally meant 'anti-culture' - the intentional destruction of the existing Judeo-Christian culture and replacing it with Luciferian culture. British Intelligence officer Aldous Huxley coordinated the 1960s drug-rock counterculture including the introduction of psychedelics to the USA.

Just when you thought you knew the 60s…

Aldous Huxley moved to the USA in 1937 and remained there for WW2. Aldous and pedophile Christopher Isherwood were employed as Hollywood script writers for Warner Brothers, MGM, and Walt Disney studios. During the late 1930s to 1940s, Huxley and Isherwood laid the foundation for the 1960s drug-rock counterculture by recruiting people into the Isis Cults that Huxley's mentors (Bulwer-Lytton, Blavatsky, and Crowley) had formed while stationed in India. Huxley founded multiple Isis Cults in southern California and the San Francisco area, while Isherwood translated and propagated ancient Zen Buddhist documents that inspired Zen-mystical cults.

The 1960s counterculture was a complete resurrection of the Isis and Dionysian cults. The MK-ULTRA puppeteers rebranded the Isis Cross as the famous peace symbol of the '60s counterculture. The 1960s hippies played Dionysian Cult instruments including 'Pan' pipes, tambourines and skin drums. The Rite of Isis incantations, drum beating, dances, repetitive movements (like throwing the head back), and hallucinatory substances including mescal and hashish, created the dissociative trance state combined with hallucinations considered to be the visitation of the gods (spiritual possession). Hippies thought they were 'becoming one' with the goddess Mother Earth. Ancient cult drugs were sacred and their knowledge, preparation and gathering were secret. The Isis drug and dance ritual were reproduced at '60s CIA events like Woodstock. The sex orgies of the Isis Cult became the 'free love' hippie orgies of the 'sexual revolution.' Both involved liberation from civilization's rules and constraints and featured a return to primordial nature Mother Earth and animalistic sexual behaviour. The ancient cults featured sex with animals.

In 1952, Aldous Huxley accompanied his family doctor, Humphrey Osmond, to the USA. Huxley recruited Osmond to conduct research for CIA Director Allen Dulles' MK-ULTRA covert LSD experiment. Osmond wrote Schizophrenia: A New Approach in which he said mescaline (used in ancient Egyptian and Indian pagan rituals) produced a psychotic state identical in all clinical respects to schizophrenia, and so experimentation with hallucinogenic drugs may be key to developing a cure. In his book 'The Doors of Perception' Huxley claimed hallucinogenic drugs 'expand consciousness.'

In California, Huxley recruited to MK-ULTRA individuals who were initially attracted to the Isis Cults he founded during his previous USA visit, including Alan Watts and anthropologist Gregory Bateson (Margaret Mead's husband). Watts became a nationwide Zen Buddhist cult guru who founded the Pacifica Foundation, a CIA cut-out which sponsored two radio stations used to introduce the 'Liverpool Sound' to the USA, namely Rolling Stones, Animals, and The Beatles, followed by 'acid rock' and fascist 'punk rock.' The Beatles, who featured Aleister Crowley on their album cover, took copious drugs and consulted their Indian guru, and so recruited a generation of youth to Huxley's Dionysiac counterculture.

Gregory Bateson became the director of a MK-ULTRA LSD experiment at Palo Alto VA Hospital in which patients were brainwashed into becoming 'psychedelic' Isis Cult hippies. One patient, Ken Kesey, completed One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest three years after he was subjected to Bateson's LSD experiments. Kesey then assembled a group who administered LSD to unsuspecting victims lured to the Haight-Ashbury district of San Francisco via Scott McKenzie's counterculture song, 'San Francisco.' Huxley and Bateson established a 'free clinic' in the area to treat the subsequent addicts. This clinic paralleled a project at the Tavistock Institute, the psychological warfare agency for British Secret Intelligence.

In 1960, Aldous Huxley gathered a Harvard LSD team comprised of Humphrey Osmond, Alan Watts, Timothy Leary, and Richard Alpert. Timothy Leary wrote The Psychedelic Experience based on the Ancient Tibetan Book of the Dead, to promote LSD as 'consciousness expanding.'

ESALEN

Aldous Huxley founding the Esalen Institute in Big Sur, California, in 1962 via Stanford graduates Michael Murphy and Dick Price, to explore what Aldous called 'human potentialities' (i.e., human consciousness). Esalen became headquarters of Huxley's counterculture movement, and led the New Age movement, Humanistic Psychology, and Gestalt Psychotherapy. Esalen teachers included Aldous Huxley, Arnold Toynbee, Timothy Leary, Carl Rogers, B.F. Skinner, Joan Baez, Ken Kesey, John C. Lilly, Rollo May, Abraham Maslow, Erik Erikson, and Deepak Chopra. Fritz Perls was an Esalen resident scholar for five years. In its early days, the Esalen facility was guarded by a gun-wielding Hunter S. Thompson who belonged to a child pornography ring linked to Bohemian Grove during the 1980s. Thompson was offered $100,000 to make child porn snuff films during Luciferian rituals at Bohemian Grove.[234]

LAUREL CANYON

Dave McGowan[235] researched Laurel Canyon, an isolated community hidden in the Hollywood hills that manufactured the 'Rock Star' musicians, singers and songwriters of the 1960s Counterculture:

- Frank Zappa
- Gram Parsons
- The Mamas & the Papas
- Buffalo Springfield
- The Byrds
- The Monkees
- Steppenwolf
- Crosby, Stills & Nash
- Neil Young
- Alice Cooper
- Jimi Hendrix
- Charles Manson.

Major record labels suddenly signed these unknown musicians, provided them with musical equipment, recording studios, and session musicians, and recorded, mixed, arranged, released, and promoted their albums.

Most of these musicians came from Military Intelligence families:

- Frank Zappa's father was a chemical warfare specialist at Edgewood Arsenal (home to MK-ULTRA's biowarfare program) who later did classified work for Military Intelligence at Edwards Air Force Base. Zappa's manager, Herb Cohen, was a former US Marine who spent 1961 in the Congo, supplying arms to Lumumba. Frank Zappa's wife Gail (nee Adelaide Sloatman) came from a family of Naval officers. Her father worked on classified nuclear weapons research for the US Navy. Gail attended a

---

[234] John DeCamp (1992). The Franklin Cover-up. AWT.

[235] Dave McGowan (2008). Inside The LC: The Strange but Mostly True Story of Laurel Canyon and the Birth of the Hippie Generation.

Naval kindergarten with Jim Morrison (The Doors), and high school with John Phillips and Cass Elliott. She later worked as a secretary for the Office of Naval Research and Development.
- Jim Morrison's father commanded the fleet during the Gulf of Tonkin incident (false flag) that led to an escalation of the Vietnam War.
- John Phillips wrote 'San Francisco (Be Sure to Wear Flowers in Your Hair)' which lured teen runaways to the MK-ULTRA acid project in Haight-Asbury. His father was a US Marine Corp officer, and his sister worked at the Pentagon. Phillips attended elite military schools and dropped out of Annapolis Naval Academy before marrying the daughter of an intelligence operative (a descendent of President John Adams) who worked for the Pentagon. Prior to his role as a CIA musician, Phillips was in Havana, Cuba, for the Cuban Revolution.
- Stephen Stills (Crosby, Stills & Nash) was educated at schools on military bases and at elite military academies before allegedly serving a tour of Vietnam.
- David Crosby is the son of an Annapolis graduate and WWII Military Intelligence officer. His family history includes senior politicians, judiciary, military and high-ranking Freemasons.
- Jackson Browne also stemmed from a career military family. His father was likely OSS.
- Mike Nesmith (Monkees) and Cory Wells (Three Dog Night) were in the US Air Force. Gram Parsons (The Byrds) was the son of an Air Force officer. Nesmith and Parsons were heirs to old money.

Laurel Canyon was linked to numerous untimely and questionable deaths of stars, many of whom died on significant satanic ritual dates, most notably Charles Manson's cult butchering of pedophile Roman Polanski's pregnant wife Sharon Tate.

CIA CULT CUT-OUTS

The CIA began using cult cut-outs to conceal their MK-ULTRA mind control activities, from 1963 onwards. The CIA started new cults or infiltrated existing cults as part of their Occultism in High Places project.[236] The CIA developed numerous cults during the 1960s hippie movement centred in California. The CIA's use of cults for social control experimentation resulted in famous group murders and mass suicides.

OTO LODGES

OTO Agape Lodge in Pasadena, CA was founded by Satanist Jack Parsons, the rocket scientist who worked with Nazi Von Braun, and who co-designed the Pentagon's occultic shape. Aleister Crowley highly influenced Parsons to become high priest in this, the USA's first OTO lodge.

Order of the Temple of Astarte (OTA), also founded in Pasadena CA, practised Hermetic magic. In 1973, Louis Tackwood told journalist Donald Freed the OTA were a 'devil-worshipping cult' and on the LA Police Department payroll.

Solar Lodge of the OTO (aka Riverside Lodge of the OTO) in San Bernardino, CA, was linked to drug trafficking, blood drinking, child rape and murder. Founding lodge members were found guilty of the ‘Boy in the Box’ case featuring a six-year-old boy chained for 56 hot summer days in a shipping container in the desert.[237] Charles Manson, who slaughtered pedophile Roman Polanski’s wife Sharon Tate, belonged to this OTO lodge.

---

[236] Miles Copeland (1989). The Game Player. Aurum Press. 176-177.

Order of the Solar Temple (OTS) mixed Thelema, Rosicrucianism, Freemasonry, Ufology, and New Age philosophy. The OTS established lodges internationally including in Australia and Canada. The Lodges featured altars, rituals and robes. In October 1994, a three-month-old baby was stabbed to death with a stake at the Quebec OTS lodge. Immediately following this, 15 leaders ‘suicided’ with poison and 38 members were murdered by various means at OTS lodges in Switzerland. In December 1995, 15 people were found dead in the French OTS lodge. In March 1997, five OTS members were found dead in Quebec, while two children of one of the dead couples were found heavily drugged.

Jonestown

The OTS mass deaths mimicked the assassinations the CIA conducted to cover up their Jonestown MK-ULTRA experiment. The Jonestown experiment was conceived, staffed and financed by Lawrence Laird Layton (University of California lecturer, former Manhattan Project chemist, and early 1950s head of the Army’s chemical warfare research division). His son Larry Layton led the Jonestown death squad that murdered Congressman Leo Ryan who was in Guyana to investigate the CIA’s formation of cults.

Waco

Jonestown was a step toward the massive 1993 psychological operation known as Waco, Texas. The US government’s torture and assassination of innocent women and children began by shooting dead a blonde preschool boy sent to the front door waving a white surrender flag. Victims were mass subjected to sleep deprivation via flood lighting, plus amplified loops of screeching rabbits and Nancy Sinatra threatening ‘these boots are gonna walk all over you!’ FBI agents (Bush Senior’s former bodyguards) were filmed being executed by their own men during the exercise. Waco husbands and fathers who rushed home from work and tried to enter the compound were shot dead climbing the fence. Finally, the government blocked all compound exits with flame-throwing tanks that incinerated and flattened the children they were supposedly there to rescue. The US public swallowed the official explanation that these crimes against humanity were committed to rescue abused cult victims.

Scientology

Before founding Scientology, L. Ron Hubbard closely associated with Satanist and OTO high priest Jack Parsons. Together they performed a ‘Babalon Working’ ritual aimed at manifesting the Anti-Christ. Historical records stored at Scientology’s New York headquarters contain letters between Jack Parsons and Aleister Crowley, in which Parsons wrote (1946):

> About three months ago I met Capt. L. Ron Hubbard, a writer and explorer of whom I had known for some time. Although he has no formal training in Magick he has an extraordinary amount of experience and understanding in the field. From some of his experiences I deduce he is direct touch with some higher intelligence, possibly his Guardian Angel. He is the most Thelemic person I have ever met and is in complete > accord with our own principles. He is also interested in establishing the New Aeon, but for cogent reasons I have not introduced him to the Lodge.

---

[237] Frater Shiva (2007). Inside Solar Lodge - Outside the Law. Teitan Press.

L. Ron Hubbard based Scientology on Aleister Crowley's black magic:

> The one super-secret sentence that Scientology is built on is: 'Do as thou wilt. That is the whole of the law.' It also comes from the black magic, from Aleister Crowley. It means that you are a law unto yourself, that you are above the law, that you create your own law. You are above any other human considerations.

Capt. L. Ron Hubbard had links to the Office of Naval Intelligence, and MK-ULTRA. Hubbard participated in CIA drug experiments at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington DC. Miles Copeland (CIA Case Officer) said CIA operative Bob Mandelstam used Scientology as a front for his covert Occultism in High Places scheme.[238]

The Orange People

This sex cult was based on Tantra, Taoism and Hinduism. Led by Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, the CIA-created cult established a large following in Australia before moving the operation to Oregon.

> In 1985 the Portland Oregonian published a 36-part, book-length series linking the cult to opium trafficking, prostitution, money laundering, arson, slave labour, mass poisonings, illegal wiretaps and the stockpiling of guns and biochemical warfare weapons. The year-long Oregonian investigation revealed cult ties to CIA-trained mercenaries in El Salvador and the Far East. Domestically, Rajneesh's secret police force worked with Agency operatives.[239]

The Family International

The 'Children of God' group was CIA created in 1968. The pedophile cult produced comic books instructions for 'flirty fishing' – i.e., child rape. Cult parents were encouraged to have sex with their own children. A raid on the cult's Argentinian compound produced videos of child pornography and Satanic Ritual Abuse. An Australian offshoot, 'The Family,' was a MK-ULTRA eugenicist experiment which Julian Assange's mother married into. The following chapter discusses the Australian CIA cults.

* * *

---

[238] Miles Copeland (1989). The Game Player: The confessions of the CIA's original political operative. Aurum Press.

[239] Alex Constantine (1995). Psychic Dictatorship in the USA. Feral House.

MK-ULTRA in Australia

> …it was fun, fun, fun. Where else could a red-blooded American boy lie, kill, cheat, steal, rape, and pillage with the sanction and blessing of the All-Highest?
>
> - George Hunter White

The CIA coined the term 'conspiracy theory' to discredit whistle-blowers like me. Project MK-ULTRA is conspiracy fact. Irrefutable evidence of its existence sits in the US Library of Congress in a document titled:

> Project MKULTRA, the CIA's Program of Research in Behavioural Modification, Joint Hearing Before the Select Committee on Intelligence and the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research of the Committee on Human Resources United States Senate Ninety-Fifth Congress First Session, August 3, 1977.

According to this document, MK-ULTRA was an umbrella project for CIA-funded subprojects conducted in respected government and private institutions. Experiments conducted at universities, hospitals, prisons, and research facilities used drugs, hypnosis, electric shock, psychology, psychiatry, radiation, harassment substances, and paramilitary devices and materials, to manipulate human behaviour.

The committee hearing was a whitewash. MK-ULTRA was far more sinister than the public were told. The following facts remain hidden from public understanding:

- Doctors and scientists, including the pioneers of psychology and psychiatry, routinely tortured, raped, and murdered children whom the CIA kidnapped and trafficked for Project MK-ULTRA.
- In the early 1970s, Australia became the main child recruitment location after Project MK-ULTRA's US operation was publicly exposed.
- The Australian and US military and Intelligence services collaborated to train Australian DELTA child soldiers for special operations.

EVIDENCE MK-ULTRA USED CHILDREN

Evidence that MK-ULTRA doctors experimented on children is sparse. Here are three documented cases:

1. Robbers Cave Experiment

In 1953, Muzafer Sherif (a suspected Communist) conducted his initial MK-ULTRA experiment at Middle Grove in upstate New York, with Rockefeller Foundation funding.[240] Sherif recruited underprivileged 11-year-old boys from poor families with offers of a free summer camp. He deceived the parents and did not inform them or their children they were being used as subjects for a psychological experiment. The aim of the experiment was to demonstrate that people could be taught to hate, and friends could become enemies. Sherif's theory was that we are shaped by the group that were members of, and if you change the way groups operate, you can alter the way people feel and behave. Sherif pitted two peaceful groups of children against each other and used sabotage and provocation to incite the boys to turn on each other. His first experiment failed. His second, successful experiment was conducted in 1954 at Robbers Cave in Oklahoma using boys selected based on observations of their school playground behaviour. The subjects were divided into two groups: rebellious types versus placid types who prayed. The latter group were traumatised by the unbridled behaviour of the rebellious group. The subjects were not debriefed afterwards, and some were seemingly permanently detrimentally impacted.

---

[240] David Shariatmadari (2018). A real-life Lord of the Flies: the troubling legacy of the Robbers cave experiment. The Guardian, 16 April.

2. Martin Orne & John Gittinger Named to Presidential Committee

The Advisory Committee on Human Radiation Experiments was established in 1994 to investigate the US government's unethical human radiation experiments. On March 15, 1995, New Orleans trauma therapist Valerie B. Wolf and her clients, Claudia S. Mullen and Chris deNicola Ebner appeared before the Advisory Committee in Washington, D.C. to testify on the connection between the Radiation Experiments and Mind Control Experimentation on Children. Wolf submitted:

> Generally, it appears that therapists across the country are finding clients who have been subjected to mind control techniques. The consistency of their stories about the purpose of the mind control and torture techniques, such as electric shock, use of hallucinogens, sensory deprivation, spinning, hypnosis, dislocation of limbs and sexual abuse is remarkable. There is almost nothing published on this aspect of mind control used with children, and these clients come from all over the country, having had no contact with each other… It needs to be made clear that people have remembered these names and events spontaneously with free recall and without the use of any memory-retrievable techniques, such as hypnosis.

Claudia S. Mullen testified:

> Between the years of 1957 and 1984, I became a pawn in a government scheme whose ultimate goal was mind control and to create the 'perfect spy' — all through the use of chemicals, radiation, drugs, hypnosis, electric shock, isolation in tubs of water, sleep deprivation, brainwashing and verbal, physical, emotional and sexual abuse. In 1958, I was to be tested, they told me, by some important doctors coming from a place called the 'Society' (the Human Ecology Society). [aka, Human Ecology Fund]
>
> …
>
> A Dr John Gittinger tested me, and Dr [Ewan] Cameron gave me the shocks and Dr Greene the x-rays. Then, I was told by Sid Gottlieb I was 'ripe for the big A,' meaning 'Artichoke.'… The next year, I was sent to a place in Maryland called Deep Creek Cabins to learn how to 'sexually please men.' Also, I was taught how to coerce them into talking about themselves. It was Richard Helms (Deputy Director of the CIA), Dr Gottlieb, Captain George White and Morse Allen who all planned on filming as many high government and agency officials and heads of academic institutions and foundations as possible, so later, when the funding for mind control and radiation started to dwindle, then the projects would continue — at any cost. I was to become a regular little 'spy' for them after that summer, eventually entrapping many unwitting men, including themselves, all with the use of a hidden camera. I was only nine when this kind of sexual humiliation began. [Martin Orne was the only pedophile not filmed.]

> …
> Another time, I heard Dr Martin Orne, who was the Director of the Scientific Office, and later the Institute for Experimental Research, state that in order to keep more funding coming from different sources for the radiation and mind control projects, he suggested stepping up the amounts of all the 'stressors' used and also the blackmail portion of the experiments. He said, 'It needed to be done faster, then get rid of the subjects, as it was asking for 'us' to come back and haunt them by remembering.'

3. Josef Mengele & Ewan Cameron Killed Kids in Catholic Montreal

In 1997, Quebec Ombudsman Daniel Jacoby reported on his findings regarding the Duplessis Orphans.[241] His report glossed over multiple witness accounts of orphans being subjected to MK-ULTRA atrocities. In 1944, Quebec Premiere Maurice Duplessis, President Franklin Roosevelt, Prime Minister Winston Churchill, MacKenzie King, and CIA Director Allen Dulles reportedly attended a Quebec Conference to finalise a secret agreement where Quebec's Catholic Orphanage children were given to the British and US military to be used as MK-ULTRA lab rats. Approximately 22,000 orphans were automatically certified mentally ill, to qualify them as subjects for MK-ULTRA research involving electrocution, lobotomy, rape, Deep-Sleep, LSD and other drug experiments at psychiatric facilities including Ewan Cameron's Allan Memorial Institute, Saint Michel Archange Hospital and St Jean de Dieu.

Josef Mengele in Nazi Germany.

Mengele in Saint Michel Archange Hospital's 1949 Yearbook?

The 1949 Saint Michel Archange Hospital yearbook contains a photo of what may be 38-year-old Josef Mengele (who disappeared from Germany in 1948) bending down to examine a boy in a wheelchair.[242] Duplessis Orphan Sylvio Albert Day recognised Joseph Mengele performing lethal experiments on children at St Jean de Dieu hospital in 1960. Concordia University's student newspaper explains: [243]

> During his time in power from the mid-1930s to the late 1950s (with one break where the Liberals re-took power), Duplessis transferred power to the Church by extending

---

[241] Daniel Jacoby (1997). Quebec Ombudsman, in a report to the National Assembly, The Children of Duplessis: A Time for Solidarity, St. Foy, 22 January.
[242] http://lunamoth1.blogspot.com/2011/06/dr-mengele-comes-to-quebec-1949.html
[243] Lou Teeluck (2018). The Order of Grey Nuns Facilitated Child Kidnappings, The Link, 4 Sept.

> their responsibilities to include operation of most social services like orphanages. This gave the Church authorization to act as a government-sponsored agency—minus any form of public accountability.
>
> At the time, federal funding allocated $0.70 to $1.25 per day, per orphan to the church. If an orphan was mentally disabled, they received $2.50 in subsidies. This precipitated a mass scale process of proliferating 'orphans' and intentionally misdiagnosing them as mentally disabled to qualify for the larger subsidy.
>
> In many instances, the children recruited weren't legitimately orphaned. Nuns and priests would travel to low-income neighbourhoods throughout Quebec and Eastern US and convince parents to hand over their children, promising them a better future.
>
> Bernard Piché, a doctor who falsely certified the orphans as mentally disabled, admitted to not examining any children in 1999. In a statement, Piché said, 'I did it because the nuns asked me to.'

…

> The matching testimonies of the Duplessis orphans being tortured with electro-shock therapy, forcible injections with powerful drugs and other human experimentation raises serious concern that this tragedy was part of MK-Ultra—a US government program which honed torture techniques and had a known human-experimentation centre in McGill University.
>
> Sylvio Albert Day, a Duplessis Orphan, says that one of the priests was Josef Mengele, a former Nazi doctor during World War II. Day's job was to transport dead bodies into unmarked graves. Some of these bodies had to be cleaned because in 1942 Quebec law allowed nuns to sell unclaimed bodies to medical schools for $10.

At St Jean de Dieu hospital, Sylvio Day transported approximately 70 dead bodies in three months. That equates to Josef Mengele and his MK-ULTRA doctors murdering one child per workday in a single hospital. Sylvio said the children were as young as 4, their skulls often had holes drilled into them, and one had its brain removed. Bodies not sold to medical schools were placed in cardboard boxes and stacked in mass graves in the 'pigsty' cemetery.

MARTIN ORNE AT SYDNEY UNIVERSITY

CIA psychiatrist and psychologist Martin Theodore Orne conducted MK-ULTRA Subproject 84 at the University of Sydney during a two-month lecture period in 1960. His experiment was jointly funded by the US Airforce Office of Scientific Research (grant number AF-AFOSR-88-63) and the Human Ecology Fund (HEF) under the project title Attitude Formation, Decision Matrices.[244] The HEF also financed Hans Eysenck's Subproject 111 under the same title. Hence subprojects 84 and 111 were related and both influenced Australian operations. The HEF was a Cornell University based CIA cut-out for financing MK-ULTRA activities including Ewen Cameron's crimes at Montreal's Allen Memorial Institute.

---

[244] Price, David. (2007). Buying a piece of anthropology Part 1: Human Ecology and unwitting anthropological research for the CIA. Anthropology Today. 23, 8-13.

Martin Orne's 1960 visit was sponsored by USEFA (US Educational Foundation in Australia), the Australian body of the Fulbright Scholarship and Lectureship Program.[245] The CIA used the Fulbright program to insert their agents or contractors into MK-ULTRA subprojects.

University of Sydney Psychology faculty head, Alfred Gordon Hammer, approved Subproject 84. Gordon Hammer (then APS Chair) subsequently spent two sabbaticals in Martin Orne's Philadelphia laboratory during the 1960s and 70s.[246] Leading up to Martin Orne's visit, Gordon Hammer ran a weekly hypnosis seminar attended by University of Sydney students who became major contributors to MK-ULTRA hypnosis research:

- Frederick Evans
- Wendy-Louise Walker
- George Singer
- Wendy A. Fairfax-Thorn
- Jean Jones
- Margaret Austin,
- Peter Sheehan
- Campbell W. Perry.[247]

In April 1960, four months before Martin Orne visited Sydney, George Hoben Estabrooks invited him to speak at a Colgate College symposium.[248] Estabrooks, father of the Manchurian Candidate, boasted eight years later:

> The key to creating an effective spy or assassin rests in splitting a man's personality, or creating multi-personality, with the aid of hypnotism. This is not science fiction. This has and is being done. I have done it. It is child's play now to develop a multiple personality through hypnotism.[249]

Martin Orne's presentation paper was later titled 'Antisocial Behaviour and Hypnosis.' His experimental objective was to see if hypnotised subjects would carry out dangerous and harmful acts they normally would not. The resultant article, Social Control in the Psychological Experiment: Antisocial Behaviour & Hypnosis, published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, was co-authored by Martin Orne and University of Sydney psychology student Frederick J. Evans. The abstract of the 1965 paper reads:

> Rowland and Young found that hypnotized subjects were willing to carry out such apparently antisocial actions as grasping a dangerous reptile, plunging their hand into concentrated acid, and throwing the acid at an assistant.[250]

Frederick Evans and Martin Orne subsequently assumed positions at the University of Pennsylvania, the USA's major MK-ULTRA research hub.[251] Australian psychologists Peter W.

---

[245] The Canberra Times, 1960. 27 July, 5.

[246] Campbell Perry (2001). Hypnosis in Australia 40 Years Ago: Recollections of Gordon Hammer, Martin Orne, and Philip Sutcliffe. Australian Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, Nov, 29:2, 83-92. Australian Society of Hypnosis.

[247] Ibid.

[248] Colin Ross (2006). The CIA Doctors: Human Rights Violations by American Psychiatrists. Manitou Communications.

[249] Providence Evening Bulletin (1968). 'To Sleep; Perchance to Kill?' Colgate University Archives, 13 May.

[250] F.J. Evans & M.T. (1965). Social Control in the Psychological Experiment: Antisocial Behaviour & Hypnosis, Journal of Personality and Social Psychology. 1, 189-200.

[251] John F. Kihlstrom (2006). Frederick J. Evans, American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 49:1, 3-4.

Sheehan and Campbell W. Perry conducted Manchurian-candidate hypnosis experiments with this Pennsylvanian research network. Campbell Perry became a board member of the CIA's False Memory Syndrome Foundation headed by Martin Orne.

Wendy A. Fairfax-Thorn was a student in Phil Sutcliffe's Psychology department, studying hypnosis and multiple personality disorder with Subproject 84 psychologist Frederick J. Evans. In 1960, Wendy Thorn completed a University of Sydney thesis on posthypnotic amnesia, then presented her paper Hypnosis and Suggestibility to the ABBPS. In 1961, the ABBPS financed a post-graduate research scholarship to ANU (Australian National University) for Wendy Thorn to study the placebo effect. Her resultant 1962 ANU thesis noted: 'This study would have also lacked a great deal without the information, advice and materials supplied by Professor H.J. Eysenck (director of MK-ULTRA Subproject 111).[252] From 1963 to 1964, Wendy Thorn participated in hypnosis research with Frederick J. Evans while receiving assistance from the CIA-funded Studies in Hypnosis Project directed by Martin Orne. In 1963, Fred Evans attended Harvard on a Fulbright Scholarship to work and publish with Martin Orne.[253] Wendy Thorn later collaborated with Fred Evans and Hans Eysenck on MK-ULTRA research at Maudsley Hospital Institute of Psychiatry (IoP) in London.[254] [255] Wendy Thorn and Fred Evans subsequently co-published a paper on hypnotic amnesia in 1966.[256]

Phillip Sutcliffe had MK-ULTRA connections which led to Martin Orne commencing his MK-ULTRA hypnosis research at the University of Sydney. Peter Sheehan explained:

> Phil had network connections with Martin Orne, and very quickly I got drawn into a very extensive program of research – that was funded in Australia – and then through the network and the associations and working with Phil Sutcliffe, I then went across to work with Martin Orne in Philadelphia.

Phil Sutcliffe was influenced by his thesis examiner Hans Eysenck who directed MK-ULTRA Subproject 111.[257] In 1959, Phil Sutcliffe received the first University of Sydney PhD for his thesis Hypnotic Behaviour: Fantasy or Simulation? His thesis examiners were Gordon Hammer, Robert W. White (Harvard), and Hans Eysenck of London's Institute of Psychiatry which conducted CIA funded MK-ULTRA research. The examiners declared Sutcliffe's work 'a model for what a PhD thesis should be.' Robert White headed Harvard's Social Relations Department where MK-ULTRA doctors Henry A. Murray and Timothy Leary operated. After examining Phil Sutcliffe's thesis in November 1959, Hans Eysenck applied for a CIA grant to direct MK-ULTRA Subproject 111. The CIA Chemical Branch Chief concluded, 'Eysenck is one of the most skilful and productive psychologists on the international scene today and a grant to him would add prestige of the Society.'[258]

Peter Van Sommers: Phil Sutcliffe later connected with Peter Van Sommers, a University of Melbourne student who received a 1958 Fulbright Scholarship to become the first student in Experimental Psychology at Harvard's Social Relations Department.[259] At Harvard, Van Sommers placed electrodes in the brains of rats to create lesions used to control their behaviour. Harvard retained Van Sommers until 1961, after his Fulbright scholarship expired, because his research was valuable to DoD (Department of Defence) projects. Van Sommers also spent time at the University of Pennsylvania which offered the world's most cutting-edge psychology research laboratory. In the late 1960s, Van Sommers visited the Mecca of MK-ULTRA, Aldous Huxley's Esalen Institute in Big Sur, California.

---

[252] Wendy Anne Fairfax Thorn (July 1962). The Placebo Response: A Study of the Personality Correlates of Placebo Reactors. ANU.

[253] F.J. Evans & M.T. Orne. (1965). Motivation, performance, and hypnosis. International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis. 13, 103-16.

[254] Australian National University, Annual Report for 1961. Canberra.

[255] John F. Kihlstrom (2006). Frederick J. Evans, American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 49:1, 3-4.

[256] F.J. Evans & W.A.F. Thorn (1966) Two types of posthypnotic amnesia: Recall amnesia and source amnesia, International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 14:2, 162-179.

[257] John F. Kihlstrom (2006). Frederick J. Evans, American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 49:1, 3-4.

[258] Duncan Campbell (1979). CIA Funds Research by Eysenck. New Statesman, 11 May, 97.

SYDNEY UNI: AUSTRALIAN OCCULT & MK-ULTRA EPICENTRE

During the 1950s, '60s, and '70s, most leading universities in Australia (including Sydney, Western Australia, Melbourne, and Canberra's ANU) had staff and students in the MK-ULTRA network. The University of Sydney remained the epicentre of MK-ULTRA in Australia. My key MK-ULTRA perpetrators attended the University of Sydney. Harry Bailey graduated medicine in 1954. Leonas Petrauskas graduated with a diploma in Tropical Medicine in 1957 while Antony Kidman studied there. Kidman and Telford Conlon completed second year Chemistry together in December 1959, the same year Conlon's future wife Patricia Anne Carden passed third year English. John Manning Ward was History professor (1948-1979) while Anne was a history major, and Rosalind Croucher studied law in the 1970s. Ward became Vice-Chancellor (1981-1990). Holsworthy anaesthetist Colonel John Overton (Antony Kidman's next-door neighbour) graduated medicine in 1962 with heart transplant surgeon Victor Chang. Actor John Bell graduated from Sydney University in 1962.

My key perpetrators belonged to multiple secret societies including the Freemasons, Jesuits, Rosicrucians, Theosophical Society, the OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis), and self-styled esoteric groups. The various organisations were intertwined. Senior Australian Freemasons are closely tied to the international heads of Rosicrucianism. The OTO incorporate Jesuit teachings.

SYDNEY UNI: OTO & THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY BREEDING GROUND

The University of Sydney has a long occultic history. In 1882, the University of Sydney founding Chancellor John Smith became Sydney's first Theosophical Society member. John Smith was mentored by Emma Hardinge Britten who co-founded the Theosophical Society and the OTO. Smith was one of the select few to receive a letter from one of the 'Masters' (Morya and Koot Hoomi), Helena P. Blavatsky's spiritual guides to establishing the Theosophical Society. Blavatsky incorporated Buddhist Shambhala mythology into her occultic society and claimed to be in contact with a Great White Lodge / Brotherhood of Himalayan 'Masters', a group of highly developed humans. 'Master Morya' is described as a man 'living on the earth but possessed of developed senses that laughed at time and space.' OTO members are designated a number preceded by the title of 'Frater' which means fraternity brother of the 'Great White Brotherhood.' Australia's OTO Headquarters proudly advertised the following address - until my Candy Girl documentary was released:

PO Box 362
Wentworth Building
The University of Sydney
NSW 2006

---

[259] Peter Van Sommers interviewed by Alice Graner, Fulbright Scholars Oral History Project (National Library of Australia, 24 March 2010).

The Wentworth Building also contains the university of Sydney University's student services, student union, medical centre, banks, hairdresser, and shops. Gregory Tillet published the following on the University of Sydney OTO website:

> AUSTRALIAN OTO HISTORY
>
> The original, pre-Crowleyan Order had, however, been brought to Australia around 1908 by Vyvyan Deacon, who became the first Grand Master for the Order in Australia, having received his authority from the Outer Head, Theodor Reuss. Deacon (Frater Memnon) established the Order in Sydney and Melbourne and, during a visit to New Zealand in 1920-2l, attempted to lay the foundations of the Order there.
>
> Between 1914, when the active work of the Order in Australia commenced, and 1930, when Deacon returned to-London, the Order attracted, and influenced, a number of eminent Australians. Notable amongst them were several involved in the arts and literature.
>
> The Order became dormant after the departure of its Grand Master, who died in London in 1938; his archives, authorities and regalia (such of it as survived the Blitz) were entrusted to his daughter's guardianship until a successor could be appointed. Forty-four years later the guardianship was relinquished, and the authority and symbols of office were passed to Frater Memnon's successor. Frater Iacchos who, upon his appointment issued a decree, 'Of the True Secret of The O.·.T.·.O.·.,' in which he re-affirmed the original, pre-Crowleyan traditions and working of the Order.
> The O.·.T.·.O.·. in Australia works the traditions of the Order established by its founders, revised only insofar as has been necessary to remove later accretions.
> The Crowleyan Order was established in Australia in the 1920's by Frank Bennett ('Frater Progradior') who had been trained by Crowley as a missionary to Australia. His work attracted a degree of hostile publicity but failed to achieve any real influence. Its limited activity ceased when Bennett returned to England.

The international OTO Handbook lists Australia's OTO contact as:[260]

Kylie McKiernan
Quartermaster, Australia & New Zealand
PO Box 667
Toongabbie NSW 2146
Email: treasurer@otoaustralia.org.au

Kylie McKiernan is the Chief Risk Officer for the ABC (Australian Broadcasting Commission) at their Sydney office. The ABC is linked to the BBC which covered up the Luciferian pedophile crimes of Jimmy Savile. In 2015, British Intelligence agent Paul Barry mocked and slandered me on national television after I publicly spoke about my experience of government child sex trafficking which implicated the University of Sydney OTO.

---

[260] Ordo Templi Orientis (2002). International Camp, Oasis & Lodge Master's Handbook, Revised Spring Equinox.

The OTO International Handbook contains specific instruction not to publicly perform ritual animal sacrifice:

> Don't sacrifice animals or perform any other actions or practices which might adversely affect the Order's reputation or legal standing, including public performance of the Mass of the Phoenix, Liber Jugorum, or explicit sexual acts at official or public-access events.

My perpetrators were members of the University of Sydney OTO. Nicole Kidman and I witnessed her father Antony Kidman perform an OTO ritual murder of a five-year-old boy in the University of Sydney Great Hall. The ritual reflected Aleister Crowley's quote:

> For the highest spiritual working one must accordingly choose that victim which contains the greatest and purest force, a male child of perfect innocence and high intelligence is the most satisfactory and suitable victim… But the bloody sacrifice, though more dangerous, is more efficacious; and for nearly all purposes human sacrifice is the best.

ALF CONLON

University of Sydney Philosophy Professor John Anderson influenced psychiatrist Alfred Austin Justin Conlon and his 'small but persuasive group' of Australian intellectuals called the Directorate of Research and Civil Affairs (DORCA).[261] In 1939, Conlon was a 32-year-old medical student at the University of Sydney, and an elected member of the university Senate. When war broke out, Conlon became the university's Manpower Officer, which brought him into contact with the army hierarchy. As Manpower Officer, Conlon's expressed goal was to save Australia's intellectual cream from becoming cannon fodder for the British Empire. In 1942, Conlon convinced Brigadier Victor Stantke (Army Education Director) that the Army needed its own special research section. With zero military training or experience, Conlon became an Army Colonel. Conlon persuaded Prime Minister John Curtin to form, and appoint Conlon Chair of, the Prime Minister's Committee on National Morale. Conlon then convinced General Thomas Blamey (Commander-in-chief of the Australian Military Forces) that the research section should be upgraded to a directorate which advised on the civil government of Australian territories, particularly Papua New Guinea. The result was DORCA. The PNG campaigns (1944 – 1945) are partly attributed to General Blamey and PM Curtin falling under DORCA influence.

DORCA was staffed by University of Sydney employees and graduates who were heavily involved in the occult, associated with intelligence groups ASIO and CIA, had communist connections, and demonstrated massive international influence. Conlon assembled the following DORCA (later ASOPA) team:

- Camilla Wedgwood (English anthropologist, DORCA lecturer).
- Margaret Mead (American cultural anthropologist, married MK-ULTRA anthropologist Gregory Bateson).
- William E.H. Stanner (anthropologist, ANU lecturer, Aboriginal rights activist, advisor to my pedophile rapist PM Gough Whitlam).

---

[261] Peter Ryan (1972). Encyclopaedia of Papua and New Guinea, Melbourne University Press.

- Julius Stone (lawyer).
- James Plimsoll (banker, later head of External Affairs, Governor of Tasmania, Australian UN representative).
- James McAuley (DORCA lecturer, CIA/ASIO agent, poet, founding member of occultic Liberal Catholic Church).
- Harold 'Hal' Stewart (poet, Shin Buddhist, homosexual).
- Ida Leeson (Mitchell Librarian, member of Theosophical Society and Rudolph Steiner's Anthroposophical Society, Marxist lesbian feminist activist, pushed for a totalitarian New World Order).
- Peter A Ryan (journalist, WWII spy in PNG).
- J. Keith Murray (Queensland University agriculture professor, PNG Administrator, DORCA Principal).
- Ralph Piddington (DORCA Deputy Principal).
- Julius Stone (Oxford scholar, Sydney University law professor, radical Zionist, leftist minority rights activist).
- Herbert Cole 'Nugget' Coombs (economist, first Governor of the Reserve Bank of Australia, Governor Commonwealth Bank, ANU Chancellor, advised seven PMs over 30 years, drove business and politics behind the scenes).
- John Robert Kerr (wartime intelligence officer, Governor General of Australia, UNESCO Ambassador, my pedophile rapist).
- Ian Hogbin (DORCA lecturer. ANGAU officer Eddie Stanton wrote of Hogbin in his diary: 'He likes native boys.')
- John Andrews (DORCA lecturer).
- John Legge (DORCA lecturer).
- Theodore 'Ted' George Henry Strehlow (Anthropologist. Leading expert on Australian Aboriginal language, legend and ritual. DORCA lecturer.)

HIGH IQ RECRUITS

John Kerr and John Ryan became Alf Conlon's right-hand men. Conlon, Kerr, Ryan, Stewart, Hogbin, Plimsoll, and McAuley all graduated Fort Street High School, a selective school for intellectually gifted students located next door to the University of Sydney. Other DORCA staff graduated from alternative selective schools like Sydney Boys High. This is relevant to Conlon's hidden eugenicist agenda, indicated in this tribute:

> Alf Conlon (1908–61) was a visionary. He would not have known it, but his ideology had similarities with the Italian Marxist Antonio Gramsci. Conlon had a belief that the ideas that shape society come from a fairly small elite united by shared intellectual premises, and he sought to use the chaos of the war to establish a new kind of elite in Australia. What Gramsci termed 'organic intellectuals' Conlon thought of as his intellectual underground. When the war had begun to pose a direct threat to Australia, he could see that the fallout was going to destroy the credibility of the existing elites and undermine the derived power of the conventional establishment. He recognised the possibility of using the chaos to build a new power group with progressive ideas, organic to Australian society and based on intellect. No Marxist, Conlon insisted his 'New Men' would be a classless elite, yet those he had in mind were lower-middle-class > boys like himself who had come to university through the selective state school system. The poet James McAuley was typical of Conlon's incipient elite: brainy, ambitious, contemptuous and, most importantly, a product of Conlon's alma mater, Fort Street Boys High, Sydney, as were Hal Stewart, Ian Hogbin, Jim Plimsoll and a brilliant law graduate named John Kerr.[262]

THE MANOR

ASOPA's Sydney headquarters were located directly next door to The Manor at 2 Iluka Road, Clifton Gardens, Mosman. The Manor is a 30-room mansion which contains an Egyptian temple. The Theosophical Society rented The Manor in 1922, purchased it in 1925, and in 1951 created The Manor Foundation Ltd to own and administer the property.

In a 1983 court case, occupants of The Manor claimed to practise a religion there for the purposes of tax exemption status, and supplied the following examples of rituals conducted there:

> '…there was also a number of specific spiritual and educational disciplines to which they were expected to subject themselves. These involved attendance at a service of the Holy Eucharist which was a religious ceremony of the Liberal Catholic Church, somewhat similar to a communion service in the Anglican Church. This was held in the Manor Chapel each morning. There was also held each morning in the temple a short service of the Egyptian rite, which is the Theosophical ceremony of invocation... A solemn benediction service, also a service of the Liberal Catholic Church, took place every Monday night in the Chapel. Also, on Monday nights a further Egyptian rite service was held in the Temple.'

National Archive documents reveal that ASIO suspected the Theosophical Society headquarters were a major Communist hub where Soviet spies gathered to plan their infiltration of Australia. Leaders of the Theosophical Society, Freemasons, Rosicrucians, and Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO) met at The Manor to plan their cultural takeover of Australia via the University of Sydney which housed the national OTO headquarters. Camilla Wedgewood's cousin, James I. Wedgwood, a Theosophist and Freemason, established the OTO in Australia.

THEOSOPHY LEGACY

During the 1920s, the Theosophical Society had about 7,000 members in the USA, 2,500 in Australia, and 20,000 in India. Theosophy was closely linked to the Indian independence movement, the Indian National Congress, whose most famous leader and revolutionary, Mahatma Gandhi, became associated with and influenced by Theosophy while studying law in London (1888 to 1890). Gandhi attended Theosophical Society meetings and met with Madame Blavatsky and Annie Besant.

The Theosophical Society took control of early Australia's social and political systems. Theosophy is based on the notion of Aryan superiority. The Theosophist Society members influenced our second Prime Minister Alfred Deacon to create the White Australia Policy. Alfred Deakin's daughter Ivy Deacon co-founded Australia's first Eugenics Society with the Australian Theosophical Society's leader, and members of the Order of the Star in the East.

---

[262] Cassandra Pybus (2012). Conlon's Remarkable Circus, in Scholars at War: Australian Social Scientists, 1939-1945. ANU.

Ivy Deacon’s son, Alfred Deakin Brooks, became the first head of ASIS (Australian Secret Intelligence Service).

The Theosophists and Co-Masons created Australia’s first abortion clinic, started our Eugenics movement, and controlled Australia’s Kindergarten Union who provided public childcare. Theosophist and Co-Mason Edith Cowan (who is on our $50 note) was the first Australian to advocate for forced sterilization and government removal of children from Australian citizens. Edith Cowan, who pushed to sexualize children, created Australia’s Child Protection Society and Children's Court, the two government organisations responsible for a massive child trafficking operation where children are still taken from innocent parents and handed to pedophile foster parents for sex trafficking.

Walter Burley Griffin, who designed Australia’s capital city Canberra, belonged to the Anthroposophical Society, an elite version of the Theosophical Society. Canberra’s town plan is based on Freemasonic, occultic symbology and sacred geometry.

2GB RADIO PEDOPHILES

In 1926, the Theosophical Society founded one of Australia's first public broadcast radio stations, 2GB. They named 2GB after Hermetic occultist Giordano Bruno. Initially operating out of The Manor, 2GB promoted the Theosophical Society, Freemasonry, Eugenics, racism, and anti-Christian sentiment. 2GB broadcast the Sunday mass from the Liberal Catholic Church (LCC), an occult group which met in a Redfern church building.

The LCC was initiated by Charles W. Leadbeater and Camilla Wedgewood’s brother James Ingall Wedgwood. The LCC fused Freemasonry, Theosophy, and the OTO (who held their initial ritual in the LCC’s Redfern church). Leadbeater was a prominent Theosophist leader who trained under Madame Blavatsky, co-authored books with Annie Besant, and pursued, ‘a certain kind of meditation connected with the development of the mysterious power called kundalini.’ A notorious pedophile, Leadbeater served as headmaster at the English Buddhist Academy in Ceylon, and wrote numerous books on clairvoyance, the astral plane, and the chakras.

Wesleyan evangelist Gordon Moyes became the conservative ‘Christian’ face of 2GB. I attended one of Moyes’ famous crusades in Tweed Heads when I was a teenager and well recall his façade of respectability, impeccable grooming, and neat navy suit. Moyes preached to my generation on whether teens should kiss. . . all the while gangraping children with fellow Freemasons. ‘Big Tim, Little Tim’ documents Tim Roy’s experiences of ritual rape committed by multiple 2GB radio announcers including Gordon Moyes, who committed suicide while under police investigation; and Alan Jones, whose television appearances were momentarily suspended during police inquiry.

In 1973, Alan Jones was forced to resign from his position as a teacher at The King’s School in Sydney for sexually grooming students. On one occasion, ‘one of the masters found a letter, written by Jones to a boy, that had been left behind in a classroom desk. In it, Alan spoke of thinking about the boy late at night, expressing his love.’[263] Two of Alan Jones’ close associates were key members of Sydney’s pedophile network, lawyer John Marsden, and underbelly cop Roger Rogerson. According to multiple reports, all 2GB celebrities were pedophiles, including financier John Singleton. Tim Roy’s father worked at Daruk and sex trafficked Daruk boys to entertainers.

---

[263] Chris Masters (2006). Jonestown: The Power and The Myth of Alan Jones. Allen & Unwin.

JAMES McCAULEY

Founding member of the Liberal Catholic Church, James McCauley was an Australian Academic, Marxist (later anti-communist) and CIA/ASIO asset. A famous Australian poet, McCauley dedicated his poem Winter Nightfall to his friend Camilla Wedgwood. McAuley used sarcasm to inform the public that the Luciferian Order was operating in Australia:

> A great number of the Australian university intellectuals who gravitated to Communism did so by an interesting path: The fact that many of us danced in diverse incoherent snatches instead of performing to the strict choreography of Stalin is not decisive. The eccentrics, the dissenters even from the orthodoxy of dissent, might re-explore Nietzsche, or Stirner, or Sorel, or the anarchism lighted up by the Spanish Civil War (as I did – along with exploring the literary esoterisms of Blake, Mallarme, Rilke, George and so on). Never mind, we were all 'enlightened'; we all belonged somehow to the order of illuminati. [264]

JOHN KERR

Kerr was a Globalist and CIA agent who became principal of ASOPA in 1946, and later the first Secretary-General of the South Pacific Commission. In 1957, Kerr joined the executive board of the CIA's anti-communist advocacy group, Association for Cultural Freedom. In 1964, Kerr and future NSW Premier Neville Wran helped defend the counterculture Oz magazine (a propaganda tool used by the British Round Table) when it was prosecuted for obscenity. PM Gough Whitlam appointed Kerr as Governor-General in 1974.

ASOPA & WEAPONSIED ANTHROPOLOGY

ASOPA claimed their purpose was to police the Pacific Islands to expand Australia's sphere of global influence, and to train teachers and administrators for Papua New Guinea (PNG). They were in fact studying native tribes for weaponised anthropology, a Marxist method for understanding culture in order to find the key to subverting and destroying it (i.e., to social engineer a replacement Luciferian culture). ASOPA graduates attended field assignments in the Pacific Islands, including PNG and Manus Island, where they developed Australian colonies and conducted anthropological, medical, and anti-viral research connected to MK-NAOMI. Key anthropologists Camilla Wedgewood and Margaret Mead worked together at ASOPA.

MARGARET MEAD

A bisexual in later life, Hofjuden eugenicist Margaret Mead promoted the notion of sexual evolution throughout life. Mead pioneered Australia's sexual revolution and promoted sexual activity amongst pre-teen Western children based on her false reports of witnessing PNG tribal children engaging in sexual intercourse. Mead was subsequently outed as one of the greatest academic frauds of the 20th Century (yet the University of Queensland's Anthropology faculty celebrate her birthday). Mead was a member of the Society for Psychical Research, an occult group that consulted spirits.

An MK-ULTRA operative, Mead was instrumental in the Stanford Research Institute's Changing Images of Man project. The Stanford University faculty committee planned the Stanford Research Institute (SRI) at the Bohemian Grove pedophile summer camp of 1939 and established it in 1946. By 1965, most SRI projects were of a military and intelligence nature. Protesting Stanford students forced SRI to relocate off-campus in 1970.

---

[264] James McAuley (1960). Australian Quarterly, 14 May.

In 1968, the US Office of Education commissioned SRI to examine alternative future possibilities for the year 2000 and to derive policy implications for educating youth in ways more relevant to the NWO agenda. SRI reported which 'changes in the conceptual premises underlying Western society would lead to a desirable future.' SRI's conclusions were published in a book called Changing Images of Man (1974).[265] A blueprint for a vast social engineering project, the book blatantly attacks Protestant Christianity. Its Introduction to Chapter 4 reads:

> At various times in history, man's image of himself was shaped by mythology, philosophy, and religion. In our contemporary culture, science has added a dominant formative contribution to our conception of the nature of the human being — through biology and life sciences, physics, psychology, brain research, evolutionary theory, and the growing investigation of consciousness states and parapsychological phenomena.

CAMILLA WEDGEWOOD

Zionist Camilla Wedgewood was of the Darwin-Galton-Huxley-Wedgwood dynasty. Her parents were first cousins. Camilla's father Josiah Wedgwood was a British Labor politician, Army Colonel connected to Intelligence, and Zionist involved with the WW1 Jewish Legion and Mule Corp. Josiah was well involved with the Theosophical Society who published his book, The Future of the Indo-British Commonwealth, which promoted the creation of a NWO via universal Brotherhood, and determined Christianity is not the answer. The foreword by then Prime Minister of South Africa read: 'The New World Order will be a world of individualism controlled by Britain and America.' The SRI Changing Images of Man book parroted Josiah Wedgwood's content.

Camilla Wedgwood was into occultism, Freemasonry, and the Theosophical idea of a New World Order. She was a student of Rudolph Steiner, European spy, Freemason, member of the Order of the Illuminati, and OTO co-founder who claimed the 'Luciferic Impulse' manifested on Earth in 3000 BC. Camilla Wedgewood's mother Ethel was in a sexual relationship with Luciferian Theosophist Rudolf Steiner and translated most of his writings.

Camilla Wedgewood was a left-wing feminist who lectured at the University of Sydney. Appointed Principal of the university's Women's College in 1935, Wedgewood promoted Margaret Mead's false reports of sexual activity between tribal PNG children as the basis of condoning sex between prepubescent Western children, and she used her academic position to encourage sexual promiscuity among young women. She tellingly said post-war social change was the result of the intersection of 'the revolt of women and the revolt of youth.' In 1944, Alf Conlon commissioned Camilla Wedgwood as Lieutenant Colonel in the Australian Army where she served as a DORCA research officer. Wedgewood served two field years in PNG, and as senior ASOPA lecturer in Native Administration.

OPERATION MATCHBOX

Operation Matchbox was the codename for Australia's version of Operation Paperclip. Under Matchbox, Britain secretly organised the recruitment and transfer of at least 127 German scientists and engineers (including 31 Nazi party members and six SS) to Australia between 1946 and 1951.[266] Matchbox remained top secret until a journalist accidentally uncovered the secret operation in the National Archives of Australia.

---

[265] Joseph Campbell (1974). Changing Images of Man, Research Report, 4, May. Center for the Study of Social Policy, SRI International.

Operation Matchbox transferred chemical and biological weapons experts to Australian Military laboratories. In 1948, Operation Paperclip recruited Erich Traub, head of the Nazi's bioweapons projects.[267] Nazi bioweapons expert Vincent Zigas was recruited the same year. Vincent Zigas came from Estonia, a country which provided Nazi Germany with a National Legion during WWII. Vincent Zigas and Nazi physician Leonas 'Leo' Petrauskas (my main perpetrator and handler) were the 'dearest of friends.' When Operation Matchbox recruited Leonas Petrauskas to Australia in 1949, Zigas purchased him a house to help him settle in. National Archive documents confirm Leonas Petrauskas initially worked at Sydney's Concord Military Hospital.[268]

A 1949 document of the Commonwealth Investigation Service (ASIO's forerunner) lists Leonas Petrauskas and 'E. Traub' as having passed their security check for employment eligibility in PNG. Petrauskas and Zigas completed a four-month ASOPA course taught by Camilla Wedgewood and James McAuley before travelling to PNG where they shared a house together. Vincent Zigas became close friends with James McAuley and the godfather of his son.

Camilla Wedgewood introduced Leonas Petrauskas to Margaret Mead (wife of MK-ULTRA founder Gregory Bateson) on Manus Island in 1955. In the Preface of her 1956 book New Lives for Old, Margaret Mead thanked 'Leo' Petrauskas for assisting her in PNG, but misspelt his surname 'Petrauskis.'[269] In 1960, Petrauskas followed up research into heart disease and influenza by Camilla's nephew John Wedgwood. He also oversaw computer-based personality assessment at Saint Barts Hospital, London. Significantly, Leonas Petrauskas was involved with two Wedgewoods plus Margaret Mead in the space of 10 years.

While in PNG, Leonas Petrauskas wrote a study on the effects of poisoning by a Cone Fish sting on a child.[270] Petrauskas obtained a postgraduate qualification in Tropical Medicine at the University of Sydney in 1957. I witnessed Leonas Petrauskas use the cover of a blue ringed octopus sting to account for the death of the young boy murdered and raped by necrophiliac Paul Keating at Kurnell Beach in Sydney.

LEONAS PETRAUSKAS' OCCULT CONNECTIONS

Leonas Petrauskas came from Lithuania, a country with a strong pagan history. He connected with the Theosophical Society shortly after arriving in Australia. All the new immigrant events that Leonas Petrauskas participated in were held at the Theosophical Society. Leonas was involved with the New Australians Cultural Association (NACA) an organisation formed to assist newly arrived European immigrants settle into Australian life. Adyar Hall, a frequent home to NACA events, was owned by the Theosophical Society.[271] Adyar Hall was also used by the pro-Nazi Rationalist Association, and the Australia First Movement led by P.R. Stephenson (Aleister Crowley's associate). Leonas Petrauskas gave a talk for NACA at Adyar Hall in 1949. A previous NACA Vice-President was a leading member of the Theosophical Society.[272] Another NACA Vice-President was the grandson of a Prince initiated into Egyptian Freemasonry by Alessandro Cagliostro, an early occultist whom Aleister Crowley claimed to be an incarnation of. Eugene Goossens was notable NACA patron who was introduced to Thelema by Rosaleen Norton, the notorious Kings Cross Satanist. Goossens became Vice-President of CIA/ASIO front, The Australian Congress of Cultural Freedom with Ian Clunies-Ross (CSIRO head) serving as an Executive Member.

---

[266] Ian Traynor (1999). UK arranged transfer of Nazi scientists to Australia, The Guardian, 17 Aug.

[267] Hunt & Hunt (1991). Secret Agenda: The United States Government, Nazi Scientists, and Project Paperclip, 1945 to 1990. St. Martin's Press, 340.

[268] NAA: A518, 280/3/2419

[269] Margaret Mead (1956). New Lives for Old: Cultural Transformation - Manus, 1928-1953. Harper Collins.

[270] L.E. Petrauskas (1955). A case of conus shell poisoning by 'bite' in Manus Island. New Guinea Medical Journal, 1:67-68.

[271] Mehmet Sabeheddin, Esoteric Australia, New Dawn, Special Issue 3.

PROJECT MK-NAOMI in PNG

MK-ULTRA was related to MK-NAOMI, a joint CIA/US Army chemical and biological weapons project based at Fort Detrick, Maryland, that ran from 1953 to 1970. The project involved, 'developing, testing, and maintaining biological agents and delivery systems for use against humans as well as against animals and crops.' MK-NAOMI received CIA funding through MK-ULTRA Subprojects 13, 30 and 50.[273]

Daniel Carleton Gajdusek, an American physician, received the 1976 Nobel Prize for research on the PNG kuru disease. In 1957, Frank McFarland Burnet organised with Joseph Smadel of Fort Detrick to send military-trained Gajdusek to study the Kuru Virus Vincent Zigas discovered in PNG.[274] Joseph Smadel had conducted military virus research with his colleague Joshua Lederberg.[275] Frank McFarland Burnet employed Vincent Zigas to study the Kuru Virus in PNG and collect samples of it for Burnet's Melbourne laboratory.[276] Gajdusek's studies in PNG were financed by the US Army under a contract titled, 'Field Studies on the Control of Infectious Disease of Military Importance,' in connection with research at Fort Detrick.[277] Gajdusek sent samples of the virus to Smadel at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland.[278] Smadel was at the centre of all US bioweapons research. Gajdusek, Zigas, and Petrauskas worked together in PNG in 1959.[279] Between 1955 and 1977 Zigas regularly joined Gajdusek at the National Institute of Health in Bethesda, USA.

In 1957, Zigas met with Alex Sinclair, military psychologist and protégé of William Walters Sargant, the British end of MK-ULTRA.[280] Sinclair was sent to PNG to study the psychological effects of the Kuru Virus.[281] Sinclair later gave a speech, Forcible Indoctrination to the Papua New Guinea Scientific Society. Sinclair was involved with ECT (electroconvulsive 'therapy') and Deep Sleep Therapy brainwashing methods, and supported Sydney MK-ULTRA doctor Harry Bailey.[282] Alex Sinclair subsequently engaged in a Military Psychological Operation to influence PNG citizens' support of Australia's presence in their country.[283]

---

[272] Bogumila Zongollowicz, Poninski, Alfred Emeryk (1896–1968), Australian Dictionary of Biography, National Centre of Biography, ANU.

[273] C.A. Ross (2006). The CIA Doctors: Human Rights Violations by American Psychiatrists. Greenleaf Book Group.

[274] Caroline Richmond (2009). Carleton Gajdusek, The Guardian, 24 February.

[275] Letter (28 April 1949) from Joseph E. Smadel (Army Medical Center, Washington) to Joshua Lederberg.

[276] Caroline Richmond (2009). Carleton Gajdusek, The Guardian, 24 February.

[277] C.A. Kelleher (2004). Brain Trust: The Hidden Connection Between Mad Cow and Misdiagnosed Alzheimer's Disease. Paraview Pocket Books.

[278] Ibid.

[279] David Watters (2011). Stitches in Time: Two Centuries of Surgery in Papua New Guinea. Xlibris.

[280] Vincent Zigas (1990). Laughing Death: The Untold Story of Kuru. Humana.

[281] Ibid.

[282] World Heritage Encyclopedia, Chelmsford Royal Commission,

[283] Donald Denoon (2005). A Trial Separation: Australia And the Decolonisation of Papua New Guinea. Pandanus Books.

At Fort Detrick, Carleton Gajdusek transmitted a 'kuru like syndrome' into chimpanzees. The results of his experiment were published in Progress Report No.8 of the Special Virus Cancer Program. This program was used as cover for the extension of Project MK-NAOMI at Fort Detrick.

THEODOSIUS DOBZHANSKY

The American Eugenics Society published Carleton Gajdusek's Kuru research in 1962.[284] Soviet geneticist Theodosius Dobzhansky was Chairman of the American Eugenics Society the year before Gajdusek's Kuru research began.[285] Dobzhansky received a Fulbright Research Scholarship in 1959 to study the effects of Kuru and implement a eugenics policy of restricting the movement of the Kuru infected Fore tribe in PNG.[286] Dobzhansky did this while undertaking a PhD at the University of Sydney, which he received in 1960.[287] Dobzhansky was friends with Julian Huxley, and his daughter grew up to marry a CIA case officer.[288]

PNG PEDOPHILES

Paediatrician Carleton Gajdusek turned out to be a pedophile after he was convicted and sentenced for raping seven boys (of the 56 children) he brought back from PNG to use as live-in sex slaves. Gajdusek openly admitted to raping boys and approving of pedophilia. 'He remained unrepentant about his sexual relationships with the young boys. He often said he thought American law was unduly prudish and argued that he had chosen boys only from cultures where man-boy sex was common and unremarkable.' [289] Robert Gallo contributed $60,000 to Gajdusek's bail. In 1970, Robert Gallo spoke to NATO scientists on how to create AIDS-like viruses.[290]

CSIRO BIOWEAPONS DEVELOPMENT

The Fulbright scheme was used to station bioweapons experts in Australia. Arthur Galston (who helped develop Agent Orange at Fort Detrick in the 1950s) received a 1960 Fulbright Scholarship to work with the CSIRO.[291] A 1956 Fulbright scholarship was given to Joshua Lederberg of Fort Detrick to study Clonal Selection Theory with Sir Gustav Nossal and Sir Frank Macfarlane Burnet at the University of Melbourne.[292] Joshua Lederberg became key to bioweapons development after discovering bacteria can swap genes. His connection to Fort Detrick bioweapon research began in 1949. Joshua Lederberg received the 1958 Nobel Prize and moved to Stanford University. He became President of Rockefeller University, a member of the Defence Science Board and the mysterious JASON Group. Lederberg currently advises government on bioweapons and bioterrorism.

---

[284] D.C. Gajdusek (1962). Kuru: An Appraisal of Five Years of Investigation. American Eugenics Society.

[285] P.R. Winnick (2005). A Jealous God: Science's Crusade Against Religion. Thomas Nelson

[286] T. Dobzhansky (1960). The Kuru Disease in New Guinea. Journal of Heredity, 51:3, May-June, 110.

[287] University of Sydney, 1960 Senate Report.

[288] Michael D. Coe (2006). Final Report: An Archaeologist Excavates His Past. Thames & Hudseon.

[289] Thomas H. Maugh (2008). D. Carleton Gajdusek dies at 85; Nobel Prize winner identified exotic disease, was unrepentant pedophile. LA Times, 18 December.

[290] Andre D. Davis (2010). The God-Defined Self: A Layman's Perspective on Racism in America. Eloquent Books.

[291] Dept. State International Educational Exchange Program, American Lecturers and Researchers Scholars Receiving US Government Awards the Fulbright Act, 1960-61 Academic Year. Professional Division, Office of Cultural Exchange, Bureau of Educational & Cultural Affairs, September 1960.

[292] Dept. State International Educational Exchange Program, American Lecturers and Researchers Scholars Receiving US Government Awards the Fulbright Act, 1957-58 Academic Year. Professional Activities Division, International Educational Exchange Service, 23 August 1957.

In 1960, Frank Macfarlane Burnet won a Nobel prize for his virus research. Macfarlane developed the Myxoma bioweapon with his CSIRO colleagues. Joseph Smadel of Fort Detrick also made contributions to the Myxoma bioweapon, at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.[293] Ian Clunies-Ross (CSIRO head), Macfarlane, and Frank Fenner injected themselves with Myxoma to demonstrate the rabbit-killing virus was harmless to humans. Fenner said of his CSIRO work experience:

> If they can kill rabbits like that, we could get something that killed humans like that, it'd be wonderful. (Laughs) That's the sort of attitude you had to have if you were in that game.[294]

Frank Macfarlane Burnet was Australian head of the PNG fieldwork conducted by Vincent Zigas and Daniel Gajdusek (of Fort Detrick). The bioweapons research was funded by eugenicists connected to Macfarlane's friend, Leonard Huxley. Erich Traub had been active at Fort Detrick from 1949 onwards.[295] That same year, Macfarlane used Traub's research on mice infected with the Lymphocytic Choriomeningitis Virus to help explain how immunity was formed against retroviruses (like Kuru).[296] [297] Macfarlane was also connected to early MK-NAOMI operations at Fort Detrick. Erich Traub was also affiliated with the US Naval Medical Research Institute.[298] [299] [300] At the time, the Navy was focussed on viruses and diseases in PNG.[301] Frank Macfarlane Burnet was a member of the Australia's Defence Research and Development Policy Committee which planned to develop bioweapons to wipe out the 'teeming hordes' of Asia.[302] Macfarlane attended a 1957 meeting with the DoD to discuss Australia's use of Biological Weapons - shortly after returning from the UK's notorious Porton Down Chemical and Biological Weapons research centre.[303] Porton Down was the facility MK-ULTRA scientist Frank Olson visited to study MI6 Mind Control operations using psychoactive drugs, and it is connected to Olson's Fort Detrick and Project MK-NAOMI.[304]

Frank Macfarlane Burnet was an outspoken eugenicist who proposed reducing the world population by billions. DoD documents released in 2003 show Macfarlane advocated pre-emptive biological warfare against Asian nations to stop their numbers threatening Australia. Macfarlane was involved with the Australian Conservation Foundation (ACF) via his close friend Francis Noble Ratcliffe of the CSIRO who established the ACF under Julian Huxley's guidance. Chief Justice Garfield Barwick was the first ACF head, and a 1960s USEFA (US Educational Foundation in Australia) Director with Leonard Huxley.

---

[293] T.M. Rivers, S.M. Ward & J.E. Smadel (1938). Infectious Myxomatosis of Rabbits: Studies of a Soluble Antigen Associated with the Disease. J Exp Med. Jan 1, 69:1, 31-48.

[294] ABC Radio: Rewind (15 January 2005). The scientist and weapons of mass destruction.

[295] Michael Carroll (2004). The disturbing story of the government's secret germ lLaboratory. Harper Collins.

[296] H. Fraenkel-Conrat & R.R. Wagner (1979). Comprehensive Virology, 14: virus-host interactions immunity to Viruses. Springer.

[297] T.W. Mak & M.E. Saunders (2006). The immune response: Basic and clinical principles. Elsevier Academic Press.

[298] Erich Traub (1951). Studies on the in-vitro multiplication of Newcastle Disease virus in chicken blood. Naval Medical Research Institute, National Naval Medical Centre.

[299] E. Traub & W.I. Capps (1953). Experiments with chicken embryo-adapted Foot-and-Mouth disease and a method for the rapid adaption. Naval Medical Research Institute, National Naval Medical Centre.

[300] Erich Traub (1953) Studies in the mechanism of immunity of chickens to Newcastle Disease Virus. Naval Medical Research Institute, National Naval Medical Centre.

[301] Smithsonian Institution Archives, Record Unit 7454, Harry Hoogstraal Papers.

[302] ABC Radio: Rewind (15 January 2005). The scientist and weapons of mass destruction.

[303] Biological warfare - Remarks by Sir MacFarlane Burnet, National Archives of Australia, A1209, 1958/5041.

[304] Raf Sanchez, Scientist Frank Olson was drugged with LSD and 'murdered by CIA.' The Telegraph, 28 November 2012.

FORD FUNDED ASOPA

During the Cold War, half of all Ford Foundation grants served the CIA. In 1963, Leonard Huxley brokered a deal with the Ford Foundation for $200,000 of funding to assist ASOPA. In 1964, Ford Foundation beneficiary Margaret Mead visited former ASOPA lecturer William E.H. Stanner at ANU where he headed the Research School which focussed on Pacific Studies.

ANU: MK-ULTRA RESEARCH UNIVERSITY

Alf Conlon was instrumental in forming the Australian National University (ANU) which he intended to be a full research university.[305] According to the 1946 ANU Act, Conlon, 'Nugget' Coombs, Douglas 'Pansy' Wright and others planned the Canberra facility to 'provide facilities for postgraduate research and study both generally and in relation to subjects of national importance to Australia.' ANU was to contain one medical research, one physical sciences, and two social science schools. These schools corresponded to key CIA MK-ULTRA research interest areas, and Conlon's goal of introducing a new sociology.

ANU was part of Conlon's plan to attract Australian physicist Marcus Oliphant (who helped develop the atomic bomb) and other Australian scientists back to Australia. Coombs arranged for Oliphant to meet Australian Prime Minister Ben Chifley, when Chifley and his advisers were in London for the 1946 Commonwealth Prime Ministers' meeting. Oliphant became ANU Director of the Research School of Physical Sciences, and he encouraged his Birmingham scientists to follow. Oliphant's reputation was tarnished, and his security clearance lost when two of his Birmingham physics students, Alan Nunn-May and Klaus Fuchs, were exposed as Soviet spies in 1949 and 1950. ANU's first Psychology professor, Cecil A. Gibb, had the usual MK-Ultra qualifications and connections:

- Fort Street Boys High old boy.
- University of Sydney graduate.
- Head Army psychologist.
- PhD supervised by Raymond Cattell, University of Illinois.[306]
- Australian UNESCO Advisory Committee, 1960-64.
- UNESCO Delegate, 1962.
- ASS Fellow.
- Australian American Association.
- American Field Service Scholarship Scheme.
- Rotary President, 1973-74.

ANSTO, CSIRO & SYDNEY UNI

The security military agreement made between Australia and the USA in 1951 led to the establishment of the AAEC (Australian Atomic Energy Commission) in 1953 and the construction of two underground multi-story CIA research facilities: the AAEC nuclear reactor at Lucas Heights in 1958, and Pine Gap in 1967. The AAEC opening at Lucas Heights was attended by Herbert Coombs, Justice Michael Kirby, and Gough Whitlam. In 1987, the AAEC was renamed ANSTO (Australian Nuclear Science and Technology Organisation).

---

[305] S.G. Foster & M.M. Varghese (2009) The Making of The Australian National University: 1946-1996, ANU Press.

[306] Michael Cook (1994). Cecil Austin Gibb (1913–1994) ANU Reporter, 25 May, 11.

The AAEC's sister organisation was the CSIRO (Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation). In 1981, parts of the AAEC were split off and joined to the CSIRO. Founded in 1949, the CSIRO is a federal government agency responsible for scientific research including genetic engineering, industrial chemistry, and radio astronomy. The CSIRO established a research laboratory ('National Standards Laboratory') at the University of Sydney in 1939 which had three divisions, Electrotechnology, Metrology and Physics.

RICHARD CASEY, ASIO & ASIS

Richard Gardiner-Casey helped found the organisations involved in my child trafficking. His mother's maiden name Gardiner was preserved due to the value placed on the Gardiner Illuminati bloodline. My father-in-law and his sisters are typically proud of their Gardiner heritage also. My father-in-law's mother was a Gardiner and blood relative of Toni Gardiner (renamed 'Muna'), the English mother of the current King Hussein of Jordan. At my husband's annual Easter family gathering, those with Gardiner heritage (called 'Innies') sat together, while the 'Outties' were ostracised to a separate dining table.

Richard Casey was crucial to the establishment of Australia's Intelligence agencies.[307] ASIO (Australian Security Intelligence Organisation) and ASIS (Australian Secret Intelligence Service). ASIO was modelled on MI5 and it functions like the FBI. ASIS is our external security force and comparable to MI6 and the CIA.

Casey became Minister for External Affairs in 1951, the year of the military agreement between Australia and the USA. Casey met with MI5 at ASIO's new Melbourne headquarters in 1952. He established ASIS that same year and had it report directly to his position. Casey appointed as ASIS head Alfred Deakin-Brookes, grandson of former PM Deakin, and son of his friend Herbert Brookes. Casey founded ASIS with the backing of MI6. The CIA later helped develop ASIS by providing equipment and officer training. ASIS remained tied to MI6 and joined its 1952 covert radio network. In September 1953, Richard Casey travelled to the USA and met with CIA Director Allen Dulles.

Richard Casey held numerous influential positions:

- WWI Army Major.
- Elected MP in 1931 for anti-communist United Australia Party.
- Australian Treasurer 1935 – 39.
- Represented Australian PM to British Government (1924 – 1939).
- First Australian ambassador to the USA (1940 – 42).
- Heavily involved with the UN, from 1951.
- Minister in charge of the CSIRO (1950 – 60).
- Minister for External Affairs (1951 – 60).
- CSIRO Executive, 1960.
- Oversaw USEFA (1954 - 60), helped secure funding for establishing USEFA in 1959.[308]

---

[307] Frank Cain (1994). The Australian Security Intelligence Organization: An Unofficial History. Frank Cass.

[308] Richard Casey, 10th Anniversary of United States Educational Foundation in Australian, speech notes delivered at US Embassy, Canberra, 26 November 1959.

- First non-British Governor-General, 1965 - 1969
- Australian Conservation Foundation (ACF) patron, 1966.

CASEY'S WAR on COMMUNISM

As Prime Minister Stanley Bruce's UK representative (1924-39), Richard Casey received information from MI5 regarding members of the Communist Party of Australia (CPA) travelling to Soviet Russia. This served as the impetus for the formation of ASIS and redevelopment of ASIO. Casey also developed long-term contacts with US Intelligence organisations. Churchill subsequently stationed Casey as an intelligence operative in Cairo (1942) and Bengal (1944). Upon returning to Australia, Casey became President of the conservative Liberal Party and set about infiltrating the CPA. He associated closely with ASIO Director-General Col. Spry, bypassing the Attorney-General ministry responsible for ASIO. Casey likely influenced Spry's decision to recruit anti-Communist university graduates to ASIO, including Michael Thwaites (Oxford Rhodes Scholar, WWII Naval Officer, a Qld Premiere's grandson).

AACF

In 1950, the CIA established the US Congress for Cultural Freedom to combat communism and Soviet propaganda. Its Australian branch was called the Australian Association for Cultural Freedom (AACF). In a letter (dated 11 June 1958) to founding AACF secretary H. Richard Krygier, Richard Casey said, 'I am indeed sympathetic towards the aims of your association.' Notable AACF members were Sir Eugene Gossens (Vice President), and Ian Clunies-Ross (CSIRO head). [309]

MRA, CIA & ASIO

Initially called the Oxford Group, Moral Rearmament was a Christian-spiritualist movement founded by Nazi supporter Frank Buchman who planned to use MRA to create '…a one-world religion based largely on Teutonic, Aryan, and other pagan traditions mixed with Christianity. Buchman saw Islam, Buddhism, and Hinduism as being compatible with his brand of Christianity… Hitler, too, had an affection for Islam and Buddhism…' [310]

MRA was hijacked and then directed by the CIA's Psychological Strategy Board and managed under the code name 'Packet.' [311] MRA was used as part of a Cold War Psychological Operation aimed at 'intellectuals, scholars and opinion forming groups' for purposes of breaking down 'world-wide doctrinaire thought patterns which have provided an intellectual basis for Communism.'

KIM BEAZLEY: HEAD, ASIO HEAD CHILD TRAFFICKING

Australia's MRA operation was led by Kim Beazley Snr, the CIA-ASIO spy who served as an ALP MP for 32 years. Leonas Petrauskas informed me that Beazley 'ran kids for ASIO' as part of a 'dirty tricks' counter-intelligence operation which used child prostitutes like me to compromise and control politicians. Beazley coordinated my trafficking to Parliament House and Fairbairn Airforce Base, Canberra, and Bohemian Grove, CA.

---

[309] National Archives of Australia: Record 12812130.

[310] Christopher Story (2006). The New Underworld Order: Triumph of Criminalism the Global Hegemony of Masonic Intelligence. Edward Harle.

[311] Frances Stonor Saunders (2000). Who Paid the Piper? The CIA and the Cultural Cold War. Granta Books.

In 2014, I went public regarding a 1985 ritual held inside Bathurst City Hall. Leonas Petrauskas drove me to the event which Kim Beazley Snr jointly presided over with Australian sporting icon Richie Benaud (OBE). The Bathurst City Hall ritual occurred on the same date as the Bathurst 1000 racing event, which coincided with the 55th birthday of Australian cricketing legend Richie Benaud. Richie Benaud attended Kim Beazley Senior's MRA Pleasant Sunday Afternoon gatherings, as did his closest friend and former cricket teammate Brian Booth who grew up in Bathurst and led Benaud's funeral service.

Kim Beazley's children were raised in MRA. His daughter Merrilyn described MRA as a cult, while her brother Kim Christian Beazley Jnr was pro-MRA. Beazley Jnr was a renown CIA supporter like his father, starring in a staged expose documentary about Pine Gap in the 1980s. Former Ambassador to the US and Minister of Defence, Beazley attended the Bohemian Grove Luciferian pedophile revels in 2012.

Beazley Snr promoted MRA propaganda in leading Australian newspapers, under the headings:

- MRA Wins Red Leaders [312]
- MRA the Greatest threat to Communism [313]
- MRA a Good Antidote Against Communism [314]
- MRA Changes a Red Killer [315]
- [MRA is Communism's] Greatest Threat in the Battle for Men's Minds [316]

Like Scientology, MRA was used in the CIA Occultism in High Places program which granted the CIA 'secret channels right into the minds of leaders not only in Africa and Asia but also in Europe.'[317] Beazley Snr achieved this by travelling overseas to attend MRA events and conferences in Europe and America, where he formed relationships with leftist or communist international leaders before feeding them MRA propaganda. Beazley used MRA to form a strong relationship between Australia and Japan.[318] Jim Wilcott, a CIA accountant based in early 1960s Japan, claimed MRA 'was covertly supported and used by the CIA.'

The MRA's ASIO network included Richard Casey [319] who attended MRA Pleasant Sunday Afternoon (PSA) gatherings at which Beazley preached anti-communism.[320] Casey hired an early intelligence agent, Michael Rayner Thwaites (AO), a poet with no relevant qualifications besides his MRA membership and anti-Communist stance. Thwaites told the media MRA was 'a tremendous asset to me in my work in ASIO.'[321] Thwaites attended the international MRA conferences as did Beazley Sr who wrote the foreword of Thwaites 1980 book, Truth Will Out: ASIO and the Petrov.

H.V. Evatt (Former ALP leader and Communist sympathizer) accused Beazley of working for ASIO. Evatt was suspicious when he discovered Beazley went behind his back and delivered information regarding probable Communist spies to the Prime Minister. Beazley admitted to such but denied ASIO involvement.[322] Beazley Snr served as an executive with key MK-ULTRA organisations:

---

[312] The Advertiser, 5 June 1954, 2.
[313] The Advertiser, 4 February 1954, 6.
[314] Illawara Daily Mercury, 25 August 1953, 3.
[315] The West Australian, 29 April 1964, 8.
[316] The Canberra Times, 25 August 1953, 2.
[317] Miles Copeland (1989). The Game Player: Confessions of the CIA's Original Political Operative. Aurum Press, 176-177.
[318] The Canberra Times, How MRA Changed Beazley, 5 November 1994, C5.
[319] Frank Cain (1994). The Australian Security Intelligence Organization: An Unofficial History. Frank Cass.
[320] Sunday Times, 20 October 1951, 6.
[321] The Age, 30 April 1980, 11.

- CSIRO Advisory Council (1965 - 72, under the auspices of Richard Casey and Leonard Huxley.
- ANU Council (1951 - 72, when Leonard Huxley was ANU Vice-Chancellor).
- Joint Committee on Foreign Affairs, Vice-Chair (1967 - 69, concerning Defence and Intelligence issues).

COMMUNISTS TARGETED

The CIA targeted Australian Communists via various direct and indirect means. In July 1949, ASIO raided the headquarters of the Communist Party of Australia whose membership had reached approximately 6,000. In 1950, Menzies' government tried to introduce the Communist Party Dissolution Bill.

ASOPA COMMUNIST SPIES

After the war, DORCA became ASOPA (Australian School of Pacific Administration). ASOPA originated at Holsworthy Army barracks as the Military School of Civil Affairs in the late 1940s before moving to Mosman. ASOPA was shut down in the 1980s after ASIO determined it was heavily infiltrated by Marxist Communists and operating as a Fifth Column. ASOPA subsequently became the offices for OzAid Centre for Pacific Development and Training, famously at the heart of the Clinton Foundation scandal tied to child trafficking.

LEONAS PETRAUSKAS: SOVIET DOUBLE AGENT

Leonas played for the Lithuanian basketball team. Lithuania shifted between Soviet and Nazi occupation. Leonas was an officer in the German-Lithuanian Army, working at hospitals under Nazi control that focused on eugenics. His daughter Krista Petrauskas loaned my researcher Steve McMurray her father's original Nazi papers for me to view. Leonas' family admitted he was close to the Luftwaffe for the purpose of navigating and escaping war torn areas, and said he saved the life of a German soldier.

Leonas deserted the Nazis and fled to Australia through the International Refugee Organisation where he served as a doctor specialising in internal medicine. A letter of reference (dated 30 April 1948) signed by 'Dr T. Maavere' states that Leonas Petrauskas was employed in the Medical Department of PC International Refugee Organisation Ludwigsburg Resettlement Centre from 1 July 1947 until 1 May 1948. He added: 'I know him as honest most reliable and hardworking internist and I recommend him highly.'

The IRO was a haven for European Fascists who were later recruited by Western Intelligence organisations including ASIO.[323] Australia's intelligence agencies were convinced Leonas Petrauskas was a Nazi or they would not have let him in. Considering he immigrated to Australia at his father's height of power, and his associates in Australia and PNG, it is evident Leonas Petrauskas was a loyal Communist rather than a National Socialist. Leonas Petrauskas and his associates were likely double spies for Soviet Russia.

---

[322] K.E. Beazley (2009). Father of the House: The Memoirs of Kim E. Beazley. Fremantle Press.

[323] Mark Aaron (1989). Sanctuary! Nazi Fugitives in Australia. William Heinemann.

Reichsärztekammer
Körperſchaft des öffentlichen Rechts
Ärztekammer Oberdonau

Linz-Oberdonau
Dinghoferſtraße 4, Ärztehaus
Fernſprecher 2 63 71
Bank-Konto:
Landes-Hypothekenanſtalt Linz Nr. 5891

Unſere Abteilung: Der Leiter
Unſer Zeichen: Dr.W./M.
Ihr Schreiben vom:
Ihr Zeichen:
Tag: 5.2.1945.

Bestätigung.

Herr Dr.Leonas Petrauskas wird der internen Abteilung des Allgemeinen Krankenhauses, Linz, Ausweiche Bad-Hall als Assistenzarzt zugewiesen.

Der Leiter i.V.:
(Dr.Wimmer).

Q/9178 - R 5061 44

Kipras Petrauskas, Leona's father, was a famous Lithuanian actor and opera singer with the National Opera Foundation. Kipras used his opera singer status to provide propaganda for one of the earlier Soviet revolutions. Kipras Petrauskas was highly influential in Soviet Russia from 1951 to 54. He received the Stalin Prize in 1951, the Order of Lenin (the highest Soviet award for both civilians and military personnel), the Order of the Red Banner of Labour, and he won the Popular Artists Award of the USSR. Kipras represented Lithuania within the Soviet Union. Shortly after Leonas migrated to Australia, Kipras was made Deputy to the Supreme Soviet Union, the highest branch of government within the Soviet Union, and the only body with the power to pass constitutional amendments.

Leonas Petrauskas' daughter Krista Petrauskas was also in the Theosophical Society, and closely associated with the AMORC Rosicrucian Order, a Luciferian Freemasonic group attended by Aleister Crowley and praised by Lenin. According to Krista, Rosicrucian Master Bergio Panikian (relative of the current Grand Master of AMORC Australia) 'saved her life.' ASIO investigated AMORC for many years, suspecting it was a front for Soviet Communists and enemies of the West. Krista associated with KGB spy Jim Cairns and his Marxist mistress Junie Morosi who worked for the CIA. Cairns was prominent in the Labour Party and a Marxist who started the counterculture in Australia.

ASSASSINATED SOVIET SPIES

Three of my key perpetrators were seemingly assassinated for being Communist spies: Patricia Anne Conlon, University of Sydney Vice Chancellor John Ward, and Chinese heart surgeon Victor Chang. Patricia 'Anne' Conlon (nee Carden) was Alf Conlon's daughter-in-law. Anne went by her middle name to distinguish herself from her mother Patricia. Her biography reads:

Patricia Anne Conlon (1939-1979), feminist, Labor movement activist and public servant, was born on 2 November 1939 at Neutral Bay, Sydney. Anne was educated at St Joseph's Convent School, Neutral Bay, Monte Sant' Angelo College, North Sydney (dux 1956), and—on a teacher's scholarship—at the University of Sydney (BA, 1961; MA, 1973) where she became senior student at Sancta Sophia College.

Renowned for her soprano voice, she competed in the City of Sydney Eisteddfod, and performed in choral and musical productions at school and university.

Disappointed at missing first-class honours in history, Carden taught in public high schools (which she found unrewarding) before and after spending 1964-65 on a postgraduate scholarship at the University of Saskatchewan, Canada. At St John's College, Sydney, on 29 September 1967 she married Telford James Conlon, a physicist belonging to a Labor-connected family.

In 1968 she became research assistant to John Manning Ward, professor of History at the University of Sydney, and in 1973 completed her master's thesis, Eyewitness Accounts of Australia—1815-1850. Her son was born in 1971 and her daughter in 1974.

A founding member (1972) of the Women's Electoral Lobby, Conlon stood unsuccessfully as the Australian Labor Party candidate for Mosman at a by-election for the Legislative Assembly in July 1972. Next year she was a convener of W.E.L.'s first national conference in Canberra. She helped to produce submissions on conciliation and arbitration legislation to the Federal government, on the disadvantaged position of single mothers to R.F. Henderson's commission of inquiry into poverty, and—with Edna Ryan—on the minimum wage for women to the 1974 national wage case.

Awarded a grant by the Australian National Advisory Committee of International Women's Year 1975, Conlon and Ryan expanded their research into a book, Gentle Invaders (1975), which was notable both for the depth and quality of its evidence, and for its pioneering work on the history of women and labour in Australia. Conlon published articles on issues involving women in the Electrical Trades Union's E.T.U. News, Catholic Weekly and Australian Quarterly. An article based on her thesis had appeared in 1970 in the Journal of the Royal Australian Historical Society. In 1976 she was appointed lecturer at the Australian Trade Union Training Authority.

A founding member (1977) of the New South Wales Women's Advisory Council, Conlon became special projects officer with the government's Women's Co-ordination Unit in February 1978. She worked on the Anti-Discrimination Act (1977), on an amendment to the maternity-leave provision and on the welfare of women prisoners. Her achievements impressed the premier Neville Wran.

Tall and striking, auburn haired and freckled, Conlon was witty, energetic, compassionate and extremely loyal. At Sancta Sophia she had been volatile and chronically unpunctual. Although she retained her Catholic faith, she broke for a time with the institutional Church because, she believed, it had failed to respond to the > women's cause. She was a good debater, and had presence and authority, but did not seek the limelight, preferring to be a 'backroom operator' and to rely on an impressive network of friends and supporters. Politically astute, she was one of the few women in WEL who belonged to the Australian Labor Party; she disavowed the prevailing philosophy that women should remain lobbyists and not join political parties.

>
> To her profound grief, her marriage collapsed and in January 1979 she was divorced. Six months later she was diagnosed as suffering from cancer. Survived by her children, she died on 13 December 1979 at Mater Misericordiae Hospital North Sydney. Hundreds of people packed a requiem Mass at nearby St Mary's Church; typically, she had meticulously arranged her own funeral, even the hymns sung by the choir of her old school. She is commemorated by an annual memorial lecture sponsored by the W.A.C. and by a building at Mulawa Training and Detention Centre for Women which bears her name.[324]

Here are some details Anne Conlon’s biography missed:

- Anne grew up in Greenwich where Antony Kidman lived. She was born one year after Kidman, making them contemporaries.
- Anne’s husband Telford Conlon was close friends, co-authored research articles, worked in labs, and participated in the Sydney music and theatre scene with Antony Kidman.
- Telford wrote Defence science technology policy in Canberra, was involved in MK-ULTRA mind control genetics research, and with the CSIRO at Lucas Heights.
- Anne performed in the July 1960 production of The Fairy Queen at Sydney University Great Hall with Shakespearean actor John Bell.
- Anne received a social sciences scholarship to train at the University of Saskatchewan under MK-ULTRA professors Humphrey Osmond and Abraham Hoffer.
- Anne worked as Special Projects Officer for pedophile ALP Premier Neville Wran (Fort Street Boys High School graduate, implicated in corruption scandals, daughter was charged with murder).
- The Carden family has a history of HOGD affiliation. In England, Anne Rule Carden, whose son James immigrated from England to Australia, was a member of both the HOGD and Theosophical Society.
- Anne's father John 'Jack' Carden strangled her mother to death at their Neutral Bay home on 5 January 1984. During his court appearance, John Carden said why he killed his wife: ‘I have been blamed and abused for everything. I could not do anything right. I just could not take it anymore.’

Fabian Society

Patricia Anne Conlon was associated with the Australian Fabian Society and helped them advance socialism via Cultural Marxism (gradual and reformist activities instead of overt revolt). The Australian Fabians are closely tied to the ALP. Numerous ALP ministers were active members of the Fabians while in office, including Gough Whitlam, Bob Hawke

---

[324] Elizabeth Windschuttle, Conlon, Patricia Anne (1939–1979), Australian Dictionary of Biography, National Centre of Biography, ANU.

(Communist Party associate), Paul Keating, and Neville Wran – all University of Sydney graduates, all pedophiles.

Faked Death

Anne Conlon said she was wanted for 'treason' and faked own death on 13 December 1979. She hid at the University of Sydney's Sancta Sophia College for five years, serving as a dorm supervisor under the alias 'Veronica' (or 'Ronnie') before being 'discovered' and died when I was 14 years old. Anne copied British Labor Party minister John Stonehouse who faked his own death after MI5 realized he was a Soviet spy.[325] Anne Conlon's National Archives file is sealed for reasons of 'national security' which further supports the notion she was a spy.

John Madden Ward

John Ward attended Fort Street Boys High School followed by the University of Sydney where he was heavily influenced by Marxist lecturer John Anderson. Ward hid Anne Conlon at Sydney University's Sancta Sophia College during his Vice-Chancellorship, and I recall the two having sex in her bed. John Ward was seemingly assassinated shortly after his retirement from Sydney University in 1990. Ward, his family, and several loyal university staff were aboard the rear carriage of a steam train returning from an excursion to the Hunter Valley. A bizarre series of events, including sand being scattered on the train tracks and someone pulling a handbrake, caused Ward's carriage to be struck and decimated by another train. Ward, his wife, daughter, and key staff were killed.

Victor Chang

Less than a year after the hit on Ward, famed Chinese heart surgeon (and Delta Colonel) Victor Chang was assassinated. NSW detectives initially publicly blamed Chang's murder on the Triads, one of Britain's assassination groups.

It seems my perpetrators, united by their involvement in MK-ULTRA and pedophilia, had divided loyalties. One faction, including 'Comrade' Gittinger, Petrauskas, the Conlons, Chang, and Ward, were loyal to Communist Russia and China. The opposing group, including Beazley Sr and Jr, Kerr, Hawke, and Casey, served the British Monarchy. This scenario makes more sense of the coup d'état the CIA conducted against Whitlam.

1975 CIA COUP

The existence of ASIS remained top secret, even from the Australian Government, until 1972 when Gough Whitlam's ALP government targeted ASIO and ASIS for exposure. Lionel Murphy authorised raids on ASIO headquarters in 1973. Whitlam established the First Hope Commission (1974-77) to investigate our intelligence services, and he removed both ASIO and ASIS directors in 1975. Whitlam threatened to name the CIA agents in Australia and refused to renew the CIA's lease on Pine Gap. Consistent with his election promise to 'expose Pine Gap!' Whitlam visited the underground base; however, during a subsequent press conference at which journalists asked him what he saw at Pine Gap, Whitlam (famous for his wit) became uncharacteristically vague and incoherent, muttering there was nothing to see. Whitlam presented as hypnotised.

The CIA conducted their coup d'état against Gough Whitlam in 1975. The film Falcon and the Snowman is based on the events surrounding this. During Whitlam's revolt against the CIA, they referred to the British Queen's representative as 'Our man Kerr.' The British Queen, in her role as Australia's Head of State, dismissed the Australian Prime Minister through her Governor-General, Sir John Kerr, amid a manipulated 'constitutional crisis.' Sir Garfield Barwick (Fort St Boys High Old Boy, Chief Justice of the High Court) advised Kerr to remove Whitlam. Governor-General and CIA agent John Kerr enacted archaic legislation to dismiss Whitlam. Traitor Bob Hawke assisted the coup d'état by calming the Unions who were about to mass strike in protest and shut the country down. Like all Trade Union leaders, Rhodes scholar Hawke attended leadership training at Harvard.

---

[325] Arthur Martin, Former Labour minister who faked his own death was Communist spy, Daily Mail [Online], 6 October 2009.

USEFA: MK-ULTRA FUNDING BODY

The Rhodes and Fulbright Scholarships were used to indoctrinate and train Australians of influence and power in England and the USA. USEFA (US Educational Foundation in Australia) was the Australian body of the Fulbright Scholarship and Lectureship Program.[326] The CIA used USEFA to transfer MK-ULTRA doctors between Australia and the USA. For example, only two psychology Fulbright Scholarships were provided in 1956, to: Raymond Cattell who attended the University of Melbourne where Oscar Adolph Oeser headed Psychology; and Daniel L. Adler who attended ANU. He attained his PhD with MK-ULTRA co-founder Kurt Lewin.[327]

USEFA was based at the ANU during its crucial years. The USA funded USEFA from its 1959 inception until 1965, via the IIE (Institute of International Education), a CIA conduit founded by Elihu Root (CFR founder, Carnegie Endowment co-founder, Pilgrim's Society member) and CFR member Stephen P. Duggan (aka, the 'Apostle of Internationalism').

ACADEMY OF SOCIAL SCIENCES IN AUSTRALIA

Founded in 1942 under the name Social Science Research Council of Australia, ASSA (Academy of Social Sciences in Australia) became a nexus of Intelligence and MK-ULTRA operatives. For example, the 1956 ASSA Council included the usual suspects: Alfred Conlon, Herbert C. 'Nugget' Coombs, Oscar A. Oeser, and Cecil A. Gibb. To further illustrate, ASSA is composed of four panels of fellows. 'Panel D' (Education, Psychology, and Social Medicine) was staffed by MK-ULTRA researchers: Ronald Taft, Peter W. Sheehan, John Phillip Sutcliffe, Jacqueline Goodnow, Kevin McConkey, and Alan Richardson.

ASSA was influenced by UNESCO and funded by the Carnegie Corporation.[328] The ASSA Council met with the heads of UNESCO Australia in October 1956 to decide the direction of their eugenics program in Australia. ASSA headquarters were located at ANU where Leonard Huxley served as chair.[329] [330] ASSA worked alongside the AAS (Australian Academy of Science).[331] Leonard Huxley sat on the AAS Council in 1956 and became Vice-President the following year.[332]

---

[326] Dept. State International Educational Exchange Program, American Lecturers and Researchers Scholars Receiving US Government Awards the Fulbright Act, 1957-58 Academic Year. Professional Activities Division, International Educational Exchange Service, 23 August 1957.

[327] Donald K. Routh (Ed.) (1982*). Learning, Speech, and the Complex Effects of Punishment*. University of Iowa.

[328] Social Science Research Council of Australia, Annual Report 1957.

[329] Social Science Research Council of Australia, Annual Report 1956.

[330] Leonard George Holden Huxley 1902-1988, Australian Academy of Science: Biographical Memoires of deceased Fellows. Australian Science Archives Project, University of Melbourne. [Online]

[331] Social Science Research Council of Australia, Annual Report (1957).

[332] Leonard George Holden Huxley 1902-1988, Australian Academy of Science: Biographical Memoires of deceased Fellows. Australian Science Archives Project, University of Melbourne.

LEONARD HUXLEY: AUSTRALIAN MK-ULTRA COORDINATOR

Thomas Huxley (1825-95) established the Huxley-Wedgewood family connection to Australia and PNG when he spent three years (1847-49) exploring the region. He met his wife in Sydney and later unsuccessfully applied for a position at the University of Sydney. His great grandson, Leonard George Holden Huxley (1902-88) closely associated with his relative Julian Huxley while attending Oxford on Rhodes Scholarship. Together Leonard and Julian helped establish and coordinate MK-ULTRA in Australia. Leonard Huxley served as an executive on numerous boards and committees: [333]

- University of Adelaide, Council (1953-60)
- ASS Council (1956); Vice-President (1957)
- ANU Vice-Chancellor (1960-67), Council (1956-59)
- USEFA Board (1960-65, oversaw Fulbright Lectureship granted to Martin Orne).
- CSIRO Board (1960, with Richard Casey).
- Australian/American Educational Foundation, Chair (1965-69)
- Australian Radio Research Board, Chair (1958-64)
- National Standards Commission, First Chair (1950-64)
- Radio Frequency Allocations Committee, Chair (1960-64)
- National Library of Australia, Council (1961-72)
- Committee on Space Research, Delegate (1959-60)
- Australian Institute of Physics, First President (1963-65)

Leonard Huxley approved the Fulbright Scholarship of Stanford University anthropologist John D. McCaffrey in 1956. MK-ULTRA co-founder Gregory Bateson was one of John McCaffrey's referees. John McCaffrey's Fulbright research proposal outlined a visual approach to recording feedback from Aborigines via their artwork. This study mirrored an unethical MK-ULTRA experiment by US Military doctor Alexander H. Leighton at the Japanese War Relocation Centre at Poston, Mojave Desert. Both studies aimed to learn about the concept of feedback which is relevant to understanding human personality.[334] The significance of feedback was discovered in a brainwashing experiment at McCaffrey's Stanford University.

Julian Huxley wrote a letter (dated 7 October 1953) to the wife of ASIO founder Richard Gardiner Casey, suggesting she ask her husband to facilitate the anthropological study of Indigenous Australians as follows: (a) release an amateur anthropologist from his federal Government position to pursue an expedition financed by a major US University; (b) finance the research of professional anthropologist Ted Strehlow (expert in Aboriginal spiritual knowledge including myths and 'ritual' and who previously taught at Conlon's DORCA), and (c) appoint Strehlow as a Social Studies Professor at ANU. Huxley said of Strehlow:

> He has just made some colour films, one of which I saw, on some Aboriginal totemic ritual – it is the most wonderful record of a primitive ritual that I have ever seen. He still appears to have difficulty in getting money – a trivial sum – to put a good

---

[333] Australian Academy of Science, Biographical Memoirs of Deceased Fellows: Leonard Holden Huxley 1902-1988.

[334] John Collier & Malcolm Collier (1986). Visual Anthropology: Photography as a Research Method. University of New Mexico.

> soundtrack on it. I wonder if the Minister for Territories [Richard Casey] could help in this?... In haste – just leaving for Tasmania.

Ted Strehlow subsequently received funding in 1954 from the Academy of Social Sciences in Australia (ASSA) for his study, Pre-White Organisation of Aranda Tribe and Effect of Contact with White Settlers.[335] In 1955, Strehlow received funding[336] for a pamphlet titled, The sustaining ideal of Australian Aboriginal Societies.[337] Strehlow went on to develop the ASSA Aborigines Project which was headed by ASOPA Principal Charles D. Rowley, with contributions from Ronald Taft and John Phillip Sutcliffe.[338] Two other MK-ULTRA operatives received ASSA research funding in 1956: Oscar A. Oeser and John Phillip Sutcliffe.

OSCAR ADOLPH OESER

Oscar Oeser was recruited as a British Intelligence officer by Ian Fleming, author of the James Bond series.[339] Oeser employed Tavistock founder Eric Trist to conduct research in 1935.[340] Oeser was the founding Professor of the University of Melbourne Psychology Department, and 1956 Chair of the Australian Psychological Society. In 1956, Oeser was in contact with Richard Gardiner Casey who founded Australia's intelligence organisations (ASIO and ASIS) in association with the CIA and MI6. As Minister for External Affairs, Richard Casey held authority over the USEFA / Fulbright Scheme in Australia until he left office in 1960. Oeser's name appears in the 1959 recommendations list for Fulbright Lecturer/Research scholars. Oeser received Leverhulme, Carnegie and Rockefeller scholarships to tour Asia, Europe, UK and the USA.

AUSTRALIAN LINKS TO CIA PERSONALITY RESEARCH

University of Western Australia

In 1949, psychologist Ronald Taft commenced work for the Rockefeller-funded Institute of Personality Assessment and Research (IPAR) with 'veterans of Henry Murray's OSS Assessment team.' In 1961, University of Western Australia's Professor Taft received a CIA Human Ecology Fund (HEF) research grant to study the Relationship between Health, Personality and Environmental Factors in Groups. That same year, Martin Orne received HEF finance for Attitude Formation, Decision Matrices. Robert E. Goodnow also received CIA funding for his 'Personality Studies' in 1961.

Jacqueline and Robert Goodnow

Ronald Taft and Alfred Hammer were closely tied to Jacqueline Goodnow, the Australian child psychologist who specialized in personality and cognition. Jacqueline interned at MK-ULTRA hub St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington, DC.[341] The Freemasonic Scottish Rite

---

[335] Social Science Research Council of Australia, 1956 Annual Report.

[336] Social Science Research Council of Australia, 1957 Annual Report.

[337] T.G.H Strehlow (1956). The Sustaining Ideal of Australian Aboriginal Societies, Pamphlet. Hawthorn Press, Melbourne.

[338] Social Science Research Council of Australia, Annual Report (1966-67).

[339] Alan Kennedy (2014). Oscar and Lucy. Lasserrade.

[340] Richard Trahair (2015). Behaviour, Technology, and Organizational Development: Eric Trist and the Tavistock Institute. Transaction Publishers.

[341] R.D. Walk (1990). Jacqueline Jarrett Goodnow. In O'Connell, A.N. (ed.). Women in Psychology: A Bio-bibliographic Sourcebook. New York, NY: Greenwood, 134, 137–40.

Schizophrenia Research Project (SRSRP) was based at the hospital. Winfred Overholser, the 32^{0} Freemason who ran St. Elizabeth's (1937-1962) was directly involved in the SRSRP project. In 1951, Jacqueline married Robert E. Goodnow who co-founded Psychological Assessments Associates (PAA) with CIA head psychologist (my perpetrator) John W. Gittinger. Robert Goodnow was PAA President and contributed to Gittinger's clandestine Personality Assessment System research.[342] In 1951, the Goodnows conducted PAS research and psychological assessment for Gittinger and the US Military in Munich, Germany. In 1959, Jacqueline followed Robert on his CIA-financed travel to locations including Hong Kong where she became a research fellow with the University of Hong Kong and conducted intelligence testing on Chinese children in 1960.[343]

MK-ULTRA victim Karen Wetmore said PAA conducted personality assessments on children at Vermont State Hospital. The PAA folded after its CIA operation was exposed. In 1971, The Washington Post reported, 'the new operating group is seeking to divest itself of the CIA financial sponsorship.' A year later, Sidney Gottlieb, head of CIA mind control operations, fled to Australia and disappeared without a trace. The Goodnows' official association with PAA ended in 1974 - the same year Gittinger first assessed me in Australia.
The Goodnows' son Christopher, born in Hong Kong, completed his PhD with Sir Gustav Nossal (Jesuit-schooled, Jewish eugenicist, University of Sydney biology major, works as a UN WHO consultant and for the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation).

Macquarie University

Jacqueline and Robert Goodnow returned to Australia in 1972 and joined the Macquarie University School of Behavioural Sciences founded by Ian K. Waterhouse (an Australian Military Psychologist, and former Tavistock Clinic student). Peter Van Sommers became Associate Professor at Macquarie that same year. Alfred Hammer became Emeritus Professor at Macquarie also.

PROJECT MK-ULTRA TRANSFERRED TO AUSTRALIA

Antony Kidman also returned to Australia in 1972. John W. Gittinger regularly visited Australia to oversee MK-ULTRA, and train and supervise MK-ULTRA perpetrators including Antony Kidman. Gittinger used me to demonstrate his methods. MK-ULTRA's 1971 public exposure in the US preceded mass IQ testing in NSW government schools, recruitment in government children's homes and other institutions, and the removal of all psychiatric patients from Milson Island in the Hawkesbury River north of Sydney (which became a MK-ULTRA research facility). I deduce the CIA transferred the operation to socialist Australia where it was easier to conduct clandestine child recruitment.

ANTONY KIDMAN

Kidman studied psychology at the University of Sydney during Martin Orne's 1960 lectureship. From 1969 to 1972, Benjamin Weiss supervised Kidman in the Laboratory of Preclinical Pharmacology at St Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington DC. St Elizabeth's was an LSD research hub and served the Scottish Rite Schizophrenia Research Program (SRSRP). The lab was co-founded by LSD mind control researcher Joel Elkes and run by Erminio Costa who made critical discoveries regarding LSD effects on the human brain.[344] Costa, Elkes, and Weiss attended Scottish Rite sponsored events on Schizophrenia. Weiss later received hundreds of thousands of dollars in SRSRP research funding, and he chaired an SRSRP event. Kidman, Costa and Weiss published a research paper together in 1971.[345]

---

[342] Robert E. Goodnow (1962). The Gittinger Theory of Personality. [pas.org]

[343] Robert E. Goodnow (1961). Analysis of differential abilities in the Chinese. In J. Cohen, Measurement of personality traits resulting from the interaction of abilities and environment. Symposium presented at the meeting of the American Psychological Association, New York.

MAUDSLEY IoP: AUSTRALIAN MK-ULTRA BASE

The Institute of Psychiatry (IoP), Maudsley Hospital in London was the 'staging ground for European and African MK-ULTRA operations.'[346] Evidence suggests it was also a staging ground for Australian operations.

In 1936, Julian Huxley encouraged his friend Julian Trevelyan to participate in a mescaline study at the Maudsley.[347] Julian's brother Aldous Huxley later wrote about his experiences of taking mescaline.[348] Julian Trevelyan married the great-granddaughter of Charles Darwin, making him related to the Huxleys.

Most pre-WW2 IoP finance came from the Rockefeller Foundation, which enabled an exchange of doctors between the London's Maudsley and Nazi Germany.[349] The IoP was initially Tavistock clinic's competitor; but came under Tavistock control when the British Army and Intelligence crowd, including John Rawlings Rees and Eric Trist, commenced operations there. Julian Huxley later promoted the IoP work of Eliot Slater,[350] the British Eugenics Society Vice-Chair who worked extensively with William Walters Sargant (who served MI5 and MI6). From the late 1950s onward, the IoP was home to MK-ULTRA Sub-project 111 directed by Hans J. Eysenck.[351] Australian psychologist Donald W. McElwain conducted psychological experiments at Maudsley in the early 1950s.[352] [353]

Australian psychologist Wendy Thorn travelled to the IoP to conduct research with Hans Eysenck who lectured at the University of Sydney during his 1977 Australian tour.[354] Other Australian-Maudsley connections are apparent from William Sargant's involvement at the hospital, since he influenced serial killer Harry Bailey. MK-ULTRA sleep deprivation researcher Ardie Lubin was based at the IoP until he left to study with Jacqueline Goodnow at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research. [355] [356]

---

[344] T.R Shapiro (2009). Erminio Costa, 85, Dies: A Discoverer of How Serotonin Works. Washington Post, 22 December 2009.

[345] A.D. Kidman, B. Weiss & E. Costa, Protein metabolism and amino acid accumulation in the rat submaxillary gland during reduced sympathetic activity. J Neurochem. 1971 Jun;18(6):817-26.

[346] Paul Robeson Jr. (2010). The Undiscovered Paul Robeson: Quest for Freedom, 1939-1976. Wiley.

[347] Philip Trevelyan (2013). Julian Trevelyan: Picture Language. Lund Humphries.

[348] Aldous Huxley (1954). The Doors of Perception. Chatto & Windus.

[349] V. Roelcke, P.J. Weindling & L. Westwood (2010). Germany and the Making of 'English' Psychiatry: The Maudsley Hospital, 1908–1939. In International Relations in Psychiatry: Britain, Germany, and the United States to World War II. Boydell & Brewer.

[350] K.R. Dronamraju & J. Needham (1993). If I Am to Be Remembered: Correspondence of Julian Huxley. World Scientific.

[351] Duncan Campbell, CIA Funds Research by Eysenck. In New Statesman, 11 May 1979, 97.

[352] Roderick D. Buchanan (2010). Playing with Fire: The controversial career of Hans J. Eysenck. Oxford University Press.

[353] D.W. McElwain & A. Lubin (1950) A note on the notion of psychological significance, Australian Journal of Psychology, 2:1, 43-51.

[354] Arthur Rudkin, Hans Eysenck – questioning the evidence, Sydney Morning Herald, 30 September 1977, 7.

[355] Ivy Bennett (Ed.) (1960). Delinquent and Neurotic Children: A comparative study. Tavistock.

[356] A.N. O'Connell & N.F. Russo (eds.) (1990). Women in Psychology: A Bio-bibliographic Sourcebook. Greenwood.

Antony Kidman's connection to the IoP is evidenced by Nicole Kidman visiting the Maudsley (now IoPPN) in 2016 to create the Dr Antony Kidman Scholarship in Health Psychology.[357]

MK-ULTRA 'INESCAPABLE SHOCK' RESEARCH

American banker and businessman, Joseph Seligman (d. 1880) was patriarch of the Hofjuden Seligman family. His home served as the first headquarters of Rothschilds' B'nai B'rith assassin group. CIA psychologist Martin Seligman continued the murderous legacy:

> The CIA's 'enhanced interrogation techniques,' outlined in a controversial report released earlier this month from the Senate Intelligence Committee, was influenced by a Penn professor's research. Psychology professor Martin E.P. Seligman famously conducted studies at Penn in the 1960s that revealed a 'learned helplessness' in dogs subjected to repeated electric shocks. Instead of adjusting their behaviour upon receiving multiple shocks, the dogs remained in place, providing valuable insight into the workings of depressed or abused persons. Now, his research is being used for torture rather than healing according the Senate report.[358]

Martin Seligman conducted torture research at America's MK-ULTRA hub, the University of Pennsylvania. He and Steven Maier electrocuted dogs trapped in cages. They observed some dogs became unresponsive and lost the ability to avoid the torture. Seligman called the resultant condition 'Inescapable Shock' - but changed this to the more palatable 'Learned Helplessness.'

Learned helplessness: The condition in which a person suffers from a sense of powerlessness arising from a traumatic event or persistent failure to succeed.

Louis Jolyon West and B.F. Skinner repeated Seligman's electric shock experiments at Harvard using intellectually disabled children, some three years old. Martin Seligman spent a 1975 'sabbatical' at the Maudsley IoP where he met Hans Eysenck, studied phobias and obsessions, and developed Learned Helplessness methods.[359] Seligman attended the IoP alongside Stanley Rachman with whom he previously collaborated on Learned Helplessness research.[360] [361] [362]

Seligman's Learned Helplessness formed the basis of the CIA Torture Program.[363] In 2001, Seligman met with top CIA psychologists and agents at his house for what became known as 'the start of the program.'[364] This meeting occurred just months after Seligman met with Antony Kidman at the University of Technology, Sydney (UTS). The meeting included at least one Mossad agent plus psychologist James Mitchell who was paid $81 million to develop the CIA torture programme.

---

[357] Kings College London, Nicole Kidman establishes IoPPN Scholarship in Health Psychology, 22 March 2016.

[358] Dan Spinelli (2014). Penn prof. 'horrified' life's research is connected to CIA torture techniques. The Daily Pennsylvanian, 22 Dec.

[359] Roderick D. Buchanan (2010). Playing with Fire: The controversial career of Hans J. Eysenck. Oxford University Press.

[360] P. DeSilva, S. Rachman & M.E. Seligman (1977). Prepared phobias and obsessions: therapeutic outcome. Behav Res Ther.15:1, 65-77.

[361] Rachman & M.E. Seligman (1976). Unprepared phobias: 'Be prepared.' Behav Res Ther. 14:5, 333-8

[362] Dan Spinelli (2014). Penn prof. 'horrified' life's research is connected to CIA torture techniques. The Daily Pennsylvanian, 22 Dec.

[363] Maria Konnikova (2015). Trying to Cure Depression, but Inspiring Torture. The New Yorker, 14 Jan.

[364] Mark Benjamin (2010). 'War on Terror' Gets a Giant No-Bid Contract. Salon, 14 Oct.

In 2014, a US Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report concluded: (a) the CIA 'enhanced interrogation' program was counter-productive to its expressed goal of gathering intelligence; (b) James Mitchell developed a 'menu' of 20 torture techniques including waterboarding and sleep deprivation; and (c) Mitchell used SERE (Survive, Evade, Resist, Escape) tactics to develop the CIA torture program. SERE tactics were derived from Chinese brain-washing techniques used on US POWs during the Korean War.[365] [366] SERE includes MK-ULTRA methods found in the Kubark Manual (1963) and the CIA Phoenix Program.

(Incidentally, on 24 February 2004, Martin Seligman was one of only 40 or so guests who attended The Edge 'Billionaires Dinner' at Monterey, CA with child trafficking pedophile Jeffrey Epstein.)

The APA (American Psychological Association) commissioned an independent report to determine the role their organisation played in Seligman's CIA torture programme. The report revealed direct collusion at the highest levels of the APA which ensured psychologists like Martin Seligman and James Mitchell could participate in abusive torture methods.[367]

In 2010, the US Army awarded Martin Seligman a $31 million no-bid contract to develop a 'resilience training' program for soldiers. The resultant Comprehensive Soldier Fitness Program was an unethical research project under the guise of an exercise program.[368] Martin Seligman's unethical experiment denied soldiers' rights to informed consent and forced them to abandon critical thinking and respond more obediently using Positive Psychology. In a component called 'Spiritual Fitness' soldiers were told religion is essential to achieve better mental health. Positive Psychology promotes Tibetan Buddhism, meaning Buddhism was the religion forced on soldiers during Seligman's experiment. The US Army admitted the experiment's purpose was to produce an 'indomitable army.'

SELIGMAN & KIDMAN

Antony Kidman became a lifelong associate of Martin Seligman at the University of Pennsylvania where he studied under Aaron Tim Beck, father of CBT (Cognitive Behavioural Therapy). Kidman and Seligman subsequently published books together and introduced CBT and Positive Psychology to Australia.[369]

Martin Seligman conducted Learned Helplessness research at the IoP while Antony Kidman was involved with Learned Helplessness at the University of Sydney's Kolling Institute of Medical Research, which is located at the Royal North Shore Hospital. The resultant 1975 paper, The Experimental Contusion Injury of the Spinal Cord in Sheep, was co-authored by J.D. Yeo, W. Payne, B. Hinwood, and A.D. Kidman.[370] The researchers used an 'impounder' to simulate spinal trauma, paraplegia and sensory loss in the hind limbs of sheep. The spinal injury created a neurological response like electric shock, only more intense. While the other three researchers were interested in paraplegia and observing the efficacy of treatments applied to spinal cord trauma, biochemist Kidman focused on the post-trauma effects of norepinephrine. Kidman and his colleagues found:

---

[365] Scott Shane (2008). China Inspired Interrogations at Guantánamo. The New York Times, 2 July.

[366] A.D. Biderman (1957). Communist Attempts to Elicit False Confessions from Air Force Prisoners of War. Bulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine. September, 33:9, 616–625.

[367] James Risen (2015). Outside Psychologists Shielded US Torture Program, Report Finds. The New York Times, 10 July.

[368] Roy Eidelson (2011). The Dark Side of 'Comprehensive Soldier Fitness': mandatory 'resilience training' program for all US soldiers raises concerns. Psychology Today. 25 March.

[369] M.E.P. Seligman (Foreword, Antony Kidman) (1994). Learned Optimism: Optimism is Essential for a Good and Successful Life: You too can Acquire it. Random House.

[370] J.D. Yeo, W. Payne, B.G. Hinwood & A.D. Kidman (1975). The experimental contusion injury of the spinal cord in sheep. Paraplegia, 12, 275-296.

1. A fourfold increase in the levels of or norepinephrine;
2. Low levels of dopamine within one hour have not been substantiated in more recent work by other laboratories;
3. The time interval following the trauma is important and further work on monoamine 'turnover' is necessary to elucidate this complex problem.

The cause of the Learned Helplessness phenomena was unclear at that time of Kidman's sheep research, with some theorising it was a rapid norepinephrine depletion following the initial shock or trauma.[371] The resultant article cited a 1974 paper concerning a similar experiment with cats.[372] The cat study is cited in a 2007 article (titled, 'The Role of Stress in Recovery of Function After Spinal Cord Injury') which also cites Seligman's 1975 Learned Helplessness Theory. In other words, Kidman's sheep experiment was linked to Seligman's Learned Helplessness research via relevant citations, plus its aim, method, and neurotransmitter observations.

POSITIVE PSYCHOLOGY IS MK-ULTRA MIND CONTROL

Positive Psychology began in the 1960s with humanistic and existential psychology, which emphasized reaching innate potential and creating life meaning. MK-ULTRA doctor Abraham Maslow coined the term 'Positive Psychology' to describe his work. Albert Ellis, the 'unsung hero of positive psychology,' demonstrated his original work at a 1960s Esalen Institute seminar.[373] [374]

Positive Psychology is fundamentally connected to both Cognitive Behavioural Therapy (CBT) and Learned Helplessness.[375] Walter Reed Army Hospital psychologist Aaron T. Beck developed CBT with Albert Ellis. Positive Psychology is based on CBT.[376] Beck explained the similarities between CBT and Positive Psychology during a 2012 Beck Institute Workshop. Aaron Beck and Albert Ellis influenced Martin Seligman and Antony Kidman and their introduction of CBT and Positive Psychology to Australia. Seligman introduced Positive Psychology in his first address as American Psychological Association President in 1998, with fellow APA member Antony Kidman in attendance.[377]

---

[371] Symposium (1998). The science of Optimism and Hope. In Research Essays in Honour of Martin E.P. Seligman. Philadelphia, PA.

[372] N.E. Naftchi et al. (1974). Biogenic amine concentrations in traumatized spinal cords of cats. Effect of Drug Therapy. Journal of Neurosurgery. Jan, 40:1, 52-7.

[373] Walter T. Anderson (1983). The Upstart Spring: Esalen and the Human potential Movement: The first Twenty Years. Addison-Wesley.

[374] M.E. Bernard et al. (2010) Albert Ellis: Unsung hero of positive psychology, The Journal of Positive Psychology, 5:4, 302-10.

[375] Maria Konnikova (2015). Trying to Cure Depression, but Inspiring Torture. The New Yorker, 14 January.

[376] Dennis Greenberger (2014). The link between Cognitive Behavioural Therapy and Positive Psychology. Advances in Cognitive Therapy. June, 14:2.

[377] Antony Kidman (1998) Power and progress: Psychology in the new world, Clinical Psychologist, 2:2, 20.

Kirk J. Schneider criticised Seligman's Positive Psychology for distorting reality. He found high levels of positive thinking to correlate with 'Positive Illusion':

> What the researchers don't help us to understand – and what will be essential to understand if we are ever to substantively broach human vitality – is how positivity ratios also appear to correlate with destructive human tendencies. For example, a growing body of research appears to suggest that what the researchers call high positivity – a disposition to pleasant, grateful, and upbeat feelings – also correlative with a dimension called 'positive illusion' (relative inaccuracy regarding reality); and that negativity (or what is generally characterized as mild to moderate depression) is correlated with relatively greater accuracy concerning reality. These findings, moreover, also appear to square with recent correlations between highly positive people and suppressed psychological growth, inability to self-reflect, and racial intolerance.[378]

Positive Psychology reduces the individual's ability to critically think and understand reality, effects consistent with the goals of the eugenics project we know as MK-ULTRA.

Positive Psychology correlates with Positive Illusion - inaccuracy regarding reality

CIA Positive Psychology & Buddhism Conferences

Since 2006, Sydney has hosted yearly conferences that jointly promote Buddhism and Positive Psychology. The Happiness and its Causes conferences are organised by the Dalai Lama and the Vajrayana Institute. The Dalai Lama is a well-documented CIA asset with a long history of receiving CIA funding.

> The Dalai Lama himself was on the CIA's payroll from the late 1950s until 1974, reportedly receiving $US15,000 a month ($US180,000 a year). The funds were paid to him personally, but he used all or most of them for Tibetan government-in-exile activities, principally to fund offices in New York and Geneva, and to lobby internationally. [379]

In 1959, the Chinese ousted the Tibetan government run by the Dalai Lama and his band of aristocratic, nepotistic monks who collected taxes, and jailed, tortured and skinned alive dissenters. The monks' torture and mind control methods were documented and developed by Hitler and the CIA. The Dalai Lama was paid $1 million to endorse Keith Rainere's child trafficking NXVIM cult.[380] He also covered up sexual assaults committed by Tibetan Buddhist monks.

The first Happiness and its Causes conference was held in 2006 at the Sydney Masonic Centre.[381] Happiness Conferences mainly feature Positive Psychology practitioners, ecumenical religious leaders, and journalists (especially from the leftist, anti-victim ABC) who promote Positive Psychology and Tibetan Buddhism. Notable speakers include:

---

[378] Kirk J. Schneider (2010). Toward a Humanistic Positive Psychology: Why Can't We Just Get Along? Psychology Today [Online] 29 November.

[379] Michael Backman (2007). Behind Dalai Lama's Holy Cloak. The Age, 23 May.

[380] Ryan Perry (2018). Dalai Lama was paid $1 MILLION to endorse women-branding 'sex cult' after secret deal between Buddhist's celibate US emissary and his Seagram billionaire 'lover.' Daily Mail, 25 January.

[381] 2006 Conference brochure.

- Antony Kidman (My MK-ULTRA perpetrator.)
- Michael Kirby (Accused pedophile judge.)
- Bob Carr (Accused pedophile politician who attended Bohemian Grove.)
- Sue Hawke (Daughter of my pedophile rapist Bob Hawke.)
- Paul Ekman (US Army Chief Psychologist, CIA / MK-ULTRA psychologist.)
- Martin Seligman (Promoted Positive Psychology's potential role in schools.)
- Sarah Edelman (Psychologist at Antony Kidman's UTS Health Psychology Unit. Theosophical Society sells her meditation CDs.)
- Graham Burrows (Martin Orne associate, Australian False Memory Association.)
- B. Alan Wallace (Stanford University Tibetan Buddhist.)
- Stephen Meek (Principal Geelong Grammar School. First Australian principal to approve the Positive Schools program. Implicated in covering up pedophilia at Geelong Grammar School since 2004. Testified (2015) to Child Abuse Royal Commission that he was more interested in protecting his school's reputation than exposing pedophile staff.[382]
- Tim Sharp (Positive psychologist. Founded Australia's Happiness Institute. On World Happiness Forum. Lectures at Kidman's UTS.)
- Russ Harris (Leading Australian Acceptance Commitment Therapy trainer, said ACT 'has many parallels to Buddhism.')
- Toni Noble (Lead author of the pro-pedophile Safe Schools Framework. Proposed using Positive Psychology to achieve ASIO Director's stated objectives – 'greater social cohesion' to combat 'youth militant extremism' – during keynote address, 2015 Positive Schools Conference.)

ABC journalist conference speakers included Norman Swan (who interviewed Antony Kidman about treating psychosis with genitive CBT, months prior to Kidman's death), Sophie Scott, Margaret Throsby, Anne Deveson, Geraldine Doogue, Julie McCrossin, Richard Glover, Natasha Mitchell, Margaret Coffey and Phillip Adams.

EKMAN, DALAI LAMA & the CIA

In the late 1960s, Paul Ekman conduct weaponized anthropology research on the very same PNG tribe that Leonas Petrauskas, Vincent Zigas and Carelton Gadjusek exploited in their MK-NAOMI research.[383] Ekman's PNG research was funded by DARPA and AFOSR (Air Force Office of Scientific Research). Ekman collaborated with MK-ULTRA hub, the University of Western Australia, on weaponised anthropology in PNG. UWA lecturer Ronald Taft channelled CIA money into similar studies.[384]

---

[382] Henrietta Cook (2015). Sex abuse inquiry: Geelong Grammar principal Stephen Meek apologises to sexual abuse victims. The Age, 11 September.

[383] P. Ekman & W.V. Friesen. Constants across the cultures in the face and emotion. J Pers Soc Psychol. Feb 1971. 17:2, 124-9.

[384] David H. Price, Buying a piece of anthropology Part 1: Human Ecology and unwitting anthropological research for the CIA, Anthropology Today, June 2007, 23:3, 8-13.

Paul and his daughter Eve Ekman operate the Paul Ekman Group who do contract work for the CIA and FBI, and offer training in lie detection, body language analysis and other methods relevant to CIA interrogation and mind control operations. Two key employees are (1) Paul Kelly, whose experience includes Army Interrogation and Psychological Operations, liaises with police, military, NSA, FBI, and CIA, and (2) John Pearse, who worked in New Scotland Yard's Anti-Terrorist Branch, and designs and delivers 'counter-terrorism' seminars.

The 2016 Happiness Conference, attended by the Dalai Lama, headlined Eve Ekman. In 2000, B. Alan Wallace, Paul and Eve Ekman developed the Cultivating Emotional Balance project with the Dalai Lama. In 2001, Paul Ekman was invited to join the CIA Torture Program initiated at Martin Seligman's house. An email from Kirk Hubbard, CIA Senior Behavioural Scientist, notes, 'I have been in contact with Ekman and he is eager to do work for us.' Ekman denied joining the program but admitted his research assisted CIA interrogators.[385]

KIDMAN & LIZ MULLINAR

Liz Mullinar was Nicole Kidman's first agent and promoter who helped orchestrate her success. Mullinar cast the 1987 film The Right-Hand Man. Filming for this movie took place in 1985, in Bathurst, at the same time as the Bathurst City Hall Luciferian ritual.[386] The shoot began 9th October 1985 and went for 10 weeks.[387]

Liz Mullinar said she is a victim of a pedophile ring involving her Anglican father. She founded Heal for Life, which was Australia's leading SRA clinic, until reports emerged that the centre employed Satanic cult members. I corresponded with Mullinar immediately following Kidman's death and public exposure as a pedophile, but she denied any knowledge of Kidman's overwhelming and blatant involvement in pedophilia, Luciferianism, ritual abuse, and mind control.

Liz Mullinar was Chair of the Belvoir Street Theatre which Nicole Kidman owns shares in. Antony Kidman was linked to Belvoir via a play produced there in 2008. Kidman donated to the production of The Pillowman. An employee at the Health Psychology Unit Kidman headed assisted with production. The play featured the violent sadistic murder, mutilation and crucifixion of children by a psychotic killer – in the manner I witnessed Kidman crucify a young boy in the University of Sydney Great Hall.

Bruce Spence

This B-grade actor and rapist associated closely with Liz Mullinar and Antony Kidman. He was also involved in the Nimrod Theatre, and appeared in films including Mad Max, Dimboola, Blue World Order, The Matrix, and he voiced Sauron in Lord of the Rings. Spence was a University of Sydney OTO member who participated in the crucifixion ritual murder in the Great Hall. After I first reported Bruce Spence as my perpetrator, he responded by poking fun at me in a TV show which attempted to discredit my testimony. The program featured a group of people investigating a Luciferian cult, wearing tin foil hats. Bruce Spence played a Luciferian dressed in OTO ritual robes who devoured a baby before instructing a samurai sword wielding young female MK-ULTRA assassin to murder a pedophile hunter and 'make it look like an accident.'

---

[385] Paula Gordon (2016). Torture and the Psychologists. Huffington Post, 5 Aug.

[386] David Stratton (1990). The Avocado Plantation: Boom and Bust in the Australian Film Industry. Pan MacMillan.

[387] Production Round-up, Cinema Papers, Nov. 1985, 48.

BATHURST FOUNDED ON FREEMASONRY

While designing Bathurst's belltower, architect Henry Bialowas realised the entire town was originally designed according to hidden math and sacred geometry that depict the solar system and planets, and astrological themes. Bathurst was planned around the golden ratio and divided into squares that are numbered in a spiral formation. The central square, which contains a Catholic church, was intentionally left unnumbered because it sits at the omega point - which can't be named, numbered or bound, and begins and ends in infinity. Freemason Thomas Mitchell was Bathurst's town planner. Mitchell belonged to the 59th Regiment attached to its own Freemason military lodge, and his patron, George Murray, was Grandmaster of the London Lodge.

Bathurst contained several Freemason lodges, one of which David Waddel was Deputy. David's daughter Leila Ida Nerissa Bathurst-Waddel, an artist and musician, was Aleister Crowley's mistress. (A 'Bathurst' family in the UK was related to the British Royals). Leila Bathurst-Waddel helped establish the OTO in Australia and she became its highest-ranking member. The OTO has a female chapter called the Order of the Eagle into which I was initiated. Leila Bathurst-Waddle was posthumously inducted into the Order of the Eagle in April 1999. Russian Helena Blavatsky was posthumously inducted in 2000. During the Bathurst Luciferian ritual I attended, the cult hung a large satin Order of the Eagle banner on the Bathurst City Hall stage.

ENGADINE MEDICAL CENTRE

When I knew Leonas Petrauskas he lived within walking distance of my grandmother's Engadine house and owned and operated the local Engadine Medical Centre with fellow Luciferian John Melov. In 2015, an Engadine resident named Pat told Steve McMurray and I that Petrauskas referred her to Harry Bailey. Pat described both physicians as unethical and how her prescription of experimental medication resulted in her growing a beard. Pat's husband described bizarre experiments being performed on children at a small private Engadine hospital that Petrauskas and Melov owned and operated. He saw a five-year-old girl submerged in a tub of ice with tubes protruding from her orifices.

'COWBOY' HARRY BAILEY

Referring to the Tulane University psychosurgery experiments he conducted with Robert Heath (contractor to MK-ULTRA Subproject 68), Harry Richard Bailey boasted:

> It was cheaper to use Niggers than cats, because they were everywhere, and they were cheap experimental animals.[388]

Harry Bailey received a 15-month World Health Organization fellowship to study psychosurgery, ECT and Deep Sleep Therapy with Ewen Cameron and William Sargant.[389] Upon returning to Australia, he headed the new Cerebral Surgery and Research Unit at Callan Park Psychiatric Hospital in Sydney. In September 1957, the Sydney Sunday tabloid published an article about a Callan Park experiment, headlined: 'Human Guinea Pigs in Test: A Sydney mental specialist and 15 other volunteers deliberately sent themselves temporarily insane in recent mental research tests.' In this article, Bailey promoted LSD as a potential treatment for 'mental cases' and said his experiments were aimed at identifying the brain area affected by schizophrenia. Harry Bailey was appointed Medical Superintendent of Callan Park in 1959. In 1961 he entered private practice in Macquarie Street, where Sydney's early gay and lesbian activists protested after Bailey tried to 'cure' a man's homosexuality with lobotomy. Bailey's research associate Robert Heath did the same. Heath also paid a prostitute to have sex with a suicidal gay man whose brain response was read via an ECG.[390]

---

[388] H. Cheeves & D.N. Cheeves (2004). Legacy. Trafford, 234.

[389] Stephen Garton (2007). Harry Richard Bailey. In Australian Dictionary of Biography, Vol. 17. ANU.

MK-ULTRA AT CHELMSFORD

Harry Bailey founded a private hospital with doctors John Herron, Ian Gardiner and John Gill. Chelmsford Private Hospital became Australia's worst psychiatric disaster where over 1,400 patients were subjected to hypnotic drugs, ECT and DST in a mostly experimental fashion without informed consent. The entire Chelmsford medical team were previously involved in a eugenics program of forced adoption at Sydney's Crown Street Hospital for Women where babies were taken from 'unfit' mothers and given to mothers deemed more appropriate.[391] A massive 64% of unwed mothers had their babies stolen at Crown Street Hospital. Harry Bailey used hypnotic drugs to make the reluctant birth mothers comply. He directly ordered the abortion of twin foetuses without the consent of a woman who was under the influence of hypnotic drugs.

Harry Bailey was William Sargant's Deep Sleep Therapy protégé and the two maintained contact during Bailey's MK-ULTRA work in Australia. Sargant authored Battle for the Mind: A Physiology of Conversion and Brainwashing, a book lauded by Aldous Huxley. Harry Bailey competed with Sargant by seeing how long he could keep Chelmsford patients in a state of Deep Sleep. Ewen Cameron caused permanent damage to over 50 patients with his brainwashing experiments. Harry Bailey topped that statistic by killing at least 85 patients at Chelmsford Private Hospital via ECT, Deep Sleep Therapy, and drug experiments.[392]

Harry Bailey sexually seduced vulnerable Chelmsford patients, as young as 18 years old, and coerced them into signing their wills over to him. This was the case with Sharon Hamilton, a Chelmsford victim whose $100,000 estate went to Bailey following her suicide. Bailey also raped victims while they lay in drug-induced comas. In 1974, Bailey placed a young woman named Bronwyn Colefax in a drug-induced coma and repeatedly electrocuted her for a fortnight until her leg shrank to half its size and her brain was permanently damaged.

A 1967 coronial inquest into five Chelmsford deaths went nowhere. The hospital closed in 1979 following multiple complaints. Bronwyn Colefax became the first victim to sue Harry Bailey who 'suicided' via a drug overdose in 1985 while under investigation. The Grande Council, including Antony Kidman and Leonas Petrauskas, congregated in the University of Sydney's Maclaurin Hall to decide 'Cowboy' Harry Bailey's penance for threatening to expose MK-ULTRA in Australia.

In 1990, the Chelmsford Royal Commission concluded John Gill, 'must bear a large part of the responsibility for the consequences of Chelmsford both in terms of the suffering and sometimes deaths of patients.' John Gill was charged with manslaughter and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm, but our High Court ruled the deaths occurred too long ago to prosecute, and prosecution would constitute an 'abuse of process.' John Gill continued practising. Ian Herron was referred to the DPP regarding his involvement in the deaths of a police officer in 1974 plus a journalist in 1976, but no charges were laid. In 1980, a court awarded 'compensatory and aggravated damages' against Ian Herron for 'wrongful imprisonment, assault and negligence' against a former patient.

---

[390] Robert G. Heath (1972). Pleasure and brain activity in man: deep and surface electroencephalograms during orgasm. J Nerv Ment Dis, Jan, 154:1, 3-18.

[391] Origins Victoria (2011). Submission by G.A. Rickarby to Senate Inquiry into Commonwealth contribution to forced adoption policies and practices.

[392] Anthony James (2013). Amputated Souls: The Psychiatric Assault on Liberty 1935-2011. Imprint Academia.

Chelmsford, Scientology & the CIA

I met Bronwyn Colefax who gave me the facts surrounding her Chelmsford case. In the early 1980s, Bronwyn's lawyer warned the CIA were involved in Chelmsford and would tap her phone. The CIA employed their cult cut-out, the Church of Scientology, to exact damage control measures in the Chelmsford aftermath. The Scientologists established an advocacy and support service, Citizens Commission on Human Rights, for the many Chelmsford victims who came forward after Bronwyn Colefax tested the legal waters.[393] The Scientologists collected victim witness testimonies and evidence, thus enabling the CIA to target any victim who threatened to expose the fact that Chelmsford was a MK-ULTRA research centre.

Legal Hypocrisy

An investigative journalist wrote a 2016 book about Scientology in Australia which included a chapter about Scientology's involvement in Chelmsford. The chapter simply restated the facts of the Chelmsford Royal Commission findings concerning John Herron, Ian Gardiner, and John Gill.[394] In late 2018, a judge ruled the chapter defamed the Chelmsford doctors, ordered publishers to pay the Chelmsford doctors' legal costs, and ruled the defendants must prove the facts of the original Chelmsford case. So, 30 years after the Chelmsford doctors escaped prosecution because High Court judges ruled the case was too old, a judge decides the case is not too old. Bronwyn Colefax is outraged at the decision which she believes is an 'abuse of process.' Such a ruling would be impossible if Australia had a Bill of Rights. Australians have no Freedom of Speech; this sad fact, combined with our harsh defamation laws, protects Australian perpetrators. The only thing that makes sense of this judicial decision is that the CIA are desperate to continue the coverup of the MK-ULTRA crimes their doctors committed at Chelmsford Private Hospital.

MK-ULTRA & its AUSSIE CULTS

The CIA began using cult cut-outs to conceal Project MK-ULTRA mind control activities, in 1963. Australian cult cut-outs included Scientology, Mormonism, Buddhism, Yoga Ashram, Hare Krishna, Orange People, Kenja, Christian life Centre (aka, Hillsong) and the OTO. These child abuse cults provided fertile ground for MK-ULTRA victim recruitment.

The Orange People were led by Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh. The cult established a large following in Sydney and Western Australia before moving to Oregon in the USA. The cult renamed themselves Osho and many Australian members settled on communal properties in and around Byron Bay, including a 40-hectare commune called Gondwana Sanctuary.

Kenja is minor cult was founded in 1982 by Ken Dyers who joined the Church of Scientology after leaving the Australian Army. In 1993 Dyers was charged with sexual offences against four young girls but escaped conviction. He was again charged with child sexual assault in 2005 but suicided before the case could return to court.

---

[393] Steve Cannane (2016). Fair Game: The Incredible Untold Story of Scientology in Australia. Harper Collins.

[394] Michael Bachelard, How a zombie case came back to life thanks to Australia's defamation law. Sydney Morning Herald. 2 December 2018.

Hare Krishna cult headquarters are located on a northern NSW farm. As a parole officer I encountered numerous cases of child abuse perpetrated at the Hare Krishna farm. Yet my true understanding came through my father who closely associated with its members, and the home midwifery association my mother worked with. The Krishna cult had its own midwife who delivered babies whose births went unregistered. My father attended Luciferian rituals, and witnessed an underground arsenal, at their Eungella compound. My younger siblings were ritually abused by members of this cult, notably a witch who used the cult pseudonym 'Roochie' and claimed her Indian-looking son, the product of an affair in India, was the result of a miraculous conception by Krishna. Roochie subsequently reverted to her original name, Sharon, and joined the Usana pyramid selling scheme which I discovered to be another satanic cult front.

The Family stemmed from the US Children of God pedophile cult which changed its name following negative publicity. Yoga teacher Anne Hamilton-Byrne led the Australian branch of The Family. Hamilton-Byrne was guided by Swami Muktananda, who worked with Wyatt Woodsmall, who instructed NXIVM co-founder Nancy Salzman in mind-control. Another notable cult associate is Julian Assange whose mother married Leif Meynell-Hamilton, a musician and member of The Family.

The Family was alternatively called Santiniketan Park Association, or The Great White Brotherhood - a term coined by Luciferian Helena Blavatsky and pedophile Charles Webster Leadbeater (high-ranking Freemason, Theosophist, and member of Aleister Crowley's OTO). According to Leadbeater, a colony was to be established in Baja California by the Theosophical Society under the guidance of the Masters of the Ancient Wisdom, for the intensive selective eugenic breeding of the sixth root race (i.e., a branch of the Aryan fifth root race).[395] Leadbeater's cult location moved from California to Australia. Hence the idea behind The Family was to foster an Aryan bloodline which would eventually reincarnate a New World leader.

Anne Hamilton-Byrne acquired 28 babies and young children during the 1960s and '70s. Some were the natural children of cult members, others stolen via a network of cult doctors, social workers and lawyers. One child victim, Sarah Hamilton-Byrne, said in her biography that medical practitioners in Melbourne and Geelong stole infants by telling mothers their babies had died at birth.[396] The children's identities were changed using false birth certificates or deed poll and given the surname 'Hamilton-Byrne.' They were told Anne Hamilton-Byrne was their biological mother, and to address adult cult members as 'Aunty' or 'Uncle.' (My perpetrators were similarly called my 'family' and I had to address members as 'Aunty' or 'Uncle.'). Hamilton-Byrne dressed the children alike and dyed their hair white. The kids were isolated from society and home-schooled at Kia Lama (Uptop), a rural property at Taylor Bay on Lake Eildon, Victoria where they were subjected to MK-ULTRA mind control methods including isolation, beatings, starvation, drugging, and sensory deprivation. They were administered LSD and subjected to sensory deprivation in a dark room when they reached adolescence.

---

[395] Annie Besant & C.W. Leadbeater (1947). Man: Whence, How and Whither. Theosophical Publishing House.

[396] Sarah Hamilton-Byrne (1995). Unseen, Unheard, Unknown. Penguin Books.

The Family recruited middle-class professionals, with one-third of members being nurses and other medical practitioners. It had numerous intelligence connections. Michael Stevenson-Helmer, a 19-year-old law student interested in eastern religion, later became a Family cult leader. Stevenson-Helmer comes from a prominent Jewish family including CIA agent Sir Zelman Cowen (Royal Australian Navy, B'nai B'rith member, Governor-General 1977-82) and KGB Agent Dr John Helmer who was also involved with The Family. Richard Casey visited 'Kai Lama' where they hid the kidnapped children, and he is rumoured to have made personal donations to the cult. The 'Santinekitan' property was owned by CIA agent Sir John Latham.

Raynor C. Johnson was The Family's true founder. A member of the Society for Psychical Research, Johnson worked for the University of Melbourne Physics Department at a time when the institution supported the RAAF (Royal Australian Air Force). Johnson recruited members to The Family by referring them to Hamilton-Byrne's hatha yoga classes. Raynor Johnson and Anne Hamilton-Byrne were mentored by Thomas Maughan (Theosophist, Chief Druid, British Navy Intelligence Officer). MK-ULTRA founder Aldous Huxley mentioned Raynor Johnson in his letter to MK-ULTRA doctor Humphrey Osmond:[397]

> I liked the things you said for Dr Raynor Johnson's chapter on drugs and spiritual experience in his latest book.[398] An interesting book – tho' perhaps he multiplies spiritual entities beyond what is strictly necessary.

Anne Hamilton-Byrne had other ties to RAAF Intelligence: she was raised on an RAAF base, and married an RAAF Lieutenant. Australian military children like her were commonly recruited into MK-ULTRA. Hamilton-Byrne married RAAF Intelligence Officer Lionel Harris who, she said, was killed by a KGB officer in 1955 while working for ASIS. Another RAAF connection was psychiatrist Lance Howard Whittaker, The Family's principal MK-ULTRA doctor. Whittaker was an RAAF Wing Commander during the cult's heyday.

During the 1960s and '70s, Family cult member Marion Villimek owned Newhaven Psychiatric Hospital in Kew, a private facility staffed exclusively by Family cult members and associated MK-ULTRA doctors. At Newhaven, Whittaker conducted mind control research with Ronald Conway (RAAF, Freemason, Oscar Oeser protégé, and pedophile) and LSD studies with MK-ULTRA psychiatrist John Mackay. The Family used Newhaven to recruit new cult members from its patients, and to administer LSD to cult members. In the late '60s, an early cult recruit was given LSD, ECT plus two lobotomies. In 1992, Newhaven closed after an Inquest was ordered into the 1975 death of a Deep Sleep therapy patient.

Whittaker abandoned his wife and children at The Family property. He commenced work at the Mayday Hills Psychiatric Hospital in Beechworth in 1970, where he used sodium amytal on patients during therapy sessions, and he subjected severely psychotic patients to three-day Deep Sleep Therapy comas.

Sarah Hamilton-Byrne escaped the cult, alerted police who rescued the other children, and went on to graduate from high school and medicine. Police raided Kia Lama on 14 August 1987. Anne Hamilton-Byrne and her husband William subsequently fled overseas for six years. Police eventually extradited the couple back to Australia and charged them with conspiracy to defraud and commit perjury by falsely registering the births of three unrelated children as their own triplets. Lawyer Elizabeth Whitaker, wife of psychiatrist Howard Whitaker, acted as their co-defendant. The Hamilton-Byrnes pleaded guilty to the lesser charge of making a false declaration and were fined $5000. Anne Hamilton-Byrne lived comfortably to the ripe old age of 94 years. Police dropped a charge against Howard Whitaker who maintained the respect and support of Victoria's medical fraternity. The Australian government's coverup of The Family is indicative of Project MK-ULTRA.

---

[397] Michael Horowitz & Cynthia Palmer (Eds.) (1977). Moksha: Aldous Huxley's Classic Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience. Stonehill.

[398] Raynor Johnson (1959). Watcher on the Hills: A Study of Some Mystical Experiences of Ordinary People. Hodder and Stoughton.

Satyananda Yoga Ashram

This Luciferian offshoot renamed themselves Mangrove Yoga Ashram after the federal Royal Commission exposed them as Luciferian pedophiles in 2014. Children as young as four were starved, tortured, drugged, beaten, had their heads flushed down a toilet, and subjected to 'horrific' sexual and physical abuse at Satyananda Yoga Ashram in the 1970s and 1980s. Nine victims testified to the Royal Commission. One victim described being subjected to a Tibetan Buddhist black magic ritual at age six years. She was taken into a dark room lit with candles where a group of male swamis chanted, and gang raped her. The men restrained the girl while the Indian ashram leader raped her, cut her chest with a knife, and licked her blood.

Dr Sandra Smith is a psychiatrist who taught yoga at the Yoga Ashram and lied to the Royal Commission under cross examination about the abuse that occurred there. Sandra Smith and her lawyer husband Keith Allen implicated in a separate Royal Commission matter. Keith Allen was cross examined (in CS42) regarding a 2001 incident where he conspired to conceal the repeated rapes of two boys by Newcastle diocese Anglican priest George Parker. The Anglican diocese Vice Chancellor, Paul Rosser, defended the pedophile priest. The presiding judge, Ralph Coolahan, also worked for the Anglican Diocese. Keith Allen, a trustee of the Newcastle Anglican diocese, acted for victim Steven Smith. Keith Allen sent his client Steven Smith to his wife Dr Sandra Smith for a psychiatric evaluation, without disclosing to the plaintiff that the doctor was his wife. Dr Sandra Smith then leaked the sensitive information she gathered during her assessment of the plaintiff - to defendant George Parker's attorney, Paul Rosser. Anglican diocese records of George Parker's church attendance were subsequently doctored to contradict the sexual assault dates and times provided by the priest's victims. Notably the crucial date on which George Parker raped Steven Smith and another boy, was erased. The missing entries collapsed the case and provided an excuse for corrupt Judge Coolahan to set George Parker free. While cross examining Keith Allen, the Royal Commission accused him of evidence tampering, as the following newspaper article explains:

> SOLICITOR DENIES 'FIXING' STATEMENT TO ROYAL COMMISSION
> Ian Kirkwood, Newcastle Herald, 9 August 2016
>
> …In other evidence, Mr Allen was taken to a church register that the defence of priest CJC used in a 2001 trial that was discontinued by the Director of Public Prosecutions after the document appeared to show that the priest was not in the place that his victims, CKA and CKB, had said he was.
>
> The commission heard that there were very few alterations through any of the pages of the register except for the page that was pertinent to the trial. The commission heard that numbers, apparently relating to the number of worshippers, had been > rubbed out and altered. A crucial date, April 29, 1975, was not in chronological order, and two signatures for the one person appeared to be in different handwriting. Solicitor Peter O'Brien, for victims CKA and CKB, put it to Mr Allen that 'this document, sir, is a forgery, isn't it?'

Fresh charges were laid against George Parker years later, but he died before facing court again. Keith Allen and Paul Rosser are still practising law instead of being charged with a criminal offence as the Royal Commission suggested.

I was contacted by a former child patient of psychiatrist Sandra Smith. In the 1980s, Dr Sandra Smith concealed the sexual and ritual abuse disclosed by the 13-year-old patient and her older sister. Sandra Smith told the victims' mother that the sisters' disclosure was a form of 'childhood sexual fantasy' and that 'young girls often fantasise this way about their fathers.' Sandra Smith's psychologist colleague agreed with her diagnosis. Sandra Smith and her colleague recommended the two sisters attend family therapy with their perpetrator father, which occurred. Dr Sandra Smith further advised the teenage victim to visit the Satyananda Yoga Ashram as a form of therapeutic intervention. Decades later, the girls' father served prison time for abusing his younger daughter (the older sister refused to testify). He also was convicted of sexually abusing his daughter's friend.

Krista Petrauskas

Leonas Petrauskas' daughter Krista Petrauskas associated with the Kundalini practising Satyananda Yoga Ashram located in Berowra on the NSW Central Coast. She stated in an email to my documentary producer: 'I lived here for the best part of a year. The shit hit the fan in 1986 or thereabouts after a murder.' Krista also part-owned a Buddhist cooperative with Kabbala expert Ayya Khema in Obi, Queensland. Ayya Khema was influential in the USA and helped establish Buddhism in Australia.

Krista was involved with James McGarry, a hypnotist who likes to dress up in robes and founded the Academy of Esoteric Sciences (in 1985) and Academy of Human Sciences (1977). Immediately after we filmed my Candy Girl documentary and contacted Krista Petrauskas, she contacted McGarry. After I detailed Krista's crimes to the NSW Police, she and McGarry wiped their social media accounts, sold their properties, and disappeared.

* * *

MK-ULTRA in the MILITARY

The common goal is global uniting, global control.
- Kay Griggs

My friend observed to me: 'Obviously you know way more about their secret military ops, and they're afraid of you remembering it, and that's why you're still targeted.'

My therapist initially opted for ceasing memory reprocessing due to the seemingly endless supply of trauma memories. 'Doors within doors within doors,' he lamented. But stopping didn't work, because every time I am retraumatised I experience flashbacks, and new material spontaneously surfaces, usually concerning Delta Black Ops.

Contrary to CIA propaganda, someone merely mentioning something does not automatically trigger my memory of it. It takes way more provocation than that. To remember, I must be returned to the original state of mind I was in at the time of construction of the alter responsible for the memory.

Several years ago, an American mind control victim named Kirsty excitedly asked me: 'Did they make you fly planes? They made my sister and I fly planes.'

'No,' I answered.

'Are you sure? They made us all fly planes.'

No, I certainly had no memory of piloting planes...yet.

Years after Kirsty's prodding, I experienced a vivid visual flashback of flying over an orange-red coloured desert terrain snaked with what I guess were dry creek beds.

'Nevada!' the word popped into my head. The plane was tilted to the left, giving me a wonderful view of the Nevada desert. I was seated in the left side of a dark, unusual cockpit featuring computer screens and lit buttons instead of the typical flight panel. It was a B-2 stealth bomber. Although the B-2 was not officially operational until 1993, it featured in black operations a decade prior, deployed out of the Nevada desert. Its prototypes date back to the 1940's and were developed by Operation Paperclip Nazis at Area 51.

'Why the hell would they take kids for joy flights?' I complained to my Texan friend Ty.

'Err, Fiona,' she began, 'I don't know how it works in Australia, but over here the left side of the cockpit is the pilot's seat…'

'Oh, for fuck's sake! They had me flying planes now? Why the hell would I be flying a plane?!'

That made me ponder the possibility. A female 14-year-old would make an optimal pilot, being just old and tall enough to reach the controls, while retaining the superior eyesight, hand-eye coordination, dexterity, flexibility, and obedience of gifted youth. If the B-2 incorporated some type of symbiotic technology (which my gut tells me it did), that would help explain why DARPA would employ a 14-year-old female hypnotically enhanced Delta soldier with a weaponised psychic ability and an insane visual-spatial processing ability, to participate in a B-2 bombing raid.

My memory fragments include a long flight at night in a black B-2 stealth bomber ending in a bombing mission in Beirut. My Beirut memory includes the officer who assaulted me at Dulce: General Alfred M. Gray.

I was restrained in Aquino's torture chair at Dulce when the General approached me. He was grey-haired with a drunk's flushed bulbous nose. The fat gut behind his itchy green uniform, and brass buttons, pressed annoyingly against the right side of my face. He unzipped his trousers and exposed himself.

‘Don’t touch the merchandise,’ I warned through gritted teeth.

Ignoring me, he forced it into my mouth.

I bit down hard, and ground from side to side.

He screamed for help which came too late. He was rushed into theatre for surgery.

Our unit joked about the incident over dinner in the mess hall.

‘Hey,’ I threw my hands in the air in feigned innocence, ‘they never told me I couldn’t bite his dick off.’

The boys laughed hard.

Our team paid dearly for my insubordination. I was awoken that night by a violent pack rape committed by my team after which the boys snapped out of their trance, sighed, cried and apologised profusely for violating their beloved mascot.

‘It’s okay,’ I reassured and held them, ‘I’d rather you do it instead of those bastards.’

The following morning, I exited Dulce base via a narrow pedestrian door. Outside, to my right was a steep red slope. A dirt path wound down the hill and snaked up to a cave entrance in the hill to my right. Our Commander stood at ease outside the cave entrance, waiting for me. He handed me a knife and said with a hint of disappointment and disapproval, ‘Now go in and clean up your mess.’

In a split second, Alice, who felt loyal to my team was flung aside by Sascha, the alter specifically trained to unquestioning follow such repugnant orders. Inside the cave sat the three soldiers who raped me last night, their hands and feet bound. Sascha slit their throats, exited the cave, handed the knife back to our Commander, and returned to the base.

I knew the offending general was an alcoholic, and that was my initial clue to locating his identity. I searched through every picture I could find of US generals from that era. Then a flashback gave me a clue, as it linked me and the general to Beirut. I then found film footage of a drunk, slurring Alfred M. Gray Jr addressing dependents following the 23 October 1983 Beirut Marine Barracks Bombing.

When I encountered him in 1983, Major-General Alfred M. Gray was Commanding General of the Second Marine Division deployed to Beirut. He also led the combined UN forces that ‘responded’ to the bombing that they instigated, a bombing raid by a black B-2 Stealth Bomber under the cloak of night.

* * *

CHARLES A. BECKWITH

Delta Force originated in Vietnam with the Special Forces unit code-named Project Delta (aka, Operational Detachment B-52) which ran from 1964 to 1970. Charles Alvin Beckwith assumed command of Project Delta in Vietnam in 1965 and implemented his SAS experience to test and select soldiers for long-range reconnaissance operations in South Vietnam. Beckwith returned to Vietnam in 1968, commanding the 101st Airborne Division.

In 1977, Beckwith created 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment – Delta (Delta Force). Delta Force’s first mission in early 1980, Operation Eagle Claw, was a disaster. Consequently, 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment was formed to provide transport for Delta Force and other special operations units, and the Joint Special Operations Command was formed in 1980 to oversee / plan / coordinate classified activities performed by combined elite special operations forces including:

- Army 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment - Delta (Delta Force)

- Naval Special Warfare Development Group (SEAL Team 6)
- Air Force 24th Special Tactics Squadron
- Army Intelligence Support Activity
- Army Regimental Reconnaissance Company
- Joint Communications Unit

Delta Force recruits are typically selected from Green Beret, Army Rangers, SEAL 6 and other special operations units. The CIA's highly secretive Special Activities Division and more specifically its elite Special Operations Group, often work with, and recruit, Delta Force operators. As MK-ULTRA victim 'Cisco Wheeler' asserted, all Delta Force recruits are mind control victims.

COLONEL ALFRED GRAY

Al Gray was Commandant of the Marine Corps. They called Al Gray 'The Commissar' (i.e., Communist political officer) because he was a 'Russian double agent.' Kay Griggs said, 'Al Gray ran all the dirty tricks for the Army' – the murders and assassinations. Al Gray ran everything in Vietnam. He also did all of the Special Ops training. Gray's loyal Marines were called 'Gray's Boys.' Al Gray was 'Deep State operative' who collaborated with a small group of generals – 'The Brotherhood' - who worked both sides (Democrat and Republican) but answered to Nelson Rockefeller. Al Gray and Jim Joy ran Moral, Welfare & Recreation, a network of military support and leisure services as a money laundering operation. They ran all the officer's clubs which employed topless women.

General Alfred Gray, US Marine Corp

The movie A Few Good Men starring Tom Cruise and Jack Nicholson, a movie about a Marine Colonel who ordered his boys to assault a Marine in Guantanamo Bay. The film was based on a true story. Colonel George Griggs was the Chief of Staff who tried to cover the incident up for Alfred Gray, the offending Colonel portrayed by Jack Nicholson.

The movie A Few Good Men is based on the true story of when Colonel Al Gray murdered a Marine at Guantanamo.

DELTA COMMANDER: WILLIAM BOYKIN

Lt. General William Gerald 'Jerry' Boykin was my Delta team trainer and commander. A native Virginian, here are some of Boykin's career highlights:

- 101st Airborne Division, Vietnam.
- Phoenix project operative, Vietnam.
- Delta Force (13 years as operations officer, troop commander, squadron commander, deputy commander, and unit commander).
- Green Beret trainer.
- Army Ranger trainer.
- Master High Altitude Parachutist.
- CIA Director General for Operations, Readiness & Mobilisation.
- US Army Special Forces Command (Airborne).
- Under Secretary of Defence for Intelligence (under George W. Bush).
- CIA Panama coup operative.
- Grand Chancellor, Knights of Malta (aka, Order of St John).
- Coordinated the massacre of Branch Davidian children, Waco.
- Swag of medals including the Legion of Merit.

Delta Commander William Gerald 'Jerry' Boykin

GI Joe: Green Beret

GI Joe

My team called him 'GI Joe' because he was GI Joe. Like the action figure, Commander Boykin played a multitude of military roles: Rangers, Green Beret, Delta Force, HALO parachute instructor, to name a few.

Lt. Col. Lewis H. 'Bucky' Burruss helped commander Boykin with Delta Force selection in 1978. Burruss 'participated in the ill-fated Iran raid, the invasion of Grenada and a number of classified operations in the Middle East, South and Central America and elsewhere.'[399]

Bizarrely, Bucky Barnes was a Marvel Comic character whose official status as Captain America's sidekick was a cover-up. Bucky began as a 16-year-old operative trained to conduct covert assassins and other things regular soldiers and Captain America wouldn't normally do. Bucky is a Soviet Union spy, a member of a group behind Nazism who are trying to reform the world on par with Hitler's views.

Jerry Boykin's latest CIA assignment is to pose as a staunch born-again Christian and sit on the board of Christian organisations. Boykin campaigned against gays in the military when he regularly attends homosexual Military orgies. In 2016, Boykin commented on Obama's unisex bathroom bills:

> 'The first man who goes in the restroom with my daughter will not have to worry about surgery.'

I am convinced Lt. Gen. Boykin's daughter could beat the crap out of any adult male she randomly met, since that is precisely what he trained me to do as a young teenager.

I also recognise the face of Delta Commander Major General David L. Grange who spoke at the Jerusalem Conference 2010. I get the impression he may have been on the US Navy vessel when I almost drowned.

* * *

The US Military is a Mind Control Operation Run by Pedophile Rapists

> The very word 'secrecy' is repugnant in a free and open society; and we are as a people inherently and historically opposed to secret societies, to secret oaths and to secret proceedings… For we are opposed around the world by a monolithic and ruthless conspiracy that relies primarily on covert means for expanding its sphere of influence - on infiltration instead of invasion, on subversion instead of elections, on intimidation instead of free choice, on guerrillas by night instead of armies by day. It is a system which has conscripted vast human and material resources into the building of a tightly knit, highly efficient machine that combines military, diplomatic, intelligence, economic, scientific and political operations.
>
> \- JFK (27 April 1961)

---

[399] United States Army Special Operations Command. www.soc.mil/SWCS/RegimentalHonors/_pdf/sf_burruss.pdf

The public assumed JFK was talking about communism – and he was, but not in the way folks thought. America's last true President was describing the global shadow government administered and executed by 'The Firm' and ruled by Lord Rothschild. The military arm of the 'machine' JFK described was led by Marine Corp General Alfred M. Gray, whose invisible army - a synthesis of various special forces and intelligence services - conducted clandestine assassinations, coup d'états, drug running, weapons trafficking, and money laundering operations.

Such is the testimony of Katherine 'Kay' Pollard Griggs, wife of Colonel George Raymond Griggs. Col. Griggs served as General Alfred Gray's Chief of Staff Marine-Atlantic. Grigg's career as a spy and Special Operations assassin began in Vietnam. A NATO Intelligence Wet Ops and Psychological Ops expert, Col. Griggs headed NATO Special Operations under Admiral Kelso, and the Intelligence Group that occupied Beirut prior to the Marine barracks bombing. He was also involved with the HALO program which trained assassins and Special Ops in the Philippines and Panama.

During a series of interviews, Kay Griggs exposed her husband's role in the military mind-control operation run by homosexual rapists and pedophiles. The interviews, now conspiracy classics, were conducted by Pastor Rick Strawcutte (1998), Jeff Rense (2005), and Daryl Bradford Smith (2005 and 2006). I will now share a synthesis of what Kay's husband blabbed to her when he was (regularly) drunk and dissociated.

Kay was extremely traumatised from domestic violence when she gave her initial marathon interviews, and the relevant information was scattered throughout. It took me a long time to patch her points together in a sequence. I intersperse Kay's testimony with clarification of important points, and include other sources that back her claims, like Douglas Valentine who interviewed many Vietnam operatives.

OPERATION PAPERCLIP

William J. Donovan promoted communists in, and recruited Nazis to, the OSS. Donovan also started the assassin program during the Vietnam War. William Donovan recruited Allen Dulles into the OSS in 1941. Dulles became CIA Director from 1952 until Kennedy sacked him in 1961. During his directorship Dulles oversaw the immigration of Nazi SS to the USA under Paperclip. He then oversaw Project MK-Ultra, the 1953 Iranian coup d'état, 1954 Guatemalan coup, Lockheed U-2 aircraft program, and the Bay of Pigs Invasion.

The entire German High Command were smuggled into the USA under Operation Paperclip. This wave of 200,000 plus Nazi imports included the entire team of Nazi rocket scientists headed by Von Braun, a group of Viennese sexual psychologists and psychiatrists (who continued their study of sexual perversion at Harvard, Yale, John Hopkins, and in Golden, CO), plus Reinhard Gehlen and his entire Nazi Military Intelligence / Psychological Operations revolutionary terrorist group (the Abwehr) who infiltrated the US Marine Corp and US Army. Civilian Conservation Corps camps were established for the Nazi immigrants to temporarily live in. Pinochet and the Nazi Intelligence Chief Reinhardt Gehlen relocated to Fort Hunt. Von Braun and many Nazis settled in Germantown, Maryland, which became the headquarters of US Atomic Energy Commission, the Nazi infiltrated organisation responsible for the Manhattan Project and human radiation experiments.

THE GERMAN DISEASE

The German High Command brought to America what was called the 'German Disease' (i.e., homosexual pedophilia) which is imbedded in German culture. Odenwaldschule is an example of German pedophile culture. Odenwaldschule is a German boarding school that opened in 1910. From its inception, the school's teachers began sexually abusing students. Nuclear physicist Hans Bethe is a notable Odenwaldschule alumni. Bethe's Italian fellowship was funded by the Rockefeller Foundation in 1932. In 1935, Bethe moved to the USA where he worked on a particle accelerator at Cornell, followed by the Manhattan Project.

In the 1930s, the German High Command manipulated German politics so that the leaders were all pedophiles. The entire German High Command attended pedophile orgies in Naples, with orchestras and Italian boys procured and supplied by Italian Roman Catholic priests. Krupp, the German weapons manufacturers, took the German High Command to pedophile orgies hosted in the Blue Grotto on the Island of Capris, Italy.

This same group of Nazi homo-pedophiles infiltrated America's colleges, universities, military, government, and police. Kay Griggs said this explains today's child kidnapping and trafficking, and why it is being covered up - the infiltrated agencies conspire to cover up the truth.

DISCRIMINATION: MILITARY INTELLIGENCE PSY-OP

According to Kay Griggs, most senior Army and the Marine Corps are Marxist-existentialist communists and anarchists with German Ashkenazi heritage, and many are the offspring of the invading Nazi SS who were Ashkenazi homo-pedophile existentialist communists. Hitler (Ashkenazi) was recruited at a homosexual brothel.

I have additionally read that the Nazis targeted genuine Torah abiding Jews for elimination while employing Ashkenazi Talmudic Cabalists. That might explain why Lord Rothschild administered UK & Israel turned away boats of Jewish refugees who subsequently died in Nazi death camps.

Perhaps the Holocaust was a psychological operation with numerous benefits including the elimination of genuine Jews and Christians, and it provided a reason to establish Israel, and implement Lord Rothschild's NWO totalitarian agenda. This is Hegelian Dialectic, where the same group creates a problem to solve, followed by a solution.

The Firm use the same tactic to cover for their tradition / ritual of institutionalised homosexual pedophile rape. Fake 'born-again' Christian William 'Jerry' Boykin is a prime example. He publicly campaign against gays in the military while secretly attending homo-pedophile sexual orgies. These military perverts all worship Dagon, not the Biblical God.

ARMY- McCARTHY HEARINGS

In 1950, former Marine and Republican Senator Joseph R. McCarthy gave a speech in which he asserted, he had a list of 'members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring' who were employed in the State Department. In 1954, McCarthy led subsequent investigations into the infiltration of communists in the US federal government, universities, military, Hollywood, media, etc, and accusations of sex crimes against prominent leaders. The investigations into communism ran concurrent to the 'Lavender Scare' where homosexuals were dismissed from government on the basis that homosexuality (which was illegal back then) increased their risk for blackmail. Senator McCarthy's untimely death at age 48 abruptly ended his investigations which threatened to expose the fact that a small band of German communist homo-pedophiles called The Brotherhood orchestrated a system of sexual blackmail and corruption operating at the highest levels of the US government, Military, and in Military Intelligence circles.

THE BROTHERHOOD

The Brotherhood is an enforcement arm of the Illuminati, connected with the Joint Chiefs, NSA, and the Whitehouse (which is run by the Military). Members wear different hats and are provided different passports with different names. This Brotherhood stem from the Nazis Intelligence hierarchy who illegally entered the USA under Paperclip. An alternative name is The Firm. [‘The Firm’ commonly refers to the British Queen and her intelligence agencies, or the CIA]. The Brotherhood is headed by a small, hierarchical group who answer to Nelson Rockefeller and the Rothschilds.

At the highest levels of the Marine Corps and the Army Special Op forces, the men are in the Brooklyn / New Jersey mob, a German-Hofjuden mafia group. The Firm are also involved with the Freemasons and related secret societies including Opus Dei, B’nai Brith, and Skull & Bone, Cape & Gown and Order of Kappa Sigma campus fraternities. This group even control the Jesuits. They are above the law and they protect each other.

ALL ROADS LEAD TO ROME

The German High Command were connected to Opus Dei, a right-winged Vatican-Freemason linked secret society. Former member and Oxford University professor John Roche described Opus Dei as ‘totalitarian’ and ‘fascist.’

Opus Dei is linked to Knights of Malta, a Vatican order linked to Freemasonry. Everyone involved with the world Trade Centre bombing were Knights of Malta. Here is a list of prominent Knights of Malta members:

- Gen. William ‘Jerry’ Boykin
- David Rockefeller
- Reinhard Gehlen (Nazi Intelligence; CIA)
- Heinrich Himmler
- Franz von Papen (Hitler enabler)
- Fritz Thyssen (Hitler’s financier)
- George W. Bush
- George Tenet (CIA chief during 9/11)
- Henry Kissinger (notorious pedophile)
- Rupert Murdoch
- Tony Blair (Westminster pedophile)
- Prescott Bush, Jr. (Nazi)
- Licio Gelli
- J. Edgar Hoover
- Joseph Kennedy
- Ronald E. Reagan (Bohemian Grove)
- Giscard d’Estaing
- Allen Dulles
- Oliver North
- George H.W Bush Snr (Nazi/CIA)
- William Casey
- James Jesus Angleton (CIA)
- William Simon (Citicorp)
- Francis X. Stankard (Chase Manhattan Bank)
- Justice Anton Scalia (Opus Dei)

Justice Scalia died under suspicious circumstances at Cibolo Creek ‘Rent Boy’ Ranch. The property is owned by John B. Poindexter who holds a leadership position in the International Order of St. Hubertus, a human hunting society linked to the Bohemian Grove. Poindexter served in Vietnam with the Marine Corp before becoming an investment banker in New York City. In 1985, Poindexter founded J.B. Poindexter & Co., the world's largest manufacturer of commercial truck bodies. Kay Griggs said Marines commonly get their truck driver licences to facilitate their illegal drug and arms trafficking.

RECRUITMENT & INITIATION

Spread of the 'German Disease' resulted in a group of military child abuse victims called the Pink Triangle boys or Cherry Marines who went on to become Military Intelligence officers. Selection for the Military Intelligence sector began at Princeton and Yale, through their Cap and Gown or Skull and Bones secret societies. Vulnerable or neglected young boys from poor, abusive, or military families were selected, offered scholarships at prestigious boarding schools, and while apart from their parents, subjected to mind control, and 'turned' or conditioned toward homosexuality via rape by their teachers, academics, and the military intelligence hierarchy. This process makes the boys psychologically dependent on a predator mentor. Mind controlling young boys using sex is an old Marxist trick.

Only those military officers who participate in homosexual and pedophile orgies may rise through the ranks. The State Department calls those who are controlled 'Rising Stars.' Homosexuals rise through the military ranks much faster. All Special Operations members belong to The Firm. All new Colonels undergo an initiation ritual akin to Yale's Skull and Bones society and Princeton's Cap and Gown (the latter contains many Intelligence officers who have been raped). The Skull and Bones induction methods are used in the Army. This ritual stems from what the German High Command did, and before that it was practised in Greece. The US Chiefs of Staff must participate in the ritual where an initiate is placed in a coffin and he's the recipient of multiple oral and anal sex acts. This tradition is called 'Dining in' or 'Shellback.'

Kay Griggs maintained that the Special Ops, SEALS, and Al Gray's Marines were homosexuals and nudists who regularly attended pool sex parties and orgies. The military men typically started with the wild secretaries and progressed to homosexual orgies. At social Military gatherings, the military wives would leave the function at about 11 pm while the men stayed for the late night all-male orgy. Sex parties, homosexual enticements, pedophilia, embezzlement, and prostitution are used to control and keep The Firm's men from divulging secrets.

Israeli soldiers attended the sex parties also. Kay Griggs insisted that all British Military Intelligence officers are homosexuals, and that many teenage boys are recruited to MI6 from Eaton College via homo-pedophile rape.

PRINCETON PEDOPHILES

Princeton became a hub for German scientists imported under the guise of fleeing Nazi Germany. This wave of imports included the Nazi Psychological Operations group who continued their craft at Princeton. Hollywood's movie moguls stemmed from Princeton because Hollywood is part of the psychological operations propaganda machine.

Col. George Griggs was in 9th grade when the Princeton pedophiles first accessed him. The Firm sent Grigg's parents to California for eight years, giving the pedophiles exclusive access to their son. The Firm sent Griggs to board at the Hun School in Princeton, NJ. A British Marxist-Zionist group called the Russell Trust purchased the mansion for the Hun School which was started by Existentialist-Zionist Germans. The Hun School gave boys private flying lessons – and raped them. Griggs and his peers (Admiral Husband E. Kimmel's son, and the three sons of Saudi Arabian King Faisal) were subjected to mind control and rape by teachers, local men, and by the existentialist-communist Ashkenazi homo-pedophile German imports who occupied Princeton's Institute for Advanced Study. From 1933, the Institute became the academic base of Albert Einstein, J. Robert Oppenheimer, John von Neumann, Kurt Gödel, and Hermann Weyl. Einstein was a member of the same bisexual group as French existentialist-Marxist philosophers Albert Camus and Jean-Paul Sartre, and a close friend of serial pedophile rapist Charlie Chaplin. Griggs and his peers attended parties with the Einstein-Oppenheimer group. That is how Griggs became a Pink Triangle Boy, aka Cherry Marine. Griggs joined Princeton's Army Reserve Officers Training Corp, and then the Army chose the Marine Corp for him.

Col. Griggs subsequently endured four years of mind control at Princeton University. Kay Griggs considered John Forbes Nash a victim of the same Princeton mind control program. In 1954, Nash was arrested for indecent exposure in a sting operation targeting homosexual men. In the movie A Beautiful Mind, the interactions Nash 'imagined' having with US Military Intelligence struck me as real, and his paranoia (that communists were conspiring against him) seemed a cover contrived by complicit MK-ULTRA psychiatrists

VIETNAM

The Vietnam War is significant because that is where the key military leaders in charge of Joint Special Forces met and formed relationships. Many experiments were done on young soldiers in Vietnam. Further, combined mob-military partnership operations were conducted in Vietnam and Korea. The assassination squads began in Vietnam. 'MAC-SOG' was a code word for sending out platoons to kill people in Vietnam (SOG = Special Operations Group).

THE BROTHERHOOD

All successful political, military, banking and businessmen are employed by The Brotherhood either by choice, conditioning, bribery, or blackmail. All members of the CFR (Council on Foreign Relations) are involved, as are all Marine Corp commandants. Here is a list of people Kay Griggs named as being involved in the criminal network:

- Gen. Alfred Gray: Princeton Cap & Gown; Marine Corp; Vietnam.
- Col. George Griggs: Princeton Cap & Gown; Marine Corp; Vietnam; Planned Bosnia & pre-positioned weapons in Norway; Planned Beirut Marine barracks bombing.
- Col. Bob Edwards: Princeton; Marine Corps; Psychological Warfare.
- Donald Rumsfeld: German; Princeton; US Navy; Whitehouse; NATO; Ran Wet, Dry & Psychological Operations.
- William Colby: Princeton; US Army; OSS; Vietnam; CIA Director.
- George Schultz: Princeton; Marine; US Secretary of State; Businessman.
- Frank Carlucci: Roomed with Rumsfeld at Princeton; US Navy; US Secretary of State; Businessman.
- Allen W. Dulles: Princeton; OSS Vienna; Spoke with Lenin; CIA Director, oversaw MK-Ultra, Iran coup, Bay of Pigs.
- Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft: US Air Force; Kissinger employee; NSA; British KBE.
- Victor Harold Krulak: Marine; Vietnam.
- Lt. Col. Oliver L. North: Marine; Vietnam; Indicted re Iran-Contra weapons trafficking.
- Ben Bradlee: Office of Naval Intelligence; Washington Post editor who broke Watergate with fellow CIA Intelligence Operatives Woodward & Bernstein.
- Gen. Colin Luther Powell: US Army; Rangers; Vietnam; Panama; Whitehouse.
- Gen. John 'Jack' Sheehan: Marine Corps; NATO; Campaigned against gays in the military when he attended homosexual orgies. His father organised Woodstock, a testing ground for drugs.

- Heinz ('Henry') Kissinger: German Ashkenazi, US Army Intelligence, Harvard, CIA Psychological Operations, Nelson Rockefeller employee, advisor to Nixon; Notorious pedophile who held orgies and raped boys Vietnam and Cambodia.
- B.Gen. James 'Jim' R. Joy: Marine; Vietnam; Waco; Director of Morale, Welfare & Recreation.
- Gen. Carl Wade Stiner: German heritage; Vietnam; Army Rangers; Snr Parachutist; Panama operational command.
- Gen. William W. Hartzog: German heritage; US Army; Vietnam; Snr Parachutist; Panama.
- Gen. Creighton Williams Abrams: US Army; Vietnam commander; Chief of Staff.
- Caspar Willard Weinberger: Ashkenazi; US Army; traitor on Douglas MacArthur's Intelligence staff; Whitehouse; Indicted re Iran-Contra weapons trafficking; British CBE recipient.
- Albert Einstein: German Ashkenazi; Princeton; organised German scientists' escapes to UK / USA Universities; took credit for Tesla's Nazi-stolen work; Pedophile; Friends with communist and violent child rapist Charlie Chaplin (his youngest victim was 6).
- J. Robert Oppenheimer: German Ashkenazi; Adler's experimental school NYC; PhD, University of Gottingen, German; Supported Communist Party of America. Father was in the Communist Party; Pedophile.
- Col Barry Cantor: US Air Force.
- Judge John H. Moore: US Navy; Threw his 1st wife into a mental institution.
- Grover Cleveland Wright: Marine; Virginian lawyer.
- Carl Epting Mundy: Son of German Nazi; Marine; Vietnam; CFR.
- Clay LaVerne Shaw: US Army, highly decorated WW2, OSS / CIA; Prosecuted for JFK assassination; Ran New Orleans Port trade; Known homosexual who serviced Army Generals with male prostitutes.
- Thomas Parker Host: Commandos assassin; mobster; controls VA port.
- Walt W. Rostow: Communist Russian Ashkenazi revolutionary terrorist; Behind the Dresden bombings in Germany during WWII and JFK's assassination; Attended Yale on scholarship at age 15; Oxford Rhodes scholar where he befriended pedophile Edward Heath and Lord Jenkins who founded a UK socialist party and oversaw radical social reforms on divorce, abortion and homosexuality. Wrote the report that caused the USA to enter the Vietnam war because he wanted to sell weapons. British OBE recipient.
- Eugene Victor D. Rostow: Blitzed Yale entrance exam; Lawyer.
- Nicholas Rostow: Ran Boston mob port and traded drugs with Mexico.
- Robert B. Oakley: Princeton; Office of Naval Intelligence; UN; Diplomat whose predecessor plus Pakistan's President were assassinated via plane crash; Director, State Department Office of Combating Terrorism.
- Robert M. Gates: PhD in Russian & Soviet history; US Air Force; Director CIA; Implicated in Iran-Contra scandal; Secretary of Defence; Planned Beirut Marine barracks bombing operation; National president of Boy Scouts & Eagle Scouts.
- Jerry L. Unruh: US Navy Vice-Admiral; Vietnam.

- Tom Clancy: Jesuit schooled; Army Reserves; spy/military propaganda novelist; Colin Powell associate.
- Oliver 'Buck' Revell: FBI; UN Delegate; National Security Council; pulled his son + son's wife off Lockerbie plane, on the tarmac, minutes before it took off.
- Bill Clinton: Yale Skull & Bones; Opposed Vietnam.
- James Angleton: Yale; US Army; CIA; homosexual.
- J. Edgar Hoover: Director FBI; Homosexual cross-dresser.
- Mike Kemp: 'ran naked around Bohemian Grove.'
- Meyer Lansky: Ashkenazi mobster.
- Robert Carl 'Bud' McFarlane: Naval Academy; Marine Corp; Vietnam; UN; Whitehouse; Indicted re Iran-Contra weapons trafficking.
- Zbigniew Brzrenski: US National Security Advisor; Answered to Nazi Intelligence head Reinhardt Gehlen.
- George H.W. Bush Sr: aka SS Nazi spy George 'Scherff'; Hitler's cousin; Son of Tesla's accountant; Orchestrated Tesla's Nazi murder; Yale Skull & Bones; US Navy; UN; CIA Director; Panama; JFK assassination.

George Bush pardoned the men indicted for secretly selling weapons to Iran and funnelling the money to support the Contras in Nicaragua. This may explain why:

Otto Skorzeny
Josef Mengele
George Scherff Jr.
George Scherff Sr.
Martin Bormann
Mother Scherff
Mrs. George Scherff
Reinhard Gehlen

George Bush with parents in 1950…

…and in Nazi Germany?

Kay Griggs said Otto Skorzeny was highly significant to The Firm. The following photos from Skorzeny's album were published by Eric Bermen who said he dated Skorzeny's granddaughter. According to Bermen, Skorzeny said the pictures capture the Nazi 'Scherff' family who escaped Germany under Paperclip, were given new identities and a backstory, and infiltrated the US Military and government. Kay Griggs agreed, the Nazi infiltrators were given false US identities and biographies. The supplier of these photos claims George H. Scherff Jr was the son of Dr. Nikola Tesla's German accountant, George H. Scherff, and that he was also Hitler's cousin. The group photo below captures a young Josef Mengele, Otto Skorzeny, and George Bush/Scherff. The following are close ups of the Bush trio in Nazi Germany, and then in the USA.

Next is a photo of Otto Skorzeny dining with an obese Josef Mengele. This looks remarkably like the Josef Mengele I encountered beneath the US Embassy in Australia and in the Australian Army's Milton Island bioweapons lab.

Otto Skorzeny dining with an obese Josef Mengele who looks just as I recall he did in the 1970s.

Bermen published many other photos from Skorzeny's album including happy snaps of Reinhart Gehlen in the USA, and Hitler who lived to a ripe old age under a new identity.

BEIRUT. 30 November 1983. Brigadier General Jim R. Joy (right) takes over command of the 22nd Marine Amphibious Unit from Colonel J.P. Faulkner during the unit's participation in a multinational peacekeeping operation.

7 December 1989. Pentagon. The Joint Chiefs of Staff (L to R): Gen. Alfred M. Gray (commandant Marine Corps); Gen. Carl E. Vuono, (Army); Admiral Carlisle A.H. Trost (Naval Operation); Gen. Larry D. Welsh (Air Force); Gen. Colin L. Powell (Army); Gen. Robert T. Herres (Air

US MILITARY CRIMINAL & FREEMASON ORIGINS

US Navy founder John Paul Jones was a notorious criminal, pedophile rapist, renegade, Cabalist, and Freemason. Similarly, the 1850s Marine Corp were Freemason funded assassins employed to protect ships. A German-trained Marine major, Jacob Zeiplin (Hofjuden) became head of the Marine Corps. Zeiplin changed the Marine uniforms to be like the Germans, with the pink helmets and everything, and the motto became the Rothschild coat of arms and various other symbols like the global new world order.

SPECIAL OPERATIONS

According to Col. Griggs, the Army term 'Joint' refers to the Plans and Policies group connected to the State Department, which ran operations to destabilise other countries. The Firm follow a communist agenda, their end goal being the destruction of Protestant Christian culture, and instalment of a global New World Order. They will do anything necessary to achieve their political and economic objectives, including killing innocent female and child US citizens. Their rationale is that killing a key leader, or killing 20 people, is preferable to war. The Firm's 'Special Operations' include:

- Assassinations
- Dirty Tricks
- Drug running
- Arms trafficking
- Creating wars and False Flag operations to test, demonstrate, and advertise weapons for illegal sale.
- Intentional destabilising and overthrow of governments.
- Training / Wet Ops (murders) from random shootings to large scale ops involving psychological warfare techniques.

1. DRUG / ARMS TRAFFICKING

The Marine Corps is the political arm of the group that controls the drug running and arms trafficking and who launder money from this. The Brotherhood is mob related. Mob funding and drug money pay for brand-new weapons. The Brotherhood run the ports, which allows them to freely traffic drugs and weapons. Retired military officers all get involved in drug and secondary weapons sales and running bikie gangs that aggravate crime to create a market for weapons sales. Col. Griggs was paid many thousands in AT&T stock, as payment for trafficking weapons in Beirut.

All illegal weapons sales go through the State Department. Israelis are the middlemen in the arms sales. The cash transactions go through Tel Aviv and the bank in Rome.

The Firm also manufacture and sell deadly chemicals and biological weapons. Generals Gray, Krulak, Scowcroft, Wilson, and Mundy sold the biologicals and chemicals to Saddam Hussein.

2. DIRTY TRICKS

Linda Tripp was a Delta Force Dirty Tricks expert operating under Gen. Carl Steiner. The Monica Lewinsky scandal was an Intelligence dirty tricks operation. The Firm made a failed attempt to assassinate Clinton via a plane crash.

3. MURDER INC

If someone talks and leaks information about The Firm and its operations, they are disappeared, neutralized, or ruined. [The same goes for helpful therapists, friends or family of victims and whistle-blowers.] The Special Forces commit the assassinations. The Marine Corps are particularly assassins for the mob. The Tel Aviv Israelis have assassin duo teams, each comprised of one Israeli plus an American Marine. These pairs are usually ‘flamers’ (homosexual kill teams that have sex with each other to create a bond of loyalty). To overcome jurisdictional limits, the Israeli would do assassinations in America and the American would do assassinations in Israel, etc. They trained at Quantico. They travelled to other countries to commit murders that were blamed on the Arabs.

Each Special Ops unit leaves its signature or mark (i.e., assassination method) to let others know which group did the job. Plane crashes were typical Special Operations. Princess Diana and John Denver were assassinated due to their campaign against land mines, because these weapons constituted a growth industry for the Navy in Texas. Diana had quickly formed a ‘critical mass’ that had to be quickly decapitated. If a critical mass is building, opposes the prevailing policy, and threatens something The Firm deem profitable or politically important, the key figures are routinely assassinated. To Kay Griggs' knowledge, The Firm ordered the following hits:

- Senator Paul Wellstone (+ wife & daughter): 2002 plane crash.
- Senator Melvin E. Carnahan (+ son): 2000 plane crash.
- John Kennedy Jr: 1999 plane crash, due to his growing popularity.
- Enis W. Cosby: Bill Cosby's son. Shot by Mossad.
- Senator Ron Brown: 1996 plane crash.
- John A. Paisley: CIA officer; Allegedly shot in 1978 & his body weighted & dumped in lake, after disclosing to therapy group plus CIA informant psychiatrist.
- Nicholas G. Shadrin (aka, Nikolai Artmonov): CIA officer; Disappeared 1975.
- Mary P. Meyer: Wife of CIA officer Cord Meyer. 1964 death ruling = point blank gunshot wounds suggestive of a highly trained killer.
- Ralph Sigler: CIA officer; Electrocuted in 1977 via electrical wire plus wall socket by US Army assassins. His final words to his wife were: 'JUST LISTEN TO ME! Get you a respectable lawyer… sue the US Army. I'm dying. I never lied.'
- Bill Clinton: Failed hit via plane crash.

4. FALSE FLAGS

Beirut: Israeli assassins murdered 241 Marines in the Beirut bombing that was blamed on the Lebanese. The bombing was planned by Gen. Al Gray, Col. George Griggs, CIA Director Robert Gates, and Robert B. Oakley (Director of the State Department Office of Combating Terrorism), with Israeli Defence Minister Gen. Ariel Sharon.

Bosnia: Was a stage for training assassins, testing new weapons (like the B-2 stealth bomber), marketing weapons, and an opportunity to spend drug money.

Oklahoma: The bombing was planned by generals Steiner and Joy.

Waco: Generals Carl Steiner and Jim Joy conducted the Waco massacre as a live-fire training exercise. They brought in people from other countries. The pair were also in charge of the black helicopters. During the lead up to Waco, Steiner and Joy were involved in live-fire training operations in Panama, where they turn people loose and hunt them down. The training involved the CIA plus foreign mercenaries. They had been involved with Noriega (Panama leader who graduated from the School of the Americas).

Gen. Joy was in charge of Psychological Operations at Waco. Generals Joy and Sheehan trained the Special Ops forces who slaughtered innocent Branch Davidian children, shot a four-year-old blonde boy waving a white flag, in the head, pancaked a young girl with a tank, and fried the remaining kids with a giant flame thrower. Because the entire operation was originally marketed as being about rescuing the kids from the cult, right? I watched the entire video of these murders, including footage of the dead bodies, in the 1990s.

Panama: The war provided an opportunity to test new weapons. Generals Joy and Sheehan were behind the Panama invasion. Gen. Joy was in charge of Psychological Operations. [In 1995, SBS screened a television documentary about Panama in which American expats residing in Panama reported witnessing laser beams from helicopters slice tanks in half like a hot knife through butter.]

ASSASSIN TRAINING

The Firm will do anything necessary to get what they want politically and economically. They rationalize it by saying, killing a leader, or killing 20, is preferable to war.

Young soldiers are trained to kill using mind control, which is why the US Army has so many Special Operations specialists. Delta Force operatives do kills as part of their training. Young Army, Delta Force, Buds (the emerging Seals group) train by breaking into civilians' houses. SEALs commit cold murders when they graduate from training school. SEAL Teams 4, 6 and 8 are on the East Coast, odd numbers on the West Coast.

The SEAL graduation exercise is to do a cold kill. They just enter a hotel and whack somebody.

FOREIGN MERCENARIES

Mercenary training is occurring in the Army and the Air Force at the highest circles. Foreign assassins (especially Mossad agents) are employed to assassinate US citizens because they do not fall under US jurisdiction. [This helps to explain why the US Delta Force used an anonymous Australian child assassin.] US taxpayers fund foreign young mercenaries to kill innocent US citizens, including kids. Young foreigners train with the SEALS. The Israelis train with the Seals and commit Wet Ops in the USA.

NATO has a group of Assassins and Psychological Operations specialists who combine for operations to destroy targets. NATO rogue assassins from Australia, Britain, South Africa, etc, board a flight from Norfolk, then they go by a special helicopter to countries like Turkey, Iraq, or Algeria, to do wet ops. They murder five, 10, 20 people, and then blame it on the Arabs.

ASSASSIN TRAINING SCHOOLS

According to Kay Griggs, the following international schools exist for training assassins and Special Ops personnel:

- The US established Special Ops selection and training schools in Bosnia, Columbia and the Philippines.
- The British have a school in Indonesia.
- Pedophile Lord Mountbatten established an Australian training school for assassins in East Timor during WWII.
  [Australian independent Commando companies were fighting the Japs during WW2 in East Timor. The Japs got the upper hand, due to their brutal treatment of the locals. Owing to the resultant lack of local support, the Commandos were forced to withdraw from Timor.]

Delta Force are government assassins. The US Military trained Delta Force assassins at a HALO (High Altitude Low Opening) skydiving school in the Philippines. The Australians had a training school in the mountains of an island in East Timor. [HALO skydivers wear oxygen and jump at anything over 12,000 feet above sea level, to avoid radar detection, and pull at the lowest possible safe altitude. My father was a parachute instructor, notorious for his risk taking, who competed at the world games.]

Australia had a Delta Force assassin training school in East Timor

SILENCING TACTICS

1. St Elizabeth's Hospital

Army Intelligence employees who turn whistle-blower are targeted and thrown into St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington DC, the MK-ULTRA facility where Antony Kidman trained. Eastern State Hospital in Williamsburg is another facility used for silencing targeted individuals.

2. Electronic Weapons

Col. Griggs attended biological-electronic warfare Special Operations school. Kay Griggs displayed her husband's copy of, Intelligence & Electronic Warfare Operations Field Manual (1983) of the US Army. The manual explains how targets (i.e., dissidents and whistle-blowers) are subjected to the following methods:

> An important part of electronic warfare is deception…
>
> Jamming is the deliberate radiation or re-radiation of electromagnetic energy to prevent or downgrade the reception of information by a receiver…
>
> MED (Manipulative Electronic Deception) is conducted by altering the electromagnetic profile of friendly forces. It seeks to counter hostile electronic warfare and Signals Intelligence (SIGENT) activities by manipulating friendly electronic-magnetic emissions. This is done by magnifying the technical characteristics and profiles which would provide an accurate picture of friendly intentions by deliberately transmitting false information.

3. Chaplain Corp are Intelligence Informants

The Military Chaplain Corp are Intelligence officers who attended Yale. The Chaplain Corps collect information on Marines and their wives, and report this. If the Marine being monitored discloses the truth is a whistle-blower, or if the wife is a problem, they target them for silencing using chemicals, harassment, electronic warfare, and microchip implants. Wives are routinely murdered.

Phil Holwager, Chaplain for Fleet Marine Force Atlantic, helped hide Gol. Grigg's murder of his first wife, Suzanne Workman, during the Iran-Contra hearings, followed by Col. Grigg's violent beating (to the point of reconstructive surgery) of his second wife, Kay. Phil Holwager attended Yale with Gary Hart, and was friends with Yale graduate Pat Robertson [CBN televangelist].

4. Assassination

A Marine Corp hit squad was assigned to murder soldiers who revealed too much to their psychiatrists. The assassins are told the targets are 'enemies' or 'they've done bad things' to eliminate any sense of guilt or culpability.

PHOENIX PROJECT

Kay Griggs was friends with, and protected by, CIA Director William Colby until his murder. Little Creek Navy SEALS assassinated Colby the day before he was to testify before Congress about Iran-Contra affair because he threatened to expose Israel and the Phoenix Program.

William Colby gave author Douglas Valentine permission to interview CIA officials who had been involved in the Phoenix Program in South Vietnam. The CIA officers interviewed spoke freely with Valentine, thinking the interviews were for an inhouse training product. The CIA later rescinded Colby's permission, Special Ops assassinated Colby, and the CIA tried to supress publication of Valentine's book, The Phoenix Program.

Operation Phoenix was the CIA "assassination" program that resulted in the death of tens of thousands of civilians during the Vietnam War.'[400] The program was designed to identify and destroy the Viet Cong via population surveillance, infiltration, control, entrapment, capture, counterterrorism, interrogation, imprisonment, torture, rape and assassination. Operation Phoenix was designed, coordinated, and executed by the CIA in conjunction with:

- US Special Operations forces
- US Army Intelligence
- Australian Army Training Team Vietnam (AATTV)
- Australian Special Forces Operatives (SAS, Commandos).
- Vietnamese National Police Field Force (a CIA created and funded FBI equivalent).

[Note: Many Australian SAS and AATTV soldiers were unaware of the criminal nature of Phoenix. I have two Vietnam Veteran mates who were in those units.]

According to Valentine's interviewees, when trying to recruit agents, 'Bribes, sex, blackmail, and drugs all were legitimate means of recruitment.'[401] The attitude toward high-level VCI was: '…recruit them; if you can't recruit them, defect them…if you can't defect them, capture them; if you can't capture them, kill them.' These are the same methods the CIA employ to honeytrap politicians and businessmen.

The Phoenix program provided the blueprint for subsequent invasions and government coup d'états and destabilisations like Afghanistan, false flag operations like Waco and 9/11, and management of 'dissidents' and whistle-blowers like me.

Valentine's subsequent book, CIA as Organised Crime [402] documented Douglas Valentine's investigations into the CIA's role in controlling the global drug trade, terrorism and propaganda activity. The CIA trafficked opium and heroin from their secret bases in Laos, to generals and politicians on their payroll in South Vietnam. The CIA also infiltrated US federal drug law enforcement agencies, and commandeered their executive management, intelligence and foreign operations staffs, to facilitate drug traffickers and corrupt foreign officials.

---

[400] Douglas Valentine (2017). The CIA as Organized Crime: How Illegal Operations Corrupt America and the World. Clarity Press, p16.

[401] Douglas Valentine (2010). The Phoenix Program.

[402] Douglas Valentine (2010). The Phoenix Program.

The CIA is the US Military

Howard Bane (Yale) worked for the US Army before transferring to the CIA. He was appointed as head of the CIA's Office of Terrorism in 1977. The US Army created Delta Force under Bane. US Special Forces including Delta, SEAL Team 6, Army Rangers plus the navy and air force units that transport them, all performed mercenary work for the CIA. The Special Forces sit between the CIA and the Army, and function outside the Army's chain of command. They deal with civilians in a way that regular soldiers don't, like organising militias (locate local rebels), spread propaganda, and administer vaccinations. When Special Forces retire, they do mercenary work for the CIA around the world. 'The CIA is set up as a military organisation with a chain of command. Somebody tells you what to do, and you salute and do it.'[403]

As Kay Griggs said, the CIA is staffed by former Military Intelligence personnel; therefore, the CIA is the Military. That would explain why I recall a mix of Australian / US Military and Secret Service personnel, operatives, locations, and transportation.

AUSTRALIAN MILITARY RAPE

Together, Australia's Child Abuse Royal Commission (Case Study 40, Australian Defence Force) and the Defence Abuse Response Taskforce heard testimony from thousands of child cadets and adult military personnel who were raped in Australia's Defence Forces.

The Defence Abuse Response Taskforce produced a Final Report which indicates that 73% of reported sexual assault victims were male, and that the majority of these males were raped by homosexual perpetrators. The Child Abuse Royal Commission announced that 10.6% of reported child rapists were female.

In the Australian military, over 86% of rapes were homosexual assaults, and more than 50% of the female victims were raped by females. Additionally, many of the lesbian perpetrators were serial rapists. In all, the LGB demographic is the major source of child and adult rapists in the military. These figures are extraordinary and are not reflected in civilian statistics. The rapes of minors were organised by the military leadership.

Thousands of minors (under 18s) came forward to the Royal Commission and Defence Abuse Response Task Force to report they were sexually assaulted on military bases. The Australian Navy possesses the most debauched history of sexual misconduct. John Atkins was an officer cadet at HMAS Creswell at 13 years of age in 1953. When he complained about being sexually abused by 14-year-old boys the Navy did nothing.[404] Minors were routinely raped at multiple Navy bases.

Child Abuse Royal Commission: Rear Admiral did not ask leaving recruits if they were being abused

Philippa McDonald, ABC News, 23 June 2016

> The senior naval officer appointed to stamp out a culture of abuse, bullying and violence at HMAS Leeuwin in the early 1970s has admitted he never thought to ask young recruits leaving the Navy specifically whether it was because of abuse…
>
> Rear Admiral Sinclair became Commander and Executive Officer at the naval base in 1972 in the aftermath of a damning investigation in 1971 which found assaults and

---

[403] Ibid.

[404] John Atkins & Paul Evans (2015). A Child in the Navy a Man Betrayed. Xlibris.

> sexual abuse were common at the base. The Retired Rear Admiral, who went on to become the Governor of New South Wales between 1990 and 1996, was accused by lawyers acting for sexual abuse survivors of failing to change the 'demeaning' culture at HMAS Leeuwin.
>
> 'Zero tolerance for homosexual activity at the time'
>
> During his evidence, Retired Rear Admiral Sinclair was also asked whether young naval recruits would have been fearful that by reporting sexual abuse, they would be discharged for 'homosexual activity.' At the time he said there was an attitude to 'be mindful of the experimentation factor' but a confidential naval order had a stated 'zero tolerance,' declaring it was necessary to 'stamp out evil.' The 1969 order, which was read in evidence today included:
>
>> The corrupting influence of such men is widespread and their eradication from the service is essential if the Navy is not to betray its trust towards the young men in its midst who may be perverted by them. Although no evidence has been detected to support the suggestion, there might be a direct connection between homosexuality and communism, the possibility of blackmail cannot be disregarded.
>
> 100 recruits each night sought refuge in chapel
>
> In earlier evidence, a former chaplain at HMAS Leeuwin in the late 1960's told the royal commission that the environment was so tough at the naval base his chapel became a refuge for young recruits. Peter Ball, 86, told the royal commission he took over in 1969 and that up to 100 boys would come to his chapel each night to seek refuge…
>
> Australian sailors were routinely subjected to the Crossing of the Equator sexual assault initiation ritual. The Military Police facilitated and participated in child rapes, as did civilian police to whom the rape victims turned to for help.

The Royal Commission heard testimonies concerning the Australian Navy's 'Crossing of the Line' initiation ritual:

> (iv) Physical abuse during initiation rituals. The Taskforce received a number of complaints regarding physical abuse in the context of initiation rituals on ships (see further section 16.6(c) below). During these incidents, complainants were often forcibly constrained and subjected to a range of physically and sexually abusive conduct. Many of these complainants described how members of senior rank were present during these ceremonies and participated as witnesses or were often involved in carrying out the abuse experienced by junior sailors.

The above assault statistics are extremely under-reported. Rape in the military is the norm rather than the exception. Two of my friends were raped in the Navy. One friend of 20+ years only recently disclosed for the first time that she was gang raped by sailors on a Western Australian Navy base in her youth. Incidentally, my therapist treated a bloke who enlisted in the Australian Navy at age 16 years. During his first day aboard the ship, the teenager was taken to meet the Captain who immediately threw the lad face down and sodomised him.

Military homo-pedophilia is far more institutionalised and systematic than the latter example. HMAS Swan ('Fluffy Duck') was a large and powerful Navy vessel commissioned from 1970 to 1996. The Swan was specifically used to internationally sex traffic boys. When the prostituted boys turned 16 years, they were forcibly enlisted in the Australian Navy and assigned back to HMAS Swan, to help facilitate the sex trafficking of the next younger generation of victims.

Conclusion

Let us collate a list of facts that this plus previous chapters have examined:

- The Australian Army's Special Forces (SAS) were involved in the Phoenix Program.
- The CIA and US Special Forces created Delta Force.
- Australia had a Delta training base in East Timor.
- Holsworthy Army base is Australia's oldest military base.
- All CIA officers were formerly Military Intelligence. Special Operations forces work for the CIA. Conclusion: the CIA is the military.
- High ranking Special Forces, Military Intelligence, and CIA personnel are recruited as children, subjected to mind control methods, homosexual rape, and secret society initiation, to foster the required cult-like loyalty mentality.
- CIA psychiatrist Martin Orne, who abused children as part of MK-ULTRA, kicked off Project MK-ULTRA in Australia at Sydney University in 1960.
- The CIA and Special Forces are criminal and unethical organisations involved in drug running, weapons trafficking, and the torture and assassination of civilians.
- The Australian military facilitated a culture of teen and homosexual rape.

It's no stretch to fathom that the same group of psychopathic pedophiles subjected Australian children to trauma-based mind control and used them as Delta Force assassins.

'KILL OR BE KILLED'

My research into different combat knives led me to the Fairbairn-Skyes fighting knife, which in turn led me to the knife's designer. William Ewart Fairbairn designed fighting techniques for the British secret services, OSS, and allied special operations units including the Rangers. His mixed martial arts close combat fighting system certainly formed the basis of DELTA training, because I recognised everything that I read about it - especially Fairbairn's motto, 'Kill or be killed.'

Before finding Jerry Boykin's identity, I well recalled our DELTA team Commander was a real-life GI Joe, with chiselled jaw, golden tan, and a buff chest. He typically dressed in camo trousers, a khaki t-shirt and cap. His fair buzz cut was greying at the temples. I guessed he was 35 years old when I was 14. The Commander had an American accent. He was the same guy who trained our team at Holsworthy in Australia, oversaw my Dagon training near drowning when I was chained and thrown off a US Special Ops navy vessel, and who led a mission to Honduras.

DELTA soldiers were programmed with unquestioning obedience and endurance. These qualities were achieved through training exercises focussing on survival of the fittest and elimination of the weakest. Training included real-life hunger games in which the weakest DELTA and regular Army recruits were killed by members of their own unit, and cannibalised. I recall several of these gut-wrenching exercises that occurred when I was 14 years old. One took place on the nearby Woronora Dam. Two dinghies full of soldiers hugged the far west bank. I was in the rear vessel when we were ambushed. Everyone in the front boat was mowed down by gun fire coming from the nearby bush. At this, I instinctively called for the boys in my boat to dive and swim underwater toward a rocky point to our back left. There we realised the weakest half of our team had been intentionally grouped in the front boat.

On another occasion, we were forced to hunt down a skinny young regular soldier who went by the nickname 'Skippy.' He was a simple, goofy-looking, harmless guy who worked as a cook. He wore camouflage trousers, an army cap over his brown hair, but for some reason he was dressed in a white singlet. Skippy was violently murdered in the Aussie bush by Aussie soldiers who pounced on him like wild animals, sliced open his chest, and pulled out his still beating heart.

Then I was ordered to select one soldier from my unit to challenge in a real-life round of hunger games. 'Hunt or be hunted!' I was told. I chose the weakest target, 'Jason-6.' We were released at dusk. I recall scrambling up a tree with a knife between my teeth and patiently waiting there for Jason to creep past in the expected hunched posture. I leapt onto him with the knife aimed at the back of his neck. Game over. My next memory is of being coated in blood, reaching up to the sky and screaming hysterically. My next memory is of being curled up in a foetal position in the corner of a concrete Holsworthy cell, mentally cracking. My next memory is of Anne Conlon arriving and yelling, 'Alice!' at me.

My most painful DELTA memory occurred on the spa mat in a gym constructed beneath Holsworthy. Our unit were lined up along the edge of the blue mat. I had just returned from Dulce where I trained under Aquino. The commander paired me up with my favourite Jason, the one who cared for me for eight years. I dislocated his shoulder during the ensuing wrestle. The boys laughed at Jason who groaned on the mat. I retired to the drinks cart for refreshments, glad that was over. The Commander approached me and quietly uttered those dreaded words:

'Finish him off.'

I eyeballed him fleetingly, swallowed my objection, rushed over to the mat where Jason lay moaning, grabbed him by the head, and snapped his neck.

Silence.

Not him! we all thought but dared not utter.

My therapist once commented, 'You never cry in therapy. In fact, I think you're the only one of my clients who doesn't cry.' I cried for the first time at the memory of killing Jason. I convulsed with mourning and remorse as I remembered seeing his pretty young brunette wife at Holsworthy, dressed in red, flanked by two small children.

Evidence of my DELTA training leaked into my regular life on several occasions. The first incident occurred at school when I was 16. Our art teacher tried to snatch a Stanley knife from my hand. I stood with my feet apart and locked each of my hands over either end of the blade. Ken Siddall was a tall, solid middle-aged man who regularly rowed. He used two hands and all his strength to try and jerk the knife from my grip. Terror washed over his face at realising not only could he not pull the knife from my hands, but my entire body was as still as a bronze statue. I did not move one single millimetre.

The second incident occurred during parole officer training in Sydney. I somehow ended up on the mat sparing with the man who trained prison guards in dirty combat. He was a short, fit man with advanced belts in three martial arts. I supposedly had no such training. Yet I immediately had this combat expert in a head lock, slapping the mat, and forcing a muffled, 'You got me!'

Then there were the few times I used a gun prior to my stroke. The most memorable occasion was on Hamilton Island when I was 33 years old and had my first try at clay pigeon shooting. During my first round, I tried singles and I hit every disc. During my second round, I tried doubles and I hit all but one double (although I did hit one of the two discs). By the end of my session, a crowd of men who had gathered behind me burst into applause. I wore no shoulder brace to protect my body from the kickback.

I later noticed that Delta soldiers are trained to shoot without aiming. Coincidentally, that is exactly the type of shooting I excelled at.

DELTA MISSIONS

Age 14 years is optimal for a female DELTA child soldier. The man who trained prison guards at NSW Corrective Services told me, 'Childless females under 23 years of age make the best assassins because they haven't yet developed a sense of their own mortality or been softened by motherhood.' Females are more physically and psychologically flexible, and more intuitive; which is why Hitler consulted female mediums.

As Kay Griggs explained, foreign mercenaries, including Australian soldiers, were employed to do international hits. I was regularly collected through my teens ('Hey, mum, just going to Mylie's place for a few days…') and transported for global operations. I recall 'Black Widow' style hits on pedophiles who thought they were in for a good time. I recall skydiving with a team into some mafia drug lord's remote villa in the mountains, decimating a pregnant wife at a baby shower, and navigating mountain terrain to rendezvous at a chopper. I recall snippets regarding a hit on some political figure in Havana, Cuba, beginning with a small white plane, an escorted walk through a waterside market, and wearing a burgundy patterned summer frock that cloaked a weapon holstered to my thigh. There was also a Delta mission in Tuscany. The list goes on and on…

Honduras

It was 1983 and I was 14 when our Delta team flew over Honduran rainforest in a large green military-looking helicopter. I sat at the front of an open door on the left side, with my legs dangling out. A mature Caucasian man sat in similar fashion to my left. He wore a desert brown coloured pocketed vest and cap. My vague thoughts about him included: possible American accent, possible journalist, possible soldier. The way he squinted his eyes as he sized me up reminded me of a bad actor. I detected he was lying.

I got up, approached the co-pilot and communicated for him to change coordinates. On my way back to my seat, I turned to my Commander standing behind the co-pilot and communicated: 'Drop Charlie.' Then I returned to my position at the door and observed the scenery below.

Moments later, two soldiers threw the stranger out the door, and I watched him scream to his death. Our Commander later praised my 'good call.'

I next recalled sitting with my team around a small campfire. I heard a suspicious background noise. I dropped to the ground and simultaneously swept the fire out with my rifle. Suddenly the night air lit up with gunfire. It reminded me of small fireworks clusters called 'Tom Thumbs' that we fooled about with as kids in the 1970's. I saw a grenade glistening in the sparse light. Someone, maybe me, tossed it out. Those are my memory snippets.

After writing the above, I went searching to see whether any American journalists were killed in Honduras in 1983. I found one. Dial Torgensen, a veteran correspondent for the Los Angeles Times. Although his profile photo I found did not match the chubbier guy with dark hair that I saw thrown from the chopper, I suspect he was somehow connected to that kill, and that Delta assassinated him also. Torgensen had served in Korea as an Army lieutenant. He and his photographer reportedly died when their car was ripped in half by Nicaraguan rocket-propelled antitank grenades. Their bodies and car were torn apart by the explosion – yet their driver survived with relatively minor injuries. This aroused my suspicions, so I searched for reports of discrepancy with the official account of the journalists' deaths. I found this:

> 2 SLAIN US JOURNALISTS FLOWN TO HONDURAN CAPITAL
> Barbara Crosette, New York Times, 23 June 1983.
>
> MANAGUA, Nicaragua, June 22 -The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry issued a statement today denying the Honduran charges that its soldiers had killed the journalists. Then at a news conference, Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman, charged that the Honduran accusation contained contradictions and suggested that the journalists' bodies might have been brought to the border area after they were killed elsewhere.
>
> He said Honduran accounts did not explain who was driving the car in which the journalists died, who had authorized their trip to the border area, where else they had travelled that day or why the Government report of the incident did not come until several hours after it occurred. ''How is it possible that these journalists were allowed to go into that area without an escort?'' the Foreign Minister asked. ''These uncertainties lead us to think of the possibility that it was all a trap.''
>
> He said both journalists had been sympathetic to the Sandinista Government. He showed a copy of a book about Nicaragua for which Mr. Cross had taken photographs to accompany a text written by the Minister of Culture, Ernesto Cardenal. He said Mr. Torgerson had written ''reports favourable to the Sandinista revolution…''

The Sandinistas' were heavily influenced by Marxism and maintained ties with the Soviet Union. In 1981, the CIA funded and trained the Contras to overthrow the Sandinista government.[405] I suspect a link between our DELTA team's presence in Honduras and Nicaragua in 1983, and the deaths of those two US journalists.

* * *

---

[405] ICJ (NICARAGUA v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA) 27 June 1986.

MK-ULTRA in Hillsong Church

> And for this reason, God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness. (2 Th. 2:11)

The Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Abuse seemingly exposed multiple Australian church denominations for their coverup of heinous sex crimes against children. As I predicted and published in 2013, the Royal Commission took a 'sampling approach' to the massive child trafficking network known as the Australian churches. The Commission's approach buried the true nature and scope of church involvement in organised child trafficking. The Royal Commission featured notable cases from each of Australia's major denominations including the Roman Catholics, Salvation Army, Jehovah Witnesses, Anglicans, and Assemblies of God. None of these were new revelations, but cases that had already been prosecuted or published in the mainstream press. I will now follow suit and highlight one case example – Hillsong.

AZUSA STREET ORIGINS

The Australian branch of the Assemblies of God (AOG) was founded in 1937 and is our largest Pentecostal movement. It has approximately 1,000 affiliated churches. In 2007 the AOG changed its name to Australian Christian Churches (ACC). The AOG was a soft CIA target due to its Azusa Street 'revival' roots. The AOG claim to be a separate movement, but the pioneers of the Australian AOG movement were themselves influenced by Azusa and AOG USA.

The Azusa Street 'revival' was started by Charles Fox Parham. In 1907, Parham was arrested and charged with sodomy in Texas. William Seymour received 'Holy Spirit baptism' while at Bible school under Parham. Seymour began preaching about Holy Spirit baptism in a barn/warehouse on Azusa Street. A 'revival' began in April 1906 and lasted until 1913. During this time, thousands of people visited 312 Azusa St. to receive the Holy Spirit baptism, and thousands of Pentecostal missionaries established churches around the world.

Pentecostals and Charismatics revere Azusa as a genuine move of God in restoring the Church to true power and authority. However, the Azusa street meetings were filled with spiritualist mediums, hypnotists, and other occultists. While Pentecostals view Azusa as the birthplace of modern Pentecostalism, orthodox theologians expressed a completely different opinion of the movement:[406]

- 'the last vomit of Satan.' (G. Campbell Morgan)
- 'emphatically not of God and founded by a Sodomite.' (R.A. Torrey)
- 'disgusting...delusions and insanities. . . pandemoniums where exhibitions worthy of a madhouse or a collection of howling dervishes,' 'heavy toll of lunacy and infidelity.' (H.A. Ironside)
- 'Satan's preachers, jugglers, necromancers, enchanters, magicians, and all sorts or mendicants.' (W.B. Godbey)

---

[406] Michael L. Brown (1996). Holy Laughter to Holy Fire: America on the Edge of Revival. Destiny Image, pp. 197-198.

- ‘the conduct of those possessed, in which they fall to the ground and writhe in contortions, causing disarrangements of the clothing and disgraceful scenes, is more a characteristic of demon possession, than a work of the Holy Spirit.’ (Clarence Larkin)

HILLSONG LINKS TO AZUSA

Four independent Pentecostal organizations survived the Azusa movement, including the AOG USA which formed in 1914. AOG USA produced closet gay pastors Jim Bakker and Paul Crouch who co-founded TBN before their 1973 fallout and built Disney-like Bible-themed parks. Crouch’s granddaughter won $2 million damages after Jan Crouch buried her rape at age 13 years by a TBN employee.

The AOG USA also produced kooks like William Branham who claimed an Angel called ‘Emma’ appeared, conversed with him, and gave him spiritual gifts. Branham influenced New Zealand pastor Ray Bloomfield, under whom Frank Houston served as assistant pastor.

Frank Houston’s church meetings were replete with the same strange physical manifestations witnessed at Azusa, John Arnott’s ‘Toronto blessing’, Brownsville, Pensacola, and Lakeland ‘revival’ featuring adulterous Todd Bentley who also claimed to be visited by Branham’s angel, Emma.

Frank Houston had John Arnott from Toronto, and Randy Clarke (who supposedly started the Toronto Blessing) preach at his Sydney AOG Church. Frank Houston was filmed attending the Brownsville ‘revival’ with founders John Kilpatrick and Steve Hill, and he had Lila Tahune of Bronwnsville Pensacola speak at his Sydney church.

KUNDALINI ROCK SPIDER CULT

A cancer is spreading throughout protestant Christendom, a Kundalini rock spider rock cult called Hillsong. Its founder adopted a slicker, more lucrative business marketing approach than his pedophile father who tolerated knicker-flashing middle-aged women embarrassing themselves by thrashing about the floor like tuna on a trawler boat. Brian Houston removed the plaque fixed to Hillsong Church which stated that Frank Houston founded it, and he used his ill-found ‘prosperity’ to fund his facelift, hair transplant, and his wife’s boob job.

Hillsong’s renovated, conservative image proved PR palatable for Prime Ministers, Police Commissioners, and pop stars who ignored Frank Houston’s irrelevant indiscretion. Mind controlled Hillsong slaves bark, ‘Don’t touch God’s anointed!’ at the suggestion their plastic dictator concealed crimes. Hillsong franchises continue to open shop the world over, most recently breaking into the lucrative US market. Numerous other churches of various denominations imitate the Hillsong corporate model. Most Australian churches pay for the right to use Hillsong’s B-grade pop tunes.

PUBLIC PERCEPTION

In October 2014, the Royal Commission held a public hearing into the responses by the AOG/ACC and affiliated Pentecostal churches to allegations of child sexual abuse made against Pastor William Francis (‘Frank’) Houston in 1999 and the response of Sydney Christian Life Centre and Hills Christian Life Centre (now called Hillsong Church) to those allegations. The Royal Commission also examined the response of the AOG/ACC to the allegations.

Frank Houston was an ordained Salvation Army officer at age 18 in New Zealand. He changed denominations twice, first to the Baptist church, and in 1960 he established his first AOG NZ church. From 1965 to 1971 he rose to the position of AOG NZ Superintendent. During those years, Frank Houston often visited Australia to preach.

In 1977, Frank Houston established the Sydney Christian Life Centre and was based in Australia. In 1978, Frank Houston's son, Brian Houston, and daughter-in-law, Bobbie Houston, joined the ministry there. In 1983, Brian and Bobbie Houston founded the Hills Christian Life Centre and the two churches merged in 1999 renaming itself Hillsong Church in 2001. Today Hillsong Church spans 12 countries including Australia. According to Hillsong, 11,000 people attend the Baulkham Hills site of the Hillsong Church each weekend and 35,000 across Australia.

Both the Sydney Christian Life Centre and Hills Christian Life Centre were affiliates of the AOG. Brian Houston was the National President of the AOG from 1997 to 2009. Today Hillsong Church is an affiliate of the ACC.

Royal Commission Victim 'AHA' (CS18) was first sexually assaulted by Frank Houston at age 7 years in 1969. His family members were good friends with Frank Houston who often visited from New Zealand to preach. In 1969 and 1970 Frank Houston, sometimes with his family, came and stayed in AHA's home in Sydney. Frank Houston would enter his bedroom at night and violently rape him while he was staying with them. To illustrate, Frank Houston would choke the young child while sodomising him. Such rapes occurred numerous times over a period of years but stopped when AHA reached puberty.

In October 1998, AHA's mother attended an AOG church called Emmanuel Christian Family Church and disclosed there that Frank Houston had sexually abused her son about '30 years ago.' The senior pastor of that Church at the time was Pastor Barbara Taylor. Taylor and 'evangelist' Kevin Mudford (aka, 'Mad Dog') visited AHA's house that evening and confronted the victim about his abuse disclosure.

In December 2002, further allegations of child sexual abuse were made by another victim, 'AHG' that Frank Houston sexually abused him in New Zealand.

In 2004, Frank Houston suffered an aneurism in the care of a non-Hillsong nurse and died in the shower. NSW Police Commissioner Andrew Scipione attended Frank Houston's funeral to honour the serial child rapist.

In February 2009, Brian Houston was told of further pedophile allegations concerning his father's rape of victim 'AHH' more than 30 years previously in New Zealand.

The Royal Commission concluded, no allegations of child sexual abuse against Frank Houston were referred to the police and no civil proceedings had been commenced in Australia relevant to allegations against him. The Royal Commission chastised Brian Houston for not reporting the abuse allegations to the police.

Brian Houston emerged from the public hearing to be confronted by a woman at whom he repeatedly screamed: 'I AM NOT A PEDOPHILE!' Security guards had to restrain Brian Houston from lunging at the woman.

THE COVERUP

That is the official story fed to the public. Now let me share what I heard from Hillsong victims and witnesses, of how the CIA systematically infiltrated the AOG, and how the satanic cesspit called Hillsong came to be.

Frank Houston was far more perverted than 'plain vanilla.' Trainee pastor Peter Laughton was 21 years old and Frank Houston was in his 50s when the talented young musician moved into the home Frank shared with his wife Hazel. Behind every Ahab there is a Jezebel, and Hazel Houston knew all about her husband's antics from the start. Even after the truth began emerging, Hazel pushed for Frank Houston's pastoral restoration, citing the Biblical story of King David's affair with a married woman. Frank Houston took advantage of Peter Laughton with Hazel's knowledge.

HILLSONG – THE CHURCH WITH NO ANSWERS

David Marr, The Sydney Morning Herald, 4 August 2007.

> A fallen leader of faith
> FRANK HOUSTON was a charismatic preacher and a sick man. He won famous souls for Hillsong - jockey Darren Beadman was one of his scalps - and sexually abused young men.
>
> He was about 60 when he undertook to cure 23-year-old Peter Laughton's homosexuality. 'My counselling sessions by the senior minister were nothing more than sexual abuse disguised in the form of the need of a father's love and discipline,' Laughton says. 'Through my naivety, I enjoyed the naked beatings, the eternal bum caresses and masturbating into bottles, among other things.'
>
> Laughton was training to be a pastor. He says the abuse continued for about four years until 1984… Laughton's faith went first. He tells the Herald that before leaving the church in the early 1990s he gave an account to another pastor of the abusive therapy he'd received. But as far as Laughton is aware, no action was taken against the old man until he was forced into retirement by his son Brian after an allegation of pedophilia emerged in about 2000…
>
> Burying his father in 2004, Houston declared him a man who made mistakes but a preacher 'in a class of his own.'

HOUSTON'S AOG TAKEOVER

Brian Houston was once heard talking with his mother Hazel about starting his own denomination. Brian responded: 'Why start your own when there is a perfectly good one that you can take over?' He meant the AOG.

Brian Houston's AOG takeover attempt began in 1997 when he ran for the top Executive position, AOG General Superintendent (renamed National President). The current National President, Andrew Evans of Paradise AOG in South Australia, had held the office for 20 years. Andrew Evan's 2IC Phil Hills ran against Brian Houston for the 1997 leadership position. Credentialed ministers were entitled to vote, plus each church could nominate additional voting delegates at the rate of 1:100 congregants. Brian's own church, Hills Christian Life Centre (renamed Hillsong) was a mega church with thousands in attendance and therefore had incredible voting strength. To win the vote, Brian Houston bused hundreds of voting delegates to the 1997 Adelaide conference. That is how Brian Houston became AOG /ACC General Superintendent/National President for the next decade.

Prior to hillsongification, AOG churches were traditionally structured to run from the congregation up, and pastors were answerable to the people. Brian Houston's own Hillsong church was an incorporated entity run from the top down, which gave him absolute authority. Brian Houston used his position as National President to restructure the entire AOG organisation so that it too ran from the top down. This effectively gave the National Executive total control of the Australian AOG denomination. Many pastors within the AOG movement changed the governance of their own local churches to Brian's model, which gave local pastors incredible powers over their congregations, and in turn handed incredible power to the AOG Executive.

Brian Houston's takeover plan was interrupted by public revelation of his father's child sex crimes, and his focus subsequently turned to damage control. Brian Houston then used his position as National President, and the new power structure, to silence victims and coverup his father's emerging pedophilia. Another damage control move was Brian Houston taking over Frank Houston's Sydney church and merging it with Hillsong in 1999, before the AOG Executive officially acknowledged Frank Houston's pedophilia.

1999: NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COVERUP BEGAN

Everyone on the 1999 AOG Board was complicit in protecting pedophile Frank Houston, as captured in the minutes of a 'Special Executive Meeting' (22 December 1999) attended by John Lewis (Chairman), Brian Houston, David Cartledge, P. Hills, Steve Penny, Alun Davies, Danny Guglielmucci, Wayne Alcorn, and Keith Ainge who conspired as follows:

1. It was agreed that the minutes of this meeting be kept confidential and in a special file.
2. It was noted that an allegation has been made against Rev. Frank Houston, of a single act of sexual abuse more than 30 years ago. The complainant does not wish to be identified and does not wish to make a formal complaint, but Frank Houston has confessed to the act.
3. It was agreed that the president of the AOG (Brian Houston) has acted appropriately in suspending the credential of F. Houston, standing him down from ministry and calling this special meeting of the National Executive.
4. It was agreed that:
    - F. Houston's credential be withdrawn forthwith
    - He be invited to enter the AOG restoration program
    - He be placed under the supervision of Ian Woods (State Superintendent NSW)
    - He refrains from Public ministry for 12 months
    - He not receive his credential until the NSW Superintendent recommends to the National Executive at the expiration of at least two years
    - He be offered counselling support if required.
5. It was agreed, in the interest of the complainant, not to notify the movement of this disciplinary action. (This is in line with our restoration policy)
6. It was agreed that B. Houston notify F. Houston of the decisions of the Executive.
7. It was agreed that J. Lewis and W. Alcorn meet with "Mad Dog" Morgan and inform him of the action that has been taken by the Executive.
8. It was agreed that B. Houston meet with the complainant and explain the process of discipline and restoration that has been followed. It was agreed that he be assured that his identity has not been disclosed at the Executive meeting and his desire for anonymity has been honoured. It was agreed that he be offered counselling if he desires it.
9. It was noted that legal advice has been obtained as to our obligations in this matter.
10. It was agreed that any inquiries in relation to this matter be directed to J. Lewis.

AOG PLACED KIDS AT RISK

The AOG Executive lied to Australian ordained pastors concerning why Frank Houston resigned from his position. In a Special Executive Meeting report (dated 22 November 2000), Brian Houston outlined accusations that were raised against Frank Houston's 'inappropriate sexual behaviour with boys around 33 years ago' in New Zealand, 'involving between two and five people.'

A 'Special Elders Meeting' was convened on 29 November 2000 to 'discuss matters relating to the apparent moral failure by Frank Houston some 30 years ago.' This reads, 'Announcement to Church/s: It was agreed that a simple announcement concerning Frank's retirement would be sufficient at this stage.'

A National Executive 'Report on trip of John Lewis and Keith Ainge to New Zealand and Sydney, 28th 29th November 2000' reads: 'A total of six specific allegations have been investigated by the New Zealand executive relating to improper touching of genitals.' This letter indicates a total of four victims were identified, and that 'at least 50 pastors in New Zealand are aware of the allegations… John Lewis Stressed that the Australian Executive preferred not to publish a statement… unless rumours became so bad that it was considered in the best interests of all concerned. The New Zealand executive agreed with this approach.'

The AOG National Executive prepared a vague statement (dated 8 December 2000) 'as a response to individuals if they hear rumours and approach the executive for clarification.' It reads: 'The National Executives of the Assemblies of God in Australian and New Zealand have had the very sad responsibility of investigating claims of a serious moral failure against Frank Houston.'

The National Executive sent all Australian ordained AOG pastors a letter (dated 24 December 2001) telling them, 'Pastor Brian Houston received a serious accusation against his father, Frank Houston,' and advising pastors, 'We can't see any reason for this to be announced to your church or further afield.'

So, the National Executive knew Frank Houston was a serial pedophile, yet informed AOG local pastors of a single incident. The Executive verbally perpetuated the lie to inquiring pastors that Frank Houston experienced a 'one off' moment of 'moral failure' with a 'consenting 16-year-old.' Because local pastors were unaware of Frank Houston's crimes, the serial predator continued to preach and access AOG children right up until his 2004 death. I was given a recording of a sermon Frank Houston gave one month before his death in which he repeatedly commented on all the 'good-looking little boys' seated in the audience. This recording, plus witness testimony, contradicts the claim by AOG Executive and Brian Houston that Frank Houston suffered advanced Alzheimer's toward the end of his life.

HOUSTON SYSTEMATICALLY RESTRUCTURED AOG

Originally, the AOG National Conference was not an entertainment spectacular replete with motivational speakers and workshops. It was a simple gathering of ordained AOG pastors; a collective of autonomous fellowships which governed in voluntary cooperation. The pastors nominated and voted on its representatives who served the fellowship at district, state and national levels.

Yet Brian Houston restructured the AOG so that District leaders were selected by the State, and State leaders were appointed by the National Executive, and nominations to State, District and National leaders were approved by the National body. Brian Houston passed the restructuring off as a 'biblical model' of implementing 'vision.' He claimed God spoke to the executive relative to the direction of the movement, and they would lead the AOG into destiny. The restructuring in fact made the executives a select and elite club of Brian sycophants that left no means for rank and file ministers to rid themselves of corrupt leadership.

Brian Houston rewarded people who were complicit to the Frank Houston coverup (including like Ian Woods, John McMartin, Donna Crouch and Joel Abel) with positions on the National Executive. This ‘closed shop’ structure ensured the coverup stayed covered up.

The final blow to AOG leadership accountability occurred when Brian Houston removed the right of Pastors to raise business from the floor at the AOG/ACC Biennial Conference. Until Brian Houston and his minions did this, any ordained AOG pastor could ask embarrassing questions from the floor at National Conference. This right was removed under the pretence of ‘streamlining’ things, because AOG were a ‘growing movement’ and had to change for the sake of efficiency, and not consume valuable Conference time with mundane business matters that could be more efficiently dealt with on a day to day basis, etc.

The new AOG inquiry / complaints process was for Pastors to submit their questions to the District, who would submit them to the State, who would submit them to the National Executive for inclusion in the agenda (but only if they deemed the questions worthy). Every tier of governance was now stacked with ‘Brianites’ so nothing ‘uncomfortable’ would be raised at Conference, and dissenters were quickly and quietly identified. Obviously, questions about Frank Houston’s sex crimes and the Executive coverup of the same never made it to Conference for open discussion, under the new system. Further, the once freely available printed Directory of pastor’s names, addresses and contact details was done away with, leaving the Executive with the only means of contacting ordained ministers en masse.

2009 - 2019: HOUSTON REIGNS FROM A DISTANCE

After 10 years of coverup and restructuring to protect himself, Brian Houston resigned from the Executive in 2009. He was replaced by Wayne Alcorn (President) and Alun Davies (VP) who have held the same offices to date. Wayne Alcorn was Brian Houston’s partner in crime at the infamous 1999 meeting. The 1999 Executive members were bound by their criminal actions and fear of discovery. So, although no longer a National Executive, Brian Houston continued his influence via Hillsong staff who were on the Executive, especially Donna Crouch and Joel Abel whom he promoted and made wealthy following their involvement in burying Frank Houston’s pedophilia.

BIG $$ PASSED BETWEEN HILLSONG & AOG

Brian Houston also maintained influence over the AOG/ACC Executive by paying them $300,000 per year in dues. State and National dues are like a ‘franchise fee’ where local churches pay a percentage of their congregational tithes and offerings to the State and National Executives. The 2007 NSW Executive Meeting Minutes reveal, the State alone received at least $150,000 per annum; the National Executive typically received a similar amount. So, Brian Houston and Hillsong bought their enormous power and influence within the ACC.

The money flowed both ways, since the AOG/ACC would recommend their local pastors attend the annual Hillsong Conference plus the Women’s Conference run by Brian’s wife Bobbie. The AOG/ACC also endowed Bobbie with the position of National leader of Australian Christian Women (ACW) which directs thousands of Australian women to her annual ‘Colour’ Conferences. Thus, the AOG/ACC National and State conferences have become more Hillsong than ever and the local AOG/ACC churches are increasingly adopting a Hillsong style.

Hillsong music is never free, despite their gushing over how God gave them the lyrics and tunes. They pimp their merchandise to local, often struggling, AOG churches and charge copyright license through CCLI (Christian Copyright Licensing International), another money hungry scam that violates everything Jesus Christ stood for. The Biblical Jesus Christ condemned using a 'house of God' as a place of commercial trade and so stormed through his own church in a rage, tossing furniture and whipping people. But Hillsong sheep typically do not read the Word, for if they did, they would not support Hillsong.

Hillsong's commercial trading does not end there. Hillsong affiliates founded the Gloria Jeans café franchise. Some US mega-churches contain McDonalds outlets. In fact, most churches have replaced the traditional post-service cuppa and homemade slice with commercial cafes located within church buildings. The Biblical concept of tithing to feed the poor, widowed and disabled is replaced with paying for a pastor's fancy house and car, and wages for church positions that were once voluntary. Thus, most churches denominations have become apostate, just as the Bible predicted. Most churches have thrown out their Holy Ghost inspired, spiritually effective blood worship songs and hymns, and replaced these with repetitive, poorly written shite rock and heavy metal which are thrashed out by the next Australian Idol wannabes. The Bible has been edited, based on a discarded translation found dumped in an Egyptian monastery, by occultists and sexual perverts, to omit Lucifer's name, and stamped with occult symbols from my childhood.

POST RC: 60 MINUTES & NSW POLICE

By 2014, Frank Houston and his crimes were long buried. Everyone swallowed Brian's Houston's claim that his father's 'moral failure' was a 'one off' incident. Brian Houston and his partners in crime might have gotten away with the coverup had it not been for the Royal Commission's 2014 Public Hearing into Case Study 18. Simeon Beckett, council assisting the chair at the Royal Commission recommended that Brian Houston be referred to the police for concealing his father's child rapes.

> SENIOR COUNSEL CALLS FOR HILLSONG FOUNDER TO BE REFERRED TO POLICE
> Rick Morton, Dan Box, The Australian, 20 December 2014.
>
> HILLSONG Church founder Brian Houston should be referred to police for investigation after he failed to report child sexual abuse carried out by his father, the royal commission's senior counsel has found.
>
> Simeon Beckett, counsel assisting the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse, also found Brian Houston - who was national president of the Pentecostal church umbrella organisation Assemblies of God when he heard about the abuse - had a "conflict of interest" and never told police about his father Frank Houston's abuse of a boy from the age of seven in 1970…
>
> Mr Beckett also found the Assemblies of God offered Frank Houston a chance to return to his ministry, despite the allegations and the fact this was against policy.

The police dropped the investigation due to a 'lack of evidence.' Yet there had to be prima facie evidence for the Royal Commission to recommend prosecution in the first place. Some believe police dropped the case due to Brian Houston's close friendship with NSW Police Commissioner Andrew Scipione. On 23 October 2018, NSW MP David Shoebridge publicly called for legal action against Pastor Brian Houston for his pedophile protection crimes:[407]

> It is now 49 years since the abuse started, 19 years since Brian Houston was aware of it, and three years after the royal commission delivered its damning report, yet nothing has happened. It is a fact that Brian Houston is a close friend of Prime Minister Scott Morrison, who mentioned him in his inaugural speech as one of his guiding lights. It is a fact that Brian Houston is also a friend of the former police commissioner of New South Wales Andrew Scipione. Police Commissioner Scipione attended at least one annual conference of Hillsong and numerous services and is reportedly on a first name basis with Brian Houston. In December 2016 then Premier Baird opened the Hillsong Epicentre in Baulkham Hills, with his friend Brian Houston in attendance. There is compelling evidence that Brian Houston knew, while he was a church leader, about the abuse and about the hush payments, and that he failed to tell the police. This is a crime. We have sent correspondence to the police commissioner urging action. We have yet to receive a reply.
>
> AHA has contacted my office for help. He is suffering from a life-threatening illness and is concerned justice will not be served in his lifetime. This would be a further obscene betrayal. Earlier this week the Prime Minister delivered a national apology. Survivors responded that it is actions, not words, they want. The Royal Commission told us a lot about power - how it can stand in the way of justice and how the powerful can exploit the powerless. The problem is that despite this week's apology the powerful still seem to be immune from prosecution. No-one, regardless of their friends, should be beyond the reach of the law. This weekend Mr Brian Houston will continue to preach, and this weekend AHA will continue to demand the justice he deserves.

In NSW Parliament, on 24 September 2019, David Shoebridge raised the matter again:

> On 23 October last year I spoke in this place about the repeated sexual abuse of a boy by Frank Houston in Sydney in the 1970s. On that occasion I referred to this boy has AHA as he was referred to in the Royal Commission. That boy is now a man called Brett Sengstock, a man who broke his silence to call publicly for justice; a brave man who deserves justice. The man who sexually assaulted Brett was Frank Houston, often known as the father of Hillsong, a serial paedophile. His son Brian Houston is the current leader of the Hillsong Church and best friend of Prime Minister Scott Morrison. Our Prime Minister is so enamoured of Brian Houston that he asked for him to be part of Australia's delegation to the United States, only to be refused by the Trump administration.

---

[407] David Shoebridge, Child Sexual Abuse, Legislative Council Hansard, 23 October 2018.

Brian Houston and Hillsong's response to the Royal Commission's damning findings regarding the church, included the following:

> 'This Royal Commission did not directly involve Hillsong Church. The abuse committed by the late Frank Houston, the father of our senior pastor Brian Houston, occurred many years before Hillsong church existed, when he was a credentialed Assemblies of God minister in New Zealand.'

This was also their legal defence against the claims from Brett Sengstock for compensation. This church whose so-called 'love offerings' for visiting pastors can raise hundreds of thousands of dollars each Sunday, avoided paying fair compensation to Brett on a legal technicality. These 'love offerings' are part of what make this brand of Pentecostalism so lucrative. While a pastor cannot take money from their own church, they can visit a neighbouring church and receive direct love offerings in cash or by cheque. This money will often be funnelled to a 'public benevolent institution' that the pastor has registered in his or her name. This then pays them a handsome tax-free wage and fringe benefits. In short, these 'love offerings' are a con.

Hillsong did eventually give some money to Brett for his damaged life and repeated assaults. He was promised a mere $10,000 hush payment at Thornleigh McDonald's by Frank Houston and Nabi Saleh. Even that cash was forthcoming only after a call with Brian Houston. Brett's testimony to the Royal Commission about this is illuminating. He said:

> 'About two months after my meeting with Pastor Frank at McDonalds, I telephoned Brian Houston as I had not yet received any money from Pastor Frank. We had a conversation to the following effect:
>
> 'Me: "What's happening with the payment I was promised? I agreed to forgive your father."
>
> 'Brian: "Yes, ok, I'll get the money to you. There's no problem …
> You know, it's your fault all of this happened. You tempted my father*."'*

When Brett finally received a cheque from Hillsong there was no note from Brian, no apology, no compassion. There is a clear continuity in leadership from Frank to Brian of this church. In fact, the church leadership who failed to report Frank's abuse to the police despite holding numerous meetings to discuss the extent of his abuse in Australia and New Zealand, continue to lead the church. The Hillsong Church eventually stripped Frank Houston of his credentials, but it allowed him to retire on a generous pension and under a cloak of secrecy about his sexual offending. It has never publicly referred to the assaults on Brett. Its only statement referred to:

> '… claims of a serious moral failure against Frank Houston. The incidents that have been investigated happened more than 30 years ago and Frank has admitted to the failure with great remorse.'

> The church has since falsely claimed that Frank did not preach again after this. This claim is clearly incorrect. I am aware of multiple occasions in which he was a visiting pastor at affiliated churches, with unhindered access to church families and their children. In this role he continued to receive so-called 'love offerings.'
>
> Brett deserves so much more than this cold, brutal dismissal from Hillsong. This church, and its significant wealth, was built on the preaching of Frank Houston, whose violence and disregard for Brett does not seem to trouble Frank's son and the current church leader. A church that reaps millions of dollars in tax-free love offerings cannot find the compassion or decency to pay Brett fair compensation for the harm done to him. Whatever the legalities, this is morally corrupt.
>
> I will finish by placing on the record what Brett wanted to tell his elected representatives about Scott Morrison's invitation to Brian Houston:
>
> 'It's a slap in the face for sexual abuse victims. It's a slap in the face to the Royal Commission into institutional child sexual abuse, and it's a slap in the face to the Australian Laws. It makes Mr Morrison's apology to sexual abuse victims invalid.'

* * *

PRIME MINISTER'S HILLSONG / POLICE CONNECTION

Prime Minister Scott Morrison and his wife attended pedophile Frank Houston's Waterloo church where kids were ritually murdered. The Morrisons were pastorally trained under, and likely married by, Frank Houston. The Morrisons reside next door to NSW Police Commissioner Mick Fuller. Scott Morrison's father was a NSW Police Officer. Scott Morrison is obviously using his personal connections with the NSW Police to prevent them charging Brian Houston.

Having weathered the Royal Commission, the only thing that bound Hillsong to the AOG/ACC was the civil action against them by victim AHA. 60 Minutes journalists identified victim 'AHA' as Brett Sengstock and revealed that although both AOG/ACC Hillsong and AOG New Zealand acknowledged that Frank Houston repeatedly raped Brett Sengstock, Hillsong and the AOG spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on lawyers and tactics to deny him compensation and silence him altogether. Because Brett Sengstock was dying of cancer and at risk of losing his home to costs, he abandoned hope of justice and compensation, and instead signed the 'Cease and Desist' order AOG imposed on him in 2018.

Brett Sengstock's terminal cancer prognosis finally let Brian Houston and Hillsong off the hook, and they no longer needed the AOG/ACC. So, immediately after Brett Sengstock signed the order, Brian Houston broke away from ACC to form his own global denomination. This move saves Hillsong $300,000 per annum in dues. Yet Hillsong retains the benefits of a loyal following from within the ACC who buy Hillsong music, and who attend the Hillsong Conference and Women's Colour Conference. The only loser is the AOG/ACC who are left holding the can.

But Wait…

Unfortunately for Brian Houston and his pedo-protecting minions, the NSW legislation changed in late 2018, making concealing child sex abuse a 'serious' rather than a 'summary' offence. 60 Minutes confirmed the police investigation is active and ongoing:

60 MINUTES: CHURCH FOUNDER UNDER POLICE INVESTIGATION OVER HANDLING OF FATHER'S SEX CRIMES

Garry McNab (60 Minutes Producer), 9News, 18 November 2018.

> Brian Houston, the founder of the Hillsong Church, is under investigation by New South Wales police over his handling of the sex crimes committed by his father Frank Houston… In 2014, Brian Houston gave evidence before the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sex Abuse, which later found he had failed to take the matter to the police and had a conflict of interest in dealing with the complaints against his father. It has emerged that in the wake of the Royal Commission's findings, NSW Police began looking into his handling of his father's crimes, an investigation that was suspended because of lack of evidence. A NSW police spokesman said the investigation has been reopened and is now 'current and active.'

JUSTICE

Of the 1999 AOG Executive, David Cartledge is dead from a brain tumour, while Danny Guglielmucci and Steve Penny both have advanced cancer. Ian Woods, the former NSW AOG President who sheltered Frank Houston at his church in the Hawkesbury and was promoted to the National Executive, died of prostate cancer. Miraculously, while multiple Hillsong executives who targeted Brett Sengstock to hide Frank Houston's crimes are dropping from cancer, Brett is hanging on.

NZ Commission into Institutional Abuse

Trouble is also brewing for Brian Houston in New Zealand where a Royal Commission into abuse in state care was expanded in late 2018 to include those abused by faith-based institutions such as churches and religious schools. Many AOG insiders suspected that Frank Houston was raping boys back when he was a Salvation Army officer. Allegations are now emerging that Frank Houston raped kids while a Salvation Army Officer in NZ, that the Salvos kicked him out for pedophilia, that the Salvos failed to report his pedophilia crimes to the police, and that all this was common knowledge within the Houston family - something Brian Houston has strenuously denied since 1999.

The NZ Royal Commission will highlight that the Australian and NZ AOG Executives were well informed that Frank Houston raped 15-year-old Peter Fowler plus six boys aged 10 years in Lower Hutt NZ in the 1970s. The NZ Executive sent all 50+ NZ AOG pastors letters informing them of the assaults in 1998, and they paid Peter Fowler $25,000 compensation in 2003.

Australian AOG Pastor and General Secretary, Phillip Powell, tried to expose these crimes from 1981 onwards, by sending faxes to Christian Life Centres (CLC) offices. Powell's faxes accused Frank Houston of sexually assaulting children and gave specific details of various assaults. Donald Elley read one of these faxes while working at Hillsong in 1983 and questioned Frank Houston about them. Pastor Powell continued sending the faxes until the 1990s when Frank Houston finally admitted he was a pedophile. In response, Frank and Brian Houston viciously and publicly slandered Phillip Powell and destroyed his reputation and career.

Phillip Powell supported Frank Houston's NZ child rape victim Peter Fowler. Here are relevant excerpts an email (dated 8 October 2014) Peter Fowlers sent Philip Powell:

I have not been invited to appear at the [Australian] Royal Commission, as my evidence relates to events that occurred outside Australia. However, I have given extensive evidence by telephone and the RC solicitors contacted me again today to ask if there were any questions I would like them to pose to Brian Houston when he appears tomorrow. I said that there were two:

NZ AOG formally advised me in 2003 that Brian Houston, Hillsong, Australian AOG and the Houston Family refused to cooperate with their investigation regarding my allegations and that they may have also deliberately obstructed the criminal investigation of Frank Houston's sexual abuse in New Zealand.

1. Why did Brian Houston refuse to cooperate and why did he ultimately obstruct the NZ investigation?
2. Did Brian Houston, Hillsong or the Houston family, compensate NZ AOG for the $25,000 settlement that they made with me in 2003?

The overwhelming thing that remains for me is what I perceive deeply as the inherent evil of Hillsong and all that it represents. You know exactly what I mean... the worship of wealth and materialism and the lack of any social justice in its approach to community and the Christianity it claims to represent. I find it abhorrent and deeply offensive. Hillsong is not a ministry in any sense of the word I understand. It is essentially just a business and its primary objective is profit and the creation of wealth for its shareholders...Brian and Bobbie! I imagine they will survive the Royal Commission with insincere words and PR designed to protect their empire. Unless Hillsong implodes due to greed, criminality or excessive consumption, I expect it will go on to the greater strength and power, damaging many lives and falsely representing Christ in the process. I can only hope that they will eventually be revealed...in this world or the next, for what they really are...the moneychangers who defiled the temple of God!

And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves, And said to them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but you have made it a den of thieves —Matthew 21:12–13.

HILLSONG, RITUAL ABUSE & ANTONY KIDMAN

I chose Hillsong as my case example to illustrate a point: Where there is smoke there is fire. Whenever you see an institution engaging in child abuse coverup implicating police commissioners and prime ministers, know that the true story involves ritual abuse, mind control, and CIA child trafficking.

Hillsong took a Scientology approach to managing Frank Houston's child rape victims. Hillsong pumped millions of dollars (leeched from its mind-controlled masses and disgusted Australian taxpayers) into stalking, harassing and legally threatening victims, and bribing AOG Executives into assisting the coverup. This is because like Scientology, Hillsong is a CIA cult cut-out.

I have been contacted by multiple Hillsong victims (or their parent/therapist/pastor) whose testimonies combine to create a clear picture of Hillsong's connection to Antony Kidman and CIA child trafficking. Here are some brief examples:

1. A 24-year-old woman told me Hillsong prostituted her from age two to 22 years, and that Hillsong delivered her to Antony Kidman who subjected her to mind control procedures.
2. A therapist told me her client was subjected to ritual abuse and mind control perpetrated by Antony Kidman via Hillsong.
3. A mother said Hillsong targeted, abducted, prostituted and murdered multiple children, and subjected her daughter to MK-ULTRA soldier/assassin training. She supplied me with supporting documentary evidence that NSW Victim Services compensated her two children for witnessing Hillsong ritually murder 10-year-old Helen Karipidis in an upstairs room inside Hillsong church during a 1988 Christmas service. The mother also said Hillsong Youth Workers abducted 10-year-old Samantha Knight whose disappearance was falsely pinned on a scapegoat. The bodies of Samantha Knight and Helen Karipidis were never found. Both girls attended Hillsong kids club prior to their disappearance.

HILLSONG, PIE & COMMUNISTS

In 2017, I published the following letter on my blog sites:

Dear Fiona,

Thank you for standing up to these criminals. I have information for you which you might find interesting. I have to remain anonymous because going public would severely compromise my capacity to investigate this crime-ring.

In 1971 an Adelaide barrister from the Communist Party of Australia created the precursor to what later became the Pedophile Information Exchange. This lawyer was the late ELLIOT JOHNSON. The Pedophile Information Exchange was formed from earlier pedophile groups such as the Lewis Carroll Collectors Guild and the (homosexual) Peter Pan Club. Another founder of this organization (from the Peter Pan Club) was FRANK HOUSTON who also founded the pseudo-church The Assembly of God. Houston was pastor of the Surrey Hills Christian Centre which later morphed into Hillsong Church. Houston was an organizer for the Peter Pan Club when he was contacted by Elliot Johnson and asked to assist in forming a "united front" for organized pedophilia. This resulted in the formation of the Pedophile Information Exchange in February 1973. This organization was then exported to the United Kingdom.

I knew Johnson personally and I have always detested the man. I have heard Johnson boast of having killed Japanese prisoners of war in Papua New Guinea during WW2. Here are some quotes from Johnson;

- 'I shot half a dozen in one afternoon';
- 'I shot dozens and dozens of them';
- 'The others would bayonet them or cut their throats, but I was more humane about it – I shot them in the back of the head.'

Johnson had a law degree at the time and knew perfectly well that his actions were a breach of the Geneva Convention. Johnson was a war criminal. Upon return to Australia Johnson became an operator for the Communist Party of Australia. This included bullying and indeed killing any Party dissidents.

The Communist Party loaned Johnson 50,000 pounds which Johnson used to found the Adelaide law firm Johnson and Withers. Johnson also bought a house and a flash motorcar. The loan was forgiven for services rendered.

In 1947 a man was found dead on Somerton Beach in Adelaide. This murder remains unsolved. The victim was a GRU man working for the USSR. He was collecting information on the development of British weapons in Australia. The Communist Party of Australia supported him and other Soviet agents (such as HV Evatt) with sexual services. The GRU man had been paired up with a local woman communist who he got pregnant. The naive chap then thought that he could marry the woman and live a family life in Australia. He contacted the Dept of External Affairs (called DFAT now) and asked for advice. However, that Dept had been so penetrated by communists that the GRU man was betrayed. He was told to attend the woman's house and await the arrival of Commonwealth security officers. Instead he was attended by Elliot Johnson (with fake ID) and two Communist Party thugs dressed up in suits and ties.

Johnson then poisoned the man with OLEANDER extract. This provides a deadly (cardiac) poison that kills within hours. As the man sickened, he was stripped and left to die. His corpse was then washed and redressed (by the woman – a nurse) and then transported to Somerton Beach by Elliot Johnson in his motorcar. This was one of the rare private cars in Adelaide at that time. The police had a couple of dozen model T Fords and Morris Minors.

Another Johnson killing was that of the Sydney physicist Dr Gilbert Bogle in 1961. Dr Bogle was a microwave physicist who had been working on microwave modulation for guided missile systems for the British. He was recruited into the Communist Party by his boss Dr Geoffrey Chandler using sex as the bait.

The pay in Australia was poor and Bogle applied for a job in the USA. Bogle had a PhD in microwave physics and the American pay was literally 20 times that of his Australian pay. The problem was that Bell was a high security laboratory and the job required a complete FBI background check. The Communist Party fearing for their spy ring then decided to murder Bogle and then delegated that task to Elliot Johnson and Geoffrey Chandler. Johnson gave the termination order and acted as field director for the kill. Geoffrey Chandler then administered OLEANDER poison to Gilbert Bogle in a rum drink at a cocktail party.

However, Bogle noticed the taste and commented upon it. Margaret Chandler then took a sip of the drink and was poisoned as well. Geoffrey Chandler then telephoned Elliot Johnson for instructions and was then ordered by Johnson to dump both bodies down by the river to die.

Johnson was the most professional and protected criminal in Australia. In 1983 the corrupt premier of South Australia JOHN BANNON then appointed the perverted murderer to the Supreme Court of South Australia. This is how Johnson became a Supreme Court judge. This should indicate to you just how much power the pedophiles have in South Australia.

I have very good reason for believing that Johnson was one of the principal members of what has been called 'The Family'. This is the name given to the gang that killed children in Adelaide from the 1960's to the 1980's. It has been claimed that they are homosexuals. No! They raped and killed little girls too. I have personally heard one of Johnson's comrades admit to raping Jane Beaumont. This informant claims that the little girl and her younger siblings Anna and Grant were strangled by Elliot Johnson. I believe it as I have heard Johnson admit to killing Japanese POWs. Johnson admitted to me that he enjoyed killing (he said that it was cathartic) and that sometimes he would give them a head start and then hunt them down.

Part of Johnson's motivations were terrorist. You might know about Red Terror. This was used by the Bolsheviks in 1918 to beat the Russian people into submission. The Muslim fanatics from Islamic State use it for this reason as well. This is why the Beaumont children were taken. This tactic really shocked Adelaide. It was not a safe town after all, and the government could not protect you. These criminals proved that they could defeat the police and thus reduce public confidence in them.

I hope that this information is of some use to you. I am sorry that I can't go public, but I have leaked a lot of information and even that has been risky.

So far four whistle-blowers have been killed in Adelaide for knowing too much and needless to say I do not want to be the fifth to die.

God bless you. Take good care of yourself. Remember me.

* * *

Remember: Every time you sing a Hillsong tune at church, or play a Hillsong album – you are funding the global child trafficking operation coordinated by the CIA.

Confessions of a Sydney Satanist

Satanism is a spiritual Darwinian theory based on predation.
- Frater 616

The general public can't fathom why Satanists do what they do. Why do people rape and murder kids? Just because people can't comprehend why, that does not negate the occurrence of such. Look at the extreme pornography available and how people become sexually aroused by watching someone defecating. Most find this disgusting. Yet many find it sexually arousing. I will tell you why. As serial killer Ted Bundy explained to Christian psychologist James Dobson just before his execution, it starts with soft porn. The nature of 'free' and perverted sex is that the person ceases to be aroused by a certain sex act and requires more extreme perversion to achieve arousal, until eventually the person is sexually aroused by killing kids. The person becomes addicted, and what began as 'free' begins to cost.

Other reasons for engaging in satanic crimes include the love of money, power, recognition and success. Perhaps the biggest contributing factor is a desire to regain control over life that was lost due to childhood trauma. A further reason is that some people who are born into a cult family are conditioned to it from birth. It is their family religion which they accept and practise just like people do in other religions which espouse strange beliefs and practises, like Mormonism which teaches each man is given his own planet to populate for all eternity with multiple wives. Ritual pedophilia and murder are integral to the religion of satanism. Followers of Lucifer are deceived into believing they inherit his kingdom when they die, just as Christians believe they go to heaven. This is the premise behind the deathbed confession of Sydney Satanist codenamed 'Frater 616' (or 'Petor Narsagonan').

'Frater 616' reportedly died in 2004. His confession was published on a 2010 Australian website (loveforlife) that was subsequently forcibly taken down. His words are consistent with everything I write in this book, and with my own experience of Satanism in Sydney during the 1970s and 80s. I probably attended rituals with this man. Frater 616 said he was recruited into Satanism in 1971 while attending a Sydney university. From his description, I perceive he was recruited into the University of Sydney's OTO. Don't ask me why a cult member would want such an admission published. All I can say is the following account is consistent with my experience of the same cult. Frater 616's confession captures the Satanist philosophy; it provides insight to their cult hierarchy, connections, recruitment methods, and influence. I omitted some revolting descriptions of rituals and porn, underlined important points, and clarified information in the footnotes.

* * *

Deathbed Confession
by Frater 616

Satanism flourishes beneath the scintillating midnight-blue wet streets and bedevilling phosphorescent lights of Australia's glittering capital cities. Its practitioners are from all walks of life. Although marginal types and those with predisposing personalities have always and will always be important to Satanism and its leaders' ends, they are merely tools. Their antinomian influence is now so pervasive as not to be readily noticed.

Amongst the highest echelons, some are politicians, medical doctors, high-ranking police officers, lawyers, advertising gurus, decorated military men, media personalities, fashion models, and social workers. Amongst the lowest (usually temporary) ranks are prostitutes, minor drug dealers, and a number of high school students. Some operate from the mists. Their victims are drip-fed straight amnesia by an assortment of mind control measures and psychological torture tactics that would leave any normal person numb with the dawning apprehension that things are not as they seem – and they have not been for a long, long time.

The most talented amongst them have lifestyles maintained on crime; but lacquered with a thin veneer of respectable professionalism and knowledge. They dress with elegance – timeless and calculating; networking and conspiring in a dream that money alone can't purchase. Often their personalities have a force that distorts the contours both of judgement and of everyday perception. I can't mention every name, but I will drop enough clues. The doctors refuse to say exactly how long I have but…

I became involved in the whole sordid business in the 1970s, a decade noted for little beyond sartorial bad taste and crushingly optimistic fatalism. The decade that began as a drug-crazed carry-over of the 1960s soon bequeathed androgynous glam-rock, the Watergate scandal and the shallow opportunism of 'Rollerball.' Science-fictionism stalked the streets with a rejected furtiveness bred of cowering beneath the backdrop of the Cold War and dancing with the resurrected agonies of another Asian based imperialistic conflict.

I fell through a crack in reality, having deliriously wandered amid the human wreckage and reached certain spiritual conclusions. In short, I do not know how I got there, but I know why. The 1970s were a dismal, incense-fuelled time that only those who lived through it can appreciate. The comprehensive dismissal of values and the adoption of pornography as the aesthetic standard by which all endeavour was to be categorised left its impressionistic fingerprints on everybody's imagination, mine included. I guess that I analysed and reacted differently. That is how I escaped the mundane – through one of western society's fault lines.

Credo quia absurdum!

I began dabbling in the black arts as an alienated university student. It was 1971 when I attended my first meeting – only to be led into an existence of happiness, sexual excess, acquisitive arousal and comfort. Within a week of meeting my Luciferian mentor I was operating a number of travel businesses in Sydney and flying to international destinations at least four times a year. I had a Jaguar, city apartment, holiday home in the country, access to a yacht on Sydney harbour and women. I was young and considered to be an up and coming star within the shadowy twilight of the Satanic infrastructure. The nether world was at my patent leather-soled feet. My suits were hand-make Italian; the cravats and neckties, Chinese silk and my nymphomaniac maids, French. (They dressed like French maids and would often wake me with a lesbian show.)

At that time the United States based Church of Satan was the very public face of a movement that had begun almost a century before and had culled its adherents from the renaissance of magic, which had begun in Germany and flowered in England [408] since the dying years of the nineteenth century. The Church of Satan was one of the front organizations for an ancient body whose very existence had never before been imagined. If you want more information on some of its past and most influential members you could do worse than study the late J.P. Morgan,[409] Drs. James McDonald and René Hardy, the Kennedy's (including [408] Consistent with OTO history.

---

[409] US officials seized a J.P. Morgan owned ship trafficking $1.3 billion in cocaine, in 2019.

Jackie), Irving Berlin, Groucho Marx, Elvis Presley, Garner Ted Armstrong,[410] Sammy Davis Jr., Ronald Reagan, Edward Heath, Thomas Plantard de Saint-Claire or a search amongst the Bushes.[411]

I learnt and reflected the glamour of the black arts: divination, dark meditation, sacrifice, sexual vampirism, talismans, voodoo dolls and sex magic. My life was one of calculated excess and dazzling fulfilment. I smoked handmade Partagas Cuban cigars. I had a personal secretary who was happy to engage my every whim and find like-minded others if I wanted a change or had a colleague I needed to impress. I finished every day with a restaurant meal, bottle of French Champagne and Black Mass orgy of unforgettable and unspeakable delight.

The streets were more innocent, the people more naïve. The American Intelligence Services were still involved in funding the occult, but their influence was more ingratiating than dictatorial. In any event, many of America's high-ranking military men were members of various Satanic Lodges or kindred organizations. Often sensitive materials [i.e., drugs, weapons and sex trafficked children] and powerful figures – who operated from the comfort, safety and anonymity of the dark velvet shadows – were transported on US and Australian Navy ships. Oil tankers were another favourite. Materials (and indeed, people) have been concealed and lost on oil tankers for years. Remember, this was in the Seventies when America's organized crime syndicates were establishing the narcotics markets of the Western World, Australia included.

I knew her as Lilith, a High Priestess of an ultra-secretive Black Order of Typhon. Hers was the easy smile of a true neurotic and the body of an Angel. Her long cruel fingernails were enamelled in the chic and expensive titillations of her victims and their fantasies. Urolagnists worshipped at her feet and obeyed her every sadistic command. They were not the only ones. Her clientele included the top end of town and she frequented the boardrooms and bathrooms of power with an essence of mystery, wealth and alluring sluttiness that won her the attention and influence of very many.

I had first met her at a stately home in an inner Sydney suburb at one of the regular Black Masses held to strengthen the bonds of lust, occult knowledge and perversion. There she was indulging the Devil's faithful, teaching and being videoed for the 1970's black-market that existed in underground extreme porn: bestiality, pedophilia, body wastes and pain. After her services 'to the Dark Lord' she told me over a reefer and through exhaustion that she was only 17 and had met the Master. He had given her a mission.

Lilith was a child from one of Sydney's more self-conscious suburbs. Private school educated and with a future in her father's business, she sacrificed herself to help establish what is considered today, by those in the know, to be the most powerful and important Satanic organization in the world. That group comprises some of the most educated, wealthy, corrupt and corrupting people that have ever existed. And they operate out of Sydney, Australia – but their influence is international.

It transpired that she had been flown to the United States to be tutored and initiated into what was at that time, Anton LaVey's underground Satanic sisterhood of professional women with an aptitude for carnality and a conscience to match: the 'Ordo Cave Lupam.' Her high school teacher – an Adept in the Black Arts – had spotted Lilith while she was still only a schoolgirl. Like all Satanists, he believed that truth and salvation could be found through the exploration of repressed human needs; that pornography gave joy and joy gave strength.

---

[410] American evangelist, son of Herbert W. Armstrong, Worldwide Church of God founder.

[411] George Bush Snr & Jnr.

Through his dedication and perverse ability, he had secured her co-operation to begin her new education for her assigned task of political intrigue and influential debasement.

After completing her 'education' with the OCL Lilith was tutored by an English gentleman who I knew as Pindar. I never met him, but I worship the true father of the statutory heir. His were the 'Irish' mysteries of degradation and when his name was ever mentioned Lilith would often laughingly sing, '…the rosy red cheeks of the little children.'

Lilith procured children to satiate the debased lusts of many Satanists. These were taken from single girls by promises, for a fee or occasionally, simply stolen. Babies were bred for their various purposes by 'Broodmares' – young unemployed girls who were paid to hand over their 'produce'. Sometimes this magical pornography was filmed; sometimes children died. Once you have seen a young child crucified [412] or a baby kicked to death you are and can never be the same again. The most disturbing aspect of the Black Masses held in Sydney was and remains the ease with which victims were and continue to be obtained and the lack of any effective interest by the police (although a number of Police Commissioners from various States were members of the Order). This is not to suggest that Satanists are simply perverts or child killers.

The Alpha-Lodge to which I was a member placed a great deal of emphasis upon Magic, both in theory and practice. Demons were evoked and dispatched; sigils made and sacrifice and the letting of blood encouraged. In this regard, many who bask in their own limited knowledge believe that Aleister Crowley is the father of modern manifestations of Satanism, but this is incorrect. Perhaps Crowley is the grandfather of modern left-hand path groups, but their stepfather is Peter James Carroll, the founder of the Chaos Magick School. There are a number of reasons for this and the various Black Lodges within Australia have developed from their early twentieth century reliance upon recruiting from fringe Masonic groups, through High Magick in the nineteen twenties, Low Magick in the nineteen sixties and seventies to their current prospective candidates from amongst Chaos Magick practitioners (who are generally young, ambitious, enthusiastic, energetic and destined by their lifestyle choices to the shadowy world of Satanism).

A number of up-market Escort agencies in Australia and elsewhere are operated by Black Magicians. Yet brothels and pornography comprise only a small financial part of the International Satanic Empire. Most of the money comes from drugs (the CIA), sophisticated blackmail, money lending and currency trading. Satanists of the highest order are behind a number of wealthy Conservative, New Right Christian Churches and organizations in America. These are some of contemporary Satanism's best cash-flow enterprises (mostly indirectly) and allow mass indoctrination and networking.

The aim of the Alpha Lodge remains, illiteracy rates in the western world of at least sixty-six percent by 2010 and the destruction of at least seventy percent of the globe's population by the year 2030. All governments count on their sheeple to respond in typical infantile fashions, including unconsciously identifying with a more powerful force – even if it enslaves, brutalizes and humiliates them… In this regard, the infiltration of the United Nations by Satanists – which began in the 1970s – has paid off extremely well already, as has the career of Henry Kissinger. It was Henry Kissinger who proposed the use of fundamentalist Christianity to bring about war, firstly in the Middle East and then globally. In this he was aided by a number of American Presidents subsequent to Richard M. Nixon handing over the reins to Gerald Ford – who was always one of ours!

---

[412] The OTO Ritual Crucifixion, like I witnessed in University of Sydney's Great Hall.

As the Headquarters of International Satanism is Sydney, Australia it is not surprising to learn that Norman Lindsay[413] – a former Magus of the Order – is considered a Satanic Saint. Indeed, there are a number of flourishing secret shrines dedicated to him and his memory throughout Australia and the United Kingdom. Every Equinox there are human sacrifices dedicated to him and the subtle but perverted influence his painting and children's literature continues to have. (Similar shrines exist in America under Henry Kissinger's authority, but he has altered both the structure and subtle ethos of the American Alpha Lodge Shrines.)

It was Lindsay who taught that every political solution lead to more complex and involuted problems. He counselled that the public is not concerned with satanic manipulators but only with petty criminals and little issues which affect their insignificant lives directly. As the status quo is maintained by the masses, it gets heavier the deeper it sinks and the greater its fears. The people can't succeed or achieve and so must sink deeper and hold on more strongly! The fact that for most people the days repeat endlessly until death relieves them speaks volumes about the (sub-) human condition!

Kissinger refined Hitler's 'Terror Technique' into the more subtle and powerful 'Tension Technique': building tension in society and then finding a scapegoat. Dark Path adepts do this in insignificant ways until they have the power and ability to move and direct people to more gross and hideous behaviours.

…

If you doubt the influence of Satanism in the modern world consider the following issues: According to the World Bank, Australia is the wealthiest (or second wealthiest, after South Africa) nation on Earth. No one knows the full extent of Australia's natural resources and yet the living standards of Australians is getting worse each year and while Australians are amongst the most highly taxed people in the world, we are quickly heading towards third world nation status. Who owns and controls the Reserve Bank of Australia (hint, it is the same people who own the American Federal Reserve and the Bank of England)?[414]

- Why do overseas-owned companies pay so little taxation in Australia and why does the Australian government (of whichever political persuasion) allow overseas mining conglomerates to rape our environment and give Australians back next to nothing in return?
- Why was fluoride put into Australia's water supply and why is it impossible to have it removed?
- Are you seeing a pattern here?
- Why is the media of the 'Free World' so heavily controlled and their shamefaced relationship to government so symbiotic?
- Why have the educational standards of the Western World been forced to 'dumb down' (a process accelerated in the 1980s by both Spielberg and Lucas at the instigation of the Australian Alpha Lodge)?
- Why has multiculturalism been foisted upon the 'First' World (with the exception of Japan)?
- And who was behind the September the 11th operation?

---

[413] Norman Lindsay (1879-1969) a famous Australian artist and writer. I attended a ritual conducted in his creepy Blue Mountains home which became a museum.

[414] Rothschilds.

- Which country's 'Intelligence Agency' supplied the WMD story which 'caused' the Iraq invasion? (Hint, it was not a Christian or Islamic nation.)

…

Australian Satanists have always been at the forefront of high-quality videos and DVDs devoted to 'kiddie-porn.' Sheeple are such that although they scream about the importance of 'justice,' it is of no interest unless they are in some way harmed! Their morality is that of the herd, for the more that sheeple feel isolated yet together, the easier it is for Satanists to reign. Provide the subjects with the forbidden and they feel fragmented, weak, guilty and often worthless – all of which the Master Satanist employs for their own ends. In Australian-produced pedophile entertainment, certain avant-garde features predominate: sexual frenzy, degrading treatment, filth, coprophilia, torture, rape and death.

All of this is carefully crafted and augmented by aphrodisiacs and violence. Often the women involved are far worse than the men – little boys agonised by the cruel fingers, long tapered fingernails, teeth, cigarettes and perversions of ravishingly beautiful and debased female practitioners who are without restraint and have been maddened with heartless pride. Genital torture and castration are a constant theme. I will never forget the heartfelt sobs, desperate pleas, blood, tears and screams induced in many little boys by the agonizing use of alligator-clips, the application of the strap, whip, dildo, knee and the torment of electric shock!

Often Satanists advertise in free, youth culture street newspapers. This provides them with a constant supply of young teenage hopefuls to recruit or exploit (or both). Often Street-kids are taken in, used and discarded. It is only another missing teenager! Coffee shops, city entertainment complexes and even evangelical youth-based churches are still used to this day to lure the innocent and not so innocent, their hearts full of broken dreams from broken homes. (Thank you, Lionel [Murphy].)[415]

…

Candidates are accepted and accessed over the required time for character, imagination and intellect – in that order.

Debauchery as a science is taught and maintained by programmes – strict in nature and observance.

Rituals are conducted, thought patterns established, relationships destroyed, and dependencies enhanced. Psychopaths are studied and emulated.

Some of the deadliest, most effective and disarming assassins are women.

…

Together and with time, those at the highest echelons of International Satanism believe that there is nothing they can't achieve. And if you knew even half of what they have already done you would agree.

…

The modern media is a pastiche of sex and soft eroticism. The Western world's drinking water has been laced with chemicals that exert powerful effects over time. Rates of depression, suicide, incest and bank interest continue to rise – but no one bothers to join the dots!

What do all of the following people have in common: Norman Lindsay, 'Sir' William McMahon, Garfield Barwick,[416] Lionel Murphy, Rosalyn Norton [who modelled for Norma [415] Reference to Lionel Murphy introducing no-fault divorce which resulted in broken homes and kids.

---

[416] Graduated Fort St High School & University of Sydney; Chief Justice.

Lindsay], Clyde Cameron and Stephanie Bartholomew (aka, Abigail)? From where do more Australians get their news and why?[417] What is Michael Aquino's interest in Australia's Pine Gap Facility and why is discussion of the Base's use and purpose inadmissible within Australia's polite society and media?

I believe in one Prince, Satan, who reigns over this Earth, and in one Law which triumphs overall. I believe in one Temple, Our Temple to Satan, and in one Word which triumphs overall: The Word of ecstasy. And I believe in the Law of the Aeon,[418] which is sacrifice, and in the letting of blood. For which I shed no tears since I give praise to my Prince, the fire-giver, and look forward to his reign and the pleasures that are to come!

A number of Crown Service agents in Australia were relieved on the evening of 19th December 1967. A number of the President's men in Australia were quietly celebrating as the clock struck midnight on the 11th of November 1975. Both Intelligence Agencies had relations which were still trespassed by the ghost of Dr Ward. Both reacted to these events because of Australian Satanism, in the first case because H.R.H. Queen Elizabeth II would be saved embarrassments and in the second because Gough Whitlam was not one of them. On this point I am in no doubt, Sir John did his duty to the Princess and Inner Head of the Alpha Lodge Australasia. And Sir Garfield explained it!

Most people do not know that John W. Howard's first overseas trip, as Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia was to receive his 33rd Masonic degree, for in matters of his true faith he manifests a decidedly disillusioned romantic apprehension. His is the perfect example of parallel lives and a compliant media well and truly out of their depth. The same could not be said for Harold [Holt] and his parties and the fact that people were noticing and indeed, Sir William was invited.

You have little if any idea of the history, connexions and the network of Australia's Sinister Lodges, the Temples within them or their adherents and puppets. Why are some politicians spectacularly successful and others dogged at every step? How was the New York based public relations firm paid by John for doing such a good job in the… elections? Has anyone bothered to check the Commonwealth of Australia's Department of Treasury records and would they know what they were looking for?

I became Outer Head of the Alpha Lodge Australasia in the same year a meteoric rise to power brought a change of federal government with a Prime Minister whose relationship to Satanism was tenuous and pedestrian at best. But then again, he liked to play around, and a number of our special people were happy to accommodate him, for a price. He craved respect and understated admiration and received both from us for the efforts he expended.

I left the Alpha Lodge – as best as one can – and tried to reclaim a more mundane if no less ingratiating lifestyle. I operated a media company publishing anti-Christian tractates, political pamphlets and pornographic videos, working for a number of organizations internationally.

…

Modern post-1980 Satanism is the result of some hard-learned truths and well-practiced procedures. Everyone knows that we are becoming more obvious – there are decreasing reasons to hide. The World of High Fashion – always a glittering ephemeral chimera – became an overtly successful recruiting ground for 'sweet young things' with a daring and glamorous nature. Multi-Billionaires increasingly sought the spiritual comfort and insider information the Satanic Alpha-Lodges could provide.

---

[417] A reference to Channel Nine.

[418] Thelema was founded on the idea that the 20th century marked the beginning of the Aeon of Horus, in which a new ethical code would be followed: 'Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law.'

…

Within the left-hand path, Satan is the Supreme Prince (the Hierarchy of Hell begins with The Prince). He is 'The Other', the bright Fire Giver and Illuminator! He is the only God who cares! Satanism is a spiritual Darwinian theory based on predation. Devoted Satanists dedicate themselves and their sex acts to their Dark Lord. Prayers are said, Chants intoned, or Invocations recited all as the basis of obtaining the blessings of Hell.

Unknown – if not always unsuspected – Infernal Temples exist in every major city throughout the world – Vatican City included! Every hour of every day and every night people are knowingly engaged in Satan's service. Human sacrifice – whether ritually and quicker or slowly and degradingly over time – is all harnessed to specific ends.

Politicians are introduced by a carefully graded set if criteria and situations that enable them to accept that their victims will be, "Our little secret". Young children sexually molested and physically abused by politicians worldwide are quickly used as sacrifices. In Australia the bodies are hardly ever discovered, for Australia is still a wilderness.

Overseas, cremation is the favoured method and although the Satanic Alpha Lodges of Australia have access to crematoria when needed, this is surprisingly rare. Believe it or not many bodies are 'dumped over the side' every week in a number of isolated bushland settings.

The emerging set of Satanic leaders is young, savvy, competent and heartless. They are masters and mistresses of their emotions and their intellect. Many are involved in business, politics, the legal profession and the arts. They are affluent, mobile and stylish examples to the next generation and therefore to the next generation of Satanists that power is glory, lust is nobility and liberty is the highest ideal of the new world man and woman. They use debasement of their victims as a ritual of power to themselves and their Deities. Often their victims are made to suffer in any number of situations. All of them are dedicated 'to creating the new men and women of the future' and 'to surpassing the Old Ones'.

Beginning in Sydney in the late 1980s was a now International Underground Sadomasochist society founded by Satanists. Victims are abused to death in grotesque rituals held in secluded chambers throughout the global metropolis and never-ending suburbs and bewildered housing estates. Although many who attend are unaware of anything except their ability to fulfil special needs and cultivated tastes, all of these gatherings are Satanic in nature and magickal in purpose. This dark, ultra-secretive society has been used to corrupt and destroy; to distil fear and ensure petrified silence! (Remember 'The Family' of South Australia? Ever wondered why so many people conveniently die from electrical fires?)

Bodily juices of all descriptions are sacred to Satanists and can be used for magickal purposes. The advent of sadomasochism as an accepted form of expression is due to the efforts of Satanists in subverting normalcy and inverting mainstream Christian values. The S&M Society was used as recruitment ground for some of the most perverted geniuses I have ever met. And with the advent of the World Wide Web, extreme hardcore Bathroom Sex came into its own as a sub-genre to be taken seriously.

…

(By way of only one example, today in co-educational facilities throughout the Western World, Bathroom Sex and ‘flute playing’ are rampant across all age groups. Thank you, High Priestess Monica and ‘White’ Witch Fiona Horne.)[419]

…

The Alpha Lodge has taken steps to try to ensure that after the next war the Tradition is maintained in the intervening centuries, before civilization, as we know it, begins again. At that time, Satanism will be in the only religion and science. We have secured the texts, books, relics and magickal weapons necessary for Our Dark Lord and I see the storm clouds gathering. Ritual activity is increasing. Social structures are almost totally eroded. The Sheeple gather for their slaughter. Vindex[420] walks amongst us now and very few know (or think that they do)

…

Rebellion!
Liberty!

...

Law is the product of man.
What God can create man can destroy!
It is always politics.
Even when people obey the law, it is a political decision.
Spirituality is a tool. The State has employed it, always.
For Homo sapiens are herd animals.
Hate yourself enough and the World hates with you.
Freedom is a two-edged sword.
- Count Hans Kolvenbach (Jesuit Order)

…

The Altar is always a human body – male, female, alert, drugged, alive or dead. In every case, the Altar is fresh and young. The mechanics of a High Satanic Black Mass are the same as in any theatre designed to re-open psychic gateways, inculcate dedication, glorify, rarefy and idealize spirituality. Only the aims differ. In Satanism, sodomy is preferred because of its magickal effects. The sacramental nature of Ezekiel 4:12-13, II Kings 18:27, Malachi 2:2-3 and Isaiah 16:11 are only fully understood by Satanists.[421] Even abstinence from all forms of satisfying and normal sexual congress is used to enable the destruction and replacement of old beliefs and standards... By pushing wider, the parameters of being and expanding ideas, Satanists experience the inherent transience and contingent nature of all things. The Black Mass – whether High Satanic or Low orgy – achieves this.

Any form of bizarre sexual congress is explored and encouraged because atrophied tastes need stronger stimulation.[422] Children, the elderly, the mentally retarded and desperate are used at satanic ceremonies throughout the world. The left-hand path caters for all tastes and responds to all needs. In Australia and throughout what used to be the Soviet Union, Downs Syndrome pornography is an expanding market and an acquired taste.[423]

---

[419] Fiona Horne now flies charter planes to the Caribbean, location of Jeffrey Epstein’s pedophile island.

[420] Rebel who dethroned Nero.

[421] Bible passages relating to dung.

[422] Atrophied means ‘having lost effectiveness or vigour due to underuse or neglect.’ After time, cult members become bored with perverted sex, and so need greater perversion to achieve sexual arousal and gratification.

[423] My Down Syndrome cousin reported that staff made such films at Bribie Island Care Independent Living Association, Queensland.

…

Viable, truly spiritual Satanism is becoming more overt. This is because of those who went before. And as the schedule works itself, the Alpha Satanic Lodges are growing ever more public. I will not mention names, front-organizations or interests. The time is when these will announce themselves – just like Disneyland! We infiltrated then built the modern media, created porno-film empires, turned 'Snuff' into art and liberated young people.

The Wand must be bedaubed.
The Cup drained.
The Sword dazzling.
The Disc penetrated.[424]

With Fire the Tunnel is penetrated.
With thirst the Cup is dazzled.
With Air the Sword is drained.
With soil the Disc bedaubed.[425]

Within the temple in the temple
Find here the Mysteries of the mysteries
The back passage is the shortest way
Turn Water into wine.

…

Satanists believe that the fear inspired by the atomic bomb and other weapons yet to come will be so great that everyone will refrain from using them… [deleted]. It will mean the division of the world among 2 or 3 vast superstates, unable to be overthrown by any internal rebellion. Their structure will be hierarchic, with the Satanic caste at the top and outright slavery at the bottom, and the crushing out of liberty would exceed anything the world has yet seen. Within each state the necessary psychological atmosphere will be maintained by a complete severance from the outside world, and by a continuous phoney war against rival states.[426] Civilizations of this type will remain stable for thousands of years. Have no fear!

* * *

CULT CASTE SYSTEM

Traditional high-end Satanic cults are organised like a caste system. Membership in the upper hierarchy is attainable by birth only, like the aristocracy. One can't marry or buy into the top classes. At the top of the pyramid sit the blue bloodlines headed by the Rothschilds. This ruling class is worshipped as demigods like the reverence shown for the Egyptian pharaohs. Beneath this class sit hundreds of 'mortal' family bloodlines that make up a kind of intelligentsia. This group is characterised as high IQ and are granted access to worldly success - so long as they play the game. If members of this class feel morally in conflict with the coven's activities, this usually manifests as 'mental illness,' and if they rebel against 'the family' they are disposed of.

---

[424] The Four Tarot Elements: Wand=Fire, Sword=Air, Cup=Water, Disc=Earth.

[425] The classical Hermetic elements: Fire, Air, Water, Earth.

[426] George Orwell's 1984.

Below this ruling class sit a menagerie of coven members that constitute the anarchy. In Europe these members are bound by location. In a young country like Australia they are united by things such as nationality or interest. For example, we have entire covens of people with Scottish heritage. Another group which is on par with the Scottish is the recent influx of lower-class English coven members with common accents. Australia grants these lower-class people the opportunity to escape the British class system in which they are nothings. Another rising Australian trend is the lesbian covens. Then there are the bikie gangs who do the dirty work. I used to sing the following insult at these lower castes when they got out of line:

IQ low,
Bloodline none.
Shit-kicking
Coven scum.

Conflict exists between the traditional Satanists and the modern self-styled covens. The lowest coven groups compete amongst each other for the unattainable power and status of the hierarchy whom they jealously despise. As portrayed in Harry potter series, the ruling classes look down upon the lower groups with contempt and view them as animalistic, annoyingly clumsy, grubby and highly dispensable. They are held in disdain because they approach tasks with aggression and brute strength, which risks exposing everybody. Their most common mistake is to put their own personal wants before the collective. Their other usual flaw is their propensity to embrace assumption and an overconfidence that stems from not having been thwarted - yet. That is the mistake people like Antony Kidman and Harry Bailey made. Like a pack of mongrel dogs, this group is rewarded for success and punished for failure. They tend to be motivated by primitive drives like sex and drugs rather than higher intellectual pursuits.

*   *   *

Addicted to the Occult

When asked why people are attracted to the occult, reformed Freemason Michael Witcoff responded:

> I would say fundamentally it is that at some point in your past a door has been opened to evil, whether through your own greed, and your own ambition, and your own desires, or through trauma, which is of course not your choice, but then results in kind of a shattered personality that seeks to regain control of what you lost. And since you can't really do that, just in a secular way I think that a lot of broken people turn to the occult to find some sense of inner power to replace the power that they felt that they had been deprived of when they were younger… For me it was a power thing. I did not have a happy childhood… When I started to discover that you could manipulate the fibres of the universe to serve you, if you don't know any better, that's a very appealing pitch. [427]

I believe my friend ('Alison') became attracted – and addicted – to the occult for similar reasons. A decade ago, Alison began paying a guru/witch for past life regression 'therapy', aura reading and manipulation, and kinesiology. George J. Goodheart was an occultist who derived kinesiology through psychic powers. 'Kinesiologists believe in an inner power, an "innate intelligence," which is said to be connected to the "universal intelligence" (God) through our nervous systems.'

Under Witchy's influence, Alison's brain and life slowly turned to shit. My friend became vague and started making poor decisions (which landed her in court on a serious charge). Alison abandoned responsibility for her own behaviour and blamed her issues on either other people, or her 'past life' experiences that Witchy implanted in her mind via suggestion.

Several years ago, Alison began divorce proceedings against her husband. Her primary approach to this procedure consisted of gathering with Witchy and another 'coven' participant, to summon her ex's aura, to command her ex's aura into giving her what she desired out of their financial settlement. When Alison divulged this to me, I urged her: "Get a divorce lawyer!" However, Alison ignored all of my free practical advice in favour of her paid esoteric charmer. Consequently, my friend got totally screwed over and her cunning ex won everything.

Alison had engaged in witchcraft. I define witchcraft as intentional manipulation of the elements in order to achieve one's will. Alison had in fact dabbled in black witchcraft – without having been instructed on the consequences of such, or how witches protect themselves against the inevitable backlash. Witchcraft carries its own set of rules, and if one wants to play with witchcraft, one must abide by its rules. My friend failed to do this.

Alison's enormous financial loss was blatant evidence that her guru was in fact a shit witch. Witchy lacked the visual spatial IQ and creativity essential for being good at the occult. Despite her loss, Alison continued paying Witchy exorbitant consultation fees. Why? Because Alison had become addicted to the occult. Occult addiction provides a neurological high akin to addiction to porn, drugs, sugar, or anything else. People are drawn to witchcraft out of curiosity, fascination and titillation, followed by a desire for power and control. What starts out as fun and thrilling morphs into blind servitude.

---

[427] Jay Dyer, Lucifer & His Boys (Interview), 29 April 2020.

Like an addict, Alison became highly secretive concerning her habit. She hid from family and friends her relationship with Witchy, their frequency of association, and the depth of their witchcraft involvement. Alison's sister, born psychic, predicts that my friend's life will continue turning to shit so long as she follows her guru – who is no guru. Witchy does not hold a key to mysterious knowledge worth paying a dime for.

It was only when an old associate ('Sophia') re-entered our lives that I discovered the truth. Alison's witch guru did to Sophia what she tried for years to do to me – drove her away. Witchy felt threatened by people like me and Sophia who perceived her craftiness and deception. Sophia introduced me to an astounding little 1908 book explaining every occult method Witchy had employed with Alison, titled:

> Practical Mental Influence: A course of lessons on mental vibrations, psychic influence, personal magnetism, fascination, psychic self-protection, etc.

Alison should have saved her dollars and downloaded the same occult info for free in that book. The book's author, William Walker Atkinson, was a prolific and influential writer of 100 occult books. Practical Mental Influence is arguably Atkinson's pivotal work. The text, published by the Masonic Temple in Chicago, provided Freemason initiates with a basic introduction to achieving business success using mind control techniques like covert hypnosis. This book is the missing link I failed to locate while writing the first edition of Eyes Wide Open. It simply provides a fundamental understanding of the following topics I addressed in this book:

- Nazi mind control experiments;
- CIA/MI6/US Military MK-Ultra / MK-Delta research and application;
- 1960s Hippie Movement;
- Modern New Age practises including Yoga, meditation and visualisation;
- Modern charismatic / Pentecostal / evangelical apostate churches that influence masses, and focus on prosperity and thinly disguised occult practises like laying on of hands (aka, Reiki) and visiting heaven (aka, Astral Projection);
- Motivational speakers who use Neuro-Linguistic Programming based business and sales tactics on individuals, and/or influence mass audiences;
- Modern Psychology practises, namely Jungian psychotherapy, Mindfulness, and CBT.

People don't produce this type of book anymore, since the information went underground and was weaponised. All modern self-help, motivational, New Age type books are a rehash of Atkinson's blueprint, wrapped in anecdotes, psycho-newspeak, and other crap to make it appear fresh and new.

Here is a summary of the book's points relevant to my experience of the research project called 'MK-Ultra,' and the practical application of that research, called 'MK-Delta.' Keep in mind, this information was published over 110 years ago.

Ch 10. OCCOULT KNOWLEDGE SOURCES

An introduction to the concept of Mental Influence is located at the rear of Atkinson's book, in Chapter 10:

> '…we read in the pages of history about the mysterious powers recorded under the name of Witchcraft, Hexism, Voodoism, Black Magic, including the Hawaiian "Kahuna" work. And turning back the pages of history to Ancient Rome, Greece, Persia and Egypt, not to speak of India, ancient and modern, we find innumerable instances of the employment of and knowledge of, Mental influence in some of its forms.' (p.75)

Ch 1. VIBRATION

Knowledge and manipulation of vibration is fundamental to the occult. Vibration is the basic force underlying everything: matter, force, energy, light, temperature, electricity, magnetism, colour. All forms of matter and energy are manifestations of different rates of vibration.

Ch 2. THOUGHT WAVES

Light, heat, electricity, magnetism, radio – all travel in waves. Human thoughts also travel in waves. Thoughts and feelings generate a type of high vibration energy called 'mental energy.' Mental energy may be compared to electromagnetic energy. This energy emanates from the individual in vibratory wave form. These thought waves can be projected to remotely influence the minds, thoughts and behaviour of others whose brains are in harmony. Note that Nazi scientists like Mengele studied twins, when twins tend to detect each other's thoughts and feelings at a long distance. Atkinson explained (p.17):

> 'When a Thought or Feeling is generated in the mind or brain of a person, the energy generated flows forth from the person in the forms of waves of mental energy, spreading from the immediate neighbourhood of the thinker to a distance proportioned to the strength of the thought or feeling. These Thought-Waves have the property of awakening similar vibrations in the minds of other persons coming within their field of force…'

Thought waves are manifested in various forms and phases. Those released with great force travel far and manifest great influence. Others travel rapidly in a straight line to target certain individuals or places. This is the premise behind the witchcraft practise of casting curses, hexes and spells. Some thought waves are sent forth with great strength and power to sweep around and influence whoever falls in its forcefield. This is used in cases of mass mind control, like stirring up a crowd into a violent frenzy. Thought waves last a long time, even beyond the person's death. Hence locations like Auschwitz possess a distinct atmosphere due to the still-present energy from the strong thoughts and feelings of countless tortured and murdered souls.

Thought waves exert power when sent intentionally, and by someone with a strong will. Hence, MK-Ultra / Delta selected and developed candidates like me who naturally possessed exceptionally strong wills.

Ch 3. MENTAL INDUCTION

> 'Orators, actors, preachers and teachers send forth strong mental currents which tend to produce mental conditions on the part of their hearers corresponding to the feeling held by the mind of the speaker.' (p.23)

This helps to explain the strong presence of witchcraft practitioners in the theatre, Hollywood, churches, schools and universities.

Ch 4. MENTAL CONCENTRATION

There are two essential ingredients for mentally influencing others' thoughts and behaviours:

1. Concentration (developed via Meditation), and
2. Visualisation.

This is why MK-ULTRA / DELTA candidates possessed an extreme visual-spatial IQ.

> '…the highest forms of energy, force or power are manifested by bringing the force to a focus, centre, or common point, thereby directing to that point the entire energy employed, instead of allowing it to become dissipated over a larger area.' (p.29)

I attended acting classes with top tutors in my youth, who literally called this process 'centring.' Similar terminology is employed by Yoga and meditation gurus.

> 'The occult masters have ever impressed upon their pupils the importance and necessity of acquiring the power of Mental concentration, and all trained and developed occultists have practiced and persevered toward this end, the result being that some of them attained almost miraculous mental powers and influence. All occult phenomena are caused in this way, and all occult power depends upon it. Therefore, the student of mental Influence should devote much thought, time and practice to this most important branch of the subject.' (p.30)

This is why Yogis meditate for hours, and why Eastern practises were scouted by Nazis and formed the basis of CIA/Military black ops. This is the very process I was trained in by my Luciferian abusers, and which was weaponised within Delta Force.

> 'Mental Concentration, in practice, consists in focusing the mind upon a given subject, or object, firmly and fixed, and then holding it there for a certain time, fully intent upon its object, and not allowing itself to be diverted or attracted from its object. It likewise consists in the correlative power of then detaching the mind from that subject, or object, and either allowing it to rest, or else focus upon another object. In other words, it either gives undivided attention or else inhibits (or "shuts off") attention from given subject or object.' (p.31)

Occultists avoid involuntary concentration, because it allows attention to escape the Will's control.

> 'The Mental Concentration of the occultists … is solely in control of the will, being applied when desirable, and taken off or inhibited when desired.' (p.32)

Involuntary attention is a type of self-hypnotization; this is completely different to control of attention, which is an evidence of mastery.

> 'The secret of Mental concentration lies in the control of the Attention. And the control of the Attention lies in the exercise of the Will.' (p.32)

> 'All of the occult authorities begin in teaching their pupils Attention as the first step toward Mental concentration. They instruct the pupil to examine some familiar object, and endeavour to see as many details as possible in the object. Then after hearing the pupil's report, the master sends him back to the task, bidding him seek for new details, and so on until the pupil has discovered about all concerning the object that can be discovered. The next day a new object is given him, and the process is repeated. First simple objects are given, then more complex ones, until at last, objects of great complexity are mastered. In this way not only is the power of close observation highly developed, but the faculty of Attention becomes so highly strengthened that the pupil is able to exert the greatest amount of Mental Concentration with scarcely the consciousness of effort. And such a person then becomes a very giant in the manifestation of Mental Influence. For he is able to hold his mind "one-pointed," as the Orientals describe it, until he has focused and directed a mighty degree of Mental Influence toward the desired object.' (p.33)

> 'Among the practises imposed upon their pupils by the occult masters may be named Mathematics, Drawing, Analysis, etc.' (p.34)

This is precisely what my Luciferian perpetrators taught me, and the very technique employed by CIA Head Psychologist John Gittinger in his programming efforts. This method is also the premise of Yoga meditation, Mindfulness, and numerous New Age techniques.

> 'The person who uses Mental Influence must certainly possess the power of focussing the force to a common point, in order to manifest the greatest amount of power and influence. And that faculty of focusing results from the training of the mind along the lines of Concentration. And Concentration arises from the mastery of Voluntary Attention.' (p.34)

Ch 5. VISUALISATION

> 'What is known as a "Mental Image," in occultism, is the mental creation, in the imagination, of a "picture" of the things, events or conditions that one desires to be manifested or materialised in actual effect.' (p.36)

> 'The occultist first builds up, in his imagination, a Mental Image or Picture of the conditions he wishes to bring about, and then by concentrating his influence through and around that picture he is able to manifest his influence strongly… The Mental

> Image gives shape and directions to the force which is being concentrated upon the desired object or subject.' (p.36)
>
> 'An eminent authority, Sir Francis Galton, who was one of the leading authorities upon psychology of preceding generations, has said on this subject:
>
> "The free actions of a high visualising faculty is of much importance in connection with the higher processes of general thought. A visual image is the most perfect form of mental representation whatever the shape, position and relations of objects to space are concerned. The best workmen are those who visualise the whole of what they propose to do before they take a tool in their hands. Strategists, artists of all denominations, physicists who contrive new experiments, and in short, all who do not follow routine, have need of it." (p.38)

Exactly. That is precisely what I argue in my pivotal chapter, Relevance of Intelligence. People who do not think in pictures, who have a dominant Left Brain that relies on words, can't even begin to understand this phenomenon. Atkinson asks:

> 'If one wishes to materialise anything by the use of the influence, is he not handicapped by a lack of a Mental Image of just what he wants to materialise, and is he not helped very much by the creation of a mental "pattern" or plan, in the shape of a mental picture, through and around which he may direct his thought-currents?' (p.39)

This is why my friend's guru will always be a shit witch – her right, visual hemisphere is dysfunctional. Alison is also left brain dominant so she can't visualise things either. This explains why their efforts to summon and influence Alison's husband completely backfired.

> 'The occultists manifesting the greatest degree of Mental Influence acquire by practise this art of creating the Mental Images of that which they wish to materialise. They train their Imaginations in this way until the very act of creating the Mental Image acts strongly toward the actual materialisation of the thing itself. They see the desired thing, or event, as "actually existing" in their minds before they attempt to concentrate their Thought-Waves upon the task of accomplishing it. Then the Mental Picture, being completed and standing in strong outline, they focus their mental force through it… The imagination may be strengthened in many ways, the principle being constant and persistent practice. The practise of recalling to the memory of scenes previously witnessed, and then either describing them to others or else drawing a rough picture of them will help in this matter. Describe to others, scenes that you have witnessed, occurrences, details of appearances, etc, etc, until you are able to reproduce mentally the aspects and appearances of the things. Then you may begin to draw mental pictures of things desired as if they were being drawn on the screen of your mind. See mentally, the things as actually occurring – create a little playhouse of your own, in your mind, and there enact the plays that you wish to witness in actual life. When you have acquired this, you will be able to project your mental pictures on the screen of objectivity in actual life with far greater effect.' (p40.)

In my chapter, Relevance of Intelligence, I explain how John Gittinger had me visualise and describe to him a layered cake in detail. The above training formed the basis for laying the various MK programs.

Ch 6. FASCINATION

The two direct uses of Mental Influence are:

1. Fascination (use of Mental Influence without hypnosis methods);
2. Hypnotism (use of Mental Influence with 'passes' or hypnotic methods).

Fascination is used to influence people via the following steps:

a. Forming a strong Thought of what s/he wishes the other person to do.
b. Silently, non-verbally projecting that Thought onto the target, charged with the force of a concentrated will.

> 'The thought should be sent forth with the strength that usually accompanies a strong spoken statement, but you must not actually "speak" the words aloud – you should merely say them strongly "in your mind."' (p.46)

Atkinson illustrates the fascination method used by real estate agents and salesmen as follows:

> 'They form a thought that the other person desires their goods very much, and then they send out the Thought-Wave that, "You desire my goods – you want them very much – you have an irresistible longing for them," etc.' (p.46)

Ch 7. HYPNOTIC INFLUENCE

With hypnosis, influence is increased via use of 'passes, strokings or eye-influence.' (p.50) Touching a subject is effective because, 'the nerves of the arms and fingers afford a highly sensitive conductor for the mental currents which may be propelled over them to the mind of the subject, or to his nerves and muscles.' (p.52) 'It is also known that the eye has a peculiar property of transmitting the mental currents along the rays of light entering it and from thence to the eyes of the other person.' (p.52) This is consistent with the research I reference concerning the measurement of an energy source emitted by the human stare. This relates to the occultic practise of giving someone the 'evil eye,' or cursing them via a stare.
The subject 'is rendered passive by a flow of mental energy calculated to render it more or less drowsy or sleepy, and therefore less calculated to set up powers of resistance to the Thought-Waves…' However, a "deep sleep" condition is not necessary to render the will of the subject subservient' to the hypnotist. In other words, people can by hypnotised without realising it.
Hypnotic influence was formerly named 'Mesmerism' after Frederick Mesmer (Mozart's godfather). According to Atkinson (p.51), Mesmer re-discovered the 'force and its use' which 'was known to the Ancients centuries before Mesmer's time.' This is the same 'Force' that Star Wars movies promote to impressionable kids.

The hypnotist induces a passive state in the subject's mind, nerves or muscles, to reduce her ability to resist. He then 'gives his orders or "verbal suggestions" accompanied by a projection of his Thought-Waves into the' subject's mind. People differ in their 'degrees of impressionability to hypnotic influence – i.e., degrees of resistance.'

Atkinson provides some examples of exercising hypnotic influence which are the very techniques employed by the likes of Benny Hinn, Kenneth Copeland, and other charlatan 'church' leaders who practice that 'slaying in the spirit' Kundalini crap. Doesn't the following sound familiar?

> 'Then standing in front of the subject tell him to take his will off his legs and stand perfectly passive and relaxed. Then looking him straight in the eyes, say to him: "Now, I am going to draw you forward toward me by my mental power – you will feel yourself falling forward toward me – don't resist but let yourself toward me – I will catch you, don't be afraid – now come – come – come – now you're coming, this way, coming – here, you're coming, that's right," etc. You will find that he will begin to sway toward you and in a moment or two will fall forward in your arms… It will help matters if you hold your hands on each side of his head, but just in front of him, hot touching him, however, and then draw away your hands, toward yourself, saying at the same time: "Come now – come – you're coming," etc. This experiment may be reversed by standing behind the subject and drawing him backward. Be sure to catch him in your arms when he falls and protect him from a fall to the floor.' (p.53-4)

And here is another tactic employed by Bethel BS 'churches':

> 'Or you may make him experience a feeling of heat and pain by touching your finger to his hand and telling him that it is hot.' (p.54-5).

Atkinson offers a sound word of warning:

> 'Beware of people who are always putting their hands on you, or patting or stroking you, or wishing to hold your hands a lot of the time. Many persons do this from force of habit, but others do so with the intention of producing a mild form of hypnotic influence on you.' (p.56)

Imagine the influence occultists like Witchy may exert under the guise of offering physical alternative therapies like remedial massage and kinesiology?

Ch 8. LONG-DISTANCE INFLUENCE

Here lies the occult technique Witchy unsuccessfully employed to influence Alison's ex into reaching a desired financial settlement:

> 'One of the most elementary, and yet one of the most effective, methods known to occultists is that of creating a mental Image of the person "treated"… in the sense of imagining him to be seated in a chair in front of the person treating him at a distance. The treater proceeds to give both verbal commands, and at the same time directs Thought-Waves toward the imaginary person seated before him. This process establishes a psychic condition between the treator and the actual person, although the latter may be removed from the treator by many miles of space. This was the method of the ancient magicians… (p.60)

> 'A variation of the above, very common in former days, was to mould a clay or wax figure, calling it by the name of the person treated, and identifying it in the mind and imagination with the other person. A variation is also noticed in the cases where a photograph, lock of hair, article of clothing, etc., is used in this way as a psychic connecting link between the two persons. The practitioners of Black Magic, Witchcraft and other nefarious perversions of Mental Influence seemed to prefer these methods…' (p61)

An Example of Long-Distance Influence:

A friend of mine serviced all the computers in a number of doctor surges, including my doctor. I was horrified the day she informed me she could access my medical files from her home computer. One day, I visited my friend's home unannounced, following 6 weeks I spent in hiding from my perpetrators. In my friend's bedroom I found a homemade altar to Satan. Above the table, on the wall, was a drawing of dragon with the word "DRAGON' emblazoned on it. The drawing had been created by my friend's 9-year-old daughter. Among other things, the table contained a wizard pewter talisman, some wooden flowers given by my young child, and a large sheep snow globe my friend purchased in New Zealand; she had given me a smaller version of the very same souvenir. These objects created a psychic link between my 'friend' and my family. I had my suspicions, nut at that moment I realised my friend was a witch, and she was accessing my medical records and supplying this information directly to my perpetrators.

The Treator sends his Thought-Waves toward the object, and in some cases actually talks (mentally) to the person by means of the medium mentioned. He may give commands, arguments, remonstrances, persuasion, etc., just as if the person were actually present.

The 'Astral Tube' is another form of distant influence. This is established similarly to the 'psychic-wire' and projected at the target. The astral tube is a 6 inch to 1-foot wide ring formed in the imagination as a 'vortex-ring' which lengthens and extends toward the target. This technique 'is employed in various forms of occult and psychic phenomena, such as clairvoyance and other forms of "psychomancy"…' (p.63) This technique formed the basis of Projects like Looking Glass and Stargate, which I detail in my chapter regarding MK-Delta.

One of the most advanced forms of Mental Influence involves the person simply standing or sitting quietly and concentrating until he attains a state of calm called 'the Silence.' The person then creates a strong mental picture of the target plus the desired behaviour or external conditions. This technique requires 'Creative Will-power.'

Ch 9. MASS INFLUENCE

This refers to influencing the public, a crowd, or a large number of people simultaneously. Mass Influence 'is used by nearly all who succeed in any form of business or profession, in which success calls for the attracting of other people toward the occupation of the person in question,' particularly politicians, businessmen, financers and military leaders. (p.66)

> 'The Mental Influence sent out by a strong businessman in a town will soon make itself felt in a subtle manner, and the store becomes a centre of attraction, although the public does not understand why. In the same way some lawyers spring into public > favour, although not possessing greater ability than their legal brethren. And popular preachers make their influence felt in a community in similar ways…' (p.70)

>
> 'Some masters of this art of influencing the public create a mental picture of themselves sending our great volumes of Thought-Waves for a time, and then after imparting a rotary motion to the waves, until at last they form a mental whirlpool rushing round and round and always sucking in toward the centre. An effort of this kind acts on the mental plane just as a physical whirlpool acts on the physical plane, that is, it draws into its power all that comes into contact with its force. This is one of the most powerful forms of Influencing En Masse and is used with great effect by many of the "strong men" of this age, who have acquainted themselves with the secrets of the ancient occultists. Ancient Occultism and Modern Finance seem far apart, but they are really working together to further the interests of some of these powerful minds of the day – and the public is paying the bill.' (p.71)
>
> '…an individual who has cultivated the faculty of concentration and has acquired the art of creating sharp, clear, strong mental images… Such a man frequently "sees" people coming to him and his enterprises and falling in line with his plans. He mentally "sees" money flowing into him, and all of his plans working out right.' (pp. 71-2)
>
> 'Thought pictured in mental images and then vitalised by the force of the desire and will tend to objectify themselves into material being. That is the whole of the thing.' (p.73)

Ch 11. BLACK MAGIC DANGERS

Atkinson warns: 'Before practising any of these experiments, read what we have said in the chapter on "Magic Black and White," and guard against employing the power for evil purposes, for the fate of the Black Magician is a sad one.' (p.65-6)
In the same chapter, Atkinson concludes:

> 'Thoughts are like Boomerangs, in their tendency to return to their sender. To the poison of Black Magic, Nature gives the antidote of Right-Thinking.'

Atkinson well understood and appreciated the relevance to the occult of left versus right hemispheric processing ability. It's nice to find such validation for my ideas and writings.

Ch 12. SELF-PROTECTION

Atkinson concluded his book with a chapter on how to protect oneself from others' attempts to exert mental influence. He recommended a method 'employed by the adepts in Occultism' and taught to 'the initiates of the occult brotherhoods and lodges all over the world.'

> 'This method of protection is based on the notion that within each of us… is what occultists know as the Flame of the Spirit. This is what you recognise in consciousness as the "I AM" consciousness – that consciousness of Being which is far above the consciousness of personality, or the things of personality… This consciousness comes to the individual by reason of his contact with the great One Life of the Universe… And > in this part of man's consciousness, coupled with the sense of BEING an "I," there resides a spark from the Divine Flame of Life and power, which has been called the WILL of man… This inner Will is real power, and when once recognised may be drawn upon as a source of unending and unfailing Strength… every person may draw upon this source of strength within them to … repel the thought-vibrations of the lower plane.'

Atkinson suggested, attempts to gain mental influence over you are repelled via 'remembering the strength imminent in your "I," aided by the statement (made silently to yourself): "I am an Immortal Spirit, using the Will within my Ego."'

Conclusion

There is a God – and it's not you. "I AM" is reserved for the Creator God of the Bible. The greatest source of power over Mental Influence is free and not hidden beneath degrees of initiation. Having been raised with, and trained in, the content of Atkinson's book, I discovered that Christian prayer in Jesus' name trumps the occult, witchcraft, black magic, voodoo, etc. Every curse, hex, spell, ritual and blood sacrifice may be bound in Jesus' name and sent back from whence it came, since whatever is bound here on Earth is bound in Heaven.

The fundamental difference between witchcraft and Biblical Christianity is this: Witchcraft involves someone manipulating the external world and other people to achieve their own will. By contrast, Biblical Christianity concerns submitting our will to the all-powerful, all-knowing, omnipresent Creator God, and trusting Him with our future.

The Bible condemns the occult in its many forms:

> And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts. (Rev 9:20-1)

* * *

An ‘Ejumacation’

There is physical and psychological pain in being thwarted, discouraged and diminished as a person. To have ability, to feel power you are never allowed to use, can become traumatic.

– Bob & Jan Davidson

My brother Dale once explained, ‘The reason why everyone hated Fiona at school was because she was always that little bit better than them at everything.’
That’s not entirely true – they hated me for other reasons.

As my old high school friend Justine Thomas put it, ‘Fiona makes me look at who I really am, and when I do that, I don’t like what I see.’ My husband calls this phenomenon The Mirror Effect.

My troubles began in Kindergarten when I was expelled from religion class. The ailing volunteer never divulged what I did to deserve such ostracism, but I must have tested Mrs Levett beyond what a Christian could endure. From then on, every week, while the other five-year-olds were grouped according to the only three denominations that existed in 1970’s Sydney, I spent scripture classes alone on a bench in the sun. Perhaps I had asked the wrong type of question? Or too many questions? Whatever the cause, it likely stemmed from my mother’s instructions for independent thinking.

If I inquired about a controversial topic, my mother typically followed a certain formula: First she explained what society generally thought about the issue, then she told me what she personally believed, and then Mum would conclude, ‘But now you have to form your own opinion.’

My mother employed ‘big’ words whenever she addressed me and my younger brother Dale. It didn’t matter whether we understood the words, she decided, because through our regularly hearing them in context we would eventually figure out their meaning. Not surprisingly, I was a fluent reader with a large vocabulary long before I commenced Kindergarten. This was just as well because somebody had to help teach the other kids. Seeing I could already read, it was only fair that Miss Angus employed me as a volunteer teacher aide. I was assigned three struggling students. We sat on small wooden chairs in a circle as I helped them sound out the words:

Look, Spot, look.
Find Dick and Jane.
Go, Spot, go.
Help Sally find Dick.
Help Sally find Jane.

Go, Spot.
Go and find Dick.
Go and find Jane.

Run, Spot, run.
Run and find Dick.
Run and find Jane.

Oh, oh, oh.
Spot can find Dick.
Spot can find Jane.

Oh, oh.
Spot can help Sally.
Spot can play.

I arrived home from my first day of Kindergarten at Revesby Primary School, snatched the Dick and Jane reader from my leather satchel, threw it down on my parents' coffee table and declared:

'That is stupid!'

There began my non-education. It was the experimental, self-enlightened 1970's. Under Gough Whitlam's government it was 'Time for a Change!' What a change it was. Times tables, spelling, punctuation, and grammar were tossed out, due to their alleged stifling impact on children's creativity, in favour of empty Marxist-inspired doctrine. Instead of studying History, English and Geography, the new curriculum asked students to express how we felt about the study of these subjects.

Twenty years later, during a lecture at teacher's college, my literacy professor labelled 1970's New South Wales as 'the most disastrous period in Australia's educational history.' He blamed the curriculum for producing a generation of virtual illiterates. The tragic Dick and Jane readers, he scoffed, were imported to Australia from the USA by the Education Minister's relative as a private money-making venture.

While overtly dumbing down the masses, the NSW Education Department simultaneously conducted a covert search for the brightest young state primary children in a mysterious government study. I was recruited without my mother's knowledge or consent.

My family dwelt in a blue asbestos box in Padstow, a poor white suburb in Western Sydney. My mother supplemented the revolutionary state curriculum as best she could, with public library visits plus the odd period of dance or music tuition. I was aged five when I had my first piano lesson. My tutor was convinced I had been taught before. My most vivid memory of piano was crying because I couldn't play a piece perfectly. Mind you, it was difficult to master the music when I had no piano to practise on. A friend offered our family a sound piano for free and all we needed to do was collect it, but my father didn't bother. There ended my beloved piano lessons for the next 10 years.

Our mother ensured that Dale and I had a constant supply of art materials to play with. Poverty plus parental disinterest had prevented Mum from pursuing her own dream of Art College admission. She and her nine siblings attended a small convent school in 1940s Brisbane where was she was caned and demeaned by unqualified Irish nuns. Mum attributed the nuns' insanity to the thick woollen habits they wore throughout the subtropical summer. At 14 years of age, my mother concluded that Catholicism was a fear-based religion and, at risk of being ex-communicated by her family, she abandoned it for life. My academically gifted 14-year-old mother moved to Melbourne alone to work in a canning factory.

My mother commenced art lessons after I started school. Subsequent weekends were marked by reluctant trips to the New South Wales Art Gallery, life drawing classes with models (including 60 Minutes reporter Ian Leslie) who didn't mind everyone looking at their bits, and landscape sketching trips with women dressed in long paisley skirts and large floppy felt hats. Mum won her first art show when fellow artist Irene Moore (Richard Tognetti's aunt) framed one of her portraits and entered it in an acquisition competition. The following year, Mum entered a work that she had painted in a Bankstown Art Society class. The judge, Fred Bates, refused to award Mum first prize because he believed her nude was too good to have been painted by a novice. Mum was just emerging on the Sydney art scene and aiming for the Archibald when my father burnt all of her art materials. He destroyed Mum's art career after we fled what I recall as his first violent outburst.

'You wait!' my father shouted from the lounge room where he sat with his half-brother. 'You wait 'til David leaves!'

Mum lowered Dale and I out our bedroom window. Minutes later, as we trotted down the dark street, I tried to explain: 'Mum, that wasn't Dad – that was the devil inside of him.'

My belief in the Biblical God was surprising, considering I was raised an atheist. Apart from a few religion classes at school, my exposure to Western religion consisted of my father hissing 'fucking pedophiles!' through gritted teeth at the sight of any priest.

As for my mother, she embarked upon an Eastern quest for truth and meaning while I was vicariously towed along for the ride. Mum's spiritual journey began with a weekly philosophy group meeting at our central coast log cabin. Morning yoga sessions, a vegetarian diet and herbal remedies ensued. Strange books appeared on our shelves, with foreign titles like Yin-Yang, Kahlil Gibran and I-Ching.

I too was blessed with a new children's library consisting of books about meditation, finding my 'inner light' and astral travel. I dismissed these concepts as nonsensical and confusing. Yet my grasp of them didn't matter anyhow because, according to another kiddies' book, mankind was polluting us all into extinction. Images of planet Earth covered in Band-Aids (plasters), and atomic mushroom clouds, caused me nightmares. This occurred decades before society accepted the notion of 'climate change.'

The insomnia and vivid nightmares that plagued my childhood were captured in my first poem written at age six years. As car headlights reflected over my darkened bedroom, I grabbed a pen and wrote under the streetlight:

Traffick

With a honk and a beep
I can hear the traffick leap,
And a tiny touch of light
It could hit my feet.

With a bang and a bump,
What a lump!

Stop, stop!
Stop, stop!
I can't get to sleep!

But it would not stop,
No, not a bit.
So I tucked underneath,
And I did get to sleep.

My mother made me present a copy of Traffick to my Grade 2 teacher at Budgewoi primary school on the NSW Central Coast. Mrs Peach read my poem to the class. The small band of popular girls smiled sweetly at her – before secretly shooting me an acidic scowl. I would be dealt with at lunchtime, as usual. People debate a child's age of accountability. Following my Grade 2 experience I confidently place it at age seven years.

If Grade 2 turned me off my age peers, Grade 3 completely buried my innate passion for learning:

'What is it about bald heads and thick glasses that make pedophiles so attractive to children?' an English comedian once asked. The joke reminded me of my Grade 3 teacher at Budgewoi Primary School, Gary Balzola ('Mr B'). When he lost his temper, which was often, Mr B would throw his wooden blackboard duster hard at a boy's head. Girls were typically demeaned or ignored altogether.

Mr B owned a property and horses at Wyong. During the school holidays, he invited every boy in our class, and a select few boys from other classes, to stay at his farm. As the week went on, the boys gradually returned home until only a few remained. Two of these boys excitedly told me how they had slept in Mr B's bed. The last child to be collected from Mr B's farm was a shy blonde boy named Darren.

When school went back after the holidays, I was seated at my desk in our demountable classroom, watching a commotion outside. Darren stood in the playground with his back to the classroom. His head was lowered and his body trembled as he wept uncontrollably. Several children were huddled around his limp form, trying to console him.
Mr B shot out of our classroom and rushed toward Darren. Mr B told the kids to return inside the classroom while he spoke alone with Darren, his arm wrapped around the boy's small stature.

Inside the classroom, the kids began frantically whispering together.

'What's going on?' I asked the girl next to me.

She tightened her lips and raised her eyebrows: 'Mr B did something very rude to Darren.' It was far too rude to repeat.

At Christmas time, Mr B bought the forgiveness of every student in our class with a kilo of lollies, a can of soft drink and a coloured Parker pen. But I never forgave. And I never forgot. Externally, I maintained a toughened shell to withstand the war zone that was the school playground. But inside, I acknowledged Darren's demise into misery. Three years later, I understood why tears welled in Darren's eyes as he threw another boy over his shoulders during a classroom fight. Twenty years later, I did what I had wanted to do at age eight: I formally reported 'Mr B' to Taskforce Argos at Queensland's Police headquarters and signed a witness statement.

The detective cheerfully explained that his sex crime unit had been inundated with reports of child abuse, especially involving priests. He talked about how unbelieving the general public were. 'My own mother-in-law didn't believe me,' he chuckled, 'until we arrested her local parish priest.' Then the detective looked me dead in the eye and asked, 'Why are you reporting this?'

Because it happened to me too! I wanted to blurt out but restrained myself. Instead, I affirmed, 'Because it's the right thing to do.'

I further reported Mr B to the NSW Education Department's Child Protection unit which was established following the Wood Royal Commission. Then I located Mr B working at a newsagency. I phoned him and stated: 'I know what you did to Darren and I reported you to the police.' It felt good.

'Hey!' Mr B objected, 'I'll have you know that I'm still very good friends with some of my students!'

'Oh, I bet you are…'

The NSW Police sent me a letter in which they claimed that they were unable to locate Darren. The Education Department sent me a letter in which they claimed they could not substantiate my allegation against Mr B and they approved his return to teaching at Budgewoi Primary School.

While lower primary school was a horrendous enough experience, things only got worse for me in high school, especially when adolescence kicked in.I was 12 years old when my parents reconciled and relocated our family to a northern NSW farm. I attended a public high school in nearby Murwillumbah, or 'Murhole' as my sister nicknamed the country town. I renamed Murwillumbah High 'Pedo High' – which seemed justified after one of the principals was convicted for sexually abusing a male student. I laughed at the local newspaper's claim that the remaining staff members were 'shocked' by the allegations.

High school was as mind-numbingly tedious as primary school. I resigned myself to learning nothing at a secondary level after my first Grade 8 History project where the teacher, Mr Huxley, gave us the task of constructing a model Viking boat out of cardboard. I threw myself passionately into what I perceived as an enjoyable project and within two days I had crafted and painted a perfect model.

My cardboard boat received a contemptuous reception from the entire class, including Mr Huxley. 'You cut that out of a magazine!' one boy accused.

The following lesson, Mr Huxley brought a supply of green cardboard. I was instructed to abandon my completed model boat and join the class assembly line production of 30 stapled, uniform replicas of a basic paper boat.

The following four years were just a variation on that experience and my true ability never really manifested again. I recall a PE session during which I flogged one of the school's tennis champions, Amanda Swan, when I had never had a single lesson. I also remember the sewing classes during which I consistently earned perfect marks for my professional-standard garments. Apart from these glimpses I became stuck in a spiral of boredom, underachievement, and rebellion.

I didn't misbehave in every class – just for those teachers I disrespected. I didn't respect the manual arts teacher who exposed himself to me and who joked in my presence about 'getting into the pants' of a Grade 12 student. I didn't respect the science teacher and self-designated school photographer who continually photographed me and who took 'arty' shots of my naked classmate. I didn't respect the PE teacher who had sex with a female classmate. I didn't respect the English teacher who had a group orgy with her senior surfing students. I didn't respect the English teacher who had an affair with a Grade 11 student and who flirted with my brother's girlfriend. I didn't respect the careers teacher who made advances toward my brother and who drugged a Grade 11 boy at a party. The student awoke in the careers teacher's bed the following morning, naked with no memory of how he got there. The teacher stood naked in the doorway and minced, 'It's okay, sweetie.'

My hidden ability suddenly manifested in Grade 11. For some unknown reason, I began churning out unique interpretations of Hamlet that stunned the only person who showed an appreciation of my ideas – a University of New England professor whose lectures we attended. I took up rowing, won my first regatta race but lost my second, the final, to the Australian champion. I commenced Art classes and began painting like a professional. Then I won the female lead in the high school musical when I had not previously sung or acted.

'You-… you're not Fiona's mother, are you?!' the medical receptionist exclaimed when she spied our surname on my brother's medical file.

'Y-y-yes,' Mum hesitated, wondering what I had done wrong this time.

The receptionist disappeared. Minutes later she returned with the entire surgery who were all talking at once: 'You're Fiona's mother! We saw her in the musical last night. She was amazing!'

After seeing the school musical, my art teacher Ken Siddel told me, 'I just sat there watching you and Zoe and I realised – they're going to be famous!'

My academic turnabout divided the school staff room. On one side sat a minority group of intelligent teachers like Peter Cross who himself topped the state in History as a high school student. These people recognised and valued my ability.

On the opposition sat those teachers who resented their jobs – and me. They especially hated the fact that my new-found success highlighted their failure to teach. The main perpetrator of the teacher movement against me was the English/History teacher. Peter Wilcox had obviously never forgiven me for my blatant impertinence concerning his sexual affair with a Year 11 student named Louise – nor for the sailing incident.

The sailing incident occurred during a school sport lesson. Wilcox prided himself on being a skilled sailor and he taught sailing for school sport. A Japanese exchange student named Nozamu and I paired up to sail a catamaran. Our first and final sailing day was extremely windy. Wilcox gave our group basic sailing instructions. Unbeknownst to Mr Wilcox, I had learnt to sail on Budgewoi Lake under a great teacher named Leslie in my own Laser sailing boat in which I won my first race.

That sport day, every catamaran capsized within 10 metres of shore – except the boat Nozamu and I were on. The wind blew us up-river toward a rocky island that stuck out in the middle. It was impossible to simply turn about and aim directly for the boat shed where the other students had resigned. I had to tack against the wind just to get back to our shore. I aimed to land near the rocks upstream, from where Nozamu and I could tow the boat back. As the winds picked up and the cat almost tipped, Nozamu began panicking at the thought of falling into shark infested waters. His hysteria compromised our chances of staying upright, so I made Nozamu laugh and relax by pretending to be a pirate. Nearing the shore, I yelled out, 'Abandon ship!' in an Irish accent, just as Wilcox approached us. Anticipated congratulations on a fine bit of sailing, I shouted, 'Aye-aye, Sir!'

'Get off!' Wilcox screamed hysterically at us.

'Huh?' I was genuinely confused.

'You treat everything as a bloody joke, Fiona!'

'Oh…' I struggled for a response, 'Do you want me to take the boat back?'

'Just get off!'

A bewildered Nozamu muttered in my ear, 'What we do wrong? What we do wrong?'

'Never mind, Noza,' I assured him. 'Let's just go.'

Fully clothed in long socks and leather shoes, Wilcox leapt onto the boat and started sailing it back. Nozamu and I had just started walking back to the boat shed when we witnessed the expert sailor Mr Cock capsize just five metres from the shore.

Wilcox instigated staff room gossip about me which became so rife, fellow teacher Peter Cross complained about it to the mistress of girls, Mrs Garnham – who in turn told me. Ailsa Sharland, my private piano teacher, told me she overheard the same group of teachers speaking derogatively about me in the staffroom while relief teaching at Murhole High.

'Are you talking about Fiona?' Ailsa interrupted them.

‘Yes,’ they admitted.

‘I teach her piano. Fiona’s a genius!’

‘Oh, we know,’ they conceded. ‘We can tell from her essay writing.’

If my teachers thought I was so capable, they certainly never told me. Instead, at the start of Grade 12, Wilcox and his incompetent peers pressured the principal to transfer me to neighbouring Tweed River High. They threatened to strike if he didn’t.

I nicknamed my new school ‘Tweed Slut High’ for good reason. If you have seen the movie Muriel’s Wedding, this is based on a true story set in the Tweed Heads area. My new school was populated with girls who wore their skirts 20cm too short so that they just covered their knickers.

My senior teachers at Murhole had no knowledge of my forced transfer and appeared shocked at the news. My new school did not offer the same subjects or timetable, so I had to make major subject changes. I had to drop my top subject, 3U History, and pick up General Studies. My teacher for both History and General Studies was not given a record of my Grade 11 History marks, thus he instantly deducted from my final results the percentage of marks carried over from his existing students’ previous year and refused to let me make up the difference.

‘That’s unfair,’ I complained to Mr. Rogers, the deputy principal. ‘You make him change those marks!’ I knew Mr Rogers as the former English master of Murwillumbah High. I had spent most of Grade 9 English sitting outside his office.

‘It’s too late,’ he tried to explain.

‘Then I tell you what,’ I asserted in righteous indignation, ‘I’ll not be attending another one of his Ancient History or General Studies classes. From now on – I’ll teach myself!’

I further complained about my marks for 2U English. My new English teacher had preconceived opinions on me. He was married to one of the teachers from my previous school, a right bitch who had conspired to get rid of me – and who entertained a group orgy with her surfing students.

‘You read this essay,’ I threw my paper on the deputy’s desk.

Mr. Rogers read it carefully. It was a critique of Thomas Hardy’s Tess of the d’Urbervilles, a novel I despised from its opening multi-page description of a cow paddock. The essay question asked students to argue whether Tess was seduced or raped. Instead, I eloquently addressed the moral and political incorrectness of the essay question.

‘Fiona,’ Mr. Rogers sighed, ‘you write this sort of thing at university. For now, you’re at high school and you must conform.’

I refused to conform. I refused to write another essay on Tess of the d’Urbervilles. My stance cost me my English result and my overall tertiary entrance score. My final Higher School Certificate exam results read:

Ancient History	91
General Studies	88
Art (Advanced)	88
Art	89
Music	81
English (Advanced)	82
English	58

It was a miracle that I completed high school at all. Throughout my school years, my father constantly reminded me that I was a 'fuckwit,' 'shit-for-brains' and a 'moron.' His attack on my studies intensified during my HSC exam preparation. The highlight of the month-long study period was when my father decided to sandblast the house wall just outside my bedroom window where my study desk sat.

'YOU'RE GONNA FAIL!' his screaming could only just be heard over the shrill of the machine. 'YOU'RE FUCKING HOPELESS! YOU'RE GONNA FAIL!'

I learned how to balance academic study with my father's regular violence. His most memorable outburst was the cat incident. This occurred on our way to our piano lessons. It was dark. My father screamed hysterically at me in the manner which typically ended in his beating me in the stomach or head. But this time I was spared. At the end of our dirt road, our headlights shone on a box of abandoned kittens. Dad slammed on the brakes, jumped out of the car, and started throwing rocks at a kitten's head. I started screaming hysterically, jumped out of the car and ran barefoot down the road. I glanced back to see my father's figure silhouetted against the headlights. He was beating a kitten to death over the bonnet of the car. I stayed up all night, processing the incident in a painting that I titled Dad Hates Cats.

People often accuse child abuse victims: Why didn't you tell anyone? In my case, I did tell someone. I told my school Principal, Wally Wardman, who contested, 'But you never come to school with any bruises on you.' I didn't bother explaining I showed no physical evidence because my father knew how to beat me without leaving any signs. After meeting my father, the Principal described him as, 'gentle as a lamb.'

I reported my father's domestic violence to the local Tweed Heads child protection agency (DOCS) who dismissed my report and labelled me a 'drama queen' – even after my mother directly confirmed my testimony to them.

I even called the local police who were subsequently easily convinced by my father that I was just 'making shit up.' Immediately after the police left, my father flew into his most violent rage and threw me out of home. Consequently, I spent half of Grade 12 living at other peoples' homes.

By the end of high school, I was too mentally exhausted to attend university and sit more exams. So, I attended Sydney's top Art College instead.

My mother did her best to talk me out of attending art college: 'It takes ten years to undo the damage art college does to an artist,' she warned. She wanted me to study English literature instead.

While delivering me the 'you're expelled' lecture, Murwillumbah Principal Mr Dowling simultaneously commended my acting skills and ordered me to major in English and Drama at UNE as I was too young to audition for NIDA. Meanwhile, my piano teacher told me, 'If you take next year off and practise eight hours a day, the following year you will get into the Sydney Conservatorium as a concert pianist.'

I interviewed at Sydney's City Art Institute in Paddington. Outside the interview room I sat amidst a trembling group of candidates who clasped their professionally produced portfolio.

'What other art schools have you applied for?' the panel asked me.

'None. This is the best. Why would I bother going elsewhere?'

The three of them stared at me like stunned mullets.

I broke the silence, 'Would you like to see my folio?'

They sighed collectively, 'Oh, you have a folio?'

I pulled out a small wad of instant photographs that I had taken of my paintings and drawings and handed them to the panel.

'Wow,' one interviewer shook her head.

'Who taught you to draw?' one lecturer asked.

'No-one. I taught myself.'

'Who taught you to paint like this?'

'Klimt, Whiteley and Picasso,' I responded confidently.

Art College was everything my mother warned me it would be. I loathed every day of it. Art College was not about learning. I was never given explicit instruction in such basics as colour mixing or canvas stretching. Art College was about anticipating what the lecturers wanted. By the end of third year, painting students were expected to display their own 'style' – despite the fact that it took Picasso a lifetime to develop his characteristic style.

Art College was not about creativity; it was about conformity to the lecturers' personal tastes. I recall the day I told my history theory lecturer, Tess, that I considered Brett Whiteley to be one of Australia's master painters. She laughed condescendingly and said something so coded in 'art speak' that my brain could not process it.

Art College was not about artistic talent. Students were marked on their personalities, not their art. I recall a class in which a third-year student had not produced any work whatsoever, but because he could waffle art speak about the 'process' – he passed.

I laughed, 'The emperor is naked!'

Art College was not about producing aesthetically pleasing images. It was about glorifying the grotesque. I recall a piece of work that was displayed in a glass podium. It was an essay which began, 'There once was a Cunt…' I recall another piece of work which received a good grade – a four-foot high sculpture of an erect penis. That student went on to exhibit photographs of pus-ridden skin diseases.

I later attended the top art colleges in Queensland and Western Australia and found them to teach the same crap. In the foyer of Queensland College of Art was displayed an exhibition of photographs featuring a decapitated pigs head and sexualised women dressed in leather outfits and whips. The student artist went onto be implicated in a notorious vampire murder involving a lesbian Satanist who routinely drank pigs' blood.

I committed the minimal time and effort required to obtain my first undergraduate degree. Every spare moment was spent attending theatre classes at Phillip Street Theatre, the Australian Theatre for Young People, followed by The Actors Centre where I benefited from NIDA teachers who had recently left Australia's top acting school over political issues. The highlight of my first year of tertiary education was a cabaret show held at ATYP. I was designated the role of a punk at a dinner party. I painted my face grotesquely, scrawled 'KILL' across my torn shirt and got lost in the improvisation. My performance brought the house down. The French mime teacher accosted me excitedly at the end of the show: 'Your face!' he delighted, 'It was like a mask! It was fantastique!'

'Here she is – the star!' another staff member declared. 'You were the funniest thing I have seen in ten years!'

After a year of attending more drama than art classes, I applied for NIDA, the Sydney based drama school. I was just 18 years old when I ignored warnings that I was well below the average age of 22 to get in. The first panel of judges were obviously impressed with my performance because they singled me out and excitedly asked, 'Where did you obtain your piece? Where have you worked before?' But the moment I heard who was judging my second audition I knew my acting days were over. The person in question had rushed back from interstate auditioning to be there – on my day. I recognised him from my secret childhood.

‘I’m surprised,’ my private drama coach, another NIDA graduate, concluded. ‘I thought you would get in.’

Disappointed, I simultaneously sensed that acting was a dangerous choice for someone with my background. The acting techniques I had been taught at The Actors Cent re included shamanic practises of centring, meditation, dissociation and channelling.I demonstrated a seemingly natural ability to completely lose myself in character, something which impressed others – but was spiritually unhealthy. Today, I appreciate that I was spared the fate of most successful actors. If an actor is not born into ritual abuse, they will pay for their fame one way or another, be it via the mandatory casting couch, drug abuse or forced to star in underground snuff and porn films.

My passion was for musical theatre. Consequently, my focus switched to classical singing. I had transferred to Art College in Brisbane when I auditioned at the Queensland Conservatorium for an evening course in concert and stagecraft for singers. At that point the Queensland Con was the place for singing in Australia. I was accepted and once in, I harassed the teacher, Leonard Lee, for private singing lessons. Leonard eventually agreed to give me a 30-minute trial lesson to explore my potential which he doubted I had. He played some scales and gave me instructions which I promptly followed.

‘Hmm,’ he raised his brow at my typically rapid response to teaching. ‘Okay,’ he conceded, ‘I’ll teach you.’ His ‘intercostal diaphragmatic breathing’ technique well suited my dramatic mezzo soprano voice. A short time later, his tune completely changed:

‘You’ve learned more in two months than my students typically learn in two years! It’s a big voice and difficult to control.’ I was subsequently overwhelmed with free lessons and talk of managing me in Europe. I had a 2.5 octave range with a strong top C.

Both my singing and piano teachers were world class musicians whose careers had been prematurely ended by tragedy. Being a perfectionist, the additional pressure I felt from them to succeed was suffocating. I just wanted to learn to sing and play before making any great life decisions. So, I quit music.

But perhaps the greatest impact on my confidence to pursue a career in music or theatre stemmed from something deeper and darker. I had just turned 16 when I made the decision to cut off from the Sydney-based pedophile network that abused and controlled me from my earliest memory. Psychologist and UTS lecturer Dr Antony Kidman led the inner Sydney branch of this network. In response to my announcement that I was leaving their organisation and did not want their support to ‘make it’ in any industry, Kidman slammed my fingers between a piano keyboard and lid, and hissed:

‘You will be nothing without us!’

* * *

The Family

There shall not be found among you anyone that makes his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that uses divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch.

- Deut 18:10

I did not intend to marry into an illuminati family. I met Jon halfway up a mountain on New Zealand's remote west coast. My brother and I were on our way down, while Jon was on his way up. A week later we encountered Jon again atop the gondolas in Queenstown. I laughed hysterically at his photo of an angora rabbit strapped to a rotisserie for shearing. Then I laughed all afternoon during the game off 'dirty word scrabble' that Jon instigated. Perhaps my contribution of the word 'alone' captured Jon's affection.

Upon our return home to Australia, my brother and I told our mother nothing about our trip except for, 'We met the funniest guy! Jon is the funniest person I've ever met.' Soon after our return I received a postcard – a photo of the stupid rabbit. On the back Jon had written a note saying he'd like to call in and visit on his way home to England.

Jon stayed six months. Not only was he funny, he was clever, generous, and the nicest guy I've ever met. Upon meeting him people would blurt, 'Are you going to marry him?'

After two months, Jon raised the subject of marriage.

'I don't want to get married,' I stated bluntly. 'I'm only twenty-one! I've just witnessed the worst marriage imaginable, and I don't want that. I want to work. I need intellectual stimulation.'

'You could have both,' he promised.

Days later, Jon made his first phone call to his mother in months. After that conversation, he never mentioned the 'm' word again.

I had never met Jon's English mother, but I instantly sensed that she had said something derogative about me. As usual, time proved my gut instinct right.

'What did she say about me?' I demanded.

'Nothing,' Jon lied.

'What did she say?'

'Nothing.'

'You're lying. What did she say?'

'Oh, she's just being over-protective – that's all.'

'Uh-huh. So, what overprotective thing did she say?'

'She just doesn't think you're the right one for me.'

'Uh-huh. And what do you think of what she said?'

'I think it's cute.'

'Cute... and what did you tell her about me?'

'I just said that I'm shacked up with this arty-farty born-again Christian.'

'Wow…how endearing.'

No matter how Jon described me, his mother was destined to treat me like convict scum. Actually, I don't possess a single convict gene. One set of my mother's grandparents were aristocrats from Kent, while the other originated from Scotland and were related to Nellie Melba.

Jon's parents, Eric and Frances, met at teacher's college where they studied to be Math/Physics teachers. Within days of meeting me, the couple challenged me to a game of Scrabble. In retrospect, I would say they were testing my intelligence. Flogging Jon's parents at Scrabble by three hundred points remains one of my fondest memories of England.

Jon's father is a blood relation to the King of Jordan. Although this relationship was understated, it was certainly valued, as reflected in an Easter family tradition called 'Innies and Outies.' Jon's paternal relatives were unable to meet at Christmas time, so every Easter they gathered for a mock Christmas dinner instead. The family would divide between two tables, one table for the 'Innies' and one for the 'Outies.'

'What the hell are Innies and Outies?' I asked.

Someone explained, 'All of the Gardiner relatives are the Innies who sit at one table, while everyone else are Outties who sit at the other table.'

'Er, I don't think so,' I said. 'I'll be sitting with Jon.'

'Don't worry,' Frances said, 'You can sit at the Outtie table with me.'

'Why do you tolerate this?' I asked her.

'It's just a bit of fun,' everyone mused – everyone except the Outties.

This was my introduction to Jon's extended paternal family which included his intellectually disabled cousin. All the Innies except Jon made constant fun of her, which probably explained why Jon was her favourite. I wondered whether the Innies considered the girl to be an Innie or an Outtie…

Jon's father and I initially got on well. We shared a passion for musical theatre, and I genuinely preferred joining him for a game of social lawn bowls rather than hanging in pubs with my age peers. Eric struck me as upper class, and it puzzled me why someone like Eric even married Frances, until Jon told me that his father 'forced himself onto' her which resulted in pregnancy.

It was Jon's mother who instigated the trouble. To those familiar with the hit TV sitcom called Everybody Loves Raymond, combine the character of Marie with the face of Camilla Parker Bowls, and that's Frances.

'When Jon first told me about you, I told him "Just get rid of her!" But now I know why he stayed with you – it's your integrity.' That was a typical Frances insult: mixed with a compliment so that I got the message but had no evidence of it. Whenever I relayed Frances's exact words to Jon, he'd ask his mother whether she said them, to which she always replied, 'I didn't say that.'

Frances went so far as to bitch about me to Jon's friends whom she barely knew. 'Jon's mother has been saying some things about you,' one told me. 'She said you had "warped thinking."'

Frances regularly flew to Boston and paid a small fortune to her guru Robert Fritz for training in something called 'Structural Consultation.' Frances' definition of 'warped thinking' was defined according to structural consultation lingo. Like a newly converted Amway recruit, Frances bombarded everyone with this lingo, and she constantly asked me to undergo a 'session' with her. When I asked Frances to simply and clearly explain what structural consultation was, she replied, 'Let me see, I'm not sure that I could put it into words that you would understand.'

I understood plenty after reading the original three-hour transcript of the 'structural consultation' session that Jon underwent. The session began with Jon discussing a dilemma in his life –whether he should commit to me in marriage. During this first hour, Jon sounded integrated and he confidently expressed his own opinions. During the second hour Jon became increasingly confused as his beliefs were challenged and systematically stripped away by the 'Consultant.' In the final hour, the Consultant replaced Jon's original beliefs with her own contradictory, existentialist thinking.

'This is brainwashing!' I exclaimed to Jon. 'The transcript demonstrates a clear brainwashing process: discover your beliefs, destroy these, replace with new existentialist beliefs.'

But it was too late. The Jon I knew was gone. The new Jon started parroting his mother's criticisms and existential crap at me: 'But why do you care so much about people, Fiona? What's the point? Why go out of your way to help them?'

'Because it's the right thing to do. If good people stand around and do nothing, that's how things like the bloody holocaust happen! Isn't it obvious?!'

But still Jon persisted with his circle of existentialist meaningless nothingness. In the end, the only way to combat the structural consultation 'robotese' was to resort to moral absolutes like, 'Because the Bible says so.'

'Fiona, I want you to do this one structural consultation session with me,' Frances persisted.

'No.'

'Why not?'

'For the same reason I wouldn't let you hover a wedding ring over my stomach to predict how many children I might have - it transgresses my Christian beliefs.'

'Well, just put aside your beliefs for just one hour to do this session with me.'

'If I could just set aside my beliefs for an hour, they wouldn't be beliefs.'

'Well, if Jon ever comes to me and says, "Mum do you think Fiona and I could make a go of it in marriage?" I would have to say no based on the fact that you won't do this structural consultation session with me.'

Not surprisingly, Jon sat in limbo for six years, unable to marry me, unable to give me up. While he deliberated, we spent thousands on pre-internet phone bills and annual plane trips. Every time I saw my boyfriend, I went to war against his brainwashing. I stuck it out so long because I hoped that the person I had fallen in love with was still there somewhere.

At one point I decided that I should give up my country for Jon's. I obtained a two-year visa and told my family that I would not be back.

I had been living with Jon and his parents for six months, Jon had just become a Christian, we had just become engaged, and Jon had been away overseas for a fortnight, when Frances and I came to loggerheads. I was seated at the kitchen table of their large old farmhouse, completing an undergraduate Psychology assignment, when Frances entered the room. 'What are you doing?' she asked sweetly.

'An assignment.'

'What's it on?'

'Counselling Psychology.'

'What's the topic?'

'Informed consent.'

'What's that?'

'It's when you warn the client of the potential benefits and risks of entering into a therapeutic relationship.'

Frances's gay countenance transformed to a demonic scowl. 'Hmph! Does it say there that you should warn the client that the therapist has a bias that could harm the client?!'

I assumed that she referred to a comment I had made about child abuse being so prevalent that perhaps the therapist should start with the assumption that every mentally ill client could be a victim, instead of the other way around. If the given statistic that one in two women had been abused, wouldn't it be logical to assume that it's the abused half that are more likely to comprise the mentally ill? It was only a passing thought, one of many that I had shared with Frances, but one which she, for some reason, took great offence at.

Something snapped inside of me. The words Six years and I've had enough! vibrated in my head. For six years I had tolerated constant criticism from this manipulative, condescending, undermining bitch! You can't make Jon happy in marriage. You can't change him, Fiona. Fiona wouldn't be able to please you sexually, Jon, because she's a Christian and she's frigid. For six years I had said nothing in response to her provocation. But now, I had finally had enough. I put down my pen.

'Frances?'

'Yes Fiona,' she smiled sweetly.

'Why do you hate me?'

Pause.

Frances: 'I'm not telling you.'

I went for the jugular. 'It happened to you too didn't it?'

'What are you talking about?'

'It was your father, wasn't it?'

As when Dorothy poured water on the wicked witch, Frances began shrieking hysterically: 'HOW DARE YOU!! HOW DARE YOU!! HOW DARE YOU ACCUSE MY BELOVED FATHER WHO IS NOT EVEN ALIVE TO DEFEND HIMSELF!!' She marched out of the house, slamming the 300-year-old oak door so hard, I thought its tiny square glass insert would shatter.

Bingo, I thought.

Fifteen minutes later, Frances returned, happily humming. She had structurally consulted her way back to Nirvana – or so it seemed.

'Frances.'

'Yes Fiona.'

'I haven't finished yet.'

'HOW DARE YOU!! HOW DARE YOU!!...' she continued screeching while exiting the lounge.

I followed her. 'Frances, you can't keep doing this anymore. Like it or not, your son and I are going to be married. You and I have to talk things out, wipe the slate clean, and start again.'

'No, I don't have to talk to you.'

'Well, if you refuse to, I have no option but to pack my things and leave.'

'That's your prerogative.'

I packed my belongings and left. I would have flown home to Australia if I hadn't already purchased a tour of Israel. So, I went to live with a friend named Ginny.

'You have to patch things up,' Ginny tried to convince me. 'For the sake of the family you have to patch things up with her.'

'That's a fallacy! Just because someone's family doesn't mean you tolerate their crap! I'm over it!'

A work colleague once described me well. She asked me for my star sign.

'Scorpio,' I responded.

The girl's eyes widened and her body stiffened. She said breathlessly, 'You! I know you! My sister is one of you. I know all about you! You are extremely loyal. You'd do anything for anyone. But, when someone crosses you, or especially if they do something to someone you care about, you bulldoze their house and plough salt through their fields so that nothing ever grows again!'

I laughed. 'I'm not into star signs, but that's pretty accurate.'

I was just about to bulldoze Frances' house when Ginny convinced me to wait until Jon returned home. I agreed to Ginny's suggestion: when Jon returned, he would arrange a time for the four of us to sit down and talk things out. Ginny and I spent the next week rehearsing what I would say to Frances, until I could express myself without exploding into a tirade.

A week later, Jon and I met with his parents at their house. Jon and I sat together on the main couch in the lounge room. Eric sat on a chair opposite us, stroking his cat. We waited ten minutes while Frances repeatedly breezed by, humming loudly - yet another act of manipulation. Finally, she joined us.

'Right,' she stated in a sing-song tone as she sat down next to Eric, 'What did you want to see me about?'

'Well,' I began, 'during the past six months you have done a number of things which indicate some positive regard toward me. You gave me cheap board here, you gave Jon and I the use of your spare car, and you obviously put a lot of thought into my Christmas gift. These things indicate a certain amount of positive regard. On the other hand, you have done a number of things which indicate that you fell some negative regard toward me. For instance, you have talked negatively about me to other people behind my back: you told Jon that I wouldn't make him happy in marriage; you told Jon's friends that I have warped thinking; and you-...'

Frances looked at Eric and nodded. Eric nodded in agreement. Frances then stood up.

Me: 'What are you doing?'

Frances: 'I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose.' She parroted a structural consultation assertion.

Me: 'But we came here to talk.'

'I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose.'

'But you agreed to talk.'

'I don't have to sit here with my head on a chopping block.'

'No-one's head is on a chopping block. The idea was that you sit there and listen while I say everything I need to say, and then I sit here and listen while you say whatever you need to say. That's a conversation. Once we have both got everything off our chests, I am prepared to wipe the slate clean and never mention any of it again.'

'No, I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose.'

I turned to Jon, 'You better tell them what's at stake here.' I referred to the preliminary discussion that Jon and I had in which I vowed that if his mother refused to cooperate, I was permanently cutting off.

All eyes were on Jon. 'What do you think, Jon,' they asked.

Jon's body sunk in as he stared at his lap. 'I-I…I can't see why you can't just listen to what she's got to say. They're only words. What harm can words do?'

'I'm not prepared to sit here with my head on a chopping block… I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose… I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose…' On and on and on she droned until my brain reached saturation point.

'That's it!' My words silenced the room. 'You have rights, and so do I. I'm now going to exercise my rights. Jon and I are engaged. Relationships are difficult enough without someone actively trying to tear a couple apart. What Jon decides to do regarding his future relationship with you is his prerogative. But as for me, I promise me that you will never see me again. And another thing: I don't want you going about behind my back mouthing off about me to my children the way you have mouthed off to Jon's friends. Therefore, you will never set eyes upon your grandchildren!'

Eric sprung to life, bounding forward in his chair. 'YOU!' he pointed and spat, 'How dare you! How dare you try and split up our family. We're a very close family.'

I centred. 'Oh, close, are you? What about the Indian girl boarding with you who molested Andrew when he was three? Andrew had to starve himself and punch his fist through the wall at age fifteen to get your attention! And what about the ballet dancer you had boarding with you who molested Jon when he was five? And what about the time your wife moved out and had an affair? You didn't know about that, did you Eric? But you're such a close family!'

'That's none of your business!'

'Of course, it's none of my business - just like my sexual relationship with Jon was none of your wife's business!'

'And just what are you going to tell our grandchildren about us!'

I smiled curtly. 'The truth: not a word more; not a word less.'

'And just what kind of job are you going to do raising our grandchildren?!'

'I'll raise them as a good Christian would.'

'Well!' he hissed venomously, 'There are Christians with a big 'C' and Christians with a little 'c'!

I guess I was a little-c Christian.

I stood up.

'W-Where are you going?' the now panicked couple chimed.

'I have a right to withdraw from this conversation at any time I choose.'

I exited the room.

'Wait!' they exclaimed. 'Come back! We want to talk!'

I swung around, reappeared in the loungeroom, pointed my finger at Frances and announced: 'Frances, I don't ever want to set my eyes upon you again - until the day you come dragging on your hands and knees, begging for my forgiveness.' I marched off.

Outside, the rain fell as I fumbled with the car key.

'Give me that!' It was Jon. This was it! Our relationship was finally over. He had finally decided to ditch me for his parents. He was here to confiscate my only means of transport out of their secluded property - the spare car. I would have to walk 20+ miles in the rain.

'Why?' I braced myself.

'Because I'm driving.'

Frances has never set eyes upon my children.

Jon immigrated to Australia in 1998. Shortly after his arrival, in the midst of wedding preparations, Jon confessed that he had cheating on me during the six years I waited for him to commit. Frances and most of Jon's friends had known all along. This information emerged in the context of a visitor from North Devon. A cult whore named Sharon Turner spent Christmas with us and repaid my hospitality by, I deduced, fucking my fiancé. Upon her departure, Sharon handed me an envelope containing cash plus a note:

'For everything I used, abused and owe.'

I pulled out my paper and crayons, and asked Jon to draw hypnosis. Jon drew a swirl. Next I told him to draw a door over the swirl. Then I asked him to open the door and draw what was behind it. Jon drew his mother Frances.

I managed to extract a key trigger word: 'STANGOR.' I was seated next to Jon at our dining table when he drew this. My mother and 16-year-old brother Andrew were seated on the lounge nearby. As soon as the word was uttered, Jon slowly glanced sideways at me. His eyes were black and menacing.

Let it happen, a silent voice requested. So, I relaxed and willingly succumbed to what I felt, what I knew was about to occur. Suddenly, an invisible force threw me about two metres across the room and slammed my body into the wall. Then it picked me off the floor and slammed my limp form down like a rag doll – again, and again…

I looked over at Jon who shot me an evil smirk. I was unhurt. I had not even felt the physical impact of the assault. I picked myself up off the floor and returned to my seat next to Jon. 'Now,' I calmly asserted, 'Where were we?'

I used my art therapy skills to unveil Jon's intimate knowledge of elite European Luciferian practices. The most memorable demonstration of this was when Jon wrote out pages of spells in ancient Italian and drew his experience of attending a Satanic Olympics in Greece. The UK Rothschilds were directly involved.

During the course of the disclosures I discovered that Jon had been unfaithful during the entire six years I thought we were committed. Consequently, I shredded the wedding dress I was making, smashed up my engagement ring with hammer, and told Jon to go to hell. But by then Jon was genuinely broken and the person I had met six years earlier was back. So, I gave Jon an ultimatum: if he wanted me to stay, he must permanently cut of all ties with England, including his family. He agreed. We donned casual attire and wed alone in the Bundaberg courthouse one Wednesday morning.

I was pregnant with our second child when Jon's paternal aunt and her husband turned up on our doorstep one Sunday evening. The couple had obtained our address through their daughter who accessed our personal records while working for the Australian Taxation Office. The purpose of their visit was to accuse Jon: 'You've failed to fulfil your obligation to The Family.'

The Gardiners became increasingly desperate to contact Jon. On 10 July 2007, Eric sent us a bizarre letter that I never let Jon read:

Dear Jon,

Please bare with me.

I have tried and tried to courteously to you many years back with my father, and I've re-phrased comments as carefully as I can to you as Christianity.

However I've always been slightly uncertain to you, so I went back and re-phrased in a different way, but kept stepping back.

You were notified eventually that my father had eventually passed away 98 years ago, when you were expecting him to give information only to him back in 1998, if necessary to any of us.

I am not trying to be pedantic. Quite the reverse. So would you please bare with me and deal with my comments.

So, step by step I will re-write the items I have shuffled around on my behalf. They are all slightly different, so bare with each one separately, because I had tried to re-phrase one slightly, and none of them are properly correct.

Thanks, I hope sense

Eric.

Dear Jon

I trust that you will bare with me for a while. It was many years ago very late at night that you required me apparently as a non-Christian, not to be allowed to speak to you. I was still wake enough however to mention "Honour thy father and thy Mother," but that was clearly ignored for whatever reason.

I was simply told that should you need to notify me, you would tell it to my father. I sent information to you that he was elderly and could easily be disabled on his knowledge.

However as you requested me not to be non-Christian, I have politely stepped away on your behalf for these many years.

Now, however out of courtesy, I feel it essential to notify you that my father, your grandfather has passed away. I have found it very difficult how to do to you such courtesy on his behalf, and it has consequently taken a long time to finally decide to you – not to disrupt you, but for me to notify you "not wanting me"

Now, apparently, you are clearly involved in Christianity. I never had no objection in that, in that I have seen many interpretations of Christianity and other God systems, and to be academic, I simply don't know one God or the other.

You know that I am a Mathematician, and several years ago having read another book on it I found a superb statement, in effect that Mathematicians would rather admit that unless they know anything is perfect they would confirm that it might not be completely accurate, no matter how close.

So, if you care to think about it, I am logical, not pedantic, and later on in this information perhaps you can think about it more about me.

However, let us go back to the Christianity of your family (apparently apart from me)

Your mother and her parents we always involved at the Church at Arreton on the Isle of Wight. My father born in 1907 and was acknowledged at Farnham Congregational Sunday School in 1908 at February 25th in Farnham Surrey. As a German prisoner of war, his knowledge of Hitler's devastation, Killing Jews completedly [sic] distracted any thoughts of ever going to Church again (although later he did go to church for all his Children's marriages and his grandchildren's baptism including you and Michael).

Although I know he was never at the (royal Marines) St Andrew's Church in Scoutsea, but was always outside of the church as the Sergeant when the others came out to be re-assembled marching up and down (and at that time, I was at that Church as a chorister!! (for many, many years))

Earlier still, I was at the Methodist Church at Adair Rd, at about 4 or 5 years old, and the couples who were teaching the Children as Christianity decided to be married and asked me and another boy Andrew Hawkins, to be our equivalent, instead of give brides, at their church.

It was then slightly later that I moved to the Royal marines Church because I enjoyed singing as a Choirboy (it apparently didn't exist that way at the Methodist Church), but to youngsters Christianity was probably the same, just a variation the same way that adults and teachers differ from one to another. It allows sensible people to think!

Now bare with me about oddities, and about how often I keep quiet. With my 3 sisters all older than I am, clearly whenever we were together, Pippa is nearly 10 years ahead of me, and consequently she was obviously the one in charge of looking after younger children if Mum and Dad wer [sic] occasionally out.

So consequently I didn't ignore them, but thought differently, but accepted their suggestions, even though I had different ideas, and as their sensibility was fairly similar to mine, even if not exactly the same.

I was lucky as a youngster back in the World War, because originally my sisters went to Milton School, and they stayed at the same place after we had been Bombed away to a different Street at a different School.

So, I just went to their school (although in their days boys and Girls were in different Sections).

I as even more lucky at about 7 or 8 years in that at Milton some professionals from elsewhere wanted to have examinations to cheque [sic] for I.Q. youngsters as it hadn't been re-chequed [sic] for along time before the World War II.

About 6 or 8 intelligent boys from the School (including me) were asked to be tested on their behalf, to see how the previous I.Q. tests got re-organised.

Eventually we were told how well we were done – then the Professional asked if he could speak to me on my own. Most youngsters of high quality have Intelligence Quotient about 120, but the Profession then told me I was 146, and then just socially said to always "Keep ticking over, but not to embarrass your Colleagues"

As it happens, I have always kept quiet fairly out of my sisters also.

Now back to my 7 or 8 year old intelligence. At Milton I was well supported by excellent School teachers and many of my colleagues, all of us wanted to be as good as each other, I was usually No 1. (but not always!!) which made every one of us trying to be best for each other.

Eventually we did age 11 examinations. In those days Grammar Schools were important is able to get up to decent Universities. My 3 sisters were all capable into their Grammars, so I was automatically expected to the boys Grammar Schools matching them, which obviously I did.

The "Southern Grammar School" in Portsmouth blended all the boys together In the first year, and then picked up their best 30 geniuses or so and joined them in the second year differently form all the others.

I was in the second year, and we were told we were expected to be top quality skill, and would get up to 'A' Levels. So we would automatically get our 'O' levels up to 4 years (Not 5) so we can get up better to our 'A' levels sooner. And that's what we did.

But, luck again for me, a special expert at Hampshire wanted to have high equalities, all over the space to check some differentiation, so at some theatre he was inspected on Stage and all over the Hampshire Grammar Schools there were well over 400 pupils (so only about 10 to 15 each of best of us were taken)

Right at the beginning everyone was given a blank peace of paper, and he told us not to right down any number from 0 to 9, not now. At some item whilst giving information quite a long time, about some curiosity ago, he then said "Write it down." Everyone did, he then carried on with his other curious details. Then he gave information about the way in which people thought.

"How many of you wrote No 9." – I'll tell you about 100 of you. "Put your hand up", and about that number could be seen. Now "No 2" – "your [sic] is almost identical" – and it was.

Now No 1 was next at about 50, and so on smaller numbers 3, 4, etc etc. but clear enough to be seen approximately at his statements.

Eventually he then said, it is unusual for anyone writing No 8. Anyone??

I was the only one with No 8. Evidently this was the items which he had looked for checking different information. His statement simply said that the phrase he had created simply notifies that my way of thinking often looks differently from most other people, but also recognises their ideas, but many others don't recognise his alternative version.

So there you are, if you think about it, I often did versions of cricket, not the same as some other pedantics.

But you can also see that I might think differently from Christianity, but what phrase might that suggest?

Finally Jon once again.

I hope you can appreciate your family, that we wish to adore you and your family also.

One other thought, my Cousin Toni Gardiner was Christianity. She became married to King Hussein of Jordan, and out of courtesy she assisted unto his different Christianity. Her father still exists, but the King (now his son) has the courtesy for him in due course to be created in Christianity on his behalf. One of my family also!!

Best Wishes to Jon, your wife and your daughters.
Your Father
Eric

Eric's strange letter was purposely constructed to contain triggers, double meanings, and to deliver Jon a hidden message. It mentioned Eric's assessment, recruitment and initiation into the ancient male-only mystery cult of Mithraism. Initiation into the grades did not depend on age but on potential for knowledge acquisition, hence Eric's talk of IQ testing. Roman Mithraism had seven main grades and titles plus two mystery titles. At the 2nd grade, a male was dressed in a bridal veil and married to the pagan god Mithra:

1. Raven (Corax)	4. (Lion (Leo)	7. Father (Pater)
2. Bride (Nymphus)	5. Persona (Perses)	- Vulture
3. Soldier (Miles)	6. Courier of the Sun (Heliodromus)	- Cryfius

In 2009, Frances herself made the trip to Australia in search of us. Sensing her impending visit, I packed my family up and took them to live on a friend's remote property. Because our residence was under the owner's name, we were untraceable.

Suddenly, a strange man named Ian Brooks began searching for us, turning up at my father's residence and one of Jon's former workplaces. In a letter, Frances recommended Ian to Jon as 'one of the good ones' and claimed she met him in a fish and chip takeaway shop. I phoned this Ian and told him to stop harassing us or else we would be contacting the police. In response, this complete stranger whom Frances just happened to run into in a takeaway store started criticising me for 'breaking up The Family.'

Frances turned up at Jon's former cricket club where he had not played for a decade. Then she had one of Jon's acquaintances deliver us a letter in which she threatened to pursue and harass Jon unless she was contacted on a given mobile number. So, I phoned the evil bitch.

'Okay Frances, I received your threat, so here I am.'

'It wasn't threatening.'

I read the relevant section of her letter. 'That's a threat.'

'Can come and I see you?'

'No.'

'Why?'

'You were horrible to me. You treated me like convict scum.'

'I always had the utmost admiration and respect for you.'

'No, you didn't. You constantly criticised me to Jon and his friends. You tried to split Jon and me up when we were perfect for each other. He wanted to marry me the moment he met me – until you interfered. Marriage is tough enough without someone actively tearing the couple apart.'

'If I could go back into the past and change things I would. I was going through a very difficult time back then. I was involved in a cult and that was a very evil influence.'

'Don't go blaming structural consultation. Structural consultation didn't make you criticise me to Jon and his friends. You were an adult and responsible for your own decisions.'

'I'm a Christian now.'

'No, you're not. Jon and I are real Christians.'

'Fiona, you have my full apology. I am very sorry for what happened.'

'Sorry for what, Frances?'

'For everything that happened…'

'For trying to split me and Jon up.'

Sigh! 'For trying to split you and Jon up.'

'For criticising me to Jon's friends.'

'For criticising you to Jon's friends-… blah, blah, blah...'

'See, I don't think you're sorry for what you did. I think you feel sorry about the consequences of your actions. You did this, Frances. This is your fault. You stuffed up. We don't want anything from you. We don't want your money, and we don't want any position that your coven has to offer.'

'We're not Satanists.'

'The Gardiners are a major satanic bloodline. That's why they had that Innies and Outties table arrangement at Easter.'

'Oh, Fiona you know that never happened.'

I laughed. 'So now you're going to deny something that Jon witnessed many times! Goodbye Frances.'

Frances left Australia empty-handed. However, she continued to correspond with my estranged father, which prompted intervention from my brother Andrew who, second to me, has the clearest memories of his Illuminati training.'

'Oh, I'm so glad that you called!' Frances whined to Andrew, 'We're a family in mourning.'

'You're complaining to the wrong person,' Andrew dismissed her crocodile tears. 'I don't give a crap. I'm just here to fulfil my duty to my family, just as I was trained to do. My father told me everything and he is no longer of any use to you. So, from now on, I will be your point of contact. Feel free to contact me any time of the day or night.'

'Oh, Jon's changed. I don't recognise him anymore.'

'Yes, that's right. Jon has changed. I don't even recognise him. He's nothing like the Jon I knew fifteen years ago. That's what happens when you become a Christian. Jon and his family are covered by the blood of the Lamb. As long as they stay within God's will, your coven can't touch them.'

'But we're not Satanists. We're just a humble family of gardeners.'

'Yeah, I know. The famous Gardiner Illuminati family.'

'No, we're gardeners.'

'Yes, I know – the famous Gardiner satanic bloodline.'

'No, gardener. G-a-r-d-e-n-e-r!'

'It doesn't matter how you spell it, whether you add or drop a letter, it's still the same bloodline.'

Silence.

Frances's demeanour switched and she launched a scathing attack on me.

'Look, Frances,' Andrew mused, 'I understand your dilemma. You have to pursue Jon. You have no choice. You have to keep trying until your dying day. I understand your frustration. But it's not – going – to – happen. Over my dead body will you go anywhere near my nieces. I won't let it happen. I'm just fulfilling my duty to my family, Frances, just as I was trained to.'

* * *

Ritual Abuse in Australia

The ritual is kind of appealing, but you can get ritual in many other places as well. And I think a lot of that ritual has been knocked out of the Catholic Church. It's all become rather ordinary, I think.

- John Bell

My body trembled. 'If you don't do the EMDR now – I'm dead!'

My therapist thought for a moment. 'Let me speak with my partner. We might be able to use his room.'

Ten minutes later, I was seated on the carpeted floor of an office, leaning against a leather couch. This felt safer. No one could hear me scream in this dimly lit room.

'You ready?' she asked.

I nodded.

Her left hand held mine as she gracefully waved her fingers back and forth across my eyes. . . 'Now lie down and relax.'

I lowered my dopey form onto the mattress, and lay there face up with my eyes closed, waiting for the horror to come. . . A faint image appeared. People standing over me, chanting. Their robed forms silhouetted against the daylight behind them as I am lowered into the grave. The walls are smooth. My body stiffens as it touches the squishy cold corpse. The waft of rotting flesh strikes my nose. They shut the lid. Blackness.

I scream: 'JESUS GET ME OUT OF HERE!!' I arch my back, flay my arms, and scream. I scream, and scream, and scream until my lungs burn. No air. I can't breathe. I stop breathing. My heart stops. Then, light…

'Fiona, there's an amazing light on you!' my therapist wonders at the beam of light that penetrates the room and floods my limp form.

* * *

AUSTRALIAN NAZI HAVEN

It is difficult to determine what had the most detrimental impact on my father's mental health: witnessing dogs tear people apart in a German camp, being forced by his psychopathic stepfather to kneel for hours on dried peas. . . or being molested by Catholic priests during catechism classes at Engadine BoysTown.

It took my father 40 years to locate his original birth certificate. The document records he was born in Bonn, Germany. Mitek Frank Rylko was raised by Helena Milewska, a Lithuanian woman who collaborated with the Gestapo during the war. 'Helen' escaped the Russians by hiding in a German refugee camp, and her father served two years hard labour in a Siberian work camp for refusing to disclose her whereabouts.

My step-grandfather, Peter Holowczak, was hiding in the same camp as Helen, seeking immigration to Canada. His plans were thwarted after Helen convinced the authorities that Peter was her husband and the father of the young boy in her care. That child was my father.

So, Helen and Peter Holowczak joined the great wave of Eastern European war criminals offered asylum in Australia through the IRO (International Refugee Organisation). Theirs is a familiar story, documented in Mark Aaron's book War Criminals Welcome: Australia, a Sanctuary for War Criminals Since 1945. Mark Aaron explained in interview:

> Most of the war criminals who settled in Australia were not Germans or Austrians. They were people from Central and Eastern Europe, from the Ukraine, the Baltic States, the central European countries of Czechoslovakia, Croatia and Serbia… These people had done deals with western intelligence organisations, having given them intelligence were then secreted or allowed to go to third countries like Australia…[428]

Helen Holowczak & my father in a refugee camp

The Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Jerusalem has a classification system whereby they rate (from A to F) how cooperative a country is with the process of locating, investigating and trying Nazi war criminals. Australia is ranked F - the least cooperative. In 1999, the Simon Wiesenthal Centre declared Australia a haven for 'holocaust perpetrators and mass murderers' and demanded an investigation into Operation Matchbox, following the declassification of Australian government papers.[429]

My father was issued an Australian birth certificate in September 1962. This documents that Peter and Helen Holowczak married in Bathurst on 3 October 1949. The Holowczaks spent their initial days in a refugee camp near Bathurst, a country town situated north-west of Sydney. Bathurst Migrant Camp opened in May 1948 and closed in April 1952 and held up to 10,000 transient migrants at a time. A Polish Club was founded at the camp, indicating most interns were Polish. A similar camp was established at Parkes in NSW.

My father's Australian issued birth certificate documents that by September 1962, the Holowczaks resided at 14 McAlister Avenue in Engadine, a small suburb within the Sutherland Shire, south of Sydney. Many refugees settled in an area which ran from 'The Shire' to Wollongong. This group carried Slavic, Germanic, or Anglicised versions of their former surnames. They worked, attended orgies, raped children, and worshipped their pagan gods together just like they did in Nazi occupied Europe.

---

[428] ABC TV, Lateline, 21 May 2001.

[429] Ian Traynor, UK arranged transfer of Nazi scientists to Australia, The Guardian, 17 Aug 1999.

I grew up listening to 'Pop' entertaining me with stories about the 'olden days' in Poland, when he worked in 'the camp.'

'What did you do in the camp?' I asked excitedly.

'I trained the dogs.'

'What else did you do?'

'I killed the Jews.'

I was six. Who are the Jews? I puzzled, and what did they do wrong?

The location of 'the camp' was proudly displayed at the entrance to their Engadine house. A plaque decorated with the name 'LUBLIN' in a quaint folk-art style was fixed to their front wall.

Many inconsistencies and unexplained mysteries remain concerning my father's family history. Peter Holowczak despised Jews, yet some of my perpetrators he associated with claimed to be Jewish. So, either those perpetrators were lying to cover up their crimes, or a certain type of Jewish heritage was considered acceptable. I am not convinced the low IQ Lithuanian woman who raised him, who looked and behaved nothing like my high IQ family, is his mother, but suspect she stole my father as a prop to escape Europe. A few things make me suspect my paternal line contains some kind of hidden Jewish ancestry:

- My father used to tell people his mother was Jewish.
- John Gittinger told me my paternal line was 'Levite' which somehow qualified me for priestess Grande Dame candidacy.
- My real Polish grandfather once got drunk and told my cousin that his father, was Jewish. I doubt he would joke about being Jewish after living through the Holocaust and knowing the Nazis kidnapped his brother-in-law one night and murdered him in Auschwitz.
- My paternal great-grandfather taught the violin, a Jewish instrument.
- The Russian Jewish parents of my sister-in-law observed, my brothers were the spitting image of Eastern European Jews. Ashkenazi Jews were expelled from the Mediterranean and settled in Poland in the 12th century. Research indicates the Ashkenazi maternal line is mainly European, while the male line is predominantly middle eastern.

BOYSTOWN

I am a second-generation victim of ritual abuse at Engadine BoysTown, which was located next to St John Bosco church, and St John Bosco College. All three were an easy walk from McAlister Avenue. The Salesians of Don Bosco, an order of Catholic priests, established BoysTown in 1939 to house and educate troubled and orphaned boys. While claiming to train the boys in a range of trades, the only instructor was a butcher.

In 2002, Father Paul Gerard Barrett, priest and counsellor, was convicted of 100 accounts of pedophilia against six boys while vice-deputy principal at St John Bosco College in Engadine. The court heard Barrett photographed male and female students having sex. One of Barrett's victims, a 13-year-old male student, was lured by a female teacher. Barrett and the female teacher plastered the boy with alcohol before raping him. Police never charged the female teacher.

In 2008, Father Paul Raymond Evans was found guilty of 18 sex offences against seven boys committed while he worked at BoysTown in the 1970s and 1980s. Paul Evans was ordained as a Salesian Order priest in Regina Coeli Memorial Church in the nearby suburb of Beverly Hills where his relative, William Evans, was the first Parish Priest. Regina Coeli was built with donations from the US Army.

In 2012, police informed me a taskforce had been assigned to covertly investigate an Engadine BoysTown pedophile ring. Had this investigation been publicised, many more victims would have come forward, because that is the typical response to public exposure. Despite the secrecy, victims reported 247 Salesian priests to the federal Royal Commission, many of whom operated at St John Bosco College and Engadine BoysTown.

Engadine is wedged between a massive national park and 49,000 acres of bushland belonging to Holsworthy Barracks, an army base equipped with a military airport. Lucas Heights sits adjacent to Holsworthy and is the site of a 20-story underground CIA research facility and nuclear reactor. It is part of ANSTO (Australian Nuclear Science and Technology Organisation) which incorporated the CSIRO.

Peter Holowczak was friends with a fellow Slavic refugee also named Peter. I knew him as the 'dog breeder.' He lived on acreage near ANSTO in Lucas Heights. His house, a small asbestos box, was well hidden from the main road. The entrance to his sandy driveway off Old Illawarra Road was flanked by multiple signs nailed to trees and posts, warning trespassers to keep out and beware of his dogs. The property contained multiple sheds including a sawmill and dog kennels. A petite, fit dark-haired man, he trained Doberman and Rottweiler dogs, and sold dogs to the NSW police. Peter Holowczak purchased his Doberman dogs from this man. My family had two Doberman dogs from this breeder, so I know the quality of his dogs.

Helen was friends with another Lithuanian 'refugee' whose house was a short downhill walk away, in Fairview Avenue. Helen regularly attended Leonas Petrauskas' Engadine Medical Centre which was a short uphill walk.

Helen bore two sons in Australia and named them after their fathers. John, the only ginger-haired member of the family, was the bastard son of Helen's supervisor at the Wool Mill in Marrickville which was owned and run by the Scottish Vicars family. Helen's youngest son, David Ronald, was destined to be named 'Romance' until her Polish friend Raya Spakz convinced Helen that Australians do not name children or houses after literal events the way Polish people do. Peter thought David was his son and spoilt him until he left home at age 30 years. He knew John was not his and treated him indifferently. But he so resented and despised my father, he raped, beat, and tormented Dad until the kid left home at 13. Peter typically taunted my father while dishing up cabbage soup for dinner: 'Meat for you, David... meat for you, John…' Then he turned to my father and hissed in Polish, 'And none for you - you son of a pig!'

My real grandfather was not a pig. I travelled to Jelena Gora in Poland in 1990 to meet him and to my relief discovered Mitek Rylko to be everything the Holowczaks were not. My real 'Jadek' was smart, witty, ethical, classy, socially respected, and handsome. During the war he sided with the Polish resistance, instead of raping and murdering Jews in a death camp as Holowczak did.

I was 15 years old when my family realised Peter Holowczak and his vile surname were alien to us. The bombshell was dropped during lunch, following the birth of my baby brother. Peter could not stomach the honour of having my new brother named after him.

'Frank,' Peter began, 'I don't like the way you treat Fiona.'

‘But you treated me like that,’ Dad huffed.

‘Yes, but you are Fiona’s father. I am not your real father.’

My father was nothing like Peter Holowczak and did not treat me the way the Holowczaks treated him. Unlike the Holowczaks, my father never sexually or ritually abused us. Dad suffers complex PTSD and DID due to his horrendous childhood. Consequently, he became violent after he started self-medicating with alcohol. On rare occasions Dad dissociated and supported my allegations against the Holowczaks and their pedophile network. He once blurted out to my mother in front of someone, ‘Everything Fiona says about Satanism and Sydney is true, but we just don’t tell her for her own good!

Peter Holowczak was ritually murdered at Easter 1991. When Police delivered my father the solemn news, he began cheering and dancing around his front yard, singing loudly to the Wizard of Oz tune:

Ding-dong! The bastard’s dead!
The bastard’s dead!
The bastard’s dead!
Ding-dong! The fucking bastard’s D-E-E-E-E-A-D!

Peter’s death certificate says he committed suicide by hanging. Yet Helen told my mother a different story: A group of men arrived at her home that morning and told her to go shopping. Upon returning home she found Peter hanging by a noose in their chicken pen.

‘YOU KILLED HIM!’ Helen screamed at me in her lounge room following Peter’s death. Uncle John, Aunty Anita, my mother, and my future husband were present. I was there to confront Helen about ‘Pop’s’ sexual abuse of me throughout my childhood.

‘But Mum,’ Uncle John tried to explain, ‘Fiona wasn’t even here when dad died!’

‘YOU KILLED HIM!’ she insisted.

What Nanna meant was, Peter was killed because of me. The cult killed Peter because he drove me away from Sydney. The cult had regular access to me from age 18 months until my parents moved 1000 kilometers north of Sydney when I was 12 years old after which I visited Sydney at least once per year until my 16th birthday. I briefly lived with the Holowczaks during my first year of college but moved out after Peter began bullying me. I transferred to an interstate college and never looked back.

‘Plain Vanilla’

Peter Holowczak’s hanging triggered my implicit memories of incest. My ordeal began with two weeks of unprecedented vertigo and insomnia followed by dissociation during which I swallowed a bottle of sleeping pills. I had never been suicidal before and had no intention of harming myself. The incident threw me into the mental health system where my memories surfaced spontaneously without the use of hypnosis.

From my earliest memory, Helen Holowczak made me take baths with Peter and sleep in his room so he could rape me. Peter bribed me into silence by offering me Quick-Eze digestive lollies. He would also let me play with things from Nanna’s display cabinet, including a little tea-set which was made up of burgundy apples with faces on them and a miniature plastic tree with autumn-coloured leaves.

I was three when Peter locked me in an old refrigerator in his detached garage, the type that could only be opened from the outside. He threw cockroaches and other bugs on me, closed the door, and laughed as I screamed in terror.

On many occasions, Peter threatened to crush my little fingers in a vintage washing machine mangle.

Peter Holowczak owned a Doberman dog that he commanded in German. The dog was bred by the man who lived on Old Illawarra Road and wore a thick black leather collar around its neck with the name 'SATAN' stamped on it in capital letters. Peter made me get on all fours while the dog raped me from behind. He masturbated while he watched this. On one occasion, in Peter's bedroom, Peter sodomised my younger brother while the dog raped me. Pop's favourite game was hunt and rape. He would tell me to run and hide, then set 'Satan' the Doberman onto me. On one occasion I hid in between garage shelving, the dog found and barked crazily at me. I had to hide well or else the dog would rape me, just like the Nazis trained their dogs to rape Jewish women. Peter said he learnt to train dogs while working in the Nazi camps.

When I threatened to tell my parents what Pop was doing to me, he filled their concrete laundry tub with water, stood me on a wooden crate before the basin, grabbed my head by the hair and shoved it underwater. He held my head under until I almost drowned, then ripped it up again and hissed, 'This is what will happen to you if you tell -…' before plunging my head back under.

I was seven when Peter shoved my head into their outside unplumbed toilet. I vomited at the stench of raw sewerage while he sodomised me.

I was eight when he inserted a dove's head inside my vagina and held it there while it writhed and died.

I was eight when Peter put me into a box that lay in a hole in ground beneath his house, the same location he pretended to bury the neighbour's son three years earlier. He placed me in the box and told me I was going to die there, and then covered it up and left me there for hours.

I was 11 when Peter took me up his back yard, behind the sheds that housed his bees, chickens, and pigeons. He showed me a huge pile of dead bees at the back. He pointed to something in the pile and told me to take a closer look. I leaned over the pile of dead bees when - he pushed me into it. Dead bees went all over me and through my clothes. I screamed hysterically while Peter laughed. Suddenly the back neighbour yelled over the fence at Peter, 'What are you doing to her?!' Peter lied to the neighbour and said that I fell into the pile of bees.

I vividly recall the day the incest ended. I had a loud fight with Peter, yelled at him that Leonas Petrauskas ruled he was never to touch me again. Jan, the mother of my best friend Fiona LeCornu-Levett, interrupted and witnessed the argument when she arrived at the Engadine house to collect me. On our way to her Macquarie Fields home she repeatedly asked me, 'What was that about?' but I evaded the subject.

In 2018, the NSW state government determined on the balance of probabilities that Peter Holowczak did violently rape and physically assault me throughout my childhood. Victim's Services awarded me the maximum compensation amount - $10,000.

Luciferian Ritual Abuse

My memories of ritual abuse began with a vivid visual flashback of Peter Holowczak and his neighbour ritually murdering a three-year-old blonde boy on a table in the front room of 12 McAlister Avenue. The neighbour's obese wife went insane and 'committed suicide' following years of miscarriages. Peter placed the child's body in a coffin made of rough pine panels in a shallow mock grave beneath the west side of the Holowczak's house. I did not realise at age five that they would later move the body.

I attended rituals in the national park bushland surrounding the Sutherland Shire, in hidden basements, Freemason lodges (including Kidman's lodge at 317 Pacific Highway, North Sydney) and multiple Roman Catholic churches including Engadine BoysTown, St John Bosco church, Regina Coeli Memorial Church in Beverly Hills, and a wooden Catholic church that used to exist east of Engadine train station. Jesuit-trained Leonas Petrauskas presided over these rituals in which babies, children and adults were murdered in honor of their gods including Moloch/Molech, Baal, Dagon, Imhotep, Horus, Anubis, Thoth and Isis. My abusers seemed to have a god for every occasion, but Lucifer was lord of them all.

MOTTO = "HE WHO SWORDS & CONQUERS FOR BAAL" CREED
F LUCIT-ER
NIMRODs
HORUS BAAL
chalice
"He"
Eye of Horus
"Swords"
B
"Baal"
plate

Luciferian Creed: 'He Who Swords and Conquers for Baal'

I was six when the cult taught me what would happen if I disclosed their identities and activities to anyone. I was taken into the depths of the bushland. There I was forced to watch the cult chain each of a 'traitor's' four limbs to a different vehicle. The four vehicles drove off in different directions as the man screamed then exploded into pieces.

On my sixth birthday, I was dressed in a new red, long dress and my hair was gathered in a part ponytail tied with a red ribbon. My uncle drove Nana to collect me from my home at the end of Virginia Street, Padstow, and took me to national park land situated on the coast, between the Sutherland Shire and Kiama. I recall subtropical looking trees and foliage, and a picnic table laden with sweets and coloured cordial. A group of blonde children were gathered around the table. The cordial was laced with drugs. It was daylight when I drank the cordial. It was dark when I awoke naked, strapped to the picnic table. Men and women dressed in black robes took turns at creeping up to me and whispering chants and the names of demonic entities into my ear.

Later that night, a group of men from the local hunting clubs arrived in pick-up trucks, dressed in caps and gingham shirts, carrying hunting and surveillance gear. The children and I were stripped naked. I was taken aside and instructed to take the children and hide them. Their lives were my responsibility, and if I failed - they would be killed. They painted something on my back before I briefed the children best I could. I had just turned six, but my mental age was far older. I desperately told the children they were to run for their lives, stay as quiet as possible, and find somewhere far away to hide.

A gun was fired to mark the start of the hunt. I shouted at the kids to run. I drove them from behind like a cattle dog and pushed them up over the first hill. We were halfway up the second hill when I heard gunfire. Kids began dropping around me. When I realised all hope was gone – I took off. I dissociated from the pain and ran for hours and miles over hill and dale, through the wild fauna. A search party did not find me until the following afternoon.

During the same visit, Nana dressed me in a what I called my 'Spanish dress.' Nanna made it, along with many of my frilly Candy Girl outfits. The dress was made of a fine white tulle with tiny red polka dots. The skirt layers were edged with thin red ribbon. Nanna took me to St John Bosco Church. On our way out at the end of the service, Nanna showed me off to the priest who took my face in his hand, commented on my being a pretty one, and told Nanna he'd like to see me later.

We returned to the church after Nanna fed Pop his typical Polish lunch of rye bread, pickles and slices of ox tongue sausage. Nanna walked me down the church aisle and to a door to the back right of the altar which led into the vestry. Nanna left me alone with the chubby old man. 'Do you want some Candy?' he asked me in his accent which was American or Irish; I couldn't tell the difference at age six. He brought me a sweet jar full of red and white bonbons. Of course, I did. The priest undressed as I sucked on the sweet. He removed his green sash and white robe to reveal a white singlet and y-front grandpa underwear. Then he lifted me into a wooden bench or table sat beneath a window, pulled down my knickers, and performed oral sex on me. Then he raped me.

This was the same priest I met in the cavern system beneath BoysTown. We reached the area via a secret door in one of the original BoysTown buildings. It might have been a kitchen or the butcher training workshop. A door at the back of some kind of larder or storeroom led to a set of stone or concrete steps. In the main ritual area, the priest sat in a row of Luciferian priests who presided over the ritual involving a young blonde boy being beaten to a pulp, and a lit cauldron.

I suspect the cavern system beneath Engadine BoysTown connects to the Holsworthy one, but can't clearly recall. The massive cavern system beneath Holsworthy links to ANSTO in Lucas Heights. I surmise this is a man-made extension of a natural system, constructed to covertly transport and store artillery during war.

This cavern system houses multiple ritual sites and altars. At the Holsworthy / ANSTO end it contains Dagon altar and pool rooms. At the BoysTown end sits a four-ways intersection, plus a large bronze statue of Baal. The bull sits upright and holds a bowl filled with oil. A furnace beneath the bull heats the oil. At age 14, I was subjected to an abortion performed by Leonas Petrauskas with the assistance of his daughter Krista whom he trained as a lay nurse. They placed the young foetus in the boiling oil.

BAAL
Nurse
Dr Mark

In the summer of 1975, I witnessed a 12-year-old girl named Michelle gang raped by local BoysTown priests and hanged to death on a gum tree on the rocky bank of the Weir, a dammed section of Woronora River, next to Engadine. Michelle was slim and wore her long dark hair in a side ponytail. She was dressed in a red t-shirt and white shorts. Michelle was kidnapped as she walked along a major road, by a white car containing men whom she knew and trusted. I was seated in the back. I saw them offer her a laced sweet from a white paper bag. I was dragged off into the bushes and raped by a 30-year-old priest named Stephen. As this was an unsanctioned assault, the perpetrator would pay for this with his life. I later recognised Michelle's naked body hanging from a meat hook in a cold room on the grounds of Holsworthy Barracks.

At age eight I suffocated during a rebirth ceremony at the abandoned Garrawarra Cemetery at Waterfall, south of Engadine. The cult lowered me onto a rotting corpse in an old grave and closed the lid. They chanted from the Book of the Dead as I screamed. I depleted the oxygen and passed out. I awoke in Sutherland Hospital on a metal table in a small internal room clad from floor to ceiling in blue tiles. An oxygen mask covered my mouth. Three people dressed in shower hats were silhouetted against a blinding overhead light.

'We nearly lost you,' a nurse cooed. 'Mummy's here.'

Mummy! I glanced at the woman in the doorway to the right of my feet. You're not my mother! It was the red-headed wife of Ken, the fat Engadine policeman. Dr Petrauskas convinced hospital staff to release me into the counterfeit's care.

When I was eight, Peter Holowczak forced me to watch the dog breeder tie down a female Doberman dog that I was fond of, chop its newborn pups in half, and chop the mother's back legs off while it was still alive. They told me the same would happen to me and my brother if I ever disclosed. Peter dragged me along the ground by my hair and threw me into a cage, from where I was forced to watch the dog breeder fed human remains to his hungry dogs.

At eight years of age, I witnessed Leonas Petrauskas clean up after Prime Minister Paul Keating raped and murdered a five-year-old blonde boy on a beach at Kurnell. Keating panicked and buried the boy in a shallow grave. The following morning, police cordoned off the area while Petrauskas spoke with Keating who was dressed casually in board shorts. Petrauskas ordered me to dig up the body. Then he wrote a death certificate saying the boy was poisoned by a blue-ringed octopus.

Very Secluded beach.
South Sydney – Sutherland Shire?
Paul Keating
Dr Mark called in to write a report.
Dr Mark w/ Keating talked about a blue-ringed octopus
Dr Mark instructed me to dig up the body.
Boy victim approx 6 yrs old?
Put in zipped body bag.
Me age 8
I'm kneeling over it

At age nine, I witnessed Leonas' daughter Krista Petrauskas seduce a curly blonde-haired surfer into the bushes at a beach near Kurnell. While having sex with the man, Krista drugged him using a hypodermic needle. Later that evening, the Cult ritually murdered the young man on the beach. They skewered him with a stake and burnt him alive.

I was nine when I witnessed multiple murders at the Caltex Oil Refinery at Kurnell. There I was lined up with a small group of children in front of a factory incinerator. Men threw the children alive into the furnace where they burnt to death. I was at the end of the line and made to think I would also be burnt. My friend was second last in the line. They threw her into the flames. I leapt after her, to save her, but one of the men grabbed me.

In the summer of 1984, I witnessed the red-headed wife of Ken the fat Engadine policeman lure a 15-year-old boy into her car at a south Sydney beach, probably Cronulla. The boy had sandy-coloured hair and was dressed in board shorts and a pale blue t-shirt which had the distinct 'Billabong' wave logo on its breast. The boy was tied to a stake and burnt to Moloch at the dog breeder's property on Old Illawarra Road in Lucas heights.

Ivan Milat, the notorious serial killer who ritually murdered backpackers, was a 'cleaner.' He and the Slavic dog-breeder did the dirty work, namely cleaning up and disposing of bodies. The bodies were usually fed to dogs. Any remains the dogs did not eat were dissolved in a large concrete bath in a shed on his property. Other bodies were cremated. These people dared not leave traces of evidence, upon threat of their lives. These two men regularly associated with Peter Holowczak. I was six years old when they forced me to watch them feed live children through an industrial mincer. The victims' remains were caught in a blue wading pool constructed of metal poles and plastic canvas. They threw me into the pool of blood and sludge at the end. I was 10 when they threw children off a cliff in the nearby bushland. I forget how old I was when they sliced a nine-year-old Down Syndrome girl in half on the dog-breeder's bandsaw.

BEACH PARTY!
KURNELL
DANCING TO DRUMS
EACH MOVE HAS SPECIFIC MEANING.
"HONEY TRAP"
SNAKE
SLUT
SURFER
Peeled like potato skin
CANNIBALISM
CHOICE MORSEL
VERILITY IMPARTED
SKEWERED ON POLE
I HATE HIPPIE DRUMS!

IVAN MILAT
MUMMY!!!!
LUCIFERIAN HALLOWEEN RITUAL
DOG BREEDER'S PROPERTY
ME age 6
Threw me in the pool of mince

VALIDATION

After going public about these crimes, I was contacted by people who corroborated my memories to varying degrees. Police raided the Holowczak's old house at 14 McAlister Avenue after it sold. During police investigations, the neighbour who owned the house next door at number 16 informed police that he had grown up in Engadine and exclaimed that much of what I described in my Candy Girl document fit his knowledge of the local area. He told police the dog breeder almost nabbed him and his mate as they rode past his house as children.

I was also contacted by Dr John Melov's son Peter who supported my testimony on social media. Peter Melov told me he personally had no abuse memories. So, my right hemisphere knowingly asked him one thing: 'Did you own a Doberman dog.' At first, he could not recall his family owning a dog. I listened knowingly as it dawned on him:

'Wait a minute!' he gasped. 'We did have a dog! How did I forget that?'

'Was it a Doberman?'

'Yes!'

More circumstantial evidence came from Stephen Masters who grew up in the same area. Stephen and his mate were shot at by Ivan Milat in the bushland behind the dog-breeder's Lucas Heights property. Stephen surmised no-one would have noticed the guns shots because locals would assume the noise came from the nearby rifle range. Further, Stephen Masters purchased a dog from the same breeder who relocated to 6th Avenue West Hoxton following the government reclamation of his property to build New Illawarra Road. It was Stephen who remembered the dog breeder's name was 'Peter' and that he bred dogs for the NSW Police Force.

Pete Melov
November 30 at 9:01pm ·

Fiona Barnett, and the Oz WIKILEAKS connection..

and how my FATHERS business partners, abused raped and murdered ...children...

MY Father was named in this statement..26.22 mins..in she clearly names my Father..

Boys town was regularly investigated for child abuse, nothing ever happened..

I have had major problems, with my fathers "business" partners, Darcy Grey, an alcoholic doctor, who had major personality disorders...extremely unstable..and "
Leo Petrauskis, came to dinner at our house dozens of times, he never talked to me, was aloof, and my father spent decades with this man.

I also had child molesters working in the school, my father never went through with any investigation. '
I complained about the child molesting teachers over and over..nothing was done....
Hundreds of boys, or thousands were molested..

I have just found out that this Woman, was around at the same time, as I left Engadine..

I grew up in Engadine, I have personal experience with everything she is talking about, except the abuse..on me
I have no memory of abuse, on me..

Again, the Medical centre she refers to, was my fathers business, with Darcy Grey, Leo [Mark] Petraskus..

I will be contacting Fiona personally..

This will answer alot of my questions about my entire family,this is why I have never got a;long with them..

Now that I think about what she is saying, this seems to fit, as we all as kids "knew" things went on at Boys Town, and I actually remember Darcy Grey, driving along, throwing empty beer cans, driving along..he was a doctor..

I have put this in a commercial setting, to let you know, as yet, I have not talked to Fiona, this would answer alot about why, things happened, that werent addressed..and why, we had a house, right next to Darcy Grey in the middle of the bush very near, to the place [I have been there, as a bushwalking kid..]

My parents knew alot of politicians, Rex Jackson, and numerous others..;;
And guess what Rex, looked after....
Children.. jailed for corruption for 10 years, got out on "good behaviour" after 3....

Minister for Youth and Community Services

From May 1976 to October 1981, Jackson held the post of Minister of the Department of Youth and Community Services (DoYCS), the former name for the Department of Family and Community Services (FaCS).[4] Under his tenure, the Department began funding youth refuges located in NSW, including Caretakers Cottage, Young People's Refuge and Taldamunde Youth Services.[8]

Talk about ...Rabbit holes..? then after he comes out of "jail", his wife dies within 5 weeks, and he goes and gets an icecream van..to sell icecream, to...children....

SORRY, This is so deep, for me, and this needs to be put in a public medium.. thanks Fiona, it looks like this is ALL true..lifes full of knowledge, from knowledge you grow!...it explains really , why my "father" was so distant..he was hiding...heaps..very sick individual..

Lets get going, this is just got to go...!
Join a credit union, start spending money in businesses that create change, crowd fund change, and stop doing things that dont change..this

Fiona Barnett Candy Girl Documentary Part 1 of 2 / Satanic Ritual Abuse Child Satanic Ritual Abuse
YOUTUBE.COM

SYDNEY UNI SATANISTS

My earliest memory of Sydney University is of peering through transparent white curtains to a skyline of the city, from a lecturer's office in the Chemistry faculty. I also recall a research lab in a basement with a high thin window with bars. I was six and lying in a dentist chair, being tortured by a very old man. He pulled out teeth and then put them back in again, without anaesthetic. I recall being in a dingy room with a window high on the wall – like a basement. The dentist had a thick foreign accent, his dark grey hair was slicked back with oil, and he had a v shaped hairline. His assistant was a psychology student dressed in a white lab coat. She had dark hair. I later encountered her in a post graduate class at Bond University. When I said I recognised her, she dismissed this with, 'I have one of those faces.' No, she does not. I recognised her. She is Serbian but Anglicised her name. She is now a registered psychologist who works with my perpetrators in Sydney.

Following this incident, I was disturbed by a Sesame Street film clip of a child visiting a dentist who told the child he had 20 strong white teeth. I was again disturbed in my late teens, by an educational poster in my dentist's waiting room informing the reader that if a tooth is knocked out, store it in liquid because it could be successfully planted into its socket.

LUCIFERIAN
HALLOWEEN RITUAL

Origins of the 'skull and crossed bones.'

I watched Vice Chancellor John Ward butcher children during a Halloween ritual inside a University of Sydney building. Dressed in a bright red Halloween robe, he skinned a child alive and made a skull and crossed bones.

OTO RITUAL CRUCIFIXION

I was nine when I witnessed Antony Kidman preside over the ritual flaying of a young blonde boy in the Great Hall. Nicole Kidman was 11 years old and seated in the front row during the murder. This was an OTO themed ritual murder, with Kidman and four others dressed in camp, theatrical robes coloured according to the Eastern Star pentagram which dominates Freemasonry and its related cults.

SYDNEY UNI
5
Antony Kidman
ME 9

SYDNEY GRANDE DAME IDENTIFIED

Researcher Steve McMurray located the identity of the Sydney Grande Dame I knew as 'Veronica' or 'Ronnie.' Here is the description I provided Steve:

- Tall, attractive, slender, with red hair and white skin.
- Extremely intelligent and academic.
- Private school educated.
- Kind with moral integrity.
- Good at the arts: music, history, English and languages.
- Associated with Sancta Sophia College, University of Sydney.
- Graduated University of Sydney.
- Her parents owned a property and horses west of Sydney.
- I could not decide whether she was a schoolteacher, University of Sydney lecturer, or supervised the students at a girls' student college.
- She died during a ritual at St Mary's Cathedral when she was 45 and I was age 14 years.

Armed with this list to guide his search, Steve McMurray identified Patricia Anne Conlon (nee Carden). I last visited Anne Conlon in her Sancta Sophia living quarters when I was 14 years old. Her dorm featured a lounge area, ensuite, and a four-post bed. We ate in the communal dining room where Anne passed me off as her niece. During that visit, Anne told me she had been ‘discovered’ and was wanted for ‘treason.’ It was time for her to go, she told me. I begged her, ‘Don’t leave me with those men’ but she thought I could fend for myself since I had just completed my training in the USA. Anne explained to me that she had lost everything, was tired of hurting children, and had nothing to live for. She made a blood pact with me and made me swear to go through with the necessary ritual. She bequeathed to me her black onyx jewellery set which was subsequently stored in Nanna's bedroom.

'Veronica' aka Patricia Anne Conlon

Veronica Grande Dame

My drawing of 'Veronica' from implicit memory – before discovering her true identity.

I accompanied Anne Conlon on her final round of goodbyes during which she announced her decision and my succession. This was ill received by Antony Kidman who coveted the position for his daughter Nicole. I heard from two independent sources that Nicole is male. That, plus her unimpressive IQ, would have rendered her ineligible for Grande Dame nomination.

Volatile Rosalind Croucher also threw a tantrum at the news. She screamed that I was too young and demanded to know why I was chosen. She stopped mid-sentence and began to choke. She then collapsed to the floor, gasping for breath.

'That's why I chose her,' Anne concluded, and we left.

Anne Conlon and Janelle Kidman had associated for years due to the close relationship between their husbands. So, we took tea with Janelle Kidman whom I despised.

'Fiona has just returned from America,' Anne tried to make polite conversation.

'Oh really,' Janelle feigned interest. 'How did that go.'

Suddenly, Janelle's teacup exploded into pieces.

Anne chastised me as we drove away. I waited until she calmed down before I added,

'Yeah, but it was funny.'

She smiled. 'Yes, it was.'

Anne smiled once more, during a visit to a horse property north-west of Sydney, when I made a joke about her long chestnut hair being the same colour as the horse.

The Ritualistic Transfer of Power

Fritz Springmeier described the Grande Dame position as follows:

> As a child of the Illuminati progressed through its programming, three people had oversight over its programming: its Grande Mother, its Grande Dame, and the Programmer... The Illuminati method for killing a Grande Dame and passing her spiritual power on is done with reverence. No blood is to be spilled out of respect for the elderly woman who gives up her life willingly. At death, the last breath is inhaled by the replacement to transfer the power... the Grande Dames, are often veiled in ritual and would wear robes with different coloured lining. The different colours of linings show the different grades.

Anne Conlon and I rode in mournful silence to St Mary's Cathedral in Sydney City. The Cathedral was packed full of dignitaries, politicians, entertainers and priests including Cardinal George Pell. The cathedral doors were heavily guarded by NSW police. The opulent evening ritual featured Bach organ music and a full choir. There I drew in Anne's last breath and collapsed to the floor behind the altar, devastated. It was acceptable for me to show emotion on this special occasion because my grief proved the 'good bond' between a Grande Dame and her apprentice. I quickly composed myself and strode numbly down the cathedral aisle to eerie Baroque music I now hate.

BACKLASH

With Anne Conlon gone, I was fair game - just as I predicted. Antony Kidman took his rage out on me at a post-production party hosted at his Neutral Bay home on 27 October 1984. John Bell had produced King Lear at his Nimrod Theatre Company, with a cast of Australia's finest actors including Judy Davis and Colin Friels. It was the night before my 15th birthday. Leonas Petrauskas dropped me in front of Kidman's house and told me to ring the doorbell and say ‘Starchild is here.’ Bruce Spence answered the door. I was led through a room full of noise, alcohol and people snorting cocaine on a coffee table in the corner.

After the guests left, John Bell and Antony Kidman raped me in the loungeroom. Then they near drowned me in the pool. Kidman held my arms from behind while Bell danced like a monkey and plunged my head under with his foot. The following morning, I awoke in what looked like a basement. I was naked and tied to a chair. Kidman struck me repeatedly across the head and screamed: ‘Do you remember now?!’ His 17-year-old daughter Nicole Kidman leaned against the wall with her arms crossed, smirking at me. Later, Janelle curtly handed me my freshly laundered clothes.

ROSALIND CROUCHER

Rosalind Croucher studied law at Sydney University and specialised in private property law. She served as Acting Dean of the Sydney Law School, Deputy Chair of the University of Sydney Academic Board in 1999, Dean of the Macquarie University Law School, Chair of the Council of Australian Law Deans, Vice-President of the International Academy of Estate and Trust Law, and President of the Australian Law Reform Commission.

In 2017, Rosalind Croucher commenced her seven-year tenure as President of the Australian Human Rights Commission. Her first act in that role was to defend a pedophile who lied on his job application to a major bank by not declaring his criminal conviction for child pornography. The bank consequently terminated his employment within the three-month probationary period. Croucher declared the termination a violation of the pedophile’s human rights. Rosalind Croucher’s pro-pedophile stance is consistent with her violent sexual and physical abuse of me as a minor.

ORDER OF THE EAGLE RITUAL: BATHURST 1985

Rosalind Croucher organised the Luciferian ritual held in Bathurst City Hall on 6 October 1985, during the weekend of the famous Bathurst 1000 car race. It coincided with the birthday of Richie Benaud, Australian sporting legend and television commentator. Leonas Petrauskas drove me and a blonde 15-year-old boy named Thomas to the event. Thomas was another ‘chosen one’ in training at Regina Coeli in Beverly Hills. We sat in the front row of the upstairs mezzanine in the hall which was packed with robed VIPs including the Bathurst Mayor, St Stanislaus College priests, and NSW police. The massive population increase in Bathurst due to the car race disguised the crowd who congregated for this event.

A small group of robed Luciferians stood on the black stage: Rosalind Croucher, Richie Benaud, Kim Beazley Snr, Bruce Spence, and NSW Police Commissioner John Avery. A purple satin banner hung at the back of the stage. It was a rectangular shape and bore the Seal of Solomon. A large encircled spread eagle stood in the middle of the banner, its head locked to its right, its wings and legs were outstretched. The bird’s wings and claws fit three different invisible occult symbols: an encircled pentagram, an encircled hexagram, and the Freemason compass and square. Each banner corner featured a symbol inside a blue circle.

The five priests presided over the ritual caesarean of a heavily pregnant woman and the butchering of her baby. They ceremonially prepared the baby body and blood in a gold chalice and plate which were distributed as communion. This is the Luciferian black mass on which the Roman Catholic mass is based.

ORDER OF THE EAGLE RITUAL BANNER

(SEAL OF SOLOMON)

Order of the Eagle ritual banner, freehand drawn from implicit memory, ruled lines added afterwards.

SYMBOLOGY EXPLAINED

1. Rod of Asclepius (top left) A serpent entwined around a pole was the original symbol of modern medicine. The Rx symbol that doctors write on prescriptions stands for the Eye of Horus. The original Hippocratic Oath was sworn by pagan gods including Asclepius.
2. Trident (top right) or Psi, the Greek symbol for Psychology or Mind Control.
3. Delta (bottom left) Triangle divided into three triangles, represents the satanic trinity.
4. Cleopatra's Needle (bottom right) a circle dissected by a vertical line that began in its middle and exited its base. It is the 2D representation of a hypodermic needle penetrating a cell. The 3D equivalent is the obelisk which is meant to be a giant hypodermic needle and not a phallic symbol. Hence the name 'Cleopatra's needle.' It represents genetic engineering, cloning, transhumanism - true Alchemy.

‘You’re up,’ Petrauskas whispered into my ear. I made my way to the stage.

‘Let’s take you down a notch,’ Croucher smirked at me. A decaying rat was forced into my face and I was ordered to take a bite. I briefly hesitated but complied. Then Bruce Spence violently raped me on the altar in front of the crowd. After this I took a seat in the front row and watched a group of naked, hypnotised children line up at the front of the stage. Spence decapitated them with a samurai sword, and the crowd broke out into a frenzied bloody orgy. Kim Beazley held a decapitated head of a girl to my face and smirked, ‘Take ye eat.’ Finally, Rosalind Croucher urinated in my mouth while I was gang raped.

‘You flinched!’ Petrauskas yelled at me backstage.

‘No,’ I lied.

He led me to a back room to the right of the stage where Rosalind Croucher stood next to a mobile defibrillation unit. Petrauskas told me to sit in the chair. I obeyed. Then Croucher angrily began electrocuting me to the head.

‘Okay, that’s enough!’ Petrauskas warned her.

Croucher trembled with rage and continued. She had organised the entire event as an act of revenge against me.

‘Stop!’ Petrauskas yelled, ‘She is government property! You will get in big trouble!’

But Croucher persisted.

I snapped.

‘Stand down, Soldier!’ Petrauskas ordered.

Too late. I grabbed Croucher by the throat, lifted her off the floor, robotically turned my head toward Petrauskas and coolly stated: ‘Leave us.’

ESCAPING THE CULT

Three key incidents provided legitimate grounds for my leaving the cult. The first was Kidman and Bell’s rape at their post-production party, the second was Croucher’s violent assault at Bathurst, and the third was when the ‘Light Man’ turned up mid-ritual. The latter incident in a basement beneath one of the churches, either Regina Coeli or St John Bosco; I get confused because their street layout is similar, but I err in favour of Beverly Hills due to its larger size. Whichever church it was, there was a home opposite it owned by a Christian family. The cult called genuine praying Christians ‘Lights.’ The cult held meetings to devise strategies for driving out the ‘Lights’ because their Christian presence and prayer spiritually disrupted the impact of the cult’s witchcraft.

Large Catholic churches contain a second altar which sits directly beneath the public altar in an underground crypt. The stone crypt floor was lined with pews. I stood behind the altar, facing a room full of robed cult members. A baby lay face up on the altar, its head pointed to my right. I raised the ceremonial knife when – suddenly, white light flooded the room. I froze amidst the pandemonium of cult members diving beneath the pews, screaming, clasping their ears, and clawing at the floor to escape.

‘Fiona,’ a voice spoke out of the light, ‘Do you choose to do this?’

‘NO!’ I screamed and dropped the knife. ‘JESUS, HELP!!!’

I fled. The usual guards were gone from the front of the church. I ran down the street and through the front door of the Christian family’s home where they sat in their loungeroom watching television. Their faces looked like stunned mullets as I, fully robed and breathless, burst into their presence.

‘PRAY!’ I gasped and collapsed to my knees.

The Luciferian cult has its own judicial system called the Grande Council which meet to determine serious issues such as whether a cult member ought to be put to death. I was not present for the hearings against Peter Holowczak or Antony Kidman, but their deaths have the tell-tale signs of a Grande Council determination.

The Grande Council convened in the University of Sydney MacLaurin Hall. I was called to plead my case for leaving the cult. My desire to leave placed the cult in an awkward position since they could not simply replace a Grande Dame. Any new Grande Dame must draw in the dying breath of the previous one, and I had already taken that gig. The cult could not simply kill me, because I had to surrender my life willingly. I was unwilling. Besides, I was still a 'National Asset' as Gittinger said, in which governments jointly invested many millions. If it costs the government $1 million to train a regular soldier, imagine the cost of training a MK-DELTA child soldier.

My defence consisted of a scathing attack on Antony Kidman and Rosalind Croucher and how they had placed their personal hatred of me before the collective good. If anyone ought to serve penance – they should. The cult had promised me the Grande Dame position carried a level of respect, privilege and self-determination – none of which had been afforded me. My trump card was the 'Light Man' incident. I spoke of how from my earliest memory, the cult taught me that 'The Order' and their gods were omniscient, omnipresent, and omnipotent. I challenged them:

'My whole life you have told me that Lucifer is the most powerful being! Oh, yeah? Then who was that?!! WHO WAS THAT IN THE BASEMENT?!'

Silence.

'Until you can answer my question,' I pointed at the ceiling, 'I'm with HIM!'

They had no answer.

Kidman broke the silence. 'And what will you do now, without us?'

I had plenty of natural talent to fall back on, I argued.

'Like what,' Kidman asked.

I listed off my interests and abilities.

'There's a piano,' he motioned to the nearby instrument. 'Play something.'

I began to play. Kidman approached, watched me for a moment – then slammed the piano lid onto my hands. He leant on my trapped fingers, plunged his contorted face in mine, and spat: 'You will NEVER amount to ANYTHING without US!'

True to his word, the cult has harassed me my entire life, thwarted my every attempt to find a place in society, sabotaged my every interest, passion, and pursuit, until I eventually ran out of options and energy. But there is one thing I succeeded at. I wrote this book.

* * *

IT HAPPENED

'It happened. Trust me I believe you. My family grew up with them on the North Shore, tight with the Kidmans. I have been hearing about these 'parties' they would throw since I was a child. And then much more in depth as an adult. And the abuse carried through. Very rich elite German 'Nazi' Sycophants. Powerful people in high positions. The North Shore was rife with them. Research the controlling interest her family had and still have in Australian land monopoly. Her Father ran a child mental asylum on the North Shore. Perfect access. As I am sure you are already well aware. Stay Strong Fiona. You are not alone. You are a brave catalyst, and a necessary one. People have gone to their graves affected and permanently damaged by this heinous debauched, North Shore ring. Thank you for shedding public light on the issue. Maybe Antonia would speak out. She always seemed less cold. Good luck. Keep fighting.'

Kat Kennedy Here's the deal. Fiona cannot be telling a lie. I have heard this story from my own family. My grandfather was a Nazi Satanist. I only survived by not living in the same state as him. My girl cousins were less fortunate and one of them was monarched. There is no way she could have told the exact same story without ever meeting or knowing Fiona or these other women. She is in the hospital fighting for her life and her lungs after being gassed as a child.

Fiona, you should not have to be defending yourself at this point. You have spoken the truth and people just need to wake up. Children are at risk currently and people need to WAKE UP!

* * *

Candy Girl Child Prostitute

There is the pervasive perception that female sexuality is less predatory than male.
- Wendy-Louise Walker

Candy Girl
You are my world
You look so sweet
You're a special treat
Candy girl
All I want to say
When you're with me
You brighten up my day
All I know
When I'm with you
You make me feel so good
Through and through
The way you walk
And the way you talk
You always look so good
You make me forget my thoughts.[430]

* * *

I drew back the sheer curtains and peered through the glass at the scene below. I had been here before, in this exact location. 'I want my Mummy,' I mumbled as tears welled in my eyes. I was dissociating, remembering. I turned and surveyed the room again. The furniture had been moved about but otherwise it all looked familiar. I dropped into a chair which faced the same direction as when I sat on 'Uncle Gough's' lap. I struggled to fathom the enormity of what I was seeing. The outlay of the green room next door was precisely as I had drawn it in therapy. The green leather couch was the very piece of furniture I was raped on over 40 years ago.

A small group of people burst through the doorway. Their jovial guide took a seat beside me and offered, 'You can join us if you like!' He continued rattling off facts and personal anecdotes about Gough Whitlam and Bob Hawke who both used this very office while serving as Prime Minister. There was too much respect and admiration in his tone.

'Stop!' I interjected. 'I can't take this.' I rose to my feet and continued. 'These men are not heroes. They're all pedophiles! They are chosen for these positions because they are pedophiles. ASIO trafficked kids here for their pedophile orgies. I was raped by Gough Whitlam right here in this room when I was a child, and I was raped in a pedophile orgy in that green room in there, and again in the red room down the hall.'

I went to leave. Suddenly a Chinese Australian man grabbed me by the arm. He looked me squarely in the eye and said, 'Thank you for sharing that. That must have been very difficult.'

---

[430] Maurice Starr & Michael Jonzun (1983). Candy Girl.

‘Yes,’ I nodded, ‘It has all been very difficult. Thank you for caring.’

I stormed out of Old Parliament House.

* * *

GRANDE MADAM

Patricia Anne Conlon became my substitute mother, teacher and confidant. She affectionately called me her ‘little anomaly.’ Anne was brilliant, vibrant, and intelligent; she instilled in me her love of classical piano, opera, Shakespeare, history, and horses. She also taught me how to fuck.

Grande Dame selection criteria include Aryan Root Race features: blue or green eyes, blonde or red hair, flawless complexion, physical beauty, creativity, and high intelligence. Grande Dames are bisexual temple whores with a preference for sex with young teenage girls. They are glorified madams who train children for prostitution. By age six I was a trained courtesan. My child prostitute name was Candy Girl.

Kim Beazley Senior was the ASIO operative who coordinated the Australian leg of the international child sex trafficking ring. Beazley coordinated my trafficking to VIPs nationally and abroad. I was transported nationally by government and military transport, and internationally via CIA cargo planes.

John Gittinger played my pimp. He personally delivered me to the pedophile orgy at Parliament House when I was six years old. We rode in a posh black car with silver trim and brown leather interior. It was driven by two security men with neat military style haircuts and black suits. I was dropped off at the rear entrance of what is now Old Parliament House. Gittinger accompanied me to the rear entrance where I was met by a servant dressed in a long-tailed tuxedo, then he returned to the nearby US consulate. The butler walked me through many rooms and stairs to Gough Whitlam’s private office. Whitlam was seated and dressed in a suit when he asked me if I would like a horsy ride on ‘Uncle Gough’s lap.’ He picked me up, faced me away from him, lowered me onto his erect penis, and raped me.

WHITLAM
"COME SIT ON UNCLE GOUGH'S LAP"
"HORSEY RIDE"
RAPE

I was raped again in a pedophile orgy held in the green room adjacent to Whitlam's office. I was made to perform oral sex on Governor General John Kerr on a leather lounge. A butler had a tray with a whipped cream canister and chocolate dipping sauce on it. These products were placed on Kerr's penis and I was instructed to lick them off. Lionel Murphy took me into the red room where I was raped on the red lounge.

Gough Whitlam's Communist pedophile cabinet

FAIRBAIRN MILITARY AIRPORT

I was taken to a modest single-story home in Queanbeyan which was owned by Helena Holowczak's Slavic 'refugee' friends. Bob Hawke attended a BBQ held in their backward. Hawke got drunk at the BBQ and led me to an area at the far end of the back yard. He raped me in a zucchini patch as I watched butterflies fluttering about the zucchini flowers. The blooms tell me this was late November.

I was dressed in a Shirley Temple dress and driven to Fairbairn military airport. Gittinger walked me across the tarmac where an unmarked military plane was parked. Gittinger said there was an important man waiting for me in the back of the plane. I was to board the plane alone via the back stairs and do whatever the man said. The man was former President Richard Nixon. He was lying naked in a large bed with a blanket covering his erection. A short glass containing amber liquid and ice sat on a set of drawers to his right. Nixon asked for my name.

'Candy Girl,' I replied.

Nixon instructed me to approach him. He thrust my head onto his penis and demanded oral sex. Then he pulled me on top off him and violently raped me. After he ejaculated, he smacked me around the head until my nose bled. Nixon tore my vagina such that it had to be sutured. An old female medic tut-tutted while suturing me, in a nearby building.

Gittinger
" there's someone very important in there. Be very nice to him and do what he says."

RICHARD NIXON IN BACK OF PLANE to my right
- "What's your name?"
- "Candy Girl"
- "5"
" How old are you"
" Good"
" Come here"

Gittinger and two men in military uniform led me to a hangar containing a centrifuge used to train pilots. They asked me if I would like a ride in the machine which they promised was 'fun.' I could sure do with some fun. I nodded, and the military men awkwardly strapped me inside the pod. It was not fun. I vomited and passed out.

BOB & BEAZLEY at BOHEMIAN GROVE

In July 2012, Kim Beazley Junior (Australian Ambassador to the US) and Bob Carr (then Minister for Foreign Affairs) attended the annual all-male VIP pedophile summer camp at Australian taxpayers' expense. Bob Carr attended the previous year. FOI released documents show, Beazley expressed interest in attending Bohemian Grove again in 2014. The same documents reveal, the US government emailed our Department of Foreign Affairs (24 July 2012) regarding 'media talking points' and suggested responses to inquiries regarding Carr and Beazley's Bohemian Grove attendance. Here is their suggested response:

> If asked: Why did you attend the Bohemian Grove conference – an event often linked to conspiracy theories – in San Francisco?
>
> - The Bohemian Grove conference provided the opportunity to engage with key US figures, including former US Secretaries of State Henry Kissinger, James Baker and George Shultz, and representatives of major American investors in Australia.
> - The conference followed separate talks with former Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice at the Stanford School of Business [18 July].

This document was in reaction to the PR nightmare caused by Bob Carr's 18 July 2012 tweet:

> Lunch with Condie Rice at Stanford, dinner tonight with [Henry] Kissinger and [George] Shultz. Then off with them to conference at Bohemian Grove.

A Washington Post article introduced Bohemian Grove as follows:

> Every July, some of the richest and most powerful men in the world gather at a 2,700-acre campground in Monte Rio, Calif., for two weeks of heavy drinking, super-secret talks, druid worship (the group insists they are simply 'revering the Redwoods'), and other rituals.[431]

A more accurate description would be: 'Every year, elite male Luciferian pedophiles gather for a 16-day Bacchanalia-flavoured summer camp featuring drunken orgies, child hunts, and ritual human sacrifice to pagan gods.'

Peter Alexander Chernoff said he helped the Luciferian cult abduct a 10-year-old boy named Kevin Collins from San Francisco. He later witnessed San Francisco-based Michael Aquino ritually sacrifice the child at Bohemian Grove in the presence of George Bush Senior (a Nazi), Pope Ratzinger (a former Nazi), and Omaha businessman Warren Buffet who was implicated in the Franklin VIP child trafficking scandal. Famous Bohemian Grove attendees include Clint Eastwood, Ronald Reagan, and Richard Nixon.

---

[431] Elizabeth Flock, Bohemian Grove: Where the rich and powerful go to misbehave, Washington Post, 15 June 2011.

People assume the word Bohemian stems from the club's artistic origins. The true origin of this name formed the basis of my 2016 article Bohemian Grove, Pedo Hunting Parties and Rent Boy Ranch, written in the wake of USA Chief Justice Antony Scalia's untimely death. The Washington Post subsequently plagiarised my original article content that I allowed Scalia's victim, David Shurter, to premiere on his blog site. An Omaha child trafficking and ritual abuse victim, Shurter described USA Chief Justice Scalia as a violent Luciferian pedophile. When news broke of Scalia's odd death, the judge's former victims got talking. News spread fast among this group that Scalia had in fact been murdered by a 13-year-old boy at a Texan ranch. The child victim was apparently triggered by Scalia's sadistic approach to rape - and slit his perpetrator's throat. This version of events might explain why Scalia's family refused an autopsy, why a Texan judge ruled his death 'natural causes' without even viewing the body, and why the FBI declined to investigate Scalia's death after the marshals told them he died of natural causes.

This scenario gains credibility when we consider the history of the Cibolo Creek property where Scalia died. An article in Veterans Day online magazine originally referred to the property as, 'Rent Boy Ranch, playground for Mick Jagger and Charlie Sheen.' The article was promptly blocked in the USA and later edited to exclude any reference to it being a pedophile establishment. So, what is it about this property, and why was it nicknamed 'Rent Boy Ranch'?

Cibolo Creek Ranch is a 30,000-acre VIP resort located in west Texas, 100 miles from the Mexican border, in the Chinati Mountains. Guests arrive by private jet at the Ranch's own private airport, and they typically include politicians, businessmen, and Hollywood figures like Mick Jagger, Bruce Willis, Tommy Lee Jones, Randy Quaid, Dick Cheney, and Charlie Sheen.

The owner of Cibolo Creek Ranch, John Poindexter, bought the property in 1988. A third-generation Texan, Poindexter runs a Houston-based manufacturing company. He is also a leader in an elite, all-male hunting club called the International Order of Saint Hubertus. This secret society was founded in the Kingdom of Bohemia (Czech Republic) in 1695 by Austrian Count Franz Anton von Spork. Membership is invitation only, and titles held within the society sound Freemason-like: Grand Master, Prior, Knight Grand Officer.

The International Order of Saint Hubertus frequently attend hunts hosted by Poindexter at the Cibolo Creek Ranch. In 2010, 53 members of the International Order of Saint Hubertus gathered at Cibolo Creek Ranch to hunt. Guests included members of the Houston chapter and from Mexico, and minor European royalty like Archduke Andreas Salvatore Hapsburg-Lothrengin (Prince of Tuscany, Hungary and Bohemia). Hapsburg-Lothrengin is of the Hapsburg dynasty who owned Židlochovice Chateau located in Austro-Hungarian (Czech Republic) and developed it into a VIP hunting manor. In 2006, prominent Washington lawyer C. Allen Foster, who holds a leadership position within the Order of Saint Hubertus, hired Židlochovice Chateau for a 40-guest hunting party. C. Allen Foster and Chief Justice Antony Scalia chartered a private plane together with the intention of hunting at Cibolo Creek Ranch the following day.

Two other private planes that landed at Cibolo Creek Ranch for the fatal weekend were linked to two other men who held leadership positions with the Texas chapter of the Order of Saint Hubertus. Following Scalia's death, Poindexter told reporters that he met Scalia at a 'sports group' gathering in Washington. The US Order of Saint Hubertus branch headquarters are in Washington D.C.

Cibolo Creek 'Rent Boy' Ranch was decorated in bizarre clay sculptures depicting demons, death, and dismembered bodies.

Rent Boy Ranch 'artwork' decor

Hunting, raping and killing children for sport is a common feature of elite Luciferian pedophile gatherings. Attendees at European pedophile hunts, named by victim witnesses, include King Albert II of Belgium, Prince Johan Friso of Holland, and Prince Alfrink Bernhard of Holland who was in the Nazi party.

In 1966, the USA branch of the Bohemian-founded all-male secret Order of Saint Hubertus (aka the American Knights) held its first ever meeting at the all-male secret Bohemian Club in San Francisco. The Bohemian Club owns Bohemian Grove.

So, Bohemian Grove is a Luciferian pedophile club that provides opportunity for attendees to engage in their favourite pastime – hunting children for sport. This is the real hunger games.

BOHEMIAN GROVE CA
SATANIC RITUAL
HUMAN SACRIFICE

TEDDY BEAR PICNIC

The CIA flew me to the USA when I was six years old. I was flown into California in the back of a CIA cargo plane. They gassed and stuffed me like an animal in a wooden crate filled with straw. I remember the pilots had American accents and asked me, ‘Are you okay, sweetheart?’

CARGO PLANE – TRAFFICKED TO USA, CA.

My first memory of Bohemian Grove is the ritual sacrifice of a woman by men in black robes. Their robes were taller with pointier caps compared to the Australian ones. My next memory is of being hunted for fun in the woods. A group of children and I were dressed in teddy bear costumes. We were instructed to hide amongst the redwood forest so that the guests could seek us. The hunt occurred at night while the song Teddy Bears’ Picnic played over loudspeakers hung throughout the forest. Those who got caught were raped through openings in their costumes. They screamed for their mothers as they were decapitated. My furry suit complete with ears, made me look like an Ewok in the Star Wars series; hence I found the film scene triggering.

The Simpsons voice actor Harry Shearer (who started out as a child actor) attended Bohemian Grove and made a 2002 movie about this called, Teddy Bears' Picnic. During an interview, Shearer dismissed the Grove’s Cremation of Care ritual as a bit of harmless fun.

PINK ONION CAMP

I was dressed as Candy Girl and taken to a pink, bubble themed cabin. The cabin had plastic inflatable furniture and a pink shag pile rug in the front room. It was occupied by the Reverend Billy Graham who greeted me dressed like Hugh Heffner in a satin smoking jacket. He handed me a pink cocktail and told me his good friend Richard Nixon had recommended me to him because I ‘liked to please men.’ He led me into a pink bedroom at the rear and raped me.

After publishing this experience, I was contacted by a man whose father worked at Bohemian Grove for 46 years, and he for three. He said the pink bubble cabin I described is the Pink Onion Camp, and that its headquarters are located at 702 Marshall St, in Redwood City, CA. I read elsewhere that the Pink Onion Camp cabins are famous for their pink bedsheets.

BOHEMIAN GROVE, CA.
"TEDDY BEAR'S PICNIC"
CHILD RAPE HUNT PARTY.

CLUB DISNEY

Following Bohemian Grove, Gittinger pimped me to a group of wealthy men drinking at an exclusive club located within Disneyland, CA. The bar had classic leather padding at its front, and mirrored shelving. The men played a round of poker to decide who would rape the little girl dressed up as Alice in Wonderland. CNN founder Ted Turner won. He took me into a bedroom out back and raped me. After this, Gittinger spun me in the tea-cup ride until I vomited and passed out.

DISNEYLAND CA
Dressed as ALICE in WONDERLAND

DISNEY LAND CA
"IT'S A SMALL WORLD"
RIDE - DRUGGED

PEDOWOOD

I was 14 when the CIA trafficked me to the Grande Dame of Hollywood. Scour the internet and you will find photos of Meryl Streep proudly flashing Luciferian hand signs, and brazenly praising known rapists Roman Polanski and Harvey Weinstein. Mainstream press call Streep the Grande Dame of Hollywood because she is in fact the Luciferian Grande Dame of the West Coast. In typical Grande Dame style, Streep is a red-haired bisexual who prefers sex with 14-year-old girls. I know because that is the age at which I was trafficked to her.

I have not found a photo of the Hollywood house I was trafficked to. From memory, it was decorated in a bland, minimalist, Scandinavian style. As I walked in the front door, the kitchen was to my right, with a dining table behind that. Directly in front of me was a lounge room with giant floor to ceiling windows and a view like in a high-rise apartment. But I think we were simply in a house situated on a steep block that overlooked the Hollywood hills, with a swimming pool directly below on the window. To my left of the front entrance was a wide hall which led smack into double doors. Behind the doors was a bedroom which had an ensuite to the right.

The party started with a ritual sacrifice on the dining table over which Streep presided. The victim lay face up on the table while her throat was slit. The blood was drained into a ceremonial bowl, mixed with drugs, and stirred with a brush made of a sprig of herbs. Everyone sipped from the bowl and then the revels began. I recall dancing with Streep to the ‘Funky Town’ soundtrack before she took me into the bedroom, chatted with me about what I wanted to do with my life, and used me for sex.

Luciferian Grande Dame of Hollywood

ANYTHING GOES

Cult members maintain a public façade of family respectability behind which they will fuck anything – males, females, kids, animals. . . Anything. I witnessed Kidman have sex with Bell, Whitlam have sex with Kerr, Conlon have sex with the Chancellor. Petrauskas used 12-year-old me in a threesome with the wife of Ken the fat Engadine policeman. Female cult members are just as sexually active and perverse as the men. It is just as typical for married cult women to lust after sex with children and each other. Cult members married and had children out of their duty to produce Illuminati babies.

I copped much criticism for saying Whitlam and other politicians were bisexual. Consider the following (7 October 2019) post to my Facebook page:

Simone Piggott Nothing surprises me anymore regarding the Australian Government and departments connected with it.
Years ago back in the late 70's my Mum,while in hospital, made friends with a lady in the next bed.
They used to meet for lunch and had long chats.
The things she spoke about were not known about at the time unless one had private information. Things about politicians and police, which corroborate much of what you say in your book. Her info didn't go as far as involvement with children, but about how Whitlam was bisexual or ac-dc as she put it. About parties that were had, swinging, about Cairns and Junie Morosi having an affair, and how Hawke withheld containers of ammunition headed for Vietnam during the war, as they sat on the docks, while he was leader of the FSPDU, as a power assertion move. A veteran she knew told her how they were left stranded in action with no ammo.
This info came out, it wasn't invented, she had no reason to invent anything, she knew things from places she worked.
Can you imagine how much other information is being withheld from the public because it doesn't fit in with political ideology, or character image, or the constitution. Power corrupts and Absolute Power corrupts Absolutely. Regardless of what party is in government. Now we have Morrison and his friend Brian Houston acting most improperly and deals going on. Again it is the people who are cheated of the Truth.

Sex with a trained prostitute is preferred because there is a vast difference between trained versus normal sex. Prostitute alters are trained to sexually pleasure both males and females. The age of the victim is irrelevant - since sexual skill is the attraction.

Dirty therapists know this, which is why male and female psychologists and psychiatrists commonly access a victim's sex alters for their own pleasure. For instance, I was contacted by the adult female victim of a female Lismore psychologist (an Order of the Easter Star member) who came under investigation for accessing and raping the victim's child alter.

When it comes to Cult sex, anything goes.

2020 Update

You would have to be at least my age to appreciate just how much Australians revered Prime Minister Bob Hawke. In 2015, the Australian Broadcasting Commission mocked me on national television for suggesting their icon was actually pedophile scum. The general public's perception of Bob Hawke was subsequently shattered four years later, on 8 December 2019, when Bob Hawke's daughter, Rosslyn Dillon, said she was raped three times by her father's mate Bill Landeryou (a Victorian Labor MP) and that Hawke prevented his daughter from reporting the rapes to the police in order to preserve his political career.[432] [433]

In 2015, an American victim of CIA child trafficking told me she attended a Satanic Ritual Abuse support group in the USA with Rosslyn Dillon.

* * *

---

[432] Amy Remeikis, Bob Hawke's daughter says he told her not to pursue rape allegations against former Labor MP, The Guardian, 8 Dec 2019.

[433] Caroline Overington, Daughter Rosslyn Dillon's rape claims mar Bob Hawke legacy, The Australian, 9 December 2019.

The Relevance of Intelligence

The difference between stupidity and genius is that genius has its limits.

'You need to write an Australian book on gifted education,' my friend suggested. She had just enrolled her son in a private school for gifted kids – the very program I had just withdrawn my daughter from.

'Sure,' I joked, 'I'll call it, The Genius' Guide to Complete Idiots.'

'Oh… don't you think that's a little harsh? I mean, couldn't you tone it down a bit? Think of something less confrontational?'

Me: 'Nope.'

Six months later, my friend phoned again. Her countenance had shifted. Through clenched teeth she spewed out a torrent of abuse about her son's so-called gifted education program. 'And I'll tell you another thing!' she spat, 'You write that book! You write that book - and you keep that fucking title!'

While it's perfectly acceptable for Australians to brag about their kids' selection for elite sporting teams, the very mention of a child's intellectual superiority invariably incurs criticism and victimisation from everyone, particularly schoolteachers. Australians are so entrenched in 'tall poppy syndrome,' I have attracted criticism for daring to suggest that I was the victim of an elite pedophile ring. Oh, ELITE you say! So, you're not good enough to be abused by just any old pedophile ring. Yours must be an ELITE one!

So, you can well imagine the criticism I copped for trying to explain the relevance of intelligence within the context of the MK-ULTRA selection process. The snidest criticism came from lawyer Michael Salter, self-appointed expert on 'complex trauma and organised sexual abuse' who worked for an ALP politician before parachuting into the DID industry with no relevant qualification:

> We have a different standard regarding the public domain and publishing what you are unable to prove. Like saying that you have different brain structure. This reduces your credibility.

Intelligence is the most important variable to understand when trying to fathom the MK-ULTRA mind control selection and programming process. Every victim of mind control I know was chosen based on their IQ level. It is important for the reader to understand there is nothing elitist about being highly intelligent, nor about merely discussing the topic of intelligence. I will now discuss the psychology behind this phenomenon.

Set aside your understanding of intelligence. You were taught the smartest people got dux at school, graduated university, were awkward nerds who became doctors and lawyers, right? Wrong. We are socially conditioned to confuse 'intelligent' with 'educated.' The brightest students were not, are not, and never will be, accommodated in Australia's education system. The smartest people in your Kindy classes did not graduate from high school. Their true ability went undetected. Instead, they were bullied for being more interested in the concept of lift rather than watching Sesame Street, found school mind numbingly tedious, mentally disengaged in class by Grade 3, and spent the following decade underachieving. The brightest children drop out of high school feeling persecuted, disillusioned, different, and dumb, and finish up blue-collar workers like my science genius brothers who dig dirt for a living. The smartest kids exhibit the following innate characteristics:

- Intensity
- Outstanding sense of humour
- Perfectionist
- Early or avid reader (e.g., perfectly pronounces any word in the KJV Bible at age 5).
- Rapid learner (Completes one school grade per month in conducive environment).
- Independent learner
- Extensive vocabulary (Understands the word ‘shoes’ at age two months, speaks full sentences by age one).
- Excellent memory (Usually photographic).
- Long attention span when interested (Spends days making craft or radios by age 6).
- Strong sense of social justice and fairness
- Emotional sensitivity
- Morality
- Compassion
- Extremely curious
- Questions authority
- Good at jigsaw puzzles
- Highly creative
- Ability with numbers
- Prefer older friends (of the same intelligence level).

INTELLIGENCE DEFINED

The military and secret services employ the traditional, scientific definition of intelligence as determined by comprehensive psychometric testing. Standardised tests of cognitive ability were initially designed for military recruitment purposes during the first world war. The armed forces and secret services have incorporated these tests in their selection processes ever since. For instance, former CIA case officer Philip Agee[434] described undergoing a battery of vocational, aptitude, and personality tests including: the Stanford-Binet, Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory, Strong Interest Inventory, Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale, Guilford’s Structure of Intellect, Kuder Occupational Interest Survey, and the Rorschach inkblot test.

Francis Galton, Lewis Terman, Letta Hollingworth, and Charles Spearman pioneered an evidence-based approach to the study of intelligence. Terman produced the Stanford-Binet intelligence test. Spearman created math formulae to identify a general innate component of intelligence (g) within this and later IQ tests. Terman and Hollingworth distinguished characteristics common to children who scored within the ‘giftedness’ ranges on the Stanford Binet. Discrimination between the highest intelligence levels is crucial because members of each IQ category share similar learning and psychological characteristics, capabilities, and needs.

The resultant, recognised giftedness categories are:

---

[434] Phillip Agee (1975). Inside the Company: CIA Diary. Penguin.

- Moderately gifted (IQ 130 to 144)
- Highly (IQ 145 to 159)
- Exceptionally (IQ 160 to 179)
- Profoundly (IQ 180+).

To provide context, the average IQ is 100, the average IQ of a schoolteacher is 110, and the average IQ of a doctor or lawyer is 120. An intelligence quotient of 120 is simultaneously the optimal IQ for academic achievement within a traditional school classroom. In other words, the average doctor or lawyer is not even moderately gifted.

These fundamental findings were later undermined by Renzulli, Sternberg and Gardner who fostered today's popular misconception that everybody is gifted when compared to a long-enough shopping list of possible talents. The idea that everybody is gifted forces everybody into the far-right tail of the normal distribution curve – a mathematical impossibility.

Modern psychologists and educators deny the notion of innate intelligence. They treat intelligence as nothing more than a person's acquired knowledge and skills. According to their conception of intelligence, differences between individuals' IQ scores stem from variation in environmental opportunity for acquiring the knowledge and skills necessary for performance on standardised intelligence tests.[435] This is a Marxist based fallacy.

As we explore in this chapter, military intelligence and secret service recruitment processes are based on the premise that intelligence is genetically predisposed and environmentally enhanced. In other words, people who lack the genes can't be nurtured into a genius. The army is not interested in warm egalitarian concepts delivered by Marxist university professors. The military simply want to know what works in the field, and whether they can trust Freddie with a tank.

Attributing individual differences in intelligence primarily to environmental factors - as mainstream educators and psychologists do - is like saying a natural brunette can change into a natural blonde without hair dye. Individual differences are genetically determined. Just as we inherit individual differences in hair colour, facial features, body type, and health issues from our ancestors, so we inherit differences in brain structure and function. Intelligence is the product of variation in brain structure, and a function of how fast our brains work due to this variation.

High IQ individuals share different brain structure and function compared to people with average IQ. Researchers are consistently proving that the brains of individuals who score highly on standardised intelligence tests are denser, more interconnected, and possess greater neural integrity. These factors create faster brain impulses, allowing high IQ people to react to (i.e., process) sensory input more quickly.

Intelligence is the product of variation in brain structure, a function of how fast our brains work due to this variation.

---

[435] Arthur R. Jensen (1993). Why Is Reaction Time Correlated with Psychometric g? Current Directions in Psychological Science, 2:2, April, 53-56.

PROCESSING SPEED

Eugenicist Francis Galton of the Darwin-Huxley-Wedgewood dynasty was the first to hypothesise that variation of sensory discrimination and speed of response to stimuli would reflect intelligence differences.[436] He measured thousands of subjects' reaction time to visual and auditory stimuli. Yet his conclusions regarding intelligence were publicly rejected as too simplistic. A modern reprise of Galton's research into reaction time and IQ differences have yielded results consistent with his original hypothesis. Numerous studies conducted globally prove that people with higher IQs are quicker at processing sensory stimuli. For example, a metanalysis of 14 studies conducted between 1884 to 2004, including one study by Galton, showed reaction time (which reflects a person's mental processing speed) indicates general intelligence.[437] A 2008 metanalysis of 172 studies, with a total of over 53,000 participants, found IQ to be correlated with mental speed, and concluded that phenotypic correlations between IQ and mental speed are attributable to correlated genetic factors.[438] A 2013 study showed that people with higher IQs have quicker reflexes and make faster perceptual judgments.[439]

Modern research is increasingly employing brain scans to reach similar conclusions. A 2009 study used Diffusion Tensor Imaging to compare neural integrity in 92 pairs of fraternal and identical twins. Results showed that faster processing speed is correlated with higher IQ, and that processing speed is genetically determined.[440] This study produced a strong correlation between the thickness of myelin (the insulation that coats neural wiring in the brain) and performance on the Weschler IQ test. The thicker the myelin, the faster the brain transmits messages, and the faster the brain processes sensory input. This research showed myelin integrity to be an inheritable determinant of IQ.

A 2012 study pooled brain scans and genetic data from 21,000 subjects scattered around the world, to find evidence of a genetic link to brain function and IQ.[441] A 2015 study used fMRI analysis to find a correlation between cognitive ability and greater connectivity between brain regions involved in higher-level cognition.[442] Another 2015 study (of 126 subjects) found fMRI scans of brain connectivity can predict fluid intelligence. [443] This same project discovered that everyone's brain connectivity is unique and can be solely used, like a fingerprint, to identify someone. A similar 2017 study employed R-fMRI data to accurately identify individuals, and significantly predict higher cognitive performance, based on their brain connectivity.[444]

---

[436] Arthur R. Jensen (1982). Reaction Time and Psychometric g? Free Press, 93-4.

[437] M. Khodadadi et al. (2014). Relationship between Intelligence and Reaction Time: A Review Study, International Journal of Medical Reviews, 1:2, Spring, 63-69.

[438] L.D. Sheppard & P.A. Vernon (2008). Intelligence and speed of information-processing: A review of 50 years of research. Personality and Individual Differences, 44:3, 535-551.

[439] M.D. Melnick et al. (2013). A Strong Interactive Link between Sensory Discriminations and Intelligence. Current Biology.

[440] M.C. Chiang et al. (2009). Genetics of Brain Fiber Architecture and Intellectual Performance. Journal of Neuroscience, 18 Feb, 29:7, 2212-2224.

[441] Stephanie Pappas (2012). Genes Tied To IQ, Brain Size in UCLA ENIGMA Study, Huffington Post, 15 April.

[442] Steve Conor (2015). Intelligent people's brains wired differently to those with fewer intellectual abilities, says study Independent, 28 Sep.

[443] E.S. Finn et al. (2015). Functional connectome fingerprinting: identifying individuals using patterns of brain connectivity, Nature Neuroscience, 18, 1664–71.

[444] J. Liu, X. Liao, M. Xia, & Y. He (2018). Chronnectome fingerprinting: Identifying individuals and predicting higher cognitive functions using dynamic brain connectivity patterns, Hum Brain Mapp, Feb, 39:2, 902-15.

The latter two studies refute criticism of the notion that gifted individuals possess different brain structure, as they show that everyone has different brain structure.

fMRI scans prove that EVERYONE has different brain structure.

IQ TESTS WORK

Properly administered, comprehensive IQ tests measure exactly what the pioneers of intelligence research designed them to. Lewis Terman adapted the Stanford Binet from its French predecessor, to identify intellectual giftedness. His subsequent 1960 version, the Stanford Binet L-M, is unmatched in its ability to recognise visual-spatial pre-schoolers. It also remains the only test which can identify the top two categories of intellectual giftedness.

David Wechsler's IQ test series (WAIS and WISC) are commonly employed by educational psychologists to identify academic giftedness. This is problematic because these tests were designed to identify intellectual disability, not ability. Bright kids often obtain false negative results on the WAIS (by as much as 30 IQ points) because they are timed and extremely boring. The problem with timing is it thwarts the gifted individual's characteristic thinking style and their consideration of all response alternatives. Hence Working Memory and Processing Speed scores are usually invalid and therefore ignored by specialist examiners. Giftedness guru Linda Kreger Silverman asserts that gifted children score highest in the three WISC index areas most heavily loaded for abstract reasoning: Verbal Comprehension, Visual Spatial, and Fluid Reasoning. She also recognises the Wechsler's one outstanding advantage: Block Design is the single best IQ measure of visual-spatial ability.

Comprehensive IQ tests like the Wechsler and Stanford-Binet provide an indication of brain laterality. They measure and compare the functioning of the two brain hemispheres and yield scores for Auditory-Sequential versus Visual-Spatial processing. The assessor looks for discrepancy between these two main scores when searching for cognitive deficiency. As a simple example (because test analysis gets extremely complex), a person who scores normally on the visual-spatial test items but significantly lower on auditory-sequential tasks may suffer an auditory processing problem. Conversely, someone who scores normally on auditory items but too low on visual items may have a visual processing impairment. Based on these results, kids may be prescribed educational interventions, or referred to relevant specialists for further assessment and treatment. Ignorant educators typically label IQ tests 'elitist' when their main use is identifying developmental and other disorders that hinder learning.

BRAIN LATERALITY

After grasping the concept of intelligence, the next important variable to understand is brain laterality. The brain is divided into two main hemispheres, left and right. Lateralization of hemispheric functioning means one hemisphere dominates the other while processing incoming stimuli. Stimuli are detected by five major senses (vision, hearing, taste, smell, and touch) and two lesser known ones (proprioceptive and vestibular).

Psychiatrist Iain McGilchrist wrote a book that provoked a paradigm shift in the world of neuroscience.[445] Based on an extensive literature review, he identified the autonomous roles of each brain hemisphere, thereby dispelling the myth that language processing is localised left, and imagery right. McGilchrist's thesis is that the hemispheres perform complementary yet conflicting roles. Sensory input enters the right hemisphere, is sent to the left for processing, and returns to the right for a new synthesis. This process is mediated by the corpus callosum. Split-brain cases studies, where the corpus callosum is surgically severed, indicate the two hemispheres are capable of independent thoughts, feelings, sensations, memories, desires, and will. The author recognises that brains of normal individuals may show bias toward one or the other hemisphere.

---

[445] Ian McGilchrist (2019). The Master and his Emissary: The Divided Brain and the Making of the Western World. Yale University Press.

RIGHT HEMISPHERE: 'Dr Jekyll'

The right hemisphere is larger and more connected compared to the left. It is sensitive to testosterone and noradrenalin, and it regulates the heart and blood pressure in response to emotion. The right sees things holistically and in context. It takes a broader perspective, including the left hemisphere's content. It is primarily interested in living things, and things external to itself. The right is capable of compassion, empathy, altruism, and morality. It is flexible to change and deals with new information. The right can espouse another's perspective. It understands humour, metaphor, sarcasm, sadness, and regulates tears. It processes music and art. It is better at science and math problems and has a broader, more sophisticated vocabulary.

The right brain is responsible for processing all aspects of emotion except anger. It reads micro facial expression, body language, detects deceit, resists the usual train of thought, perceives anomaly, and questions authority. It applies common sense. The right hemisphere is the seat of creativity and interest in God. It is better at maintaining four of the five types of attention, vigilance, alertness, sustained, and divided attention. The right better integrates sensory input, and carries information on touch, pain, and body position.

The right brain has longer working memory. It also contains episodic memory, which is memory for personal experience and emotions. The right synthesises complex information, perceives complex visual or conceptual patterns, and can make connections between seemingly unrelated pieces of information. The right appreciates uniqueness and individuality, and is concerned with the personal, and what exists apart from us. It has a sense of the past and future, and so can foresee consequences and make predictions. The right hemisphere is near impossible to silence.

Key Hemispheric Differences

LEFT BRAIN	RIGHT BRAIN
Narrow focus	Wide, flexible focus
Known	New
Predictable	Possibility
Division	Integration
Parts	Whole
Abstraction	Context
Categories	Individuals
Sameness	Differences
Rationale	Reason
Dead	Living
Apathy	Empathy
Anger	Emotional understanding, expression, affinity
Criminal	Moral sense
Explicit	Implicit

LEFT HEMISPHERE: ‘Mr Hyde’

The left hemisphere perceives fragments of information. It can’t see the whole, or the bigger picture. Its narrow perspective ignores right brain content. The left hemisphere is only interested in public domain facts. It can’t cope with new information, interprets everything according to existing knowledge, and denies discrepancies that do not fit the established paradigm. It deals with linear, sequential pieces of information. It sees things as fixed and equivalent. It labels, types, categorises, collects, and organises things. It compartmentalises things in classes that make no sense. It processes basic arithmetic yet can’t solve complicated math or science problems. The left brain is incapable of imagination or creativity and can’t deal with novelty or unpredictable situations. Only after something new has been repeated and becomes overfamiliar and lifeless does it pass to the left hemisphere for storage.

The left brain has a limited vocabulary of simple, highly related words. It does not perceive humour, irony, metaphor, or any complex language features. It exhibits only one of the five types of attention - focussed. The left brain is preoccupied with man-made, inanimate objects, and machines. It does not appreciate poetry, music, or beautiful realistic art. It is only interested in abstract art that is depersonalised and breaks living things into unrecognisable parts. The left brain can’t recognise emotion or body language. It is incapable of eye contact, and only sees the mouth. The left has no social skills, no empathy, no sense of Theory of Mind (the ability to place oneself in another’s position and imagine what that person is thinking).

The left brain lacks common sense. Fuelled by dopamine, it is preoccupied with sex and food. Having no sense of the future or of consequences, the left settles for instant gratification. The left hemisphere cares nothing for others, has no conscience, and is incapable of feeling guilt. Anger is its only emotion. The left brain is capable of malice, manipulation, lying, and wilful denial. It seeks power and control. It sees people as objects of use, or prey. The left brain is passive and easily silenced.

LEFT-BRAINED COMMUNIST SOCIETY

Western Society is increasingly being dominated by left hemispheric processing and the suppression of right hemispheric ability. This shift is disturbing considering the left brain’s intellectual limitations and capacity for evil. Operating in isolation, the left brain exhibits every negative human quality that is poisoning our society: it is selfish, deluded, superficial, dysfunctional, egotistical, psychopathic, narrow-minded, atheistic, and plain dumb. The dominance of left hemispheric processing has implications for science, medicine, psychology, education, government – everything.

Communism is the perfect example of left-brain indoctrination & right-brain suppression!

When the right hemisphere functions abnormally, the left takes its place. This problem is associated with various DSM diagnoses including autism and psychopathy, two groups incapable of empathy and motivated by their desire to control. When left-brain dominant people assume positions of power within education, medicine, law or the secret services, the results are what we see manifesting in this increasingly permissive and perverse society. Indeed, white-collared psychopaths administer a hierarchy of mindless, easily silenced left-brain minions within every area of Australian government. Rock the boat within any sector and you will surely experience the manifestation of the Black Network.

IMPLICATIONS FOR VICTIMS

1. Left-Brain Education System

Schools and universities teach to the left-brain and reward left-brain learning responses. Extreme left-brain functioning is the optimal learning style required for success, which explains why individuals with high-functioning autism excel in this environment. Law and medicine are the pinnacle courses that successful high school graduates aim for and yet these do not screen for unmanaged autism. Science is particularly saturated with individuals who have autism and whose right hemispheres simply do not work. People who operate solely from the left brain see those who use their right brain as a source of threat or discomfort that they try to manage or silence altogether. The incidence of autism is increasing exponentially, so expect a future society void of right-hemispheric processing ability.

2. Left-Brain Health Industry

Health professionals are a product of left-brain academia. This partly explains why health professionals deny the effectiveness of new, innovative, and sometimes alternative mental health assessment and treatment methods. It accounts for why doctors present as cold, inflexible, and lacking the empathy and insight essential for understanding and treating complex cases of extreme abuse. It reveals why psychiatrists rely on medical equipment, rigid diagnostic classification systems, and unquestioning drug prescription.

The psychiatric industry rigidly adheres to an outdated and disproven theory that all mental health problems stem from a biochemical imbalance. The DSM was based on this theory. The mental health industry is still preoccupied with labelling patients according to the DSM and making patients take drugs which are proven to perpetuate depression and other mental health conditions. Even if a patient's symptoms do not fit the listed classifications, that patient will certainly be stuffed into one or more inappropriate DSM categories. The diagnoses invariably escalate over time until the patient is eventually labelled Borderline Personality Disordered and therefore unfixable. Psychiatry focuses on what is wrong with the patient instead of what has happened to cause their distress.

Psychiatry forbids consideration of alternative causes of patient symptomology, and psychologists operate under the jurisdiction of psychiatry. Being obsessed with lists of rules and set procedures, the left-brain health administrators invariably punish dissidents who dare apply right-brain consideration to their assessment and treatment approach. Being obsessed with power and control, doctors commonly abuse their authority to punish staff and bright victims who refuse to comply with their ineffective and harmful treatments. Such patients are typically labelled 'noncompliant' and said to lack insight. The patients can then be labelled a danger to themselves and society. They are then sectioned, or placed on community treatment orders, and forced to take drugs which have been proven to have detrimental side effects such as uncontrollable shaking, Parkinson symptoms, and a 25-year reduction in life expectancy.

McGilchrist notes: MPD, BPD, schizophrenia, anorexia, and self-harming are all characterised by dissociation, hypnotisability, left hemispheric hyperactivity, and a suppressed right brain. Interestingly, victims of extreme abuse are misdiagnosed with those very DSM labels. The author made relevant connections but missed the right-brain bigger picture: (a) unethical hypnosis is used to cause dissociation and split-personalities within victims, and (b) schizophrenia, anorexia, and self-harming are symptoms of extreme abuse.

According to McGilchrist, processing of new information occurs in a RIGHT → LEFT → RIGHT hemispheric sequence. New stimuli enter and are 'grounded' in the right hemisphere.

The stimuli then pass to the left for - I surmise - comparison to previous experience, labelling, sequencing, and basic language application. McGilchrist says the information is then returned to the right brain for integration and storage. In mind control victims, the brain hemispheres are intentionally split, the left hemisphere is suppressed, and stimuli are prevented from being processed by the left hemisphere; resulting in the trauma symptomology we will explore later.

RIGHT → LEFT → RIGHT Brain Processing Order

IMPLICIT PROCESSING

The author's discussion of the right hemisphere's capacity for implicit processing is a crucial consideration for MK-ULTRA and MK-DELTA victims who were specifically selected based on their right hemispheric processing ability. McGilchrist states:

> In fact, reasoning is of different kinds, and though linear sequential argument is clearly better executed by the left hemisphere, some types of reasoning, including deduction, and some types of mathematical reasoning, are mainly dependent on the right hemisphere. More explicit reasoning is underwritten by the left hemisphere, less explicit reasoning (such as is often involved in problem solving, including scientific and mathematical problem solving) by the right hemisphere. There is a relation between the pleasurable 'aha!' phenomenon of insight and the right amygdala, which mediates interactions between emotions and higher frontal cognitive function. In fact, an extensive body of research now indicates that insight, whether mathematical or verbal, the sort of problem solving that happens when we are, precisely, not concentrating on it, is associated with activation in the right hemisphere…

When teenage science prodigy David Adair met Stephen Hawking, Hawking asked Adair for the source of his mathematic formulas. Adair reluctantly admitted that most of his solutions came to him in dreams. Stephen Hawking then replied, 'I get a lot of my ideas through dreams also. We dream on the same wavelength.' This demonstrates the right brain's implicit (unconscious) processing ability. Implicit problem solving commonly occurs during a relaxed, wakeful state in high IQ individuals, such as during creativity which is a mild dissociative state. Implicit reasoning explains how someone instantly produces the answer to a complex question but can't explain how they got there. 'I just know,' is their typical response. This is because they do not consciously know, since their right hemisphere processed the problem unconsciously. Implicit processing ability is characteristic of highly intelligent individuals with a visual-spatial learning preference. The higher the IQ, the more pronounced the implicit processing ability.

I will now explain how perpetrators screened for implicit processing ability in MK-ULTRA and MK-DELTA candidates.

VISUAL-SPATIAL LEARNERS

Because peoples' brains are wired differently, they process incoming stimuli differently. These processing differences have been observed by measuring Alpha and Beta brainwave activity during cognitive tasks. These studies show that people of average IQ typically rely on the left hemisphere when performing cognitive tasks, and the left side is activated during these tasks. Owing to greater brain connectivity, both brain hemispheres are activated when high IQ individuals perform cognitive tasks. Highly intelligent people also show dominant Alpha activity in the right brain hemisphere during processing.[446]

Within the specialist field of giftedness education and educational psychology, those who favour their left brain during cognitive processing are called Auditory-Sequential Learners (ASLs) while those who favour their right, or are bilaterally activated during processing, are called Visual-Spatial Learners (VSLs).

